There is no sense in giving it a pill or a remedy containing an opiate, nor is flushing of the bowels to be always recommended. Rather give it a small dose of a mild, gentle laxative, tonic like Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, which, by cleaning out the bowels and strengthening the little stomach muscles, will immediately correct the trouble.

This is not alone our opinion but that of Mrs. N. H. Mead of Freeport, Kans., whose granddaughter has been taking it successfully and of Mrs. J. R. Whiting of Lena, Wis., who gives it to her children and takes it herself. It is sold in fifty cent and one dollar bottles at every drug store, but if you want to test it in your family before you buy it send your address to Dr. Caldwell and he will forward a supply free of charge.

For the free sample address Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 201 Caldwell building, Monticello, Ill.

Rayo Lamps and Lanterns

The strong, steady light.

Rayo lamps and lanterns give most light for the oil they burn. Do not flicker. Will not blow or jar out.

Simple, reliable and durable—and sold at a price that will surprise you.

Ask your dealer to show you his line of Rayo lamps and lanterns, or write to any agency of

Standard Oil Company
(Incorporated)

Defective Page

ADVENTURES of the WORLD'S GREAT DETECTIVES

By George Barton

The Great Bullion Robbery

An Episode in the Life of Inspector Sweeney of Scotland Yard.

COPYRIGHT 1911 BY W. G. CHAPMAN.

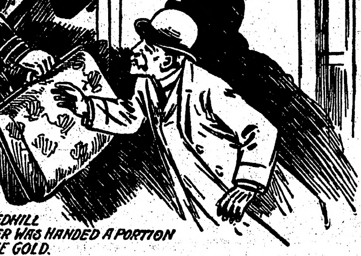
ONE September morning several decades ago, when the express officials lifted out the bullion which had been brought to Boulogne by way of the Southeastern railway, they noticed that the bags were not quite as heavy as usual. They were opened and found to contain nothing but shot. Thus, hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of gold had mysteriously disappeared in the journey between London and Boulogne.

The amazing part of it was that almost superhuman means had been taken to protect the precious dust. The gold was sent in the guards' van, packed in iron boxes, each of which was deposited in a safe with a Chubb lock. The safes each had two locks, and naturally there was a separate key for each one. These keys were in triplicate and were in the possession of the trusted officers of the company. One set was kept by the traffic superintendent in London, another by the head of the Folkstone railway office, and the third by the captain of the Folkstone-Boulogne boat.

Each of these men was beyond suspicion. They were all willing to swear that the bags had been sealed in the usual form, duly fastened and locked. How had the shot been substituted for the gold? And where? No one could answer these questions. It seemed like black magic.

James Sweeney of Scotland Yard was put on the case, and associated with him were a number of the best detectives in England. The investigators first visited the railway office at Folkstone and made a careful examination of the premises. That brought no results. After that there was a second and more careful scrutiny of the railway car. One of the finds here was an old carpet bag.

That was a beginning. The Scotland Yard men took the bag and began one of those systematic searches in which they are excelled only by the secret police of Paris. Many shopkeepers had sold many bags within the period of time under investigation. Some were sold to citizens with whom they were acquainted, while others were disposed of to strangers whose features they could describe only with difficulty. However, the work of "running out" these vague clues was started and carried to a conclusion. It involved weeks of patient labor.



AT REDHILL TESTER WAS HANDED A PORTION OF THE GOLD.

In the meantime it became increasingly evident that the robbery was the work of skilled professionals. Little items of information picked up here and there proved that the scheme had been carried out by a gang of thieves. Finally, enough was learned to convince the detectives that the thieves had secured a wax impression of a set of the real keys, which enabled the thieves to manufacture a set of false ones. But even with this, it was necessary to secure the assistance of someone employed by the railway company.

At this stage of the game one of the carpet bags was traced to a man named Peter Agar. That, in itself, sounds commonplace. But the importance of it becomes evident when it is stated that the portrait of Mr. Agar occupied a place of honor in the Rogues' gallery at Scotland Yard. Copies of the picture were made and sent all along the line. The guards and the ticket collectors immediately recognized it as that of one of the men who had traveled in the train on the day the gold had disappeared.

Two things could be done. One was to arrest Agar at once and depend upon getting his assistance in bringing his pals to justice. The other was to shadow him in the hope of securing additional evidence that would result in recovering some of the gold and rounding up the gang. The second course was agreed upon. So a close espionage was kept upon the skilful and gentlemanly Mr. Agar with the intention of ultimately taking him into custody.

Just as the police were ready to pounce down upon the fellow, he upset all of their plans. He committed a fresh crime. And it was of a character that could not be ignored. He was caught uttering forged checks, and in wholesale quantities. An army of shop-keepers went after him and he was arrested, tried, convicted and sentenced to transportation for life. The detectives who had been after him for the great bullion robbery tried to get him to make a confession of that affair, but he only smiled and remarked that he had nothing to say for publication. They even tried, in a mild sort of way, the kind of persuasion that we call the third degree, but it was of no use. Agar shut up like a clam, merely saying that he was ready to take his punishment for the forged checks. He was sent away, and with him the only clue relating to the theft of the gold dust.

The affair was about to be cast into the limbo of unsolved mysteries when a note was received at the office of Captain Frazer from a woman who gave the name of Mrs. Kay. She said that if the police would call at her home she would give them some information that would interest them exceedingly.

And she did.

It was the old story of revenge—and a woman's revenge at that. The officer who called on Mrs. Kay expected to hear of some petty offense, but instead of that she poured into his amazed ears the complete story of the great bullion robbery.

"Why do you tell this?" asked the officer.

"Because John Pierce has tried to cheat me out of my just dues."

"Your just dues?"

"Yes, the money that belonged to me—the money that was intended for the support of myself and my child."

"Perhaps," suggested the plain-clothes man, "if you begin at the beginning we may come to a better understanding."

"Very well," was the response, "I can start by saying that the plan for the robbery was conceived by John Pierce."

It seems that Agar and Mrs. Kay lived together as husband and wife and that he had given her all of the details of the robbery. Pierce, at the time, was a clerk in a bucket shop. He had been concerned in several shady transactions and the possibilities of the gold train appealed to him very strongly. But it was too big a job for him to undertake alone. So he sought the professional advice and assistance of Agar. That gentleman seized the suggestion with avidity.

The first step necessary was to win over one of the employes of the company. So they approached one of the guards named Burgess, who was usually in charge of the trains carrying the gold. He fell in with the scheme and explained the methods of transportation.

As the gold was carried in the guard's van it was plain that the robbery would be easy when Burgess was on guard. The question was how to open the safes. The answer to that was plain enough—to get false keys in place of the real ones. Agar told his pal that he would have to get a wax impression of the real keys in order to make the duplicates.

"That's too bad," was the response; "the keys are kept in the office of the company."

"Then we'll have to get an accomplice in the office," was the cool retort.

And so the conspiracy, which had been deep enough, now became deeper. Another employe of the company succumbed to temptation. His name was Tester and he was in a position to lay his hands on the keys of the safes.

This fellow was employed in the Traffic department at London Bridge. He entered into the scheme with avidity. He reported to his pals that there were times when the safes were sent to Chubbs for repairs, and that, on these occasions, one of the keys was sent with the safes. Such an occasion arose very soon, and then Tester cleverly managed to abstract one of the keys; but there was still an impediment to the complete success of the conspiracy. As each of the safes had two locks, and the key to but one was sent to Chubbs, it was the second key that baffled Tester's best and worst efforts.

But what they failed to get by shrewdness came singularly enough by chance. One of the second keys was always kept in the Folkstone office hanging in a little closet. Pierce ascertained this fact, and he hung about the office in the hope of getting his clutch on it. His opportunity came. One morning the cupboard was empty, and Pierce, stepping into the office, which was vacant, grabbed the key and passed it to Agar, who had a handful of warm wax. He immediately took the impression of the key, returned it to Pierce, who put it back in its place, and the two of them left the office together without being detected.

The next thing to learn was when the large consignment of bullion would be dispatched. Tester obtained this information. In the meantime the conspirators arranged their part of the scheme. Carpet bags were purchased and filled with shot which was intended to replace exactly the amount of gold taken from the bags. Agar more than once traveled up and down the line for the purpose of testing the false keys that he had manufactured with Pierce's assistance. Burgess admitted them to the guard's van, where they fitted and filed the keys until both worked easily in the lock of the safe.

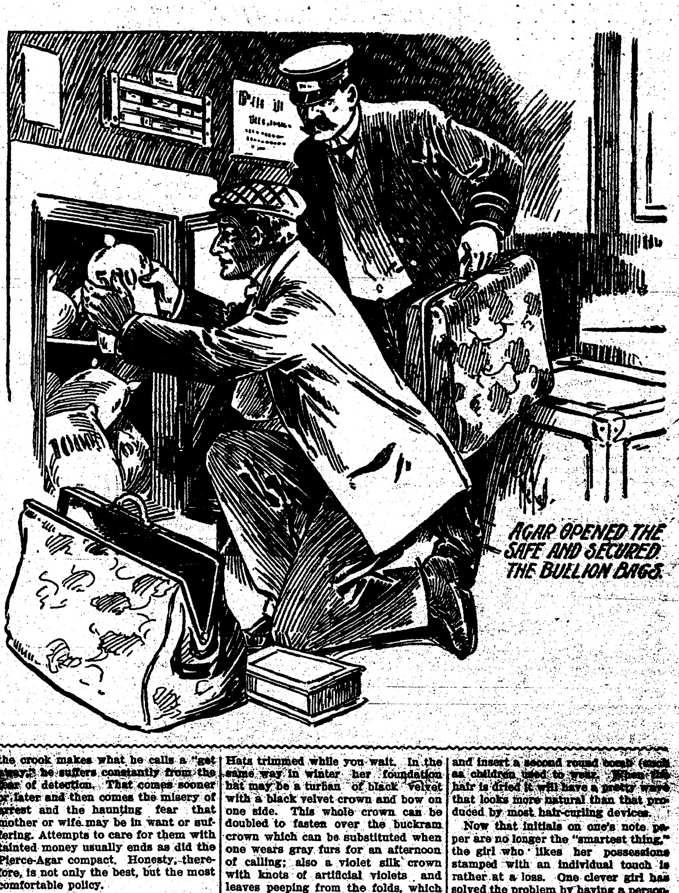
Finally the great night of the enterprise arrived. The conspirators purchased tickets on the Southeastern train, boarded it and handed their bags, filled with shot, to the porters, who placed them in the guard's van. As the train was starting, Agar managed to get into the van with Burgess, while Pierce secured a seat in the first-class carriage. The industrious Agar began work at once. He opened the safe, secured the bullion bags, removed the gold, substituted the shot from the carpet bag, refastened and resealed the bullion bags and replaced them in the safe. The trick was partially turned. At Redhill Tester met the train and was handed a portion of the gold. The two other safes were robbed in the same manner as the first. When the train reached Folkstone the unsuspecting officials removed the safes, which were filled with shot, and not gold. The rascals went on to Dover, having previously obtained tickets to Ostend. Later on they returned to London unobserved, and little by little disposed of the stolen gold.

The burglary, as already stated, was first discovered at Boulogne. Mrs. Kay said that when Agar was sentenced to transportation for life and knew that he could not escape, he handed to Pierce forty-five thousand dollars which he requested to be settled on Mrs. Kay for the support of herself and her child. Pierce paid her a few small sums and then calmly confiscated the remainder of this fortune. She came to the police in great rage and disclosed the story of the robbery as it has been here related.

Agar, who was in Newgate, heard how Pierce had mistreated Mrs. Kay and he eagerly turned state's evidence. As a consequence of this, Pierce, Burgess, Tester and several others were arrested, convicted and sentenced to life terms in prison. The company only recovered a very small portion of the stolen money.

This true story points a moral that will not be overlooked by the discriminating reader. It is that crime, even viewed from a sordid, worldly standpoint, does not pay. Pierce and Agar had already spent many years in jail and their final crime meant that the remainder of their existence should be lived out behind prison bars. Every one associated with the robbery of the Southeastern railway suffered life-long scars—scars that might have healed, but that nevertheless left their mark on the victim.

Students of criminology are unanimous in the belief that crime is the least profitable of all human undertakings. "Easy money" seems to carry its own punishment. Even though the crook makes what he calls a "get away," he suffers constantly from the fear of detection. That comes sooner or later and then comes the misery of arrest and the haunting fear that mother or wife may be in want or suffering. Attempts to care for them with tainted money usually ends as did the Pierce-Agar compact. Honesty, therefore, is not only the best, but the most comfortable policy.



AGAR OPENED THE SAFE AND SECURED THE BULLION BAGS.

PRETTY POLLY PAPERS

Dear Girls: Isn't it heavenly weather? Too beautifully, light-heartedly June to ever be anything else, it would seem. We know better, but we don't feel so, and sometimes "feels" are better than "thinks." I wonder how many girls know the secret of keeping bureau drawers in order? It is simply this: Have a box for everything and everything in its box. The covers of the boxes may be discarded or not, just as you like, but ribbons folded in a box do not overlap glove territory, and belts do not have to put up a sign "no handkerchiefs allowed on this property." Two long boxes (corset boxes, perhaps) are good for gloves and belts, and another box for purses and other trifles and all the dear feminine "nothings," that are "everything" really, for we couldn't live without them!

A girl's club I know of had promised to make a large number of paper roses of different colors to decorate a church fair booth. This seemed like a big undertaking, but one of the girls had a brilliant inspiration and made the task into a pleasure for all concerned. She invited the club members to her house for a "Progressive Rose Party." One table had a red cloth, one a pink cloth, one a yellow cover and one was white. Thus the tables were designated where flowers of a like hue were to be made. The white rose table was the head table. When a bell rang after a certain time had elapsed, the two at the red table who had made the most red roses progressed to the pink table, and so on. Tally cards cut in the shape of a white rose were used, with small pink rose pasters. When the work was done the goodies were served in pink and white cases on pink and white dishes, and didn't those pink and white maidens have an appetite? The best worker received as a reward a little silver rose pin—and it won't fade unless she loses it!

Now that hats are such an expensive part of one's wardrobe, one girl has told me her way, and really she is too clever for words. She makes one hat do for several occasions. She has a medium-sized black straw hat and a large white hat with "adjustable trimmings." Wreaths of flowers have firm inner bands sewed to them with little patent "snaps" (used to fasten dresses) on these, the under parts of the snap being sewed to the hat itself. A long plume offers the same possibility, while bows of several kinds and different shapes and hues can do duty when required. Presto! Hats trimmed while you wait. In the same way in winter her foundation hat may be a turban of black velvet with a black velvet crown and bow on one side. This whole crown can be doubled to fasten over the buckram crown which can be substituted when one wears gray furs for an afternoon of calling; also a violet silk crown with knots of artificial violets and leaves peeping from the folds, which can be worn to a reception with a lavender dress. Let's learn to be adaptable these days, when purses won't stretch.

You can make fascinating curtains and bedspreads for your rooms, girls, by using the white crepe material often used for shirt waists, which requires no ironing. A pretty white fringe that is washable can be stitched along the edges of both curtains and spreads.

Here's a beautiful way to save time in placing ribbons in under garments before and after laundering. Have some flat white tape (linen) the width of one's ribbon and of equal length. Tie one end of the ribbon to a piece of tape and pull out the ribbon, drawing the tape into its place. Untie the ribbon and send the garment to the laundry with the tape "where the ribbon ought to be." After the garment is washed and ironed, reverse the process—tie the ribbon to the tape's end once more, pull on the tape and draw the ribbon back into place. Just as easy as A. B. C. That stands for Any—Body—Can!

At a girls' luncheon where many tapers were used this ingenious substitute for candlesticks was used: Potatoes of uniform size were selected, and a hole cut in the center of each to admit the candle. Artificial paper daffodils were then pinned over the entire surface of the rest of the potato, except on the under side, making a perfect flower ball of each one. The effect could be varied by using any preferred flower, for of course every girl has her favorite posy!

Here's an idea for the good, studious girl: Use a card system for chance opportunities for studying. On square cards which will fit into your card case, write lists which you wish to memorize, poems which must be learned for college exams, verbs which must be declined, etc. You can help your mother iron, and one of the cards can be laid by the ironing stand, where your eyes can rest upon it while working. As the trolley car speeds to and fro on your way to a friend's house or to the city, you can conquer the contents of one or more of your cards, and many an odd minute can be saved, and, while other girls have to study you will be that much ahead.

Girls with straight hair! Attention! Wash the hair frequently with lukewarm water and a good pure soap, rinsing a number of times, and in one of the rinsing waters, add a little borax. Comb out the hair, fluff it about the face loosely, forming a pompadour, and insert a cheap round comb to hold it thus while drying. Make a second puff of hair back of the first and insert a second round comb (such as children used to wear). When the hair is dried it will have a pretty wave that looks more natural than that produced by most hair-curling devices.

Now that initials on one's note paper are no longer the "smartest thing," the girl who likes her possessions stamped with an individual touch is rather at a loss. One clever girl has solved the problem by having a personal emblem on everything she owns, where it is possible to do so. Her handkerchiefs, her note paper, her jabots, her lingerie, all bear one or more dainty little butterflies. Her umbrella's top, her seal for personal letters, her shopping bag, and in fact every possession that can be marked, all bear the same fairy-like emblem. Is it any wonder that her friends will learn to think of her as a sweet, flitting, elusive personality?

To come down to earth and something to eat, do you know how to make such a good cake that is dirt cheap and is of that color, too? (But pardon me, goodly chocolate cake, for such you are.) Only one egg, frosting and all, and everyone likes it, men as well as women.

Into a little saucepan put two tablespoonfuls of cocoa, blend with a bit of hot water, add one-half cup of milk and cook over the stove with the yolk of one egg. When thick like custard, add one cup of sugar and a teaspoonful of butter until melted. Take from the stove, add one more half cupful of milk in which is dissolved a level teaspoonful of soda, add gradually one and one-half cups of flour and lastly a teaspoonful of vanilla. Bake in one loaf or in small cakes as desired. With the white of the egg make either plain or boiled frosting.

Do some of you girls have trouble making good boiled frosting? Here's a simple trick. Put one cup of sugar with a wee bit of water and boil. Beat the egg white in a bowl, slightly, then add two tablespoonfuls of the partially cooked sirup and continue to beat the egg white until firm and stiff. Boil the remainder of the sirup until it will "ball" when tested in cold water, pour while melting hot onto the egg white, beating constantly until thick. This will never fail to harden and yet is soft and delicious "beneath the surface."

Oh, dear!—it's "good-by time" again. I'll put the rest of the ideas I was going to tell you about back in their bandbox.

Yours,
PRETTY POLLY.

(Copyrighted.)

A Black Reputation.

"That ladies' tailor is a man of dark designs."

"In what way?"

"He makes a specialty of mourning outfits."

Naturally So.

"Did the fat woman submit to being put out of the line where she had forced her way?"

"No, she didn't submit. She offered a stout resistance."

MINNESOTA HISTORICAL SOCIETY

THE NORTHERN LIGHT

VOL. I. HOLT, MARSHALL COUNTY, MINNESOTA, FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 3, 1911 NO. 14.

FIGHT IS ON DEC. 4

ARRAY OF COUNSEL TO APPEAR BEFORE THE U. S. CIRCUIT COURT IN TRENTON

IN U. S. STEEL DISSOLUTION

Loser to Appeal and Supreme Tribunal Will Decide the Issue—Oil and Tobacco Rulings Are Not Criterion.

Washington, D. C.—The United States Steel corporation's first step in the legal battle with the government for its existence will be taken Monday, Dec. 4. On that day an array of counsel which promises to include some of the most brilliant legal minds in America, will formally appear before the United States circuit court at Trenton, N. J., in which the government's dissolution suit has been brought.

On Jan. 2, 1912, the steel corporation is expected to file its answer to the government's sensational charges, which hardly have been paralleled in all the anti-trust suits brought by the department of justice.

Several legal maneuvers, of which the steel corporation's lawyers could avail themselves, may postpone the date of their answer, for they have the right to ask the court to give 30 days more grace, thus extending their time to Feb. 2.

In the meantime, they may demur to some of the government's allegations or they may file a bill of exceptions. Either action would automatically delay the actual beginning of the trial. The government expects that none of the formalities of law will be overlooked by its opponents. It is possible, however, that no legal technicalities may be thrown in the way in that case, the earliest date upon which the trial can begin is Jan. 2.

Three Judges to Name Master.

[illegible] Gray, [illegible] and Buffington to appoint a master to hear testimony. The master so appointed will take evidence in various parts of the country. It required a year and a half to take the testimony in the Standard Oil case. The government expects to do as well in the steel case.

When the taking of testimony is finished and both sides have been heard, the circuit court will decide the issue. Whichever side loses will appeal and by the operation of the so-called expediting act, the case will jump to the supreme court, where the fate of the greatest corporation in the world will be decided.

Department of justice officials do not feel that the supreme court decisions in the oil and tobacco cases will decide the steel case. Attorney General Wickersham declared he is convinced more than ever that each case must be settled on its own merits and that the oil and tobacco cases cannot fairly be called models for solving the trust question.

The attorney general was asked if he hoped the steel corporation would volunteer to readjust its organization and avert a further prosecution of the suit, as has been done by the International Harvester company, the electrical trust, the Southern Grocers' trust, and some other combinations. He indicated that he expected no such conciliatory movement.

Department of justice officials think it will be a fight to the finish. Mr. Wickersham declined to say if he is preparing or considering criminal prosecution of any of the defendants in the case.

It was declared that Jacob M. Dickinson, former secretary of war, who has been engaged as the government's special counsel, would occupy the same position in the case against the steel corporation that Frank B. Kellogg of St. Paul did in the Standard Oil case.

It was intimated at the department of justice that the government considers its case practically complete. Special agents who have worked for the last two years or more still are gathering some loose ends, but on the whole the attorney general feels confident in going to trial on what evidence has been obtained.

NEW STADIUM FOR YALE.

Old Eli to Have New Athletic Headquarters.

New Haven, Connecticut.—The Yale committee of twenty-one appointed to study the plans for constructing a stadium for Yale field, will meet next week to approve the building of an immense stadium of steel and concrete. The necessary fund will be raised in some form by direct or indirect subscriptions from alumni.

Western Coal Strike Ends.

Winnipeg, Manitoba. — Honorable Martin Burrell, minister of agriculture, made the definite announcement that the Western coal strike was at an end.

DR. COOK IS DISCREDITED

ARCTIC EXPLORER IS HISSED IN COPENHAGEN.

Demonstration Starts When Alleged Picture of North Pole Is Shown.

Copenhagen, Den. — Dr. Frederick A. Cook's attempt to vindicate his reputation by a lecture in the hall where two years ago he addressed the royal family and some of the most prominent people of Denmark under the auspices of the Geographical society on the occasion of his triumphal entrance into the capital, resulted in extremely riotous scenes and he finally was compelled to retire ingloriously by the back door.

Ever since it was announced that Cook was returning to this city to lecture, the newspapers and the people have been aroused and threats of violence were circulated freely. Fifteen hundred persons assembled in the hall and a great crowd outside greeted Dr. Cook with an uproar of insulting cries. He was escorted by police, however, and no violence was attempted.

The meeting within the hall was turbulent throughout. A small fraction of the audience supported Dr. Cook and applauded his efforts. Others hissed continually, with the result that the two sides almost came to blows.

The lecture, illustrated by means of lantern slides, was almost a repetition of his former talk. Dr. Norman Nansen, the Danish explorer, who formerly supported Dr. Cook, started the trouble by loudly denouncing Cook as a swindler. The climax was reached when an alleged picture of the north pole was thrown upon the screen. The audience was so hostile that Cook stopped his lecture and withdrew. He was escorted by a strong detachment of police to his hotel.

IMPERIALS WHIP REBELS.

Hankow Again in Possession of the Manchus.

Shanghai, China. — Wireless dispatches from Hankow reporting a sweeping victory for the Imperial troops there caused a flutter in Shanghai. The reports were received even in official circles with incredulity. Rebel sympathizers declared that the dispatches were undoubtedly sent from a government source to bolster up a faltering cause.

The wireless dispatches were caught by some of the German naval operators. They gave no details but said that there was fighting all day at Hankow and that the result was a sweeping government victory compelling the revolutionists to abandon Hankow and fall back across the Han river into Han Yang.

Whatever the situation around Hankow matters have grown more desperate for the government cause in the vicinity of Shanghai and along the lower part of the Yang Tse river. There were persistent reports that Ching Kiang, 150 miles above Shanghai, was about to fall into the hands of the rebels. Ching Kiang is the first of the series of lower river forts above Shanghai and is regarded here as the keystone of the defense of the city. If it falls, it is conceded that all the forts below it as far as Wu Sing will quickly follow.

Wu Sung, 10 miles above Shanghai, marks the city's last line of defense. West of Shanghai the wealthy city of Su Chow is threatened while above Ching Kiang three important cities, Nan King, Yang Chow and Wu Hu are believed to be in danger. All four of these cities reported that while the situation was still quiet there is open sympathy for the rebel cause and probably little effective resistance will be offered to attack.

John R. Walsh is Dead in Chicago.

Chicago, Ill. — John R. Walsh, former banker, publisher and railroad owner, released a week ago from the Leavenwort penitentiary, died of heart disease. Mr. Walsh was 74 years old. Death came just after his release on parole from the penitentiary, where he had served one year, eight months and twenty-six days of a five years' sentence on a charge of misappropriating the funds of the bank to the use of private enterprises. Walsh's health failed soon after his entrance to the penitentiary.

$20,000 Will Is Set Aside.

Clinton, Iowa. — A Clinton county jury set aside the will of Isaac Henry Cope in which $20,000 worth of farm land near Galesburg, Ill., is left to Mrs. Eliza Johnson, with whom Mr. Cope had made his home for several years.

Steel Stock Loses Five Points.

New York, N. Y.—There was a wild rush to sell United States Steel stock, as a result of the government's dissolution suit. The common stock opened with the sale of 28,000 shares and fell to 53½, a loss of 5 points. The preferred stock fell 5⅜.

STEEL ATTACKED

BREAKING UP OF CONSTITUENT AND SUBSIDIARY COMPANIES SOUGHT,

SUIT IS FILED AT TRENTON

Separation From Tennessee Coal and Iron Asked—Cancellation of Hill Leases Is Also One of Objects of Litigation.

Trenton, New Jersey. — The government's long-planned suit to break up the so-called steel trust was begun here in the United States circuit court. It is the most sweeping anti-trust action ever brought by the department of justice.

The government asks not only for the dissolution of the United States Steel corporation, but for the dissolution of all constituent or subsidiary companies, which are alleged to have combined in violation of the Sherman law to "maintain or attempt to maintain, a monopoly of the steel business."

There are 36 subsidiary corporations named as defendants.

J. Pierpont Morgan, John D. Rockefeller, Andrew Carnegie, Charles M. Schwab, George W. Perkins, E. H. Gary, J. D. Rockefeller, Jr., Henry C. Frick, Charles Steele, James Gayley, Wm. H. Moore, J. P. Moore, Edmund C. Converse, Percival Roberts, Jr., Daniel G. Reid, Norman B. Ream, P. A. B. Widener and Wm. H. Palmer are named individually as defendants.

The United States Steel corporation, Carnegie Steel Company, Carnegie Company of New Jersey, Federal Steel Company, National Steel Company, American Steel & Wire Company of New Jersey, National Tube Company, Shelby Steel Tube Company, American Tin Plate Company, American Sheet & Tin Plate Company, American Sheet Steel Company, American Steel Hoop Company, American Bridge Company, [illegible] Mines, all of which were organized under the New Jersey laws, and the H. C. Frick Coke Company, Tennessee Coal & Iron & Railroad Company, and the Great Western Mining Company, are named as corporate defendants.

Louis W. Hill, James N. Hill, Walter J. Hill, E. T. Nichols and J. H. Gruber are named as trustees in connection with ore companies.

As to Ore Land Lease.

In addition to the above defendants the following are parties to the suit: Union Steel Company, Clairton Steel Company, West Missabe Land Company, Ltd., Wright Land Company, Ltd., Davis Land Company, Ltd., Wells Land Company, Ltd., Stone Land Company, Ltd., Wabigon Iron Company, Minosin Iron Company, Nibiwa Iron Company, Wenona Iron Company, Minawa Iron Company, Leonard Iron Company, Arthur Iron Mining Company, Fillmore Iron Mining Company, Harrison Iron Mining Company, Jackson Iron Mining Company, Polk Iron Mining Company, Tyler Iron Mining Company, Van Buren Iron Mining Company.

Ore Land Lease Called Illegal.

The steel corporation's lease of the Great Northern railway's ore properties, which the directory of the steel company formally decided to cancel, is alleged to be illegal. This action of the directors was taken but a few hours before the filing of the bill.

The government suit acknowledges the steel corporation's intention in this respect, but states that under the terms of the lease no cancellation would be effective until Jan. 1, 1915, and there is no limit upon the amount of ore that can be taken out in the meantime.

Sensational allegations fairly topple over each other in the government's petition which is an equity proceeding praying for injunctions to estop continuance of the alleged monopoly and such other relief as the court may grant.

The steel corporation's acquisition of the Tennessee Coal & Iron Company during the panic of 1907 is declared illegal and scathingly criticized.

Reference is made to the "Gary dinners," although not by name, as meetings which accomplished more than written pools or agreements, which frequently were broken.

Interlocking directorates through which those in power in the steel corporation held positions of influence on the directorates of other powerful corporations, are mentioned as "a method more refined, more euphonious, but none the less more effective than pools."

Sullivan Denies Aid.

Chicago, Illinois.—Roger C. Sullivan, democratic committeeman, denied before the United States senate committee investigating the election of William Lorimer, that he had helped elect Lorimer.

NAVAL MEN MAKE FLIGHT

BUT BOTH SUFFER FROM BITTER COLD.

Sail Air 145 Miles South From Annapolis, Landing Near Fortress Monroe.

Fortress Monroe, Va. — After a flight in a hydro-aeroplane 145 miles down the coast from Annapolis, Md., Lieut. S. S. Gordon Ellison and John G. Towers, U. S. N., landed on the broad reach of Buckroe Beach, Va., three miles from here. The officers were suffering from the bitter cold when they landed and hurried to shelter.

Lieutenant Ellison, who is in charge of the naval aeronautic school at Annapolis, and Lieutenant Towers, made their descent after the most successful flight in the history of naval aviation, having flown from Annapolis, a distance of 145 miles, in the remarkable time of 2 hours and 27 minutes.

The flight was made without stop or mishap, and the hydro-aeroplane lay on the sand in as good condition as when the start was made. The flight was the second attempt in as many weeks, the aviators being forced to return to Annapolis on their former attempt, owing to engine trouble, after covering half the distance.

NEW COMET NEARING EARTH.

Wisconsin Astronomers Have Sighted Heavenly Wanderer Twice.

Williams Bay, Wisconsin.—A new comet rapidly is approaching the earth. Astronomers have sighted it twice and the Yerkes observatory scientists are maintaining a constant watch for it.

The new heavenly body bodes no ill for terrestial conditions, according to Professor Edwin Kenrost of the observatory, but it will be of much benefit to astronomers, providing it comes close enough to the earth that its proximity to the sun may be measured. Present measurements of celestial distances is a matter of [illegible] computation, and scientists expect to be able to complete the existing tables of distances by comparing with them the measurements obtained of the new wanderer, should it come close enough.

MIDSHIPMEN ARE FIRED.

Another Batch of Amateur Admirals Learn Lesson of Discipline.

Washington, D. C. — President Taft has approved the dismissal from the naval service of Midshipman H. B. Annin of Montana, Fletcher S. Bleakley of New Jersey and E. F. Leahy of Wisconsin all at the naval academy for breaches of discipline. The case of S. Roberts of Illinois, a cadet involved in the same trouble, has not been acted upon.

Admiral Sands Dies in East.

Washington, D. C. — Rear Admiral James H. Sands, U. S. N., retired, who once commanded the navy yard at New York, Boston, Philadelphia and Washington and participated in the evacuation of Charleston, died at his home here. He was 66 years old.

1,000 Turks Killed in Fight.

Tripoli, Tripoli.—A report from an Italian source recounting the latest battle places the Turkish losses at more than 1,000 killed and a large number wounded, and the Italian at 100 dead and wounded.

Head Cut From Body By Cake of Ice.

Chicago, Ill. — James Sider, an ice driver was killed and his head nearly severed from his body by a cake of ice which slid down a chute and struck him on the back of the head.

Robbers Attack Oklahoma Town.

Shawnee, Oklahoma. — Robbers attacked the town of McComb, several miles from here, cut telephone and telegraph wires then blew open the safe in the town bank. They got a large amount of money and escaped.

Ingersoll Statue Is Unveiled.

Peoria, Illinois. — H. E. Oates, Robert G. Ingersoll was unveiled this afternoon in Glen Oak Park in the presence of a large gathering of his admirers from this and other places.

Aviator Killed In Fall.

Rheims, France.—Aviator Desparnel, engaged in army aerial tests, fell 700 feet and was instantly killed. His machine turned over and over as it fell, and landed sixty feet from the aviator's body.

The Deadly Auto.

Warren, Pennsylvania.—Dr. James A. Gass and Mrs. Gass of Sheffield, Pa., were killed when a locomotive struck their automobile at Stoneham, five miles from here. A 10-year-old son, Fred, a deaf mute, escaped injury.

PLEA IS DENIED

TRIBUNAL REFUSES TO COMPEL LEHIGH VALLEY ROAD TO LOWER RATES.

MILLERS AWAIT DECISION

Immense Traffic of Staple From Northwest to Be Affected—Hearing Before McChord Saturday.

Washington, D. C. — The commerce court of the United States threw out the efforts to obtain lower freight rates on the immense flour traffic from Minneapolis and other Northwestern points to the Atlantic seaboard, when that tribunal, upon conclusion of the arguments by representatives of the Flour City line, declined to extend its mandamus to compel the Lehigh Valley railroad to make a 9.2-cent rate a 100 pounds from Buffalo to New York.

The Flour City Line representatives in Washington, Messrs. Trickett, Andrews & James, therefore decided not to press their application for a writ of mandamus before the commerce court, pending a hearing of their complaint by the interstate commerce commission. Their decision followed a suggestion by the commerce court that the interstate commerce commission had ample authority to pass upon the question at issue and to secure for the Flour City Line a refund of any excess charges made during the pendency of their complaint, in case it is upheld by the commission.

On this suggestion, the representatives decided to drop the proceedings in the commerce court and give their entire attention to the hearing, which is scheduled to be held before Commissioner McChord.

The interstate commerce commission has set the hearing on a complaint by the Flour City Line demanding that it be accorded through routes and joint rates with the [illegible] on flour shipments. The real question before the commerce court was one of procedure, as the court does not care to interfere with the lawful prerogatives of the commission, unless such interference may be necessary to insure fair rates to shippers.

The Lehigh Valley and all other lines operating eastward from Buffalo make a proportional rate on flour shipped from Minneapolis to New York city of 9.2 cents a hundred pounds, when the product is received over lines other than the Flour City Line.

Counsel maintained that this was unjust discrimination against the Flour City Line, which proposes to make a through rate of 20½ cents on flour from Minneapolis to New York city, against 23 cents on other lines.

Shipments of flour now are en route between Minneapolis and Buffalo on which the Flour City Line desires to obtain the 9.2-cent rate. It proposes to give bond to the court to insure the payment of the 11-cent rate, provided that the rate subsequently, shall be held as reasonable.

THREE MAKE PLEAS OF GUILT.

After Having Denied the Charges At Previous Hearings.

Moorhead. — Just as Judge A. C. Nye arose to charge the jury in the case of the state against J. N. McGinley, charged with murder in the second degree, the defendant arose and asked to change his plea to guilty. McGinley was promptly taken at his word and was sentenced to serve an indeterminate term in the penitentiary. McGinley was charged by the state with killing C. H. Quinn, a traveling missionary, well known in this state and in North Dakota.

McGinley's lead was immediately followed by John Drexel, charged with grand larceny, and J. M. Little, charged with assault with intent to kill, each of whom had entered pleas of "not guilty," and had prepared to put up a fight against the charge. Both Little and Drexel were sentenced to indeterminate sentences in the state penitentiary. Little stabbed Frank Grover over a game of cards at the Schroeder farm some time ago.

GOOD CROWD AT MINNEAPOLIS.

Minneapolis. — President Taft in Minneapolis reiterated his position on the enforcement of the Sherman anti-trust act and announced that the administration "means business."

The president's speech was delivered to a thoughtful and attentive audience which listened carefully, and showed its approval from time to time by breaking out into applause.

The president's address followed his arrival in Minneapolis after a notable day spent in Southern Minnesota. At all the points touched by the president, large audiences greeted him, audiences that were friendly and sincerely anxious to show their respect to the ruler of the nation.

PLEADS GUILTY TO CRIME

SHOT A FELLOW WORKER SIXTEEN YEARS AGO.

Says He Does Not Know Why He Killed Youth, Nor the Victim's Name.

Aitken. — John Sandberg, who confessed to officers at Black Duck to having murdered a man in Aitken county sixteen years ago, was brought here and pleaded guilty to murder in the first degree.

Sandberg's story is that he owned a homestead two miles from Grayling in 1895 and that fall he went to North Dakota and worked in the harvest fields with a young man about 20 years old, known to him only as "John." They returned to the homestead together, and when out hunting Sandberg, who was walking ahead with the only gun, turned and shot John in the head.

As he sank to the ground the murdered man gave a cry of agony and two more shots were fired. That cry has followed the murderer all these years, Sandberg said, and while he has never told anyone and his deed has never been discovered, he could not longer keep the secret.

He says he does not know why he did the killing. He is remembered by Sheriff Haugen, who is of the opinion that the name of his victim can be ascertained. Sentence was not passed upon Sandberg. The maximum penalty for murder in the first degree is life imprisonment.

GOOD BUTTER SCORES.

Full List of Ratings of Minnesotans at Milwaukee Show Where State Won Prize.

St. Paul.—Secretary F. W. McIntosh of the State Dairy and Food commission has received the full list of scores made by the Minnesota buttermakers exhibiting at the national dairy show at Milwaukee, at which Minnesota won the $500 cup for the best average score. The cup was won by the average score of the best seven samples from each state, but the average of all of the entries from this state was also high. There were eighty-two entries from Minnesota and they averaged 93.88.

The cup has been placed on exhibition in the Governor's office, where it has been viewed by many persons.

The following are the scores of the Minnesota exhibitors:

A. G. Rodman, Buffalo	95.16
John R. Blomquist, North Branch	95.50
Oscar Carlson, Waseca	95.83
A. J. Anderson, Olisco	95.00
P. A. Jordahl, Hartland	93.00
E. P. Goernat, Frost	92.00
Ernest J. Wolff, Hector	93.00
William C. T. Boettcher, Canby	90.16
M. Sorenson, Clarissa	94.16
F. H. Bartlett, Pease	92.83
J. H. Steinke, Freeport	94.83
J. A. Peterson, Chicago City	97.50
Fred W. Dane, New Ulm	94.50
Carl A. Nelson, Wood Lake	92.50
Edwin Ulring, Webster	92.33
Cris Hanson, Hanska	95.66
E. O. Quenvold, Hutchinson	94.66
Ernest C. Kursell, Shakopee	94.33
H. H. Lunow, Mayer	94.50
A. H. Bockey, Shafer	97.00
George A. Holmes, Biscay	96.00
S. H. Hagen, Jackson	94.83
Charles A. Gramith, Waconia	91.33
Otto R. Mau, Young America	95.50
Henry Erickson, Winsted	97.50
E. G. Grunwald, Owatonna	95.33
Hans Larson, Hayfield	89.66
John Grosser, Clinton Falls	95.00
F. J. Kassube, Geneva	92.00
Theodore Peterson, Maple Plain	94.00
Alfred Camp, Owatonna	94.16
O. J. Vollrath, Henderson	93.33
J. G. Johnson, Browerville	93.16
Alfred T. Sunde, Utica	93.83
Mathew Langenfeld, Belle Plaine	92.00
Carl Schaldret, Plummer	92.50
Alfred Rasmussen, Hallock	94.33
Frank A. Pace, Newfolden	90.00
H. Wenger, Echo	91.33
Ferdinand Jacobson, Ellendale	94.83
Anton Baltes, Meire Grove	94.00
Peter J. Olson, Lancaster	91.06
H. H. Jensen, Clark's Grove	90.66
E. A. Kellgren, Rothsay	95.16
George Nelson, St. James	95.83
A. M. Hanson, Twin Lakes	95.33
L. J. Grelleng, Erhard	95.00
Otto Zierach, Lake Elmo	94.16
George W. Hagberg, Cokato, R. No. 2	96.00
A. O. Jensen, Le Sueur	90.66
Fred Hansen, Lake Crystal	97.00
E. A. Gudvangen, Keister	95.66
C. E. Kendall, Augusta	95.00
A. J. Hed, St. Hilaire	95.83
A. L. Badke, Plato	97.50
A. G. Schandel, Glencoe	94.50
E. O. Blomquist, Center City, R. No. 1	96.00
L. C. Jensen, Shafer	97.00
F. A. Johnson, North Branch, R. No. 5	97.50
N. C. Hugger, Parker's Prairie	90.83
M. J. Mallitor, Zion P. O.	92.50
T. F. Reese, Chatfield	91.66
J. J. Jefferson, Evan	92.16
Henry Dettner, Ellendale, R. No. 1	90.66
A. T. Radke, Hamburg	94.33
Paul Lindholn, Litchfield, R. No. 1	91.16
Ernest Wacker, Arlington	92.16
John Nelson, Viking	89.66
J. W. Engel, Pratt	95.50
Joseph Underwood, Mora	93.00
Charles Olson, Roseau	93.00
G. A. Hall, Eden Valley	96.16
Chriss Jensen, Dunnell	92.00
B. A. Finch, Webster	93.83
S. C. Boe, New York Mills	92.00
Chris Peterson, Elk River	93.00
Oscar Rase, Kenyon	91.00
A. B. McLaughlin, Elgin	94.83
Rush Point Co-operative Creamery Co., Rush Point	95.00
W. G. McLaughlin, Elgin	94.16
Oscar Rynquist, Rogers, 195	94.66
Sabin Swanson, Litchfield	95.83
Total	7,697.61

Eighty-two entries, average score, 93.88.

"The White Slave" at Minneapolis.

Minneapolis.—There are some plays that the public will not willingly let die and one of these is Bartley Campbell's story of the South, "The White Slave," which will be the attraction at the Bijou, Minneapolis, the week of November 5th.

ADVENTURES of the WORLD'S GREAT DETECTIVES

By George Barton

The Story of the Wax Impression-

An Episode in the career of Thomas F. Byrnes the Great Inspector of Police

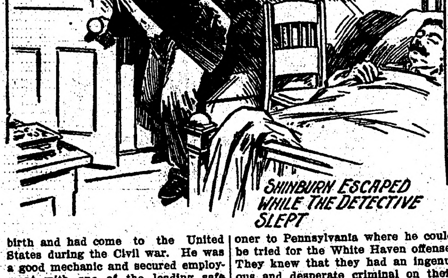
COPYRIGHT 1911 BY W. G. CHAPMAN.

ON the night of the fifteenth of April, 1895, the First National Bank of Middleburg, N. Y., was entered and robbed of a large sum of money. It was the climax to a series of audacious bank burglaries committed under circumstances that led the authorities to believe that all of them were the work of an especially successful gang of bank thieves.

Thomas F. Byrnes, the greatest chief inspector of police that New York has ever known was in authority at that time and all of the facts in the case were laid before him. In the meantime complaints were coming in from other quarters. Robberies had been successfully pulled off at the Phoenix bank of Phoenix, N. Y.; the National Bank of Pawling, Pawling, N. Y.; the St. Hyacinth bank of West Farnham, Ontario, and the Thomaston National bank of Thomaston, Conn.

Superintendent Byrnes probably knew the methods of bank burglars better than any man in the United States, with the possible exception of William A. Pinkerton, and he began a study of the evidence in hand with the hope of determining the identity of the man who was directly concerned in this series of bold burglaries. Most bank crooks depend upon the use of dynamite and nitroglycerine to break open safes and vaults. The master hand in the cases under investigation used more refined means of accomplishing his purpose. The robberies had evidently been engineered, if not accomplished, personally by a man who had the brain and the touch to beat all known combinations.

That man, it was finally determined, was Max Shinburn, one of the most notorious and most successful criminals the world has ever known. The problem now was to catch Shinburn and directly connect him with one of the burglaries. The resources of thief takers fortunately are greater than those of the thieves. The life and adventures of this famous burglar was soon compiled and laid before the authorities for their guidance.



SHINBURN ESCAPED WHILE THE DETECTIVE SLEPT

Max Shinburn was a German by birth and had come to the United States during the Civil war. He was a good mechanic and secured employment with one of the leading safe manufacturers of this country. He remained with the concern for several years and in that time became a most expert safe man. He had, especially, a perfect knowledge of the mechanism of combination locks.

Thus equipped, he left the company and began his career of crime. At that time the safes made by the concern with which he had been employed were in use in every part of America. With an ingenuity that was almost diabolical, he began operations on the safes of his own company. His pals had the greatest admiration for Shinburn and were fond of saying that he had elevated burglary from a trade to a profession. It might have been added that he was one of the few burglars who actually learned his trade. He had served an apprenticeship with the safe company and took the knowledge thus acquired and ungratefully used it against his benefactors.

One of the curious side lights in this connection was the failure of the safe company. Shinburn's success in breaking into their safes drove the concern out of business. He knew the banks and financial institutions that had purchased safes from his old company, and in committing his burglaries he always grimly gave these his preference. When it became known that the one-time expert of the safe company and the audacious safe breaker were one and the same person, the company found it practically impossible to dispose of any more of their products.

One of Shinburn's most brilliant achievements—if disreputable business can be mentioned in this manner—was his robbery of the vaults of the Lehigh and Wilkesbarre Coal company at White Haven, Pa., in 1867. He broke into the office at night and with a twist of the wrist managed to open the safe. There was, however, less than six thousand dollars in money there at the time. Shinburn expected to make a big haul and he was so thoroughly disgusted that he only took a few hundred dollars and left the balance of money in the safe. The effect of this may be imagined. The officers of the coal company promptly suspected that some of their clerks had been stealing, and it is said that one of the men was finally dismissed. Shinburn made a second visit and this time there was a still smaller amount of money in the safe. His disgust was in proportion to his disappointment and he left without taking a penny. On the third and last visit, however, he made a big haul. There was something like $60,000 in money in the safe, besides a large quantity of negotiable bonds and other securities. This time he took everything in sight. The Pinkertons were put on the case, but the clever crook managed to elude them.

One year before the White Haven affair he broke into the Walpole Savings bank of Walpole, N. H., and stole a large sum of money and bonds. He was arrested at Saratoga with seven or eight bonds in his possession. The evidence was conclusive. He was promptly convicted and sentenced to ten years in the New Hampshire state prison. He accepted the verdict submissively, but on his way to prison he slipped away from his captors and no trace of him was obtained for a long while afterwards. The White Haven affair was just one year old when the Pinkertons took Shinburn on Broadway.

They proceeded to convey their prisoner to Pennsylvania where he could be tried for the White Haven offense. They knew that they had an ingenuous and desperate criminal on their hands and that it would be unsafe to take any chances with him. To make assurance doubly sure he was handcuffed to two detectives. He was guarded every minute of the day and night. Among other things, he was compelled to sleep handcuffed to his guards. Each night his clothing was taken from him and locked in a separate room which was used by a Pinkerton man. The detectives were in no haste to turn him over to the authorities. They were anxious to obtain enough evidence against him to put him in prison for the remainder of his life. Accordingly he was kept at a hotel where the third degree and various other methods used by the police were utilized with more or less effect.

Shinburn was almost childlike in his demeanor toward his captors. He had a charming personality and talked engagingly. In other words, he possessed that quality which, for want of a better name, we call magnetism. This made the relations between the criminal and his captors rather agreeable. They liked him, but they did not relax any of their precautions.

One night, however, just before he was handcuffed to his detective guard, Shinburn secretly inserted the point of his plain gold scarf pin in the ratchet of the handcuff. The lock had not caught perfectly when snapped, and in the middle of the night Shinburn managed to open the handcuff, slipped it off his wrist and crept away naked from his sleeping companion. To complete his triumph, he entered the room of the other detective, stole his clothes and escaped with ease. The detectives were chagrined over this incident. The authorities were furious, but down in their secret hearts the police could not help but have a certain kind of admiration for this man who made thieves like Claude Duval and Jack Shepard appear like bungling amateurs.

Byrnes sat in his office apparently oblivious to Mr. Shinburn's movements. But he was watching him like a hawk. After the sensational escape of the famous criminal, the inspector learned that he had gone to Belgium and was posing there as a baron.

"Why not go after him?" suggested one of the headquarters men.

"No," answered the great thief taker, "we're not quite ready for him yet."

"But we can induce him to come over here and then bag him."

"It's not necessary. He'll come back. They all do."

Shinburn is said to have been a man of good birth. At all events he was well educated and talked several languages. As a consequence of this equipment he carried out his new role with perfection. He had a large estate just outside of Brussels, probably purchased with the money that he had stolen from half a dozen banks in America. He entertained on a large scale and spent his money lavishly. Most of his guests believed that he was a titled person who had the right to move in aristocratic society. Those who did suspect the man were helpless. No extradition treaty existed between Belgium and the United States at that time and so he was suffered to live in peace and honor on his ill gotten gains.

He was restless, however. He had all the money that he needed to keep him comfortably in any one of the European countries. But that was not enough; he wanted more. He began to speculate in the London and Berlin stock markets, and in a little while the stock brokers cleaned him out. It has been cynically said that they did to him what he did to the financial institutions of America.

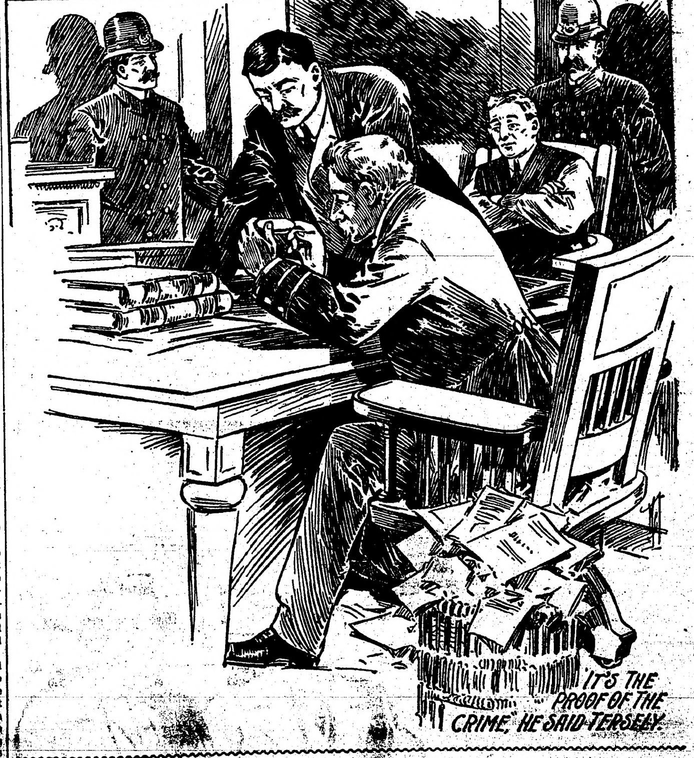
Failing to obtain money lawfully, he turned to his trade as a duck turns to water. He organized a gang to do business in Belgium, and planned to break the safe of the provincial bank of Vivere. His chief associate in this enterprise was a thief named Bullard, who had worked with him for many years in America. In this case "the operation was a success, but the patient died." That is to say, they opened the safe successfully, secured the money and got out of the building, but were arrested before they could make a complete "get-away." Shinburn engaged high priced lawyers and made a desperate legal fight, but was finally sentenced to five years, which he served.

After that he became a gambler, going from one resort to another in Europe. Finally he became tired of the old world, shook its dust from his feet and returned to this country. He little knew it at the time, but in doing this he was leading up to his farewell in the burglary business. He had not been here very long when he robbed a small bank in the interior of New York state. This started the Pinkertons on his track actively. He went to Philadelphia, and a certain operation in that city put the Quaker City authorities on their guard. Frank Kelly, one of the greatest bank detectives in the world, got in pursuit of Shinburn.

In the meantime the superintendent of Scotland Yard and the chief of the Paris secret service were itching to lay hands on the clever German-American. Chief Inspector Byrnes, sitting in his office on Mulberry street, waited patiently for the big criminal to come into his outspread net. The importance of the man, therefore, may be understood when it is known that five of the greatest thief takers in the world were looking for him at the same time.

The climax came after his robbery of a comparatively small bank. Byrnes wanted to catch him with undisputed evidences of his guilt. He could command money so readily and he engaged such brilliant legal advocates that it might prove fruitless to arrest him merely on suspicion or on account of his bad record. So the inspector was eager for the sort of proof that would stand in a court of law. The rogue even pretended that he was not Shinburn, but that he was really a titled nobleman. The police waited for the slip which every thief makes.

It came quicker than they expected. One morning Shinburn was discovered hurrying away from the neighborhood of a bank that had been robbed. The police arrested him on general principles. He was searched, but nothing of an incriminating nature was found on him. Before releasing him they telegraphed to Superintendent Byrnes. The inspector directed them to detain the prisoner and then hastened to give the baron his personal attention. The interview between the two men was a clash of keen minds. Neither one gained advantage.



"IT'S THE PROOF OF THE CRIME," HE SAID TERSELY.

After that Byrnes made a careful examination of the stuff that had been found in the baron's possession. It was very commonplace. In fact, it resembled the junk that a small boy carries in his pockets. There were a few dollars in bank notes, a small amount of change in silver and coppers, a time table on the Erie railroad, a bit of wax such as housewives use to polish their irons, a card case, a bit of string and a couple of fish hooks.

Surely some one of these things contained the germ of a thrilling detective story. The local police said no. Byrnes examined each particular thing in his impassive way. The brown eyes seemed sleepy and indifferent. One thing after another was tossed aside. But when he reached the bit of wax his eyes brightened and he became the man of action.

"What is it?" asked one of his assistants.

"It's the proof of the crime," he said tersely.

"But it's only a bit of ordinary wax."

The chief smiled indulgently.

"That's where you're mistaken," he said. "A close examination will show you that it differs from every other bit of wax that ever existed."

"How?" was the incredulous inquiry.

"Well, for instance, it has the impression of the top of a screw."

"What next?"

"Next, find the screw."

They did. They found it on the sidewalk between the police station and the bank. The screw fitted the lock plate of the door of the bank, and the hole from which it was taken was filled with wax that corresponded with the bit found in Shinburn's pocket. Thus, the man who had made a fortune by his wits and outwitted the police of two continents, was finally betrayed by a piece of wax.

Sixteen years was the sentence imposed by the judge. So far as is shown by the records it ended the career of the burglar-baron, the man who had entertained royalty and who lived alternately in a prison and a castle.

The Pinkertons arrested Shinburn more than once. Chief Inspector Byrnes had the honor of entertaining him in the Tombs. Many other detectives claimed to have "taken" the great criminal at one time or another. Byrnes used to say smilingly:

There's glory enough to go around."

It Trips.

Blobbs—Scribbler's poetry strikes me as being rather clumsy.

Slobbs—Clumsy? Why, it postively trips over its own feet.

Good Reason.

Howell—How well you look!

Powell—Yes; I haven't had my vacation yet.—Judge.

Simple Wills the Strongest

Until there is a better mode of communication with those who have stepped into another existence, or until the law legalizes the clairvoyant shops, last wills and testaments will continue to be matters of moment in human affairs. Just why the document called a will should be so different from the other written form of expression is not clear, but a considerable literature of swan songs attests that will writing belongs to a distinct school of letters.

From the dark-age conception of death, probably, grew the idea that a man's will should smack of the mystery and obscurity of the passing on. And some hundreds of years later records show that man has lost little of the early notion of the uses and purposes of a will. In this age of simplified spelling, short skirts and general ideals of utility, one of the most archaic things is a recorded wish of a testator.

"Brevity's the soul of wit," Shakespeare said. But few who contemplate death do it in hilarious mood and many persons miss their one chance to be a humorist; and their wills are perfect exhibitions of how not to communicate a few intelligent facts on paper to intelligent people. It is a rule of physics that to multiply methods is to multiply the chances of error. The same could be said of will making. The simpler the will the less the chance for making a mistake that might invalidate the document. Many have just missed fortunes on account of technicalities that would not admit the wills to probate. Litigation and those who live on it, thrive on the wills that have been so drawn as to admit of finding a flaw.

Any law student can quote the correct legal form of a will, but the lawyer of today will tell you that a will can be correctly drawn by any one of sound mind if a few points are heeded.

Make the will concise and as brief as possible, they say. State clearly the property to be bequeathed and devised and the beneficiaries—those to whom the property is to be given. Herewiths, aforesaids, towits, etc., usually are more decorative than necessary. Simple diction should be the ideal in will making.

J. E. Guinotte, judge of the probate court, in a lecture before the Kansas City School of Law, read a will that he said was remarkable for its brevity and directness. It was as follows:

"Kansas City, Mo., Sept. 12, 1888.—I start for Crystal, Colo., today at 11:20. In case I should die or be killed or in other words switched for the other shore, heaven I hope, I want all my deposits in Clay and Funkhouser's bank $5,000.00 Five thousand dollars and all in the Citizen National Bank to be paid over to my wife Lucy B. Bowly this I doo for hur protection as we have no children.

"J. W. BOWLEY,

"Witness—Ed. R. Stell, John G. Longdon."

Of course, the judge says, the foregoing might be improved upon in the matter of diction and punctuation.

After making your disposition of your property sign the document in the presence of two witnesses. These witnesses must then sign the paper in the presence of the testator and in the presence of each other. Three witnesses are better than two. No beneficiary in the will is a legal witness.

Adam Long, who died last December, left an estate of a million dollars to five heirs. Mr. Long drew up his will, but neglected to sign it. In spite of this defect the will was admitted to probate, the court holding that as the testator had written the will in his own hand, his intention was clear.

One day possessed of a fortune, the next almost penniless, was the experience of Lon M. Bales, who missed riches because his benefactress had but one witness to her will. Bales was employed by Mrs. Mary M. Brega, proprietor of the Canadian Hotel and Employment agency, 1333 Grand avenue. He was engaged to be married to Mrs. Brega at the time of her death last January. In her will she left to Bales a farm of 200 acres in Kansas, six diamonds, one pair of earrings, three race horses and $800. A brother-in-law of Mrs. Brega, Richard E. Brega, and other relatives, sued for her possessions. Witnesses testified that they had heard Mrs. Brega say she had bequeathed her property to Bales. But her will was witnessed by only one person, and the court refused to admit it for probate. Bales was permitted to keep a watch that had been given him by his fiancee before her death.

Obscure Port.

In a northern seaport town there is a wealthy but illiterate man, who owns many vessels, and follows their course over the seas by the aid of a large atlas and a ten-horse-power magnifying glass.

"I've just had a letter," he said to a neighbor, "from one of my captains, and he tells me he's been in a fearful storm. I'll read you from his letter what puzzles me. He says:

"'The waves rose like mountains. We were driven before the wind, to the danger of our lives, and put into great jeopardy.'

"What I want to know," said the shipowner, "is, where is Great Jeopardy? It's somewhere in the Mediterranean, but I can't find it on this map anywhere."—London Mail.

SERIAL STORY

No Man's Land

A ROMANCE

By Louis Joseph Vance

Illustrations by Ray Walters

(Copyright, 1910, by Louis Joseph Vance.)

SYNOPSIS.

Garrett Coast, a young man of New York City, meets Douglas Blackstock, who invites him to a card party. He accepts, although he dislikes Blackstock, the reason being that both are in love with Katherine Thaxter. Coast fails to convince her that Blackstock is unworthy of her friendship. At the party Coast meets two named Dundas and Van Tuyl. There is a quarrel, and Blackstock shoots Van Tuyl dead.

CHAPTER II.—(Continued.)

The man looked up and nodded. "Well, it's too late now. That's done for good and all. We needn't quarrel about it."

He went back to his seat.

"Good Lord, how long they are!"

He began to talk, to maunder to himself of what might have been and what had been, speaking of his aims, ambitions, achievements in an oddly detached way, as he might have reviewed another's life, only emotional when forced to realization of the fact that this was the end of it all. The phrase, "This ends it!" punctuated the semi-confessional soliloquy monotonously, repeated over and over with the same falling inflection. Coast detected not a word, not even a note of regret for his crime, save insofar as it affected Blackstock's fortunes—blasted them.

A shrill clamor of the telephone bell electrified them all. Dundas cried out. Blackstock jumped up and stumbled into the hall. Coast, rising, heard his voice.

"Yes. Tell them to come up."

He returned, almost reeling. "Here, Dundas," he said, slowly, "you let 'em in, will you, like a good fellow."

Mute in his panic, Dundas went to the door.

Coast could hear the whine of the ascending elevator, the clanking of its safety chains.

Abruptly he was conscious that Blackstock's temper had undergone a change. From passive surrender to his fate the man had passed to a mood of active resistance. Somehow instinctively, Coast seemed to divine this in the surcharged, tense atmosphere of that moment. He shot a swift, suspicious look at the man, and caught in return a look of low cunning and desperation.

He saw Blackstock in a pose of attention, listening, every sense alert, every muscle flexed—a man gathering himself together as a cat about to spring.

The elevator was very near the floor.

"By God!" Blackstock whispered, wetting his lips; and again his eyes were blazing. "I'll fool 'em yet!"

The man turned swiftly. Outside the elevator gate clanged. Coast heard a confusion of footfalls and voices, a knocking on the door. And suddenly he understood what Blackstock intended. Already he had regained the side table and snatched up the pistol. He turned with it lifted. "They shan't have me!" he cried, and reversed it to his temple.

"You fool!" Coast screamed unconsciously. With almost incredible swiftness of action he flung himself upon Blackstock and seized the pistol, deflected it toward the ceiling. It exploded.

For a moment longer he was struggling frantically with Blackstock to save the man from self-destruction. Then, without warning, he was seized and dragged away, holding the pistol. A strange hand snatched that away. Other hands pinioned his arms to his sides. He fought for freedom for an instant, then ceased to resist, thunderstruck with amazement.

Blackstock towered over him, pointing him out. "That's your man—take him!" he cried. "He's done murder and was trying suicide. I managed to keep him quiet until he heard you coming, then he made a grab for the pistol. Thank God, you're in time!"

Something stuck in Coast's throat—his tongue trying to articulate in a mouth dry with fear and consternation. "You liar!" he managed to say. "You—"

"Shut up, you!" One of the policemen holding him clapped a hand over his mouth.

"Why," he heard Blackstock say, "you saw him yourself, gentlemen. If there's any question in your minds, here's Mr. Dundas, who saw it all. Dundas, who shot Van Tuyl? Mr. Coast, here?"

Dimly as through a haze Coast saw Dundas emerge from the press of men in the room, a ghost of a man, eyelids quivering, limbs shaking, features working in his small, pasty face. And in his anguish of anger, fear and resentment, Coast detected the look, unobserved by any other, of secret understanding that passed between the two men

"Yes," Dundas said, his voice tremulous. "Why—why of course, Mr. Coast did it."

Coast felt the chill of handcuffs on his wrist—a chill that ate into his soul.

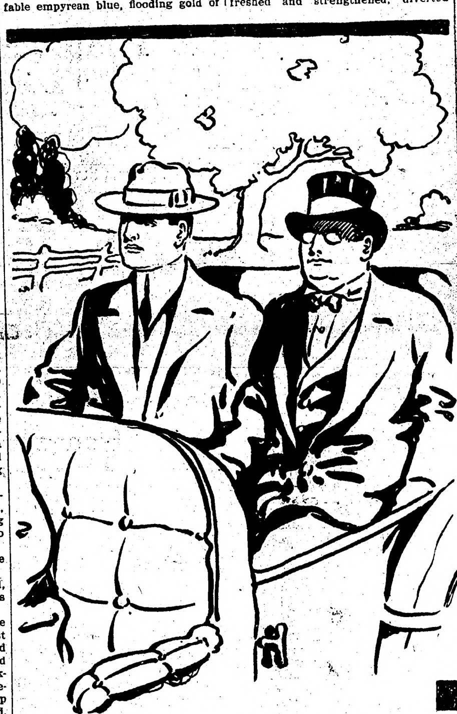
CHAPTER III.

Warburton had forgotten nothing. Coast walked out of Sing Sing to enter his own car, his departure so contrived and timed that he was conscious neither of a strange face nor a curious stare. The occupant of the driver's seat proved to be the mechanician who had driven for him prior to his trial and conviction; his "Good-morning, Mr. Coast; it's a pleasure to see you looking so well, sir," conveyed precisely the right degree of respectful congratulation; in this, too, Coast recognized the hand of his lawyer. He was grateful, further, for the hamper containing an excellent cold lunch, as well as for the fact, which Warburton presently disclosed, that the affair of his release had been managed so swiftly and quietly that only the lates editions of that day's evening papers would contain the news.

"We tried to give you as much time as we could," Warburton told him. "Whatever your plans are, you'll be glad not to be mobbed before you get a chance to put 'em across."

Coast's swift smile was reward enough for the little man. He snuggled comfortably into his corner of the tonneau, the broad eccentric curves of his plump face and figure radiating pride of conquest in addition to the honest delight he felt because of his client's deliverance.

To his client and friend the world rocked in a sea of emotions rediscovered. The sense of freedom, of space, of motion, the soft buffeting in his face of the clean, sweet, unpent air, the recognition of a new-born world a-riot with color—vernal green, ineffable empyrean blue, flooding gold of sunlight—played upon his heart a muted melody.



He Found Appalling the Thought of Re-entering It.

Again he thanked his God his father and mother had not lived to know the day of his arrest. . . .

He experienced a curious freak of memory, very suddenly seeing between him and the glorious world a fragment of a scene, his trial, exceedingly vivid; Blackstock groping a slow way toward the witness stand, his dark face the darker for an eye-shade, his eyes masked sinisterly with smoked glasses. . . .

Poor old Van Tuyl! . . .

His nerves crawled with apprehensions inspired by the city toward which the car was bearing him; the city of his birth and banishment; the city inexorable, insatiable, argus-eyed, peopled with its staring millions, ravening with curiosity, whose appetite should long since have been glutted with details of his disgrace. He found appalling the thought of reentering it, of trying to take up his former life in its easy, ordered groove, of coming and going in the company of those in whose eyes his brow would be forever branded with the mark of Cain—yes, even though he were exonerated of the crime of which he had been accused, for which he had been placed on trial, convicted and sentenced. Would they ever learn to believe him guiltless, even though the truth were published broadcast, trumpeted from the housetops? Would he not remain to them always the questionable hero of a sensational murder trial, whose escape from the electric chair had been due simply and solely to the exertions of his influential friends? . . .

Exoneration!

The word was sweeter to him than the name of Freedom had been to his forebears in 1776 and 1861. He dared not breathe it—yet; he dared not hope for it nor even question whether or not it had been made his.

What if his release had been solely due to the offices of his friends, to pressure brought to bear upon the state executive? . . . He felt that to discover such to be the case would prove insufferable. Death itself were preferable to life without vindication of the charge that had been laid against him. . . .

So terribly he feared to learn the truth. . . .

His friends, those who stood by him, those who had been silent, those who had denied him; what would be their reception of him now? He conned the names of a dozen of the dearest; did they believe in him, even now, in their secret hearts? Had they ever had absolute faith in his innocence, despite their protestations? Would he himself ever cease to doubt them secretly? . . . .

Katherine Thaxter . . .?

He had heard nothing of or from her since his conviction; before that, little enough; a note or two of halting sympathy, tinctured by a constraint he had been afraid to analyze. Whether it had been due to belief in his guilt, or to a thing more dreadful in his understanding, he had never found the courage to debate, not even in the longest watches of the hopeless nights when he had lain in waking torment in his cell, listening to some miserable condemned wretch moaning in his sleep a door or two down the row. . . .

His thoughts had swung the full circle. He ceased to think coherently.

In time Warburton touched Coast's arm with a gentle hand. "Lunch?" he queried, almost plaintive.

To see Coast smile once more was a keen delight. . . .

When they had finished, Coast, refreshed and strengthened, diverted and enlivened, boldly grasped the nettle.

"Well—?" he asked with a steady glance of courage.

Warburton pounced nimbly upon his chance. "It's exoneration," he began, and unconsciously hit upon the word so squarely that he caught himself up with a gasp at Coast's reception of it. "Why?" he cried, alarmed, "you're white as a sheet, man! I said exoneration—full and clear!"

Coast reassured him with a gesture. "It's just joy," he explained simply. He put his head back against the cushions, closed his eyes and drew a long breath. "How was I to guess how all this had been brought about? I was afraid to ask, afraid to surmise, even. Tell me, please."

"It came—like thunder out of a clear sky, Garrett; none more amazed than I." Warburton reverted to the habit of clipped phrases that characterized his moments of excitement. "I suppose you know—you've seen the papers?"

"Only infrequently. I . . . was a bit cowardly about them, I presume."

"Then you hadn't heard about Blackstock?" Coast shook his head. "Well, his eyes went back on him—were failing during the trial, if you'll remember. I heard he'd injured them somehow—with his wireless experiments, you know. He went nearly blind and took himself out of the country—to Germany, the papers said, to consult a Berlin specialist, perhaps to undergo an operation."

"One moment." Coast took a deep breath. "Did he go alone?"

"So far as I know. Why?"

"No matter. Call it idle curiosity."

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

NOTES from MEADOWBROOK FARM

By William Pitt

Hogs like cornstalks.

The disk will never take the place of the plow.

Pride yourself on having fancy and well bred stock.

The result of care from start to finish is first-class butter.

All root crops should be planted as soon as a good season is in the ground.

The seed corn must be well cared for after it is harvested if the best results are expected.

Rapid growth from hogs cannot be secured on even the best pasture, without some grain.

Farmers in general cross hogs more than other animals, but this is considered a bad practice.

Sheep have warm wool coats, don't be afraid to turn them out in good weather even if it is cold.

When the pigs are young and weak every time the sow gets up and lies down she is liable to kill the pigs.

Watch the ewes and don't let them go through narrow spaces; it may save you a case of abortion later on.

If horses will really winter better on more grain and less hay now is a good time to adopt such a line of feeding.

Dairy butter should be packed in five-pound jars and ten and twenty pound tubs to sell to the best advantage.

In most cities milk sells at retail for eight cents a quart, and at that price it is the cheapest and most valuable food known.

It is just as important that every horse should have his own collar all the time as that a man should wear his own shoes.

After foaling, the mare should have not less than a week's rest before being put to work, and then the work should be light.

A hog's time is not worth anything, but your time is. The best breed of hogs to raise is the kind that will grow into money quickest.

Use wire netting freely on the fronts of all your coops and houses—letting out the unused air and admitting sunshine at noonday.

That bright-eyed, red combed, active pullet will surely lay soon if you are not mighty careful that she does not get quite enough to eat.

You may like skim milk cold, but that don't change the mind of the calf or pig. They want it warm like nature meant them to have it.

Tankage, a by-product of the slaughter houses, is a wholesome feed for all kinds of live stock, but its greatest value is for hogs.

When the pigs are three or four hours old the sow should be fed about one quart of rich bran or shorts in fresh water made into a slop.

Work horses, who have been pushed in the fields all summer should now have the advantage of every hour possible in the fall pastures.

Some growers of onions prefer to cut the tops from the bulbs before they are taken from the ground using a pair of sheep shears for the purpose

The richer the milk the richer will be the cream, concludes the bulletin in discussing the effect of richness of milk may have on the richness of cream.

Tobacco growers are becoming yearly more disposed to know the form of potash, whether from kainit, muriate or sulphate, which enters into their tobacco fertilizers.

An armful of green cornstalks will add relish to the hog's ration, but it should not be fed regularly until the corn in the ear has hardened beyond the possibility of frost.

The cull and drop apples may be turned into profit by feeding them to the hogs, sheep, poulry and other live stock, or converted into vinegar for home use and commercial purposes.

By cuttings is but one way of propagating grapes. Layerings and grafting are also often used. Layering consists simply in laying a branch of a vine down in a trench and covering it with earth.

Raise more hogs.

Hairy vetch may be sown in oats.

Stock always prefer to drink water that is clean.

Burr clover can be sown broadcast in permanent pasture.

Sugar beets, carrots and turnips are fine feeds for sheep.

More attention is being given to cow peas as a farm crop.

Dairy cows should have rich and liberal feeding every day.

Salt is essential for a cow and she should have all she wants.

Crowded poultry will not lay—feed and care for them as we may.

The Cauliflowers must have a rather dry air, and free ventilation.

Onions sell best when graded by running them over a potato sorter.

A mule will do as much work as a horse on about two-thirds as much feed.

Australia and Argentina lead the world in the number of horses and cattle.

Hogging off corn is by far the cheapest method of feeding, as the hogs do all the work.

Where timothy is sown for seed four to six quarts is sufficient for a good stand of plants.

Alfalfa is the only known plant that will supply a nearly perfect balanced ration with corn alone.

The market demand for mules is always steady, and the farmer can make no mistake in raising them.

Salt causes the animal to drink water, and a large amount of water is necessary for a flow of milk.

In treating a wire cut, the wound should be kept absolutely clean and exposed to the air and sunshine.

Cows like a variety, and this should be supplied them, being careful, however, not to make sudden changes.

Lend your crops to your live stock and see what a big interest they will pay and how promptly they pay it.

Potatoes not to be used or marketed immediately should be left in the ground as long as the ground is dry.

The first thing after the sow has farrowed she should be supplied with all the pure cold water she will drink.

The fall planting of such fruits as are adapted to planting at that season, is, as a rule, better than spring planting.

It is said that 20 acres of corn put into the silo is worth more in feeding a dairy herd than 30 acres in the crib.

After the fruit harvest in the orchard, go over the trees and grounds and pick up and destroy all worthless, rotten and wormy fruit.

A good fence is absolutely necessary on a farm where live stock is kept, and there should be no farms on which live stock is not kept.

The quality of water has much to do with the quality of milk, the quality of eggs as well as the healthfulness of the stock that uses it.

The annual clearing out of the old stock should take place early enough so that the winter quarters will provide plenty of room for the pullets.

Test your cows for butter fat and rid your farm of those that do not produce at least one hundred and fifty pounds of butter fat per annum.

An animal will not have the necessary relish for its feed to get the greatest amount of good out of it, if it is fed prior to the regular feeding time.

The best time to cut corn for late fall or winter feed is just as soon as the ears are well dented and when a few of the leaves begin to change color

A large amount of feed is wasted by irregular feeding. The digestive fluids work more freely and most efficiently when called upon at regular intervals.

It is a tolerably easy matter for any poultryman to produce eggs at a feed cost of less than 10 cents a dozen and the best of market poultry at less than ten cents a pound.

Remember to take good care of the sow. Watch her closely for the little pigs have nothing else to depend upon except their mother's milk until they are three or four weeks old.

Don't wait until the busy times next spring to clean up your garden, but start in this fall after the crops are out of the way to get everything in readiness for early spring work.

Capons neither crow nor fight and are despised by other fowls. They often show great fondness for little chicks, and instances are not uncommon where they have been utilized in rearing broods of chickens.

CANADA'S IMMENSE WHEAT FIELDS

THE ATTRACTION FOR THREE TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAYS.

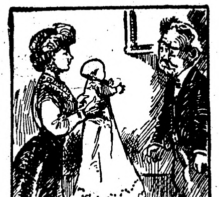
Last August there visited the Canadian west the vice-president of the largest individual hardware company in the United States. As his firm have a turnover of millions, and deals extensively with farm implements, this man took a deep interest in crop conditions in Canada, and on his return he embodied his findings in an article for the Hardware Reporter. This article should be of special interest to farmers.

The writer speaks of the importance of the spring wheat crop of Western Canada. He might also have spoken of the importance of the oat crop and also of the winter wheat crop, as well as barley. Winter wheat during the past few years has been a great success, and experiments have shown that it can be grown with success in almost any portion of the three provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. But apart from this, the spring wheat crop is the one generally grown, and all who know anything of grain, anyone who has had anything to do with markets, knows or has heard of the high character of this cereal and the splendid yields that are annually produced. Reproducing from this article:—

"In a land of such great sweep, and of such difference in soil and climate, there are many resources, but none are at present of the same overwhelming importance as the spring wheat crop. In the interminable prairie stretches of the northwest provinces it is the one absorbing topic of interest and of conversation during its growing and its harvesting, for upon its success or failure hangs the weal or woe of a large part of the Dominion. Its influence extends far down into the United States, drawing thousands of farmers northwards with the lure of cheap lands, but likewise beyond the great lakes, even to the easy going maritime provinces, calling the flower of their young men to its opportunities. Development in these prairie provinces goes on at high pressure for everything hangs on the outcome of spring wheat. Success has emboldened the raisers of this one all-important crop, and each year there is further incursion into those northern fields that only a short time ago were regarded as Arctic wastes. The Canadian Northwest seems to be one of those modern agricultural examples set forth to drive the final nail in the coffin of that ancient Malthusian delusion that population tends to outrun the means of subsistence, since the only fear now among Canadian economists is as to the danger of overstocking the wheat market. Only about two and one-half per cent of possible arable lands in the northwest provinces is now under cultivation, and this year the crop promises to be close to 200,000,000 bushels, so that your imagination and your arithmetic can easily supply the answer as to the possible or even probable outcome."

During the months of July and August the weather was unfavourable and the production of a 200 million yield of wheat will not likely be realized, but even with this, the threshing reports coming to hand show that the crop will be a splendidly paying one.

A LIVING IMAGE.



Mrs. Fondmar—There! Isn't baby the image of his father?

Oldchumme—Sure! Same lack of expression, same red nose, no teeth to speak of—and, by George! prematurely bald head, too!

Splendid Crops
in Saskatchewan (Western Canada)
800 Bushels from 20 acres of wheat was the thresher's return from a Lloydminster farm in the season of 1910. Many fields in that as well as other districts yielded from 25 to 35 bushels of wheat to the acre. Other grains in proportion.
160 ACRE FARMS IN WESTERN CANADA FREE
LARGE PROFITS are thus derived from the FREE HOMESTEAD LANDS of Western Canada.
This excellent showing causes prices to advance. Land values should double in two years' time. Grain growing, mixed farming, cattle raising and dairying are all profitable. Free Homesteads of 160 acres are to be had in the very best districts; 160 acre pre-emptions at $3.00 per acre within certain areas. Schools and churches in every settlement, climate unexcelled, soil the richest; wood, water and building material plentiful.
For particulars as to location, low settlers' railway rates and descriptive illustrated pamphlet, "Last Best West," and other information, write to Sup't of Immigration, Ottawa, Canada, or to Canadian Government Agent.
CHAS. PILLING
Clifford Block Grand Forks, N. Dak.
Please write to the agent nearest you

Defective Page

ADVENTURES of the WORLD'S GREAT DETECTIVES

By George Barton

The Story of the Wax Impression—

An Episode in the career of Thomas F. Byrnes the Great Inspector of Police.........

COPYRIGHT 1911 BY W. G. CHAPMAN.

ON the night of the fifteenth of April, 1895, the First National Bank of Middleburg, N. Y., was entered and robbed of a large sum of money. It was the climax to a series of audacious bank burglaries committed under circumstances that led the authorities to believe that all of them were the work of an especially successful gang of bank thieves.

Thomas F. Byrnes, the greatest chief inspector of police that New York has ever known was in authority at that time and all of the facts in the case were laid before him. In the meantime complaints were coming in from other quarters. Robberies had been successfully pulled off at the Phoenix bank of Phoenix, N. Y.; the National Bank of Pawling, Pawling, N. Y.; the St. Hyacinth bank of West Farnham, Ontario, and the Thomaston National bank of Thomaston, Conn.

Superintendent Byrnes probably knew the methods of bank burglars better than any man in the United States, with the possible exception of William A. Pinkerton, and he began a study of the evidence in hand with the hope of determining the identity of the man who was directly concerned in this series of bold burglaries. Most bank crooks depend upon the use of dynamite and nitroglycerine to break open safes and vaults. The master hand in the cases under investigation used more refined means of accomplishing his purpose. The robberies had evidently been engineered, if not accomplished, personally by a man who had the brain and the touch to beat all known combinations.

That man, it was finally determined, was Max Shinburn, one of the most notorious and most successful criminals the world has ever known. The problem now was to catch Shinburn and directly connect him with one of the burglaries. The resources of thief takers fortunately are greater than those of the thieves. The life and adventures of this famous burglar was soon compiled and laid before the authorities for their guidance.

Max Shinburn was a German by birth and had come to the United States during the Civil war. He was a good mechanic and secured employment with one of the leading safe manufacturers of this country. He remained with the concern for several years and in that time became a most expert safe man. He had, especially, a perfect knowledge of the mechanism of combination locks.

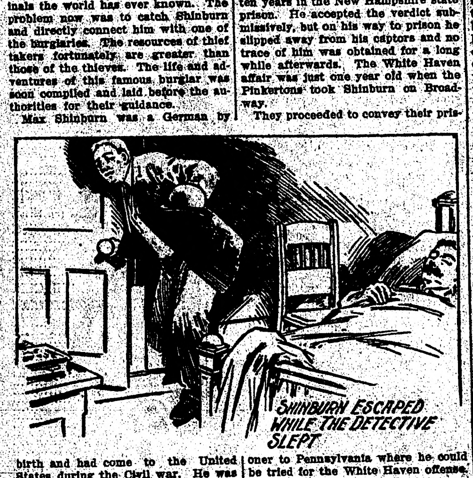
Thus equipped, he left the company and began his career of crime. At that time the safes made by the concern with which he had been employed were in use in every part of America. With an ingenuity that was almost diabolical, he began operations on the safes of his own company. His pals had the greatest admiration for Shinburn and were fond of saying that he had elevated burglary from a trade to a profession. It might have been added that he was one of the few burglars who actually learned his trade. He had served an apprenticeship with the safe company and took the knowledge thus acquired and ungratefully used it against his benefactors.

One of the curious side lights in this connection was the failure of the safe company. Shinburn's success in breaking into their safes drove the concern out of business. He knew the banks and financial institutions that had purchased safes from his old company, and in committing his burglaries he always grimly gave these his preference. When it became known that the one-time expert of the safe company and the audacious safe breaker were one and the same person, the company found it practically impossible to dispose of any more of their products.

One of Shinburn's most brilliant achievements—if disreputable business can be mentioned in this manner—was his robbery of the vaults of the Lehigh and Wilkesbarre Coal company at White Haven, Pa., in 1867. He broke into the office at night and with a twist of the wrist managed to open the safe. There was, however, less than six thousand dollars in money there at the time. Shinburn expected to make a big haul and he was so thoroughly disgusted that he only took a few hundred dollars and left the balance of money in the safe. The effect of this may be imagined. The officers of the coal company promptly suspected that some of their clerks had been stealing, and it is said that one of the men was finally dismissed. Shinburn made a second visit and this time there was a still smaller amount of money in the safe. His disgust was in proportion to his disappointment and he left without taking a penny. On the third and last visit, however, he made a big haul. There was something like $60,000 in money in the safe, besides a large quantity of negotiable bonds and other securities. This time he took everything in sight. The Pinkertons were put on the case, but the clever crook managed to elude them.

One year before the White Haven affair he broke into the Walpole Savings bank of Walpole, N. H., and stole a large sum of money and bonds. He was arrested at Saratoga with seven or eight bonds in his possession. The evidence was conclusive. He was promptly convicted and sentenced to ten years in the New Hampshire state prison. He accepted the verdict submissively, but on his way to prison he slipped away from his captors and no trace of him was obtained for a long while afterwards. The White Haven affair was just one year old when the Pinkertons took Shinburn on Broadway.

They proceeded to convey their prisoner to Pennsylvania where he could be tried for the White Haven offense. They knew that they had an ingenuous and desperate criminal on their hands and that it would be unsafe to take any chances with him. To make assurance doubly sure he was handcuffed to two detectives. He was guarded every minute of the day and night. Among other things, he was compelled to sleep handcuffed to his guards. Each night his clothing was taken from him and locked in a separate room which was used by a Pinkerton man. The detectives were in no haste to turn him over to the authorities. They were anxious to obtain enough evidence against him to put him in prison for the remainder of his life. Accordingly he was kept at a hotel where the third degree and various other methods used by the police were utilized with more or less effect.



SHINBURN ESCAPED WHILE THE DETECTIVE SLEPT.

Shinburn was almost childlike in his demeanor toward his captors. He had a charming personality and talked engagingly. In other words, he possessed that quality which, for want of a better name, we call magnetism. This made the relations between the criminal and his captors rather agreeable. They liked him, but they did not relax any of their precautions.

One night, however, just before he was handcuffed to his detective guard, Shinburn secretly inserted the point of his plain gold scarf pin in the ratchet of the handcuff. The lock had not caught perfectly when snapped, and in the middle of the night Shinburn managed to open the handcuff, slipped it off his wrist and crept away naked from his sleeping companion. To complete his triumph, he entered the room of the other detective, stole his clothes and escaped with ease. The detectives were chagrined over this incident. The authorities were furious, but down in their secret hearts the police could not help but have a certain kind of admiration for this man who made thieves like Claude Duval and Jack Shepard appear like bungling amateurs.

Byrnes sat in his office apparently oblivious to Mr. Shinburn's movements. But he was watching him like a hawk. After the sensational escape of the famous criminal, the inspector learned that he had gone to Belgium and was posing there as a baron.

"Why not go after him?" suggested one of the headquarters men.

"No," answered the great thief taker, "we're not quite ready for him yet."

"But we can induce him to come over here and then bag him."

"It's not necessary. He'll come back. They all do."

Shinburn is said to have been a man of good birth. At all events he was well educated and talked several languages. As a consequence of this equipment he carried out his new role with perfection. He had a large estate just outside of Brussels, probably purchased with the money that he had stolen from half a dozen banks in America. He entertained on a large scale and spent his money lavishly. Most of his guests believed that he was a titled person who had the right to move in aristocratic society. Those who did suspect the man were helpless. No extradition treaty existed between Belgium and the United States at that time and so he was suffered to live in peace and honor on his ill gotten gains.

He was restless, however. He had all the money that he needed to keep him comfortably in any one of the European countries. But that was not enough; he wanted more. He began to speculate in the London and Paris stock markets and in a little while the stock brokers cleaned him out. It has been cynically said that they did to him what he did to the financial institutions of America.

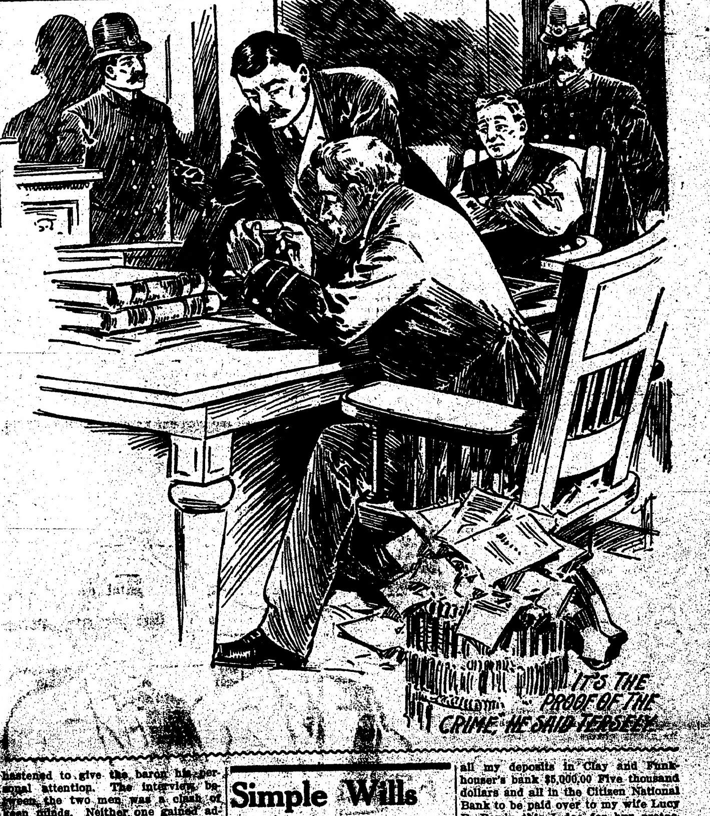
Failing to obtain money lawfully, he turned to his trade as a duck turns to water. He organized a gang to do business in Belgium, and planned to break the safe of the provincial bank of Vivere. His chief associate in this enterprise was a thief named Bullard, who had worked with him for many years in America. In this case "the operation was a success, but the patient died." That is to say, they opened the safe successfully, secured the money and got out of the building, but were arrested before they could make a complete "get-away." Shinburn engaged high priced lawyers and made a desperate legal fight, but was finally sentenced to five years, which he served.

After that he became a gambler, going from one resort to another in Europe. Finally he became tired of the old world, shook its dust from his feet and returned to this country. He little knew it at the time, but in doing this he was leading up to his farewell in the burglary business. He had not been here very long when he robbed a small bank in the interior of New York state. This started the Pinkertons on his track actively. He went to Philadelphia, and a certain operation in that city put the Quaker City authorities on their guard. Frank Kelly, one of the greatest bank detectives in the world, got in pursuit of Shinburn.

In the meantime the superintendent of Scotland Yard and the chief of the Paris secret service were itching to lay hands on the clever German-American. Chief Inspector Byrnes, sitting in his office on Mulberry street, waited patiently for the big criminal to come into his outspread net. The importance of the man, therefore, may be understood when it is known that five of the greatest thief takers in the world were looking for him at the same time.

The climax came after his robbery of a comparatively small bank. Byrnes wanted to catch him with undisputed evidences of his guilt. He could command money so readily and he engaged such brilliant legal advocates that it might prove fruitless to arrest him merely on suspicion or on account of his bad record. So the inspector was eager for the sort of proof that would stand in a court of law. The rogue even pretended that he was not Shinburn, but that he was really a titled nobleman. The police waited for the slip which every thief makes.

It came quicker than they expected. One morning Shinburn was discovered hurrying away from the neighborhood of a bank that had been robbed. The police arrested him on general principles. He was searched, but nothing of an incriminating nature was found on him. Before releasing him they telegraphed to Superintendent Byrnes. The inspector directed them to detain the prisoner and then hastened to give the baron his personal attention. The interview between the two men was a clash of keen minds. Neither one gained advantage.



"IT'S THE PROOF OF THE CRIME," HE SAID TERSELY.

After that Byrnes made a careful examination of the stuff that had been found in the baron's possession. It was very commonplace. In fact, it resembled the junk that a small boy carries in his pockets. There were a few dollars in bank notes, a small amount of change in silver and coppers, a time table on the Erie railroad, a bit of wax such as housewives use to polish their irons, a card case, a bit of string and a couple of fish hooks.

Surely some one of these things contained the germ of a thrilling detective story. The local police said no. Byrnes examined each particular thing in his impassive way. The brown eyes seemed sleepy and indifferent. One thing after another was tossed aside. But when he reached the bit of wax his eyes brightened and he became the man of action.

"What is it?" asked one of his assistants.

"It's the proof of the crime," he said tersely.

"But it's only a bit of ordinary wax."

The chief smiled indulgently.

"That's where you're mistaken," he said. "A close examination will show you that it differs from every other bit of wax that ever existed."

"How?" was the incredulous inquiry.

"Well, for instance, it has the impression of the top of a screw."

"What next?"

"Next, find the screw."

They did. They found it on the sidewalk between the police station and the bank. The screw fitted the lock plate of the door of the bank, and the hole from which it was taken was filled with wax that corresponded with the bit found in Shinburn's pocket. Thus, the man who had made a fortune by his wits and outwitted the police of two continents, was finally betrayed by a piece of wax.

Sixteen years was the sentence imposed by the judge. So far as is shown by the records it ended the career of the burglar-baron, the man who had entertained royalty and who lived alternately in a prison and a castle.

The Pinkertons arrested Shinburn more than once. Chief Inspector Byrnes had the honor of entertaining him in the Tombs. Many other detectives claimed to have "taken" the great criminal at one time or another. Byrnes used to say smilingly:

"There's glory enough to go around."

It Trips.

Blobbs—Scribbler's poetry strikes me as being rather clumsy.

Slobbs—Clumsy? Why, it postively trips over its own feet.

Good Reason.

Howell—How well you look!

Powell—Yes; I haven't had my vacation yet.—Judge.

Simple Wills the Strongest

Until there is a better mode of communication with those who have stepped into another existence, or until the law legalizes the clairvoyant shops, last wills and testaments will continue to be matters of moment in human affairs. Just why the document called a will should be so different from the other written form of expression is not clear, but a considerable literature of swan songs attests that will writing belongs to a distinct school of letters.

From the dark-age conception of death, probably, grew the idea that a man's will should smack of the mystery and obscurity of the passing on. And some hundreds of years later records show that man has lost little of the early notion of the uses and purposes of a will. In this age of simplified spelling, short skirts and general ideals of utility, one of the most archaic things is a recorded wish of a testator.

"Brevity's the soul of wit," Shakespeare said. But few who contemplate death do it in hilarious mood and many persons miss their one chance to be a humorist; and their wills are perfect exhibitions of how not to communicate a few intelligent facts on paper to intelligent people. It is a rule of physics that to multiply methods is to multiply the chances of error. The same could be said of will making. The simpler the will the less the chance for making a mistake that might invalidate the document. Many have just missed fortunes on account of technicalities that would not admit the wills to probate. Litigation and those who live on it, thrive on the wills that have been so drawn as to admit of finding a flaw.

Any law student can quote the correct legal form of a will, but the lawyer of today will tell you that a will can be correctly drawn by any one of sound mind if a few points are heeded.

Make the will concise and as brief as possible, they say. State clearly the property to be bequeathed and devised and the beneficiaries—those to whom the property is to be given. Herewiths, aforesaids, towits, etc., usually are more decorative than necessary. Simple diction should be the ideal in will making.

J. E. Guinotte, judge of the probate court, in a lecture before the Kansas City School of Law, read a will that he said was remarkable for its brevity and directness. It was as follows:

"Kansas City, Mo., Sept. 12, 1888.—I start for Crystal, Colo., today at 11:20. In case I should die or be killed or in other words switched for the other shore, heaven I hope, I want all my deposits in Clay and Funkhouser's bank $5,000,00 Five thousand dollars and all in the Citizen National Bank to be paid over to my wife Lucy B. Bowly this I doo for hur protection as we have no children.

"J. W. BOWLEY.

"Witness—Ed. R. Stell, John G. Longdon."

Of course, the judge says, the foregoing might be improved upon in the matter of diction and punctuation.

After making your disposition of your property sign the document in the presence of two witnesses. These witnesses must then sign the paper in the presence of the testator and in the presence of each other. Three witnesses are better than two. No beneficiary in the will is a legal witness.

Adam Long, who died last December, left an estate of a million dollars to five heirs. Mr. Long drew up his will, but neglected to sign it. In spite of this defect the will was admitted to probate, the court holding that as the testator had written the will in his own hand, his intention was clear.

One day possessed of a fortune, the next almost penniless, was the experience of Lon M. Bales, who missed riches because his benefactress had but one witness to her will. Bales was employed by Mrs. Mary M. Brega, proprietor of the Canadian Hotel and Employment agency, 1383 Grand avenue. He was engaged to be married to Mrs. Brega at the time of her death last January. In her will she left to Bales a farm of 200 acres in Kansas, six diamonds, one pair of earrings, three race horses and $800. A brother-in-law of Mrs. Brega, Richard E. Brega, and other relatives, sued for her possessions. Witnesses testified that they had heard Mrs. Brega say she had bequeathed her property to Bales. But her will was witnessed by only one person, and the court refused to admit it for probate. Bales was permitted to keep a watch that had been given him by his fiancee before her death.

Obscure Port.

In a northern seaport town there is a wealthy but illiterate man, who owns many vessels, and follows their course over the seas by the aid of a large atlas and a ten-horse-power magnifying glass.

"I've just had a letter," he said to a neighbor, "from one of my captains, and he tells me he's been in a fearful storm. I'll read you from his letter what puzzles me. He says:

"'The waves rose like mountains. We were driven before the wind, to the danger of our lives, and put into great jeopardy.'

"What I want to know," said the shipowner, "is, where is Great Jeopardy? It's somewhere in the Mediterranean, but I can't find it on this map anywhere."—London Mail.

SERIAL STORY

No Man's Land

A ROMANCE

By Louis Joseph Vance

Illustrations by Ray Walters

(Copyright, 1910, by Louis Joseph Vance.)

SYNOPSIS.

Garrett Coast, a young man of New York City, meets Douglas Blackstock, who invites him to a card party. He accepts, although he dislikes Blackstock, the reason being that both are in love with Katherine Thaxter. Coast fails to convince her that Blackstock is unworthy of her friendship. At the party Coast meets two named Dundas and Van Tuyl. There is a quarrel, and Blackstock shoots Van Tuyl dead.

CHAPTER II.—(Continued.)

The man looked up and nodded. "Well, it's too late now. That's done for good and all. We needn't quarrel about it."

He went back to his seat.

"Good Lord, how long they are!"

He began to talk, to maunder to himself of what might have been and what had been, speaking of his aims, ambitions, achievements in an oddly detached way, as he might have reviewed another's life, only emotional when forced to realization of the fact that this was the end of it all. The phrase, "This ends it!" punctuated the semi-confessional soliloquy monotonously, repeated over and over with the same falling inflection. Coast detected not a word, not even a note of regret for his crime, save insofar as it affected Blackstock's fortunes—blasted them.

A shrill clamor of the telephone bell electrified them all. Dundas cried out. Blackstock jumped up and stumbled into the hall. Coast, rising, heard his voice.

"Yes. Tell them to come up."

He returned, almost reeling. "Here, Dundas," he said, slowly, "you let 'em in, will you, like a good fellow."

Mute in his panic, Dundas went to the door.

Coast could hear the whine of the ascending elevator, the clanking of its safety chains.

Abruptly he was conscious that Blackstock's temper had undergone a change. From passive surrender to his fate the man had passed to a mood of active resistance. Somehow instinctively, Coast seemed to divine this in the surcharged, tense atmosphere of that moment. He shot a swift, suspicious look at the man, and caught in return a look of low cunning and desperation.

He saw Blackstock in a pose of attention, listening, every sense alert, every muscle flexed—a man gathering himself together as a cat about to spring.

The elevator was very near the floor.

"By God!" Blackstock whispered, wetting his lips; and again his eyes were blazing. "I'll fool 'em yet!"

The man turned swiftly. Outside the elevator gate clanged. Coast heard a confusion of footfalls and voices, a knocking on the door. And suddenly he understood what Blackstock intended. Already he had regained the side table and snatched up the pistol. He turned with it lifted. "They shan't have me!" he cried, and reversed it to his temple.

"You fool!" Coast screamed unconsciously. With almost incredible swiftness of action he flung himself upon Blackstock and seized the pistol, deflected it toward the ceiling. It exploded.

For a moment longer he was struggling frantically with Blackstock to save the man from self-destruction. Then, without warning, he was seized and dragged away, holding the pistol. A strange hand snatched that away. Other hands pinioned his arms to his sides. He fought for freedom for an instant, then ceased to resist, thunderstruck with amazement.

Blackstock towered over him, pointing him out. "That's your man—take him!" he cried. "He's done murder and was trying suicide. I managed to keep him quiet until he heard you coming, then he made a grab for the pistol. Thank God, you're in time!"

Something stuck in Coast's throat—his tongue trying to articulate in a mouth dry with fear and consternation. "You liar!" he managed to say. "You—"

"Shut up, you!" One of the policemen holding him clapped a hand over his mouth.

"Why," he heard Blackstock say, "you saw him yourself, gentlemen. If there's any question in your minds, here's Mr. Dundas, who saw it all. Dundas, who shot Van Tuyl? Mr. Coast, here?"

Dimly as through a haze Coast saw Dundas emerge from the press of men in the room, a ghost of a man, eyelids quivering, limbs shaking, features working in his small, pasty face. And in his anguish of anger, fear and resentment, Coast detected the look, unobserved by any other, of secret understanding that passed between the two men.

"Yes," Dundas said, his voice tremulous. "Why—why of course, Mr. Coast did it."

Coast felt the chill of handcuffs on his wrist—a chill that ate into his soul.

CHAPTER III.

Warburton had forgotten nothing. Coast walked out of Sing Sing to enter his own car, his departure so contrived and timed that he was conscious neither of a strange face nor a curious stare. The occupant of the driver's seat proved to be the mechanician who had driven for him prior to his trial and conviction; his "Good-morning, Mr. Coast; it's a pleasure to see you looking so well, sir," conveyed precisely the right degree of respectful congratulation; in this, too, Coast recognized the hand of his lawyer. He was grateful, further, for the hamper containing an excellent cold lunch, as well as for the fact, which Warburton presently disclosed, that the affair of his release had been managed so swiftly and quietly that only the lates editions of that day's evening papers would contain the news.

"We tried to give you as much time as we could," Warburton told him. "Whatever your plans are, you'll be glad not to be mobbed before you get a chance to put 'em across."

Coast's swift smile was reward enough for the little man. He snuggled comfortably into his corner of the tonneau, the broad eccentric curves of his plump face and figure radiating pride of conquest in addition to the honest delight he felt because of his client's deliverance.

To his client and friend the world rocked in a sea of emotions rediscovered. The sense of freedom, of space, of motion, the soft buffeting in his face of the clean, sweet, unpent air, the recognition of a new-born world a-riot with color—vernal green, ineffable empyrean blue, flooding gold of sunlight—played upon his heart a muted melody.

Again he thanked his God his father and mother had not lived to know the day of his arrest. . . .

He experienced a curious freak of memory, very suddenly seeing between him and the glorious world a fragment of a scene, his trial, exceedingly vivid; Blackstock groping a slow way toward the witness stand, his dark face the darker for an eye-shade, his eyes masked sinisterly with smoked glasses. . . .

Poor old Van Tuyl! . . .

His nerves crawled with apprehensions inspired by the city toward which the car was bearing him; the city of his birth and banishment; the city inexorable, insatiable, argus-eyed, peopled with its staring millions, ravening with curiosity, whose appetite should long since have been glutted with details of his disgrace. He found appalling the thought of reentering it, of trying to take up his former life in its easy, ordered groove, of coming and going in the company of those in whose eyes his brow would be forever branded with the mark of Cain—yes, even though he were exonerated of the crime of which he had been accused, for which he had been placed on trial, convicted and sentenced. Would they ever learn to believe him guiltless, even though the truth were published broadcast, trumpeted from the housetops? Would he not remain to them always the questionable hero of a sensational murder trial, whose escape from the electric chair had been due simply and solely to the exertions of his influential friends? . . .

Exoneration!

The word was sweeter to him than the name of Freedom had been to his forebears in 1776 and 1861. He dared not breathe it—yet; he dared not hope for it nor even question whether or not it had been made his.

What if his release had been solely due to the offices of his friends, to pressure brought to bear upon the state executive? . . . He felt that to discover such to be the case would prove insufferable. Death itself were preferable to life without vindication of the charge that had been laid against him. . . .

So terribly he feared to learn the truth. . . .

His friends, those who stood by him, those who had been silent, those who had denied him; what would be their reception of him now? He conned the names of a dozen of the dearest; did they believe in him, even now, in their secret hearts? Had they ever had absolute faith in his innocence, despite their protestations? Would he himself ever cease to doubt them secretly? . . .

Katherine Thaxter . . .?

He had heard nothing of or from her since his conviction; before that, little enough; a note or two of halting sympathy, tinctured by a constraint he had been afraid to analyze. Whether it had been due to belief in his guilt, or to a thing more dreadful in his understanding, he had never found the courage to debate, not even in the longest watches of the hopeless nights when he had lain in waking torment in his cell, listening to some miserable condemned wretch moaning in his sleep a door or two down the row. . . .

His thoughts had swung the full circle. He ceased to think coherently.

In time Warburton touched Coast's arm with a gentle hand. "Lunch?" he queried, almost plaintive.

To see Coast smile once more was a keen delight. . . .

When they had finished, Coast, refreshed and strengthened, diverted and enlivened, boldly grasped the nettle.

"Well—?" he asked with a steady glance of courage.

Warburton pounced nimbly upon his chance. "It's exoneration," he began, and unconsciously hit upon the word so squarely that he caught himself up with a gasp at Coast's reception of it. "Why?" he cried, alarmed, "you're white as a sheet, man! I said exoneration—full and clear!"

Coast reassured him with a gesture. "It's just joy," he explained simply. He put his head back against the cushions, closed his eyes and drew a long breath. "How was I to guess how all this had been brought about? I was afraid to ask, afraid to surmise, even. Tell me, please."

"It came—like thunder out of a clear sky, Garrett; none more amazed than I." Warburton reverted to the habit of clipped phrases that characterized his moments of excitement. "I suppose you know—you've seen the papers?"

"Only infrequently. I . . . was a bit cowardly about them, I presume."

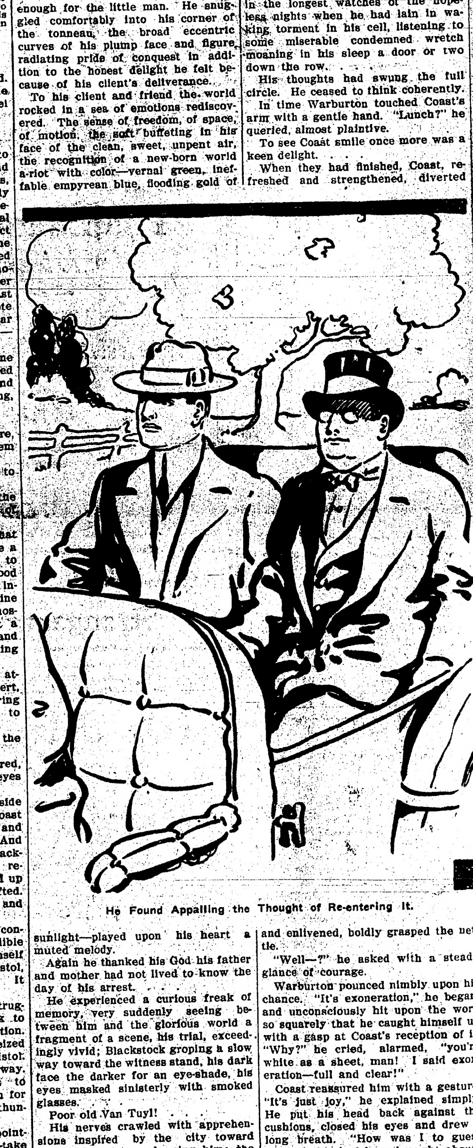
"Then you hadn't heard about Blackstock?" Coast shook his head. "Well, his eyes went back on him—were failing during the trial, if you'll remember. I heard he'd injured them somehow—with his wireless experiments, you know. He went nearly blind and took himself out of the country—to Germany, the papers said, to consult a Berlin specialist, perhaps to undergo an operation."

"One moment." Coast took a deep breath. "Did he go alone?"

"So far as I know. Why?"

"No matter. Call it idle curiosity."

(TO BE CONTINUED.)



He Found Appalling the Thought of Re-entering It.

NOTES from MEADOWBROOK FARM

By William Pitt

Hogs like cornstalks.

The disk will never take the place of the plow.

Pride yourself on having fancy and well bred stock.

The result of care from start to finish is first-class butter.

All root crops should be planted as soon as a good season is in the ground.

The seed corn must be well cared for after it is harvested if the best results are expected.

Rapid growth from hogs cannot be secured on even the best pasture, without some grain.

Farmers in general cross hogs more than other animals, but this is considered a bad practice.

Sheep have warm wool coats, don't be afraid to turn them out in good weather even if it is cold.

When the pigs are young and weak every time the sow gets up and lies down she is liable to kill the pigs.

Watch the ewes and don't let them go through narrow spaces; it may save you a case of abortion later on.

If horses will really winter better on more grain and less hay now is a good time to adopt such a line of feeding.

Dairy butter should be packed in five-pound jars and ten and twenty pound tubs to sell to the best advantage.

In most cities milk sells at retail for eight cents a quart, and at that price it is the cheapest and most valuable food known.

It is just as important that every horse should have his own collar all the time as that a man should wear his own shoes.

After foaling, the mare should have not less than a week's rest before being put to work, and then the work should be light.

A hog's time is not worth anything, but your time is. The best breed of hogs to raise is the kind that will grow into money quickest.

Use wire netting freely on the fronts of all your coops and houses—letting out the unused air and admitting sunshine at noonday.

That bright-eyed, red combed, active pullet will surely lay soon if you are not mighty careful that she does not get quite enough to eat.

You may like skim milk cold, but that don't change the mind of the calf or pig. They want it warm like nature meant them to have it.

Tankage, a by-product of the slaughter houses, is a wholesome feed for all kinds of live stock, but its greatest value is for hogs.

When the pigs are three or four hours old the sow should be fed about one quart of rich bran or shorts in fresh water made into a slop.

Work horses, who have been pushed in the fields all summer should now have the advantage of every hour possible in the fall pastures.

Some growers of onions prefer to cut the tops from the bulbs before they are taken from the ground using a pair of sheep shears for the purpose.

The richer the milk the richer will be the cream, concludes the bulletin in discussing the effect of richness of milk may have on the richness of cream.

Tobacco growers are becoming yearly more disposed to know the form of potash, whether from kainit, muriate or sulphate, which enters into their tobacco fertilizers.

An armful of green cornstalks will add relish to the hog's ration, but it should not be fed regularly until the corn in the ear has hardened beyond the possibility of frost.

The cull and drop apples may be turned into profit by feeding them to the hogs, sheep, poultry and other live stock, or converted into vinegar for home use and commercial purposes.

By cuttings is but one way of propagating grapes. Layerings and grafting are also often used. Layering consists simply in laying a branch of a vine down in a trench and covering it with earth.

Raise more hogs.

Hairy vetch may be sown in oats.

Stock always prefer to drink water that is clean.

Burr clover can be sown broadcast in permanent pasture.

Sugar beets, carrots and turnips are fine feeds for sheep.

More attention is being given to cow peas as a farm crop.

Dairy cows should have rich and liberal feeding every day.

Salt is essential for a cow and she should have all she wants.

Crowded poultry will not lay—feed and care for them as we may.

The Cauliflowers must have a rather dry air, and free ventilation.

Onions sell best when graded by running them over a potato sorter.

A mule will do as much work as a horse on about two-thirds as much feed.

Australia and Argentina lead the world in the number of horses and cattle.

Hogging off corn is by far the cheapest method of feeding, as the hogs do all the work.

Where timothy is sown for seed four to six quarts is sufficient for a good stand of plants.

Alfalfa is the only known plant that will supply a nearly perfect balanced ration with corn alone.

The market demand for mules is always steady, and the farmer can make no mistake in raising them.

Salt causes the animal to drink water, and a large amount of water is necessary for a flow of milk.

In treating a wire cut, the wound should be kept absolutely clean and exposed to the air and sunshine.

Cows like a variety, and this should be supplied them, being careful, however, not to make sudden changes.

Lend your crops to your live stock and see what a big interest they will pay and how promptly they pay it.

Potatoes not to be used or marketed immediately should be left in the ground as long as the ground is dry.

The first thing after the sow has farrowed she should be supplied with all the pure cold water she will drink.

The fall planting of such fruits as are adapted to planting at that season, is, as a rule, better than spring planting.

It is said that 20 acres of corn put into the silo is worth more in feeding a dairy herd than 30 acres in the crib.

After the fruit harvest in the orchard, go over the trees and grounds and pick up and destroy all worthless, rotten and wormy fruit.

A good fence is absolutely necessary on a farm where live stock is kept, and there should be no farms on which live stock is not kept.

The quality of water has much to do with the quality of milk, the quality of eggs as well as the healthfulness of the stock that uses it.

The annual clearing out of the old stock should take place early enough so that the winter quarters will provide plenty of room for the pullets.

Test your cows for butter fat and rid your farm of those that do not produce at least one hundred and fifty pounds of butter fat per annum.

An animal will not have the necessary relish for its feed to get the greatest amount of good out of it, if it is fed prior to the regular feeding time.

The best time to cut corn for late fall or winter feed is just as soon as the ears are well dented and when a few of the leaves begin to change color

A large amount of feed is wasted by irregular feeding. The digestive fluids work more freely and most efficiently when called upon at regular intervals.

It is a tolerably easy matter for any poultryman to produce eggs at a feed cost of less than 10 cents a dozen and the best of market poultry at less than ten cents a pound.

Remember to take good care of the sow. Watch her closely for the little pigs have nothing else to depend upon except their mother's milk until they are three or four weeks old.

Don't wait until the busy times next spring to clean up your garden, but start in this fall after the crops are out of the way to get everything in readiness for early spring work.

Capons neither crow nor fight and are despised by other fowls. They often show great fondness for little chicks, and instances are not uncommon where they have been utilized in rearing broods of chickens.

CANADA'S IMMENSE WHEAT FIELDS

THE ATTRACTION FOR THREE TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAYS.

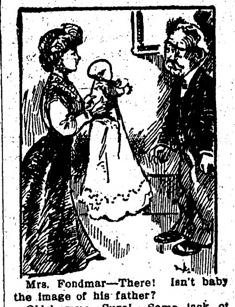
Last August there visited the Canadian west the vice-president of the largest individual hardware company in the United States. As his firm have a turnover of millions, and deals extensively with farm implements, this man took a deep interest in crop conditions in Canada, and on his return he embodied his findings in an article for the Hardware Reporter. This article should be of special interest to farmers.

The writer speaks of the importance of the spring wheat crop of Western Canada. He might also have spoken of the importance of the oat crop and also of the winter wheat crop, as well as barley. Winter wheat during the past few years has been a great success, and experiments have shown that it can be grown with success in almost any portion of the three provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. But apart from this, the spring wheat crop is the one generally grown, and all who know anything of grain, anyone who has had anything to do with markets, knows or has heard of the high character of this cereal and the splendid yields that are annually produced. Reproducing from this article:—

"In a land of such great sweep, and of such difference in soil and climate, there are many resources, but none are at present of the same overwhelming importance as the spring wheat crop. In the interminable prairie stretches of the northwest provinces it is the one absorbing topic of interest and of conversation during its growing and its harvesting, for upon its success or failure hangs the weal or woe of a large part of the Dominion. Its influence extends far down into the United States, drawing thousands of farmers northwards with the lure of cheap lands, but likewise beyond the great lakes, even to the easy going maritime provinces, calling the flower of their young men to its opportunities. Development in these prairie provinces goes on at high pressure for everything hangs on the outcome of spring wheat. Success has emboldened the raisers of this one all-important crop, and each year there is further incursion into those northern fields that only a short time ago were regarded as Arctic wastes. The Canadian Northwest seems to be one of those modern agricultural examples set forth to drive the final nail in the coffin of that ancient Malthusian delusion that population tends to outrun the means of subsistence, since the only fear now among Canadian economists is as to the danger of overstocking the wheat market. Only about two and one-half per cent of possible arable lands in the northwest provinces is now under cultivation, and this year the crop promises to be close to 200,000,000 bushels, so that your imagination and your arithmetic can easily supply the answer as to the possible or even probable outcome."

During the months of July and August the weather was unfavourable and the production of a 200 million yield of wheat will not likely be realized, but even with this, the threshing reports coming to hand show that the crop will be a splendidly paying one.

A LIVING IMAGE.



Mrs. Fondmar—There! Isn't baby the image of his father?

Oldchumme—Sure! Same lack of expression, same red nose, no teeth to speak of—and, by George! prematurely bald head, too!

Splendid Crops
In Saskatchewan (Western Canada)
800 Bushels from 20 acres of wheat was the thresher's return from a Lloydminster farm in the season of 1910. Many fields in that as well as other districts yielded from 25 to 35 bushels of wheat to the acre. Other grains in proportion.
160 ACRE FARMS IN WESTERN CANADA FREE
LARGE PROFITS are thus derived from the FREE HOMESTEAD LANDS of Western Canada.
This excellent showing causes prices to advance. Land values should double in two years' time. Grain growing, mixed farming, cattle raising and dairying are all profitable. Free Homesteads of 160 acres are to be had in the very best districts; 160 acre pre-emptions at $3.00 per acre within certain areas. Schools and churches in every settlement, climate unexcelled, soil the richest; wood, water and building material plentiful.
39
For particulars as to location, low settlers' railway rates and descriptive illustrated pamphlet, "Last Best West," and other information, write to Sup't of Immigration, Ottawa, Canada, or to Canadian Government Agent.
CHAS. PILLING
Clifford Block Grand Forks, N. Dak.
Please write to the agent nearest you

Intentional Duplicate Exposure

The Northern Light

CHAS. W. LATTA

Editor and Publisher.

Published every Friday at Holt, Marshall County, Minnesota.

Subscription Price: $1.00 per year, strictly in advance.

Entered as second-class matter Sept. 22, 1911, at the post office at Holt, Minnesota, under the act of March 3, 1879.

Be a booster—not a knocker.

Thief River Falls had at least four weddings last week whereby eight people, old and young, were made more or less comfortable for the coming long cold winter.

Thief River Falls will have its municipal elections next week and there is a three cornered fight on for the mayoralty. All three candidates are good men and the city will have a good mayor, no matter who is elected.

Many of the older ones have been inclined to grumble on accont of the unusually cold weather we have had for the past couple of weeks. But from the youth of the land we hear the joyful cry "The skating's fine," so, after all, why complain?

There is something almost uncanny about the way the names of Bryan and Roosevelt are being so frequently mentioned as the old party nominees for president next year. Both have declared that they will not accept the nomination, but both have lots of friends who claim that they must. Either would be an improvement on the present incumbent.

It begins to look very much as if Sam Y. Gordon will become a candidate for governor. His administration of the duties of the office of lieutenant governor proved him to be a man of exceptional ability and backbone and we hope he will make the run for the higher office. He can be elected, even though opposed by the old state machine, and Eberhart can not be elected because he is befriended by it. Come on, Sam, get in the game.

Charles B. Cheney, who dishes up the political dope for the Minneapolis Journal, intimates that a smoking out game has been started by George H. Mattson, of Roseau, to find out if E. A. Nelson, of Hallock, intends to become a candidate for Secretary of State. Nelson doesn't know—yet. If there is any prospect of the old republican machine winning out he will probably run, which means that he is not likely to be a candidate.

OBEYING ORDERS.

A little girl about three years old was sent upstairs and told to sit on a certain chair that was in the corner of her room, as a punishment for something she had done but a few minutes before.

Soon the silence was broken by the little one's question: "Mother, may I come down now?"

"No, you sit right where you are."

"All right, 'cause I'm sittin' on your best hat."—Ladies' Home Journal.

FIERCE GLARE OF HEYBURN

It Silenced the Senators Who Were Enjoying Clapp's Slap at the Idaho Man.

Because Senator Heyburn is on his feet so constantly, addressing the senate, sometimes one may hear murmurings of discontent from his fellow members, and when the Idaho member turned around the other afternoon and gazed at Senator Penrose, he made the usually bold chairman of the finance committee look as sheepish as if he had been caught saying his prayers.

The senator was delivering bitter and contemptuous remarks on the statehood bill and undertook to make fun of Senator Clapp's flights of oratory on the same subject, Clapp having preceded him. He said that some of these orators of the senate at times flew so high no one could follow them. Senator Clapp's gift of repartee is not limited and he tartly answered:

"You might not fly as high as other people, but no one will deny that you can fly longer than most any one."

There was a general laugh, in which Senator Penrose and Senator Brandegee joined with conspicuous heartiness. The irate man from Idaho turned around and cast that glare of his on them with an effect that was so instantly sobering that a new laugh was started at their expense. Unconscious of the fate that had overtaken Penrose and Brandegee, Senator Dixon was laughing immoderately at Clapp's reply. Heyburn glared at him and the Montana man promptly froze up and so quickly that Penrose and Brandegee gave vent to fresh guffaws at Dixon's expense.

EXCITING EXPLOIT OF COW

Accidentally Imprisoned in Draper's Shop, She Climbs a Stairway and Enters Bedroom.

An extraordinary incident occurred lately at Newtownbutler (Ireland) when a cow, which was being led to Clones fair, broke away from her owner in the village and entered a draper's shop. The store being too small for her to turn in, an effort was made to get her to back out, but in trying to execute this maneuver she dashed against the door, closing it, and imprisoning herself inside. She then endeavored to cross the counter and break through the window, but this attempt was frustrated. Becoming frightened, the animal made for the stairs and mounted them. Some of the steps gave way under her, but she quickly got to the top, and into a small bedroom, in which a sick child was sleeping. The safety of the child was the first consideration, and a young man, assisted by a policeman, got over the cow's back and handed out the child. Ropes were then procured, and the animal was taken down the stairs without accident.

OCCIDENTAL GORGEOUSNESS.

Newport belles do not dress nearly so well, from an expense point of view, as Princess Chulong of Siam, who is, by the way, the oldest of 80 sons and 20 daughters left by the late king. Her dress as she appeared one day cost $1,000,000, counting the cost of her harem skirt, embroidered in silver and gold, and all the precious stones about her. The collar that she wore contained jewels valued at $255,000, and her necklace was of fine pearls worth $50,000. Her slippers were studded with diamonds and altogether no doubt a million was a conservative estimate.

THE DULUTH HERALD

BEATS THE CENSUS THREE TO ONE

During the past ten years the population of Duluth increased 48 per cent., St. Paul 32 per cent., and Minneapolis 49 per cent. In the Same Period the Circulation of The Duluth Herald

INCREASED 150 PER CENT.

This marvelous expansion—so much greater than that of the surrounding territory—is due solely to the merits of The Herald.

The Herald has never used any kind of premium, contest, or price reduction to gain subscribers but prints each day the very best NEWSPAPER in the Northwest. Its editorial page is thoroughly independent and its news columns cover every feature of the world's daily history.

Send for sample copy and get The Herald habit

THREE MONTHS FOR $1.00—Mailed Daily.

ADDRESS HERALD CIRCULATION DEPT., DULUTH, MINN.

PRAISE MAY BE UNDESIRABLE

It is Not Always Stimulating, Says Man, Drawing on His Own Experience.

The singer sang well and the applause was insistent. Again he came forward, and this time he sang even better than before.

"It is always so," said one listener to his friend. "Applause stimulates us all. It's a pity that men can't be praised more than they are when they do good work. We are too churlish about such things. We say that a man ought to do his duty anyway and not expect praise for it when the fact is that if we praised him occasionally it would stimulate him, make him do more and better work."

"When I was a boy out in the woodshed sawing wood," said the other man, "the old man would come along and look at what I'd sawed and say, 'Sammy, you're doing splendidly. Keep it up, my boy.'

"There was praise for you, but do you think that stimulated me? On the contrary, it made me want to smash the buck and bust the saw and break for the woods."

"Oh, well, of course," said the praise advocate, "there may be exceptions, but as a rule—" and so on and on.—New York Sun.

SHOW UNCLE SAM AT WORK

Moving Pictures of Governmental Activity at Washington That Will Be Educational.

The heads of various departments of governmental activity in Washington have given, it is reported, permission to a Chicago moving picture concern to take motion pictures of the workings of various industries of the government. The pictures are to be taken, primarily, for the private benefit and behoof of the moving-picture concern, which will find its profit in paid exhibitions, but in return for the permission granted the government is to have the use of such films as it requires for public lectures and so forth.

More and more is the invention of moving pictures demonstrating its high educational value, and few things will increase this value so much as the plan of taking pictures [illegible] It is highly desirable that the average citizen should know as much as possible about the actual workings of the government.—Buffalo Evening News.

ACQUISITIVENESS.

When the words were written, "It is easier to go through the eye of a needle than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God," wealth in Judea was usually wrung from the needy. In modern times much of it has been made in ways that benefit society. Nevertheless, there remains something of truth in the observation of Charles Dickens in "Our Mutual Friend:" "Your concentrated Fox is seldom comparable to your concentrated Ass in money-breeding." Some of our greatest fortunes have been made by the use of courage, imagination, progressive intellect, and on a more moderate scale competence is usually the result of clear-headedness, persistence and frugality—virtues in moderation, but vices when they develop toward narrow concentration and rapacity. A man may have a great power of acquisition and little that is amiable, illuminating or in any way connected with the higher qualities of mind or heart.

FIRST VETERINARY SCHOOL.

As nearly as the facts can be got at, the first veterinary school was founded in the city of Lyons, France, about the middle of May in the year 1761. The one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of "the founding of the schools" is to be celebrated in many places in May, 1912. Since 1761 veterinary schools have spread all over the civilized world, especially in Germany, France, England and the United States of America, in which advanced countries the horse has the benefit of as fine a science as that which exists for his master, man.

NOT THE TEMPERAMENT.

Leading Lady—I see where you have cast Reginald Rhinestone for the role of an old salt in our play.

Stage Manager—Yes, I have. Why not?

Leading Lady—Because he can't play an old salt. He's too fresh.

TOOK THE BOY AS BAGGAGE

Conductor Was Glad to Find a Deadhead Passenger Without the Usual Excuse.

"Ticket!" repeated the conductor, holding out his hand, the Galveston News says. The young man, scarcely more than a boy, grew red in the face.

"I haven't got a ticket," he said. "See here, conductor, couldn't—"

The conductor shook his head.

"I couldn't," he said, bluntly. "Gimme $11.50." The boy grew pale.

"I guess it's up to me to walk. I had some money, but got robbed back in Ranceton."

"Then you ain't a director of the road?" the conductor sneered. "You ain't the president's son? You didn't have a ticket and get robbed of it by the conductor just before me, huh?" The boy shook his head.

"You sure the Pullman conductor didn't steal it and forget to give it back?" asked the conductor. "And you didn't leave it with your grip in the dining room back there?"

"Here," said the boy, growing angry, "I haven't got any ticket and I haven't got any money. Put me off or quit all this talking, will you?"

The conductor considered.

"Lookye here," he said; "you go up there in the baggage car at the next stop. Tell Bill Adams I sent you there. Darned if I don't feel better since I found a fellow without a ticket that wasn't some kin to the general passenger agent or somethin'."

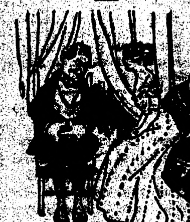
"Thank you," began the boy, but the conductor stopped him.

"Dawgone your soul," he said. "Do you mean to insinuate that I'd carry a man free on my train—and against the law? You go up there like I told you. You—you're baggage; that's what."

LONG JURY TRIALS.

Under an infrequently applied provision of the New York law allowing extra compensation to juries in trials lasting longer than 30 days, Judge Rosalsky, in the "chicken" case awarded to each of the jurors $400 in addition to their regular $3 per diem. The trial had lasted 80 days, so the jurymen received [illegible] which is at the rate of $10 per day. In the [illegible] trial the jurors were awarded $50 extra, which was about one dollar per day above the regular fee. If Judge Rosalsky's precedent in favor of liberality should be followed jury service would lose some of its terrors. A more desirable reform would be accomplished, however, by the curtailment of the long-winded procedure which stretches out American jury trials to inordinate length.

TOO EXPENSIVE



She—Do you think you will ever save up enough money to get married?

He—Not unless we break off the engagement!

SWARMING WITH THEM.

Mrs. C. W. Earle's recent contribution to the history of English life of the first half of the last century, entitled "Memoirs and Memories," includes a fresh blossom in the apparently fadeless wreath of Sydney Smith's wit.

Mrs. Earle's mother imparted the information to Sydney Smith that she was going to Bath to see an old aunt.

"What," he exclaimed, "you've got an aunt at Bath! I have an aunt at Bath. Everyone has an aunt at Bath. It's a perfect aunt-heap."—Sunday Magazine.

ANOTHER STORY.

"How do you propose to support my daughter, young man?"

"But, sir, I was only proposing to marry her."

LIGHTEN YOUR KITCHEN CARES

1892 PURE SPUN ALUMINUM WARE

SAVES MONEY, HEALTH, TIME AND TEMPER

Say "Good Bye" forever to cooking troubles by throwing away your old rusting, corroding and scaling iron, tin and enamel utensils. Replace them with "1892" Spun Aluminum Ware.

IT IS GUARANTEED FOR 25 YEARS

IT'S WORTH WHILE TO INVESTIGATE

NOW ON EXHIBITION

S. S. KOLDEN & Co.

AXEL NELSON

General Blacksmith Work

HOLT, - - MINN.

All work done Right, at Reasonable Prices.

The Evergreen Hotel

P. A. RESBERG, PROP.

Rates, $1.00 per day.

Serves the best Meal in Eastern Marhall Co. for twenty-five cents.

Livery and Feed Barn in connection.

Red Lake Falls Milling Co.

Makers of the Celebrated

Mascot Flour

and bUYERS of all kinds of GRAIN

Our Elevator will give you satisfaction.

NELS ENGEBRETSEN, Agent - - - Holt, Minn.

Bring us your Job Printing orders

Crookston College...

Is the Leading Business School in the Northwest.

OUR TEACHERS Are all College and University Graduates.

FINANCIAL STANDING It is backed by a capital of $50,000 which is a safe guarantee to its students that every promise will be fulfilled.

ACTUAL BUSINESS The only school in Northern Minnesota having an actual business department.

BOARD and ROOM Can be had in private families for $3 per week. Other school towns will charge from $4 to $5.

POSITIONS The demand upon us for office help is greater than we can supply.

Catalogue and further information given free by writing

J. C. SATHRE, Crookston, Minn.

Local Items

The Local Market.

(Grain prices furnished by Hanson & Barzen Milling Co. at close of business every Thursday.)

Flax	$2.10
Wheat	.98
Barley d	.85
Oats	.39
Rye	.82

Bring us the news.

When in town call at this office and let's get acquainted.

Clarence Larson transacted business at Thief River Falls on Monday.

Mrs. John Udstrand visited with friends at Thief River Falls on Monday.

Rev. I. T. Aastad was a visitor here yesterday from Thief River Falls.

Miss Wegge made a trip to Thief River Falls Monday and returned next morning.

Oscar Knutson returned on Tuesday from Dakota and went out to his home near Randen.

Miss Esther Erickson, of Randen, passed through here on Monday and went to Thief River Falls for a visit.

Miss Esther Thomas was down from her school for an over Sunday at home and to take in the necktie social.

Mrs. John Simonson made a trip to Thief River Falls on Monday in in which business and pleasure were combined.

Ole Brenna was down from Middle River on Friday last to conduct an auction sale of household goods for Mrs. I. Thomas.

Triple coated enamelled kitchen ware at only 10 cents per piece is a bargain that you never had before. S. S. Kolden & Co.

F. W. Tabor has severed his connection with Risberg's livery establishment and is out helping the hay balers for a few days.

Miss Petra Storholm, who has been visiting with her sister, Mrs. Sam Mickelson, left on Tuesday for [illegible] Mrs. Malholm.

M. A. NELSON, M. D.

PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON

Office over Holt Merc. Co's store

HOLT, MINNESOTA.

Be a booster—not a knocker.

Mrs. C. H. Gunheim made a business trip to Thief River Falls Friday.

Mrs. Sam Mickelson visited friends at Thief River Falls on Friday last.

Miss Betty Johnson went to Thief River Falls Monday for a visit with relatives and friends.

John Johnson returned Saturday from Dakota where he has been working during the fall.

D. B. Bakke was up from Thief River Falls Wednesday to look after business matters at the Holt State Bank.

Miss Mary Hanson, who has been visiting at her home six miles north of here for some time past, left on Saturday for Seattle, Wash.

On Sunday morning Rev. M. B. Ordahl will conduct services at his home in Section 35, of East Valley township. All will be welcome.

Oscar Knutson was in from the big dredge on Monday and reports work as progressing very favorably but there is getting to be a little ice on the water.

C. Martell, one of the substantial farmers from the Mud Lake country, was a visitor in town yesterday and took occasion to call and subscribe for this great family journal.

Alfred Hanson returned Wednesday from Lakota, N. D., near where he has been threshing. He found time to make the editor a pleasant call before going out to his home near Elm Lake.

Mr. and Mrs. B. L. Backe have gotten confortably installed in their handsome new dwelling house. Mrs. Backe's mother, Mrs. Thomas, has discontinued housekeeping here and is making her temporary home with them.

We want more subscribers and will take potatoes, chickens, or wood at current market prices on subscription. Of course we prefer the money but if you haven't the cash bring on the produce. Dont be without your home paper anyway.

Once more the editor has spent the first part of the week in getting a dwelling house erected on his homestead, and for the second time the cold weather and the necessity of getting out a newspaper compelled him to leave the work unfinished. We're going to make another try at it in a day or two and will finish up [illegible] get out another paper.

Farms Wanted.

I have prospective buyers for a few good improved farms; also for 960 acres of wild land. All must be in eastern Marshall county.

CHAS. W. LATTA, Holt, Minn.

A PAIR OF SHOES FREE

WE WANT EVERY CHILD TO ENTER OUR Painting Book Contest

Call at Our Store at Once for One of the Painting Books FREE

PAINTING BOOK

With Full Information on how to Use It and the Detail of the Contest

We will give to the child returning to us the best executed book, in the best combination of harmonious colors, a pair of the Celebrated Gotzian Shoes—FREE

The contest will close Thursday, November 30th, and the winner will be decided by three unbiased and disinterested judges

HERE IS YOUR OPPORTUNITY

Come and Get Your Book Before They Are Gone

Holt Mercantile Co.,

We Sell THE GOTZIAN SHOE

Boosting Northern Minnesota

The Northern Minnesota Development Association will open up headquarters in Minneapolis and establish an exhibit and immigration bureau to be in charge of W. R. McKenzie, secretary of the association. Daniel Shaw, of Thief River Falls, is chairman of the commission and $12,000 will be raised for the first year's work.

A special feature of the work to be done will be a soil survey which will be made and kept by the commission so that the exact character of the land in every county and district will be definitely known and can be shown to prospective homeseekers.

Killed by Kerosene Burns

Mrs. John I. Skordahl, of Boxville, died at the Warren hospital a few days ago from burns received in trying to start a fire in the cook stove with kerosene. She was pouring the oil direct from the can into the fire when there was a flash and explosion. The burning oil was scattered on her clothing and she received burns from which she died a few hours later. She was 43 years of age and leaves her husband and a family of eleven children.

The fire which caused her death also destroyed the dwelling, but this was pretty well insured.

Services in the English language will be held at Holt church next Wednesday evening beginning at 7:45 P. M. All are invited to attned.

The section crews were disbanded Wednesday and the natives of sunny southern Europe, who have wielded the shovel and pumped the handcars all summer left yesterday. Three Greeks, who were employed here, went to their homes in the old country.

The dedication services of the Holt church building will be held next week and there will be a large number of clergymen besides the bishop in attendance at the cermony. Special services will be held for two or three days and we regret that we have not the complete program for publication in this issue.

Mike Leiran was in yesterday from his home northeast of Mud Lake with three of his brothers, Ole, Sam and Melvin, who have been visiting with him and looking over lands. The three boys returned yesterday to Beltrami and will go from there to their home in Iowa. They expect to return later and get some land for themselves.

Crookston College has placed all its graduates in positions. The demand for office help has been greater than we could supply. School is in session all year. You can begin at any time of year. Good board and furnished room, taken care of in private family, for $3 per week. Send for catalog. Address J. C. Sathre, Crookston, Minn.

Scholarship for Sale Cheap

We have for sale, cheap for cash, a scholarship good for three months tuition in Crookston College, and for any subject at any time. It is worth $30 but will be sold for considerably less as we need the cash.

Call or address The Northern Light, Holt, Minn.

PERNICKETY.

"The other day," said an Indianapolis woman who had employed a new colored servant not long from Kentucky, "I asked my cook why she had given up the place she held before coming to me. 'Oh,' was her answer, 'I jus' couldn't bide her, she was so pernickety.' Pernickety was a new word to me and I looked for it in the dictionary with no hope of finding it. But it was there, though it is obsolete. It means fastidious. The colored girl had used it properly. But where did she get it? That word goes back many generations, and may have been brought to Virginia by some of its first settlers, thence to Kentucky, and now to Indiana."

CIVIL SERVICE.

"I understand you have civil service in your department?" "Yes," the New Yorker replied, "we have civil service—and it's perfectly good civil service, too. It's fixed now so they can't discharge you—unless they want to."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

SUNFLOWER HAS MANY USES

Its Seeds Are Recognized Article of Diet and Furnish Oil That Is Valuable.

Our grandmothers planted sunflowers for decorative purposes, possibly for chicken feed, but further than that they never went, unless they believed the old saying that sunflowers keep away malaria. To-day it is recognized that the sunflower may become an economic factor if cultivated to any extent.

Russia has realized this for some time, and here the sunflower industry is most fully developed. It has received much attention in India and Egypt also, and some in Turkey, Germany, Italy and France. The sunflower has many uses. The seeds have been considered good feed for fowls, and parrots are particularly fond of them, but now man is using them for food. In Russia they are a staple article of diet, the seeds being sold on the streets as peanuts are sold here, the only difference being that they are eaten raw.

The most important product which comes from the sunflower probably is the oil, which is obtained from the seed and which of all vegetable oil most closely resembles olive oil. It is used for table purposes. When this best oil has been extracted, by further pressure more can be produced, which is of an inferior quality, but which is good for candle and soap making, for hair oil, or is used in place of linseed oil in art.

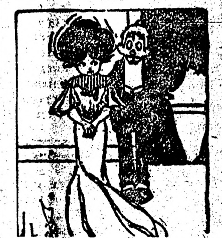
AND THIS FROM CHICAGO!

A woman who has taken to aviation says she expects air flights to be taken up by "society" as a sport, for the reason that the high expense of machines and operation makes it prohibitive for those of moderate means. Society, which is always on the outlook for some new sensation, will, she thinks, soon adopt aviation for its amusement because it is a "high-class sport." "A woman," she says, "does not have to be a trick bicycle rider or circus performer to take it up, for such experience is entirely unnecessary." We hope her prediction proves true. Nothing would please us better than to know that the divorce crowd of New York, for instance, was up in balloons or [illegible] headed for the eternal stars.—Chicago Tribune.

TRY THIS AND SEE HOW IT WORKS.

A woman who is admired for her cheerful disposition explained recently to friends her principles of happiness. She said she has three rules. She commits to memory every day something good, consisting of a verse of poetry, a Biblical phrase or a few sentences that contain an inspiring thought. Then she looks for something pretty each day, seeking a pretty face, a fascinating bit of scenery or anything that satisfies her sense of beauty. Then she tries to do something for somebody each day. The woman explains she never misses a day and the three rules give her happiness, enrich her mind and provide her with inspiration.

THE DECEIVER



Lizzie—I believe you kissed me while I was asleep.

Percy—Well, I, confess—er—I couldn't help it; I did take one.

Lizzie—One! Why, I counted twelve before I woke up.

EXPERIMENTAL.

"I'm afraid you may think we're giving you a lot of fish this week, old man," said the genial host, as they sat down to dinner. "The fact is my wife has got hold of what sounds like a really capital device for removing a fish bone stuck in the throat, and we want to see if it works."—London Globe.

Subscribe for The Northern Light. Only $1.00 per year.

D. B. Bakke, Pres. S. S. Kolden, Vice-pres.

HOLT STATE BANK

Incorporated June 1st, 1910.

Our List of Customers is Steadily Incrasing.

Why pay out $1.50 in fees for a few Money Orders when a check answers the same purpose without a cent of cost to you? We urge everyone to systematize their business and to pay all bills by check. You not only hold a record of your earnings and expenditures during a season, but also hold a separate receipt for each and every check bearing endorsement. Also, by conducting your business on an economical basis, your balance steadily increases. A surplus entered to your credit in your pass book is a most worthy friend to have and far-reaching in its effects within the community, as it places money in circulation among your fellow neighbors.

Your entire banking business earnestly solicited.

B. L. BACKE, Cashier.

V-I-V-O

The Best there is in FLOUR

Our Elevator and Lumber Yard are always prepared to give the most satisfactory service.

Hanson & Barzen Milling Co.,

OSCAR HANSON, Agent, - - HOLT, MINN.

Want to Sell your Land?

List it with

CHAS. W. LATTA

At The NORTHERN LIGHT Office

HOLT, MINN.

We have a lot of New Goods coming in and they will soon be here.

Watch this Space for future Announcements.

Funeral Supplies always in stock.

S. S. KOLDEN & Co.

HOLT, MINNESOTA.

Defective Page

Toasting the Teachers.

There was a meeting of the new teachers and the old. It was a sort of love feast, reception or whatever you call it. Anyhow, all the teachers got together and pretended they didn't have a care in the world. After the eats were et the symposiarch proposed a toast:

"Long Live Our Teachers!"

It was drank enthusiastically. One of the new teachers was called on to respond. He modestly accepted. His answer was:

"What on?"

Stops Neuralgia Pains

Sloan's Liniment has a soothing effect on the nerves. It stops neuralgia and sciatica pains instantly.

Here's Proof

Mrs. C. M. Dowker of Johannesburg, Mich., writes:—"Sloan's Liniment is the best medicine in the world. It has relieved me of Neuralgia. Those pains have all gone and I can truly say your Liniment did stop them."

Mr. Andrew F. Lear of 50 Gay Street, Cumberland, Md., writes:—"I have used Sloan's Liniment for Neuralgia and I certainly do praise it very much."

SLOAN'S LINIMENT

is the best remedy for rheumatism, backache, sore throat and sprains.

At all dealers.

Price 25c., 50c. and $1.00

Sloan's book on Horses, Cattle, Hogs and Poultry sent free.

Address Dr. Earl S. Sloan Boston, Mass.

Two 40 bushel crops of Corn on the Same Land

T. M. K. Ville did this at Mercedes, in the lower Gulf Coast Country of Texas and Louisiana. Jan. 18th last he planted 6 acres to corn. He got 240 bushels, which sold for $1 a bushel. The whole cost of raising came to $33, leaving a net profit of $207. June 1st he planted a SECOND crop and got 240 bushels. This crop cost $39, leaving him a net profit of $201. From the 2 crops he cleared $408—not bad for 6 acres; and he can grow a crop of fall potatoes on the same land and market them before Christmas. This is not unusual in the Gulf Coast Country of Texas and Louisiana

Three crops a year is making money just 3 times as fast as you are, and the Gulf Coast farmer saves more of what he makes than the northern farmer, because he has none of the northern farmer's heavy winter expenses.

Better Look Into This!

The pleasure of a trip to the Gulf Coast Country, via the Frisco Lines, is well worth the little cost of going. On the first and 3rd Tuesdays of each month, round trip fares, via Frisco Lines, are GREATLY REDUCED to any point in the Gulf Coast Country of Texas and Louisiana. The Frisco Lines operate splendid, electric lighted, all steel trains, daily from Chicago, St. Louis, Kansas City, Birmingham and New Orleans. Every day these trains carry through cars and on excursion days also carry tourist sleepers through to the Gulf Coast Country.

3 Splendid Books Free!

They describe this wonderful country from one end to the other; give examples and personal statements by men who have gone there and made good. Scores of fine pictures. Write for your free copies today, while you think of it. I will also send you information about fare from your home town and give you complete schedule, etc., all free.

A. HILTON
General Passenger Agent
1537 Frisco Bldg.
St. Louis

FRISCO LINES

The Army of Constipation

Is Growing Smaller Every Day.

CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS are responsible—they not only give relief—they permanently cure Constipation. Millions use them for Biliousness, Indigestion, Sick Headache, Sallow Skin.

SMALL PILL, SMALL DOSE, SMALL PRICE.

Genuine must bear Signature

Brent Good

Up Country in Panama

by Forbes Lindsay

A STREET IN DAVID

I MADE the 300 miles journey up to David, the capital of the Province of Chiriqui, in a coasting steamer of the house-boat type, with open lower desk and galvanized iron roof over all—20 feet out of water and only 6 feet draft with full load.

David was founded somewhat more than a century ago by the first of the Panaman Obaldias, who created a princely estate from a royal grant of land. Mangote, situated about 8 miles from the town, is now in the hands of his great-grandsons, whose father was lately president of the republic. Before the revolutionary days many Chiricano landowners maintained a lordly estate in peace and prosperity.

David is an attractive place, clean and orderly as a Dutch burg and picturesque as a Tyrolean hamlet. Along the broad, drab lengths of the streets are lined modest dwellings with whitewashed walls, red-tiled roofs, and blue and green doors and window shutters. The most pretentious residences are no more than two-storied frame structures, with 10 rooms at most and a patio in the rear. Of the 5,000 inhabitants perhaps 50 are "well to do," in the conventional sense of the phrase. The remainder are superlatively poor, measured by the standard of dollars and cents, but passing rich in fact by reason of having everything that they need and probably all they desire. Everyone seems to secure an easy livelihood, but precisely how is difficult to determine. A hard worker is not to be seen, but neither is a beggar nor a vagrant, and the municipality does not boast any such institution as an almshouse. However, the matter is divested of much of its mystery when one considers that land as prolific as any in the world is to be had for the taking, and a man's outfit of clothing consists of three pieces—straw hat, shirt, and cotton trousers—while a woman gets along very well with one garment, and children are not encumbered to that extent.

A STRETCH OF LLANO

RIVER BOTTOM GRASS LANDS

HORSE CORRAL ON PUBLIC LAND

BURNED OVER BEACH LAND

Although the dry season was well-nigh spent, everything looked fresh and green the morning that I galloped out upon the llano on my way to Divala. My moso, a long, lean fellow with a melancholy visage, followed at a pace which he never varied, but which later experience taught me could always be depended on to bring him up with me at the end of a ride. Man never possessed a less appropriate name than his. Pantaleon—"panther lion"—was possibly bestowed upon him in a spirit of irony. He was profoundly self-possessed and had the commendable characteristic of confining his attention to his own business and just so much of his employer's as properly concerned him.

Before us stretched one of the llanos, which lie, like grassy islands in a forest sea, at intervals all along the Pacific slope of the Cordillera. For 6 miles onward and 2 on either side of us the ground extended in a sweep as level as a billiard table and as green. With its thick covering of jenjebrillo, the tract looked strikingly like a bit of the blue-grass country of Kentucky. Here and there a wild fig or a ceibo threw its heavy-leafed branches wide, affording grateful shelter for man and beast. On every side the close ranks of the forest trees hemmed the llano in, and away beyond in our front rose the jabbed teeth of the sierra, with the smoking cone of El Volcan projecting beyond the ruck.

A well-worn crack indicates the shortest route to the point where the road enters the forest. We keep it in sight for the sake of preserving our bearing, otherwise one might ride unrestrainedly on the darkest night over this flat expanse, unbroken by gullies and devoid of burrows. In fact, I have crossed it at a hand gallop in a downpour of rain, when my horse's ears were not distinguishable and the blurred lights of David made a lurid beacon patch in the distance.

These llanos are the "commons" of the people—the poor man's grazing ground. We pass small herds of from 10 to 20 head, nibbling the herbage, which is ample for sustenance but not sufficiently rich and plentiful to condition them for market.

Scattered over the range are a few mares, with foals at their heels. In this country they ride and work only the male horses, leaving the females constantly at grass. This is obviously a bad system, for it retards hereditary transmission and results in the development of serviceable qualities on one side only. The animals are undersized and the breed poor, the best strain being derived from Peruvian stallions. Despite his unpromising appearance, however, the Panamanian pony is apt to surprise you with a wonderful display of stamina. I have been carried fifty-odd miles by one in twelve hours and found him fit for a good day's journey the next morning. They are easy-going beasts, with a single-foot gait, and if one will be content to ride them in the manner to which they are accustomed, quite as serviceable as the average mount to be picked up in Central or South America. It is distinctly advisable, however, to get rid of the greasy hair bridle of the country, even though no better substitute than a piece of clean rope is available. Failure to take this precaution once cost me a sore hand of which I was not cured for weeks.

Now and again a traveler jogs by, with a muttered "Buenos dias"—a salutation that is never omitted by man, woman or child. The rider wears a conical straw hat, a cotton shirt, flapping free in the wind, and a pair of blue jeans. Bare feet are stuck in the wooden stirrups. He and his steed are festooned with bags, baskets and packages, the tout ensemble suggesting an itinerant Christmas tree. Stuck under the saddle flap, or elsewhere beyond ready reach, is a rifle or shotgun, of ancient make, probably unserviceable, and almost certainly unloaded. Everyone goes armed upon the road.

Occasional reminders of less peaceful times are seen in a small wooden cross set in the ground and surrounded by a rude rail fence, indicating the spot where some unfortunate met a violent death in the commission of a crime. Pantaleon rode alongside as I approached one of these unconsecrated burying places that contained two crosses. With emotionless precision he told the grizzly tale of two compadres who had fallen out and here had fought to the death with their knives.

Compadres are bosom companions, bound by a bond closer than that of brotherhood. Only a woman can break that tie, and when compadre turns against compadre hell knows no greater bitterness. These two hacked each other until they fell, gasping and bleeding, and foaming at the mouth, still jabbing with waning strength. They were found dead, locked in each other's arms. Perhaps at the very last the spirit of compadreship returned to soothe their passing.

I put this reflection to Pantaleon, but he declared it more likely that they died cursing each other and thinking of the girl. My own conclusion pleased me better, but I felt bound to defer to my moso's superior knowledge of the characteristics of his countrymen.

Presently the road entered the monte, and we rode between wooden walls reinforced by heavy undergrowth. At long intervals we passed small clearings where the settler had cut over the ground, burned the debris where it fell, and scattered his seed with a careless, confident hand. The machete is the universal agricultural implement. A plow has never been seen in the country. Cultivation is neglected as an unnecessary trouble. Withal, harvests are bounteous and recur with the infallible regularity of the solar system. I saw fields of sugar cane that had yielded rich crops for fifteen unbroken seasons, and a piece of land which has stood in corn continuously for half a century.

All over the Pacific slope of Chiriqui is a topsoil, from 6 to 20 feet thick, formed by the volcanic ages from the mountain sides. It is rich as any in the world, but not one-hundred-thousandth part of it has been turned to the account of man. Outside of David, the population is less than four to the square mile. Apart from a score of cattle raisers and coffee growers, no man produces more than enough to meet his needs, whilst markets at their very doors are crying aloud for the potential products of the province. Panama is paying high prices for Jamaican fruit and Cuban sugar and American tobacco, whilst these and many other imported commodities can be grown within her borders.

The pathetic mystery of it is that tens of thousands are slaving in city sweatshops and factories, or painfully wringing a living from a reluctant soil, when land unlimited lies waiting to richly reward any man who will cast a handful of seed upon it.

Ten miles out from David we came to Alanje, a pueblo of only a few hundred inhabitants, but a place of consideration in this sparsely settled country. There are no hotels in the interior, nor is there need for them where every door is open to the wayfarer. The first glance around the plaza of Alanje will decide the discriminating stranger to head for the comfortable-looking frame house on the south side, with its inviting veranda. Should he not immediately take that direction, the little cura, in his long black robe, is likely to come to the door and shout a welcome.

The mid-day breakfast at the cural was an excellent meal, reinforced by good wine and superb coffee. The pleasures of the occasion were heightened by the entertaining remarks of my lively host. He was very young and very optimistic, quite content with his lot and properly impressed with the importance of his work. It appeared to me that his life must be a lonely and monotonous one, but he did not share my view of it. He was the only man of any education in the village, but two highways and several byways converge at Alanje, and every few days he might look for a passing visit from some intelligent traveler. His duties occupied three or four hours of the day and the rest of the time he filled in with study, for his ambition pointed to advancement in his calling, whilst his environment had awakened an inherent taste for natural history.

We left the table to walk over to the church, with its curious detached tower. I asked for the records. With righteous indignation blazing in his eyes, the little cura laid before me a pile of leather-covered manuscripts, molded, worm-eaten, and torn. Not a page was intact, hardly two consecutive lines legible.

"Such neglect is crime," said my host, fervently. "I need hardly say that the damage was beyond arrest when these came into my hands."

I fully appreciated his feelings. Indeed, I dare say that my own regret was the keener. Alanje is older than David. In fact, its history merges with the times of the Conquistadores and there is no knowing what wondrous tales may be hidden in those sadly mutilated documents.

"Our church has a legend," remarked the cura, leading me to a large alcove on the left of the chancel. Drawing aside a curtain, he revealed a life sized painting of the Christ in his final agony. It was evidently the work of an artist, but did not betray extraordinary ability.

"I don't know when this came here, but it was certainly before the present generation," the cura explained, with a slight show of embarrassment. "The story goes that one evening a stranger came to the village and, declining shelter elsewhere, begged to be locked alone in the church over night. His request was granted. When the curious villagers came early in the morning to look for him he had gone, and the picture, with the paint fresh and wet, hung where you see it."

I looked at the little cura questioningly.

"Oh, I don't know," he said, with a shamefaced smile and a shrug of the shoulders. "At any rate, my people believe the story firmly, and it does them no harm."

On the road between Alanje and Divala we crossed several streams. A better watered country than this could not well be imagined.

Divala is a little settlement of 50 to 60 huts and, perhaps, 300 inhabitants, who are entirely dependent upon the ranch and insure it a constant supply of labor. The people cultivate little patches, from which they derive almost all the foodstuffs they need. A few weeks' work in the year at 60 cents a day will produce enough money for clothing and a moderate indulgence in the luxuries that are to be had at the village trading store.

Divala is 15 miles from anywhere, but the most unlikely place to look for an American family in a bungalow that has the appearance of having been transplanted from a New Jersey suburb. Mrs. Wilson has lived in this out-of-the-way corner of the earth for five years, and has had the companionship of her infant during the past eighteen months. There is not a woman of her own race within 40 miles. This is isolation, indeed, and I suspected that she must find it irksome, though she would not admit as much.

Twelve years ago Leslie Wilson came out from California and settled in the neighborhood of Divala with half a dozen Americans and Britishers. Thus the settlement of Divala was formed and a large proportion of the ranch turned into Potrero without a penny of outlay. The disturbed condition of the country reduced the prices of all property, and Wilson was able to buy the nucleus of his stock at very low figures.

The owner of Divala has worked hard and intelligently for ten years on the improvement of his property. Today he has 5,000 acres of as fine land as any in Chiriqui, well stocked and furnished with all the necessary buildings. The ranch is easily worth $50,000. Not a bad result of an enterprise started twelve years ago with $200 capital.

Loss of Appetite

Is loss of vitality, vigor or tone, and is often a forerunner of prostrating disease.

It is serious and especially so to people that must keep up and doing or get behindhand.

The best medicine to take for it is the great constitutional remedy

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Which purifies and enriches the blood and builds up the whole system.

Get it today in usual liquid form or chocolated tablets called Sarsatabs.

GUNS Hunting Clothing

Shooters' Supplies of every kind and style. Not only the largest assortment and stock to select from but a class of goods, of sterling value such as have made us what we are today.

The Largest Exclusive Sporting and Athletic Goods House in the World

Every Standard Gun, Rifle and Revolver at bottom prices, also Basket Balls, Foot Balls, Skates, Sweaters, Gymnasium Suits, Seines, Thermos Bottles, Kodaks, Bicycles, etc.

Next to visiting our wonderful store, is to look through our Gun Book. Write for it.

FREE CATALOG 984

Schmelzer Arms Co.
KANSAS CITY, MO

LITTLE RUSE DIDN'T SUCCEED

Youngster's Scheme Was All Right, But Economical Father Was a Match for Him.

The proprietor of the most prominent hotel in the town of S——, Ky., is a man of a very economical nature, in fact he is an extremist in this feature. He has a six-year-old, red-headed son, that didn't inherit his father's economical disposition. Recently the son was very much in need of a five-cent piece for soda water purposes. He went into the dining-room, where he was free from observation, and removed his shoe strings and placed them in his hip pocket for future reference. Returning to the office he approached his father and said:

"Pa, give me a nickel to get me a pair of shoe strings."

His father glanced down at his son's shoes, then turning around approached the office safe and opened it in silence. He took out the cash box and raising the lid extracted a pair of new shoe strings, which he handed to his son without a word. The youngster took the strings with a crestfallen air and then to the amusement of the onlookers exclaimed:

"Stung again, by granny!"

Synonyms.

The French-Canadian always has trouble with the aspirate "th." At a debating club in the Province of Quebec members were required to draw a slip from a hat and debate upon the subject they received. A young countryman arose.

"I have drew the word 'bat.' I must told you dere is two, tree different kind of bat. Dere is de bat wot you play de baseball wit, de bat wot fly in de air at night and also de bat where you take de swim."—Success Magazine.

Risky Business.

Mrs. Crawford—I'll be glad when this false-hair fad goes out.

Mrs. Crabshaw—So will I, dear. I'm wearing so many different kinds that when I find a strange hair on my husband's coat I really haven't the nerve to accuse him.

THE TEA PENALTY.

A Strong Man's Experience.

Writing from a busy railroad town the wife of an employe of one of the great roads says:

"My husband is a railroad man who has been so much benefited by the use of Postum that he wishes me to express his thanks to you for the good it has done him. His waking hours are taken up with his work, and he has no time to write himself.

"He has been a great tea drinker all his life and has always liked it strong.

"Tea has, of late years, acted on him like morphine does upon most people. At first it soothed him, but only for an hour or so, then it began to affect his nerves to such an extent that he could not sleep at night, and he would go to his work in the morning wretched and miserable from the loss of rest. This condition grew constantly worse, until his friends persuaded him, some four months ago, to quit tea and use Postum.

"At first he used Postum only for breakfast, but as he liked the taste of it, and it somehow seemed to do him good, he added it to his evening meal. Then, as he grew better, he began to drink it for his noon meal, and now he will drink nothing else at table.

"His condition is so wonderfully improved that he could not be hired to give up Postum and go back to tea. His nerves have become steady and reliable once more, and his sleep is easy, natural and refreshing.

He owes all this to Postum, for he has taken no medicine and made no other change in his diet.

"His brother, who was very nervous from coffee-drinking, was persuaded by us to give up the coffee and use Postum and he also has recovered his health and strength." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a reason."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

A SERIOUS ERROR.

Many a case of kidney disease has proven fatal because the symptoms were not recognized. If you suffer with backache or bladder irregularities, follow the advice of Mrs. H. S. Woods, 619 11th St., Aurora, Nebr. Says Mrs. Woods: "I was in a critical condition. My feet and ankles were so swollen with dropsy, I could not wear my shoes. Fourteen weeks prior to taking Doan's Kidney Pills, I was confined to bed practically helpless. They made me feel like a new woman and soon I was doing my work the same as ever."

Every Picture Tells a Story

"When Your Back Is Lame, Remember the Name—DOAN'S." 50c a box at all stores. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, N. Y.

The Wrong Throat.

A little boy took an apple to school the other day and was playing with it. When the teacher saw him he took it from him and commenced to eat it.

As the boy saw the last piece disappear he commenced coughing, and when the teacher asked him what he was coughing for, he replied:

"Please, sir, it's gone down the wrong way."

Prudent men look up their motives, letting familiars have a key to their hearts as to their gardens.—Shenstone.

Fargo Directory

KODAKS and KODAK SUPPLIES Write for catalogues and literature. We do developing and printing. Mail orders given prompt attention. FARGO DRUG CO., FARGO, N. D.

Dakota Business College LARGEST and FINEST between CHICAGO AND THE COAST. FARGO, NORTH DAKOTA

WE MAKE RUGS FROM YOUR OLD CARPETS Write for information. Solicitors wanted. FARGO CARPET & RUG CO., 103 8th St. So., Fargo

STONE PIANO COMPANY FARGO, N. D. New Pianos $128.50 and up. Write for catalogs. Satisfaction guaranteed

Shotwell Floral Co. Growers and shippers of cut flowers, plants, etc. Write for catalog. Funeral designs on short notice. Phone day or night. Fargo, N. D.

We Furnish Positions To Graduates A Beautiful Catalog Free Aaker's Business Colleges Fargo or Grand Forks H. H. AAKER, Pres.

Guns, Sporting Goods, Hunter's and Trapper's Supplies, Camp Outfits, Tents, Foot Ball Suits and Supplies. BUEKMAN HARDWARE COMPANY, 57 Broadway Fargo, North Dakota

FARGO TANNERY Receives hides and skins for tanning to harness leather, robes and coats. Robes lined, hides bought, leather and robes for sale. SEND FOR PRICE LIST. Andrew Monson, Proprietor, Fargo Tannery Fargo, North Dakota

SHIP YOUR HIDES, FURS & WOOL to BOLLES & ROGERS, Fargo, N. D. If we get your goods, you get the money. HAVE YOUR BANKER LOOK US UP

WANTED Sufferers from Asthma to know that they can be cured in two to four weeks at the Electro-Medical Association and Sanitarium. Money back if not satisfied. Write for particulars. J. C. R. Charest, M. D., Office: Suite 301 deLendrecie Bldg., 820 Front St., Fargo, N. D.

BUILDERS MATERIAL CO. FARGO, NORTH DAKOTA Face Brick, Hollow Block, Hollow Face Tile, Fire Places and Fixtures. Wall Ties, Mortor Color, Metal Lath, Fire Brick, Water Proofings, Prepared Roofings, Ideal Ventilators, Cement Coatings, Asphalt.

SELF-STARTING EVERITT "THIRTY-SIX" A New Car Built by Old Engineers. Perfected Improvements Added to Tried and True Principles. Fully Equipped with Top, Windshield, Speedometer, Self-Starter, Magneto, Tools, etc., $1500. Send for Literature. MORE BROTHERS, Fargo, North Dakota

GALL CURE COLLARS Made Over Curled Hair Pads will not gall the horse. For sale by your local dealer. If you want free sample of the hair pad to convince you, write us and mention your dealer's name BRISTOL & SWEET HARNESS CO., Fargo, N. D. Manufacturers of "EAGLE BRAND" Guaranteed Harness

Second-Hand Autos We have a few slightly used cars for sale at very low prices.

1-2 Cylinder Buick Touring Car : : $550
1-4 Cylinder Buick Runabout : : : $500
1-4 Cylinder 35 Horse Continental : $900
1-4 Cylinder 30 Horse Chalmers fully equipped : : : : : : : $800

These cars are all in good shape and sold under a special guarantee. Write or call for more information.

GATE CITY AUTO CO.
324 N. P. AVE., FARGO, NORTH DAKOTA

CAREFUL MANAGEMENT NEEDED IN BREEDING COWS FOR DAIRY

Animals That Produce Pound of Butter and Cheese the Cheapest Are the Ones to Keep—One Reason Why So Many Herds Do Not Return Profit From Their Food and Cost of Attendance.

A Prize Winning Jersey Heifer.

(By W. M. KELLY.)

There is no phase of the dairy business that needs more study or more careful management than does the breeding of the cow.

Upon the cow depends success or failure and we must, after selecting her, look to her care and her feed, and to the handling of her products.

The fact that dairymen have devoted more attention to other phases of their dairying than to the breeding and development of the cow is one of the reasons why so many of our dairy herds are not capable of returning a profit from their food and cost of attendance.

We are often asked which is the best breed of dairy cattle to select for the dairy? To such men I would say that there is no best breed. Some think because they have Jerseys they are on the royal road to success. Others think that the Holsteins will bring prosperity to the farm.

This is a sad mistake, for scrubs are very common among the pure-breeds, and a pure-bred scrub is without doubt the worst scrub of all.

Select cows having individual excellence as determined by the Babcock test and scales in starting a herd. Better and more uniform results of breeding may be secured if the animals are of one type of breed and great care should be exercised in getting individuals which possess to a certainty the characteristics we desire to perpetuate in the herd.

What we dairymen want is a herd of cows that will give a profit at the pail, whether pure-breds or grades. The ones that will produce a pound of butter or cheese the cheapest are the ones that we want to keep in our herds.

We have a number of improved breeds of dairy cows that represent the skill of years in their perfection, but in adopting any of these breeds we should consider the conditions and environments under which they have been developed in their original homes and then plan to make our care and feed and general management conform to the conditions under which the breed had been developed.

If a man has Jerseys, give them Isle of Jersey care and feed for they cannot succeed on scrub fare and fodder. They were not intended for that purpose.

The Jersey cow is a delicate, nervous machine and requires warmth, kindness and liberal feeding to make her profitable.

If Holsteins are selected do not expect them to thrive on closely cropped, scanty pastures where they are compelled to rustle all day to gather sufficient food.

Give them the care they were developed under, large amounts of succulent forage and well cured hay, warm stables and kind treatment.

You may get pure-breds if you can afford them, but all farmers are not able to buy pure-breds. However, always use a pure-bred sire.

The breeding bull always represents half the value of the breeding power of the herd if it is desired to grow calves for the dairy.

Select them from some of the well-known families of the breed and be sure that he possesses prepotency which gives promise of being a good calf-getter.

A bull of this kind will give you excellent results in improving the herd. Some of the best herds in the country are high grades that have resulted from the continued use of good sires.

In order to be successful as breeders we must learn some of the lessons associated with our stock; have an ideal type in our minds and always in our selection and mating be seeking to improve the type and standard in our herd.

The best special purpose animal is none too good. Never strive to produce a general purpose animal by mixing beef and dairy breeds. Aim to produce the animal whose special characteristic is the cheap production of a pound of butter or a gallon of milk.

Always seek to have the crosses in harmony. Do not mate extremes. Vigor and constitution are two essentials. Unless a cow possesses vigor in constitution she will make a poor breeder.

Do not inbreed unless you have a definite object in view, such as intensifying some particular good quality and then do it by breeding the sire to some of his own get.

This should not be followed up too closely. Plan to have the heifers drop their first calves at about 24 to 30 months of age. Their offspring will be more vigorous and there will be better results than by forcing an immature animal to bear progeny.

Breed cows are large feeders. Feed them a liberal ration of milk-producing foods and give them the best of care. Keep in mind that bad qualities are more easily transmitted than the good ones.

MULCHING THE STRAWBERRY BED

Where Straw Is Not Readily Obtainable It Is Difficult to Get a Covering of Right Thickness.

(By H. F. GRINSTEAD, Missouri.)

Where straw is readily obtainable it is difficult to spread it properly over the strawberry plants so that it will be thick enough yet not smother the plants or require raking off in the spring.

A mulch of oats or sorghum is the best thing I know of that may be sown between the rows.

Oats alone has been tried, but from the fact that we often have a very dry fall it has not always made a satisfactory growth before frost.

Sorghum or kaffir corn are dry weather plants, and if there is sufficient moisture in the soil to germinate the seed they will grow till frost.

A good plan is to sow oats and sorghum or oats and kaffir corn in mixture and thick enough so that it will not be coarse.

As soon as it is killed by the frost the sorghum will fall, making an ideal mulch. Then, as the weather becomes more severe the oats will be killed.

Mulch grown in this way will always be found thickest where needed—in bare places and between the rows.

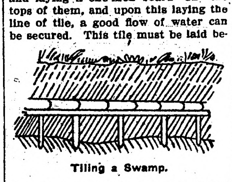
It cannot possibly smother out the plants no matter how rank it grows, and is the best for keeping the fruit off the ground in the spring.

One of the greatest advantages in a mulch of this kind is that you are reasonably sure to have no weeds sown with it, as is often the case when using wheat straw.

LAY DRAIN TILE THROUGH SWAMP

Good Plan Shown Where Ground Is So Soft as to Not Permit of Digging Satisfactory Ditch.

It is frequently advisable to lay drain tile through a bog or swamp where the ground is so soft as not to permit digging a satisfactory drain ditch. By driving stakes in the ground and laying a one-inch board on the tops of them, and upon this laying the line of tile, a good flow of water can be secured. This tile must be laid below the wet weather water level and after the land has been thoroughly drained for a year or two the tile can be removed and the stakes driven deeper, so that it rests upon solid earth.



Tiling a Swamp.

Cure Feather Pulling.

A good remedy for feather-pulling hens is said to be a piece of tough meat or bone with lean meat clinging to it. They will pick at the meat instead of pulling feathers.

Try This Famous Pinex "Pint of Cough Syrup"

A Family Supply for 50c, Saving $2—The Surest, Quickest Remedy You Ever Used or Money Refunded.

A cough remedy that saves you $2, and is guaranteed to give quicker, better results than anything else, is surely worth trying. And one trial will show you why Pinex is used in more homes in the U. S. and Canada than any other cough remedy.

You will be pleasantly surprised by the way it takes right hold of a cough, giving almost instant relief. It will usually stop the most obstinate, deep-seated cough in 24 hours, and is unequaled for prompt results in whooping cough.

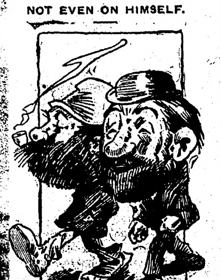
A 50-cent bottle of Pinex, when mixed with home-made sugar syrup, makes a full pint of the best cough remedy ever used. Easily prepared in five minutes—directions in package.

The taste is pleasant—children take it willingly. Stimulates the appetite and is slightly laxative—both excellent features. Splendid for croup, hoarseness, asthma, bronchitis and other throat troubles, and a highly successful remedy for incipient lung troubles.

Pinex is a special and highly concentrated compound of Norway White Pine extract, rich in guaiacol and other natural healing pine elements. Simply mix with sugar syrup or strained honey, in a pint bottle, and it is ready for use.

Pinex has often been imitated, but never successfully, for nothing else will produce the same results. The genuine is guaranteed to give absolute satisfaction or money refunded. Certificate of guarantee is wrapped in each package. Your druggist has Pinex or will gladly get it for you. If not, send to The Pinex Co., 238 Main St., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

NOT EVEN ON HIMSELF.



First Hobo—There's one thing to my credit.

Second Hobo—What's that?

First Hobo—Nobody can say that I ever threw cold water on anything.

BABY'S TERRIBLE SUFFERING

"When my baby was six months old, his body was completely covered with large sores that seemed to itch and cause terrible suffering. The eruption began in pimples which would open and run, making large sores. His hair came out and finger nails fell off, and the sores were over the entire body, causing little or no sleep for baby or myself. Great scabs would come off when I removed his shirt.

"We tried a great many remedies, but nothing would help him, till a friend induced me to try the Cuticura Soap and Ointment. I used the Cuticura Soap and Ointment but a short time before I could see that he was improving, and in six weeks' time he was entirely cured. He had suffered about six weeks before we tried the Cuticura Soap and Ointment, although we had tried several other things, and doctors, too. I think the Cuticura Remedies will do all that is claimed for them, and a great deal more." (Signed) Mrs. Noble Tubman, Dodson, Mont., Jan. 28, 1911. Although Cuticura Soap and Ointment are sold by druggists and dealers everywhere, a sample of each, with 32-page book, will be mailed free on application to "Cuticura," Dept. 18 K, Boston.

Literary Criticism.

They were discussing a certain authoress at dinner, and a well-known critic raised a laugh by remarking: "Well, her hair's red, even if her books are not."

The mild young man in the corner made a mental note of the sally for future use, and at another party shortly afterward he carefully guided the conversation into literary channels, Tit-Bits informs its readers. Fortunately, some one mentioned the desired name, and he triumphantly cried out: "Well, she's got red hair, even if her books haven't!"

A Regular One.

She—And don't you go in for sport of any kind?

He—Oh, yaas, don't yer know. I'm—ha—passionately fond of dominoes.—Everybody's Weekly.

Important to Mothers

Examine carefully every bottle of CASTORIA, a safe and sure remedy for infants and children, and see that it

Bears the Signature of Chas. H. Fletcher.

In Use For Over 30 Years.

Children Cry for Fletcher's Castoria

Up to Date.

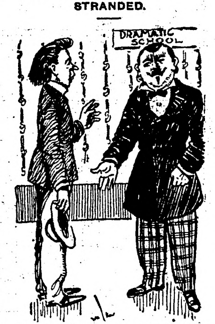
"I notice that young Doctor Curem uses autohypnosis in his practice."

"Of course he does. Didn't you know he specializes in motor nerves?"

Thousands of country people know the value of Hamlins Wizard Oil, the best family medicine in case of accident or sudden illness. For the safety of your family buy a bottle now.

Too many homes have all the modern inconveniences.

STRANDED.



Teacher of Dramatic Art—The very first thing is to give the scholar a graceful bearing—to teach him how to walk.

Student—Well, er—er—I don't expect to join that kind of a company.

A Cross-Reference.

Mistress—Have you a reference?

Bridget—Foine; Oi held the poker over her till I got it.—Harper's Bazar.

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets first put up 40 years ago. They regulate and invigorate stomach, liver and bowels. Sugar-coated tiny granules.

In this world one must be a little too kind to be kind enough.—Marivaux.

DR. J. H. RINDLAUB (Specialist), Eye, Ear, Nose and Throat
Fargo, N. D.

It sometimes happens that a man who never even saw an airship flies just as high and falls just as hard.

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup for Children teething, softens the gums, reduces inflammation, allays pain, cures wind colic, 25c a bottle.

We are more apt to regret the things we haven't done than those we have.

ARE YOU FREE —FROM—

Headaches, Colds, Indigestion, Pains, Constipation, Sour Stomach, Dizziness? If you are not, the most effective, prompt and pleasant method of getting rid of them is to take, now and then, a dessertspoonful of the ever refreshing and truly beneficial laxative remedy—Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna. It is well known throughout the world as the best of family laxative remedies, because it acts so gently and strengthens naturally without irritating the system in any way.

To get its beneficial effects it is always necessary to buy the genuine, manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co., bearing the name of the Company, plainly printed on the front of every package.

Save Money on Farm Loans Write us direct for application blank and save local agent's commissions. Quick and reliable service. THE HATCHER BROTHERS CORPORATION Grand Forks and Fargo, North Dakota

TAKE A DOSE OF PISO'S THE BEST MEDICINE for COUGHS & COLDS

CASH for property, any kind, anywhere. If you want to buy, sell or exchange, address NORTHWESTERN BUSINESS AGENCY, Minneapolis, Minnesota

Pettit's Eye Salve TONIC FOR EYES

WANTED Men to farm our free southern land. Send 10 cents postage for prospectus. DR. ALLEN, 108 N. State St., Chicago, Ill.

W. N. U., FARGO, NO. 44–1911.

Weak Heart

Many people suffer from weak hearts. They may experience shortness of breath on exertion, pain over the heart, or dizzy feelings, oppressed breathing after meals or their eyes become blurred, their heart is not sufficiently strong to pump blood to the extremities, and they have cold hands and feet, or poor appetite because of weakened blood supply to the stomach. A heart tonic and alterative should be taken which has no bad after-effect. Such is Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, which contains no dangerous narcotics nor alcohol.

The ingredients, as attested under oath, are Stone root (Collinsonia Canadensis), Bloodroot (Sanguinaria Canadensis), Golden Seal root (Hydrastis Canadensis), Queen's root (Stillingia Sylvatica), Black Cherrybark (Prunus Virginiana), Mandrake root (Podophyllum Peltatum), with triple refined glycerine, prepared in a scientific laboratory in a way that no druggist could imitate.

This tonic contains no alcohol to shrink up the red blood corpuscles; but, on the other hand, it increases their number and they become round and healthy. It helps the human system in the constant manufacture of rich, red blood. It helps the stomach to assimilate or take up the proper elements from the food, thereby helping digestion and curing dyspepsia, heart-burn and many uncomfortable symptoms, stops excessive tissue waste in convalescence from fevers; for the run-down, anæmic, thin-blooded people, the "Discovery" is refreshing and vitalizing. Stick to this safe and sane remedy, and refuse all "just as good" medicines offered by the druggist who is looking for a larger profit. Nothing but Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery will do you half as much good.

SPOHN'S DISTEMPER CURE

FOR PINK EYE DISTEMPER CATARRHAL FEVER AND ALL NOSE AND THROAT DISEASES

Cures the sick and acts as a preventive for others. Liquid given on the tongue. Safe for brood mares and all others. Best kidney remedy; 50 cents and $1.00 a bottle; $5.00 and $10.00 the dozen. Sold by all druggists and horse goods houses, or sent express paid, by the manufacturers.

SPOHN MEDICAL CO., Chemists, GOSHEN, INDIANA

The Famous Rayo Lamps and Lanterns

Rayo lamps and lanterns give most light for the oil used.

The light is strong and steady. A Rayo never flickers. Materials and workmanship are the best. Rayo lamps and lanterns last.

Ask your dealer to show you his line of Rayo lamps and lanterns, or write for illustrated booklets direct to any agency of

Standard Oil Company (Incorporated)

W. L. DOUGLAS

$2.50, $3.00, $3.50 & $4.00 SHOES

Men and Women wear W. L. Douglas shoes because they are the best shoes produced in this country for the price. Insist upon having them. Take no other make.

THE STANDARD OF QUALITY FOR OVER 30 YEARS

The assurance that goes with an established reputation is your assurance in buying W. L. Douglas shoes.

If I could take you into my large factories at Brockton, Mass., and show you how carefully W. L. Douglas shoes are made, you would then understand why they are warranted to hold their shape, fit better and wear longer than any other make for the price

CAUTION The genuine have W. L. Douglas name and price stamped on bottom

If you cannot obtain W. L. Douglas shoes in your town, write for catalog. Shoes sent direct from factory to wearer, all charges prepaid. W. L. DOUGLAS, 145 Spark St., Brockton, Mass.

ONE PAIR of my BOYS' $2, $2.50 or $3.00 SHOES will positively outwear TWO PAIRS of ordinary boys' shoes

Fast Color Eyelets Used Exclusively.

PERFECTION SMOKELESS OIL HEATER

Smokeless Odorless Clean Convenient

The Perfection Smokeless Oil Heater warms up a room in next to no time. Always ready for use. Can be carried easily to any room where extra warmth is needed.

A special automatic device makes it impossible to turn the wick too high or too low. Safe in the hands of a child.

The Perfection burns nine hours on one filling—glowing heat from the minute it is lighted. Handsomely finished; drums of blue enamel or plain steel, with nickel trimmings.

Ask your dealer or write for descriptive circular to any agency of Standard Oil Company (Incorporated)

PUTNAM FADELESS DYES

Color more goods brighter and faster colors than any other dye. One 10c package colors all fibers. They dye in cold water better than any other dye. You can dye any garment without ripping apart. Write for free booklet—How to Dye, Bleach and Mix Colors. MONROE DRUG COMPANY, Quincy, Ill.

Defective Page

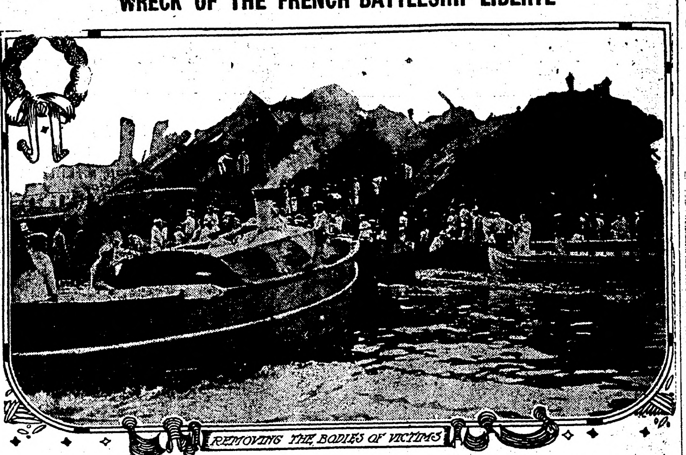
WRECK OF THE FRENCH BATTLESHIP LIBERTE



THIS photograph shows the scene in Toulon harbor immediately after the explosion that destroyed the French battleship Liberte. Sailors from the other warships are seen recovering the bodies of their dead comrades. More than 200 men lost their lives. The Liberte was one of France's best fighting vessels and cost nearly $7,000,000.

INVITE FOOD FRAUDS

Women Prefer Eatables That Are Pleasing to the Eye.

Encouragement to Manufacturers to Impair Nutritive Viands by Injecting Harmful Chemicals Is Denounced by Expert.

New York.—The dangerous craving of women for food products that "look pretty on the table" and the consequent encouragement to manufacturers to impair the purity of nutritive viands by injecting harmful chemicals into them to make them pleasant to the eye were denounced in an address at the pure food show in Madison Square garden by Alfred W. McCann, food expert, in the course of his speech McCann described in detail many of the viands that are thus tampered with.

McCann said in part: "Woman does not want foods in the natural order, and as a result she asks for a pickle which will resist the teeth. The manufacturer at once gives it to her by using an astringent, alum, which toughens the tissues and produces the effect desired. She wants anaemic crackers and biscuits and bread and the manufacturer bleaches the creamy wheat with nitrogen peroxide and grinds out of it the vital elements upon which she and her family depend for their energy and strength.

"If he were licensed and if it were a crime to debase or impoverish any foodstuffs he could not trespass against all laws of decency by assisting her to create an artificial standard, inimical in a large degree to the health of the nation. She asks for a brilliant green string bean or spinach or pea or plum, and her desire is gratified with sulphate of copper. She is perfectly satisfied to eat the white Swiss cheese, but she wants yellow butter and yellow American cheese, and the dairy immediately provides the artificial color scheme. She wants fancy desserts that scintillate under the electric bulb, and coal tar is at once split up and its dyes made ready for the eye.

"She wants a semi-transparent paleness for her mushrooms, apples, apricots, peaches and pears, and sulphurous acid is summoned to do the work. She wants her chocolate and her sweetmeats 'fussy,' and immediately eight legalized ethers and seven legalized analine colors are brought to the rescue. She wants a package or a bottle or a jar of the impossible at a bargain price and forty-five 'fillers' or 'body-makers' are invented to supply the bulk required. She isn't particular about by-products or waste products, and the small print which Uncle Sam feebly insists shall appear on chemically preserved compounds is unnoticed by her. Tomato pulp and apple pulp, manufactured from skins and cores, apple juice, potato flour, cornstarch, phosphoric acid, citric acid tartaric acid, sulphur dioxide and benzoate of soda make it possible for the unlicensed manufacturer to get her pennies."

STROUD PETTICOAT IS LUCKY

Eighteen Brides in One Family Have Worn the Garment, Now On Its Way to Texas for Another.

Atlanta, Ga.—Fifty-five years in one family and worn by eighteen brides, the famous Stroud petticoat is now on its way to Texas to serve there for the nineteenth time as the "something old" of the bridal costume.

The mother of the petticoat is Mrs. Aaron Nunnally of Atlanta, one of the best-known women of the city. Fifty-five years ago, when Mrs. Nunnally was Miss Emma Stroud, she made the garment while she was a pupil in the Baptist female college at Madison, Ga.

She wore it on her wedding day, and it was then packed away to be used years later by her daughters on their wedding days. It has served as a part of the wedding finery of Misses Mattie, Dora, Laura and Mamie Nunnally. It has ever been at the disposal of the family, and it is believed to have brought good luck to all who have entered married life under its auspices.

The garment has been shipped to McKinney, Texas, to a granddaughter, Miss Rosabel Hines, who soon becomes a wife.

No harem or hobble skirt has a like record.

Airship in Prison.

Fishkill, N. Y.—T. M. Rafferty, a mechanic, serving a sentence in the county prison for theft, is occupying his time in the workshop by building a biplane. He expects to glide off the courthouse roof in it when his term ends.

COURT "TRUSTS" A CARNEGIE

Cousin of Millionaire Steel Master Is Fined $1—Finds Himself Without Cash to Settle.

New York.—Policeman Ward of the sanitary squad saw Campbell Carnegie of 1323 Clinton avenue, Bronx, spitting on the sidewalk of the Brooklyn bridge plaza the other day and arrested him. On the way to the Tombs court, the prisoner told the policeman his name.

"Any relative to Andy?" asked the policeman, jokingly.

"Yep," said the young man, and then asked hopefully: "Does that make any difference?"

"Not for you," said Ward, sadly, "but it may for me."

Magistrate Murphy grinned appreciatively when young Carnegie, with a long face, confessed that the charge against him was true.

"I fine you $1," he said. "I guess a Carnegie can pay that for having forgotten himself.

The young man's face grew longer. He searched his pockets and brought out 60 cents.

The attendant started him for the prison pen to serve out his day of imprisonment.

"Bring him back," ordered Magistrate Murphy. "Many a time I have been caught without a dollar in my clothes."

"Young man," he said, when Carnegie was again before him, "where do you work?"

"Commercial Printing company, 8 Beekman street," was the reply.

"When do you get paid?"

"Tomorrow."

"Then I will parole you in your own custody until tomorrow afternoon," said the magistrate. "You must come in and pay the dollar then or else I shall have to pay it myself."

Fervidly thanking the court, the steelmaster's cousin went his way.

ARE RE-UNITED BY PICTURE

Brothers Separated 37 Years Brought Together by Handbill—One Ran Away From Home.

Chicago.—Persistent questions of a 7-year-old grandson about a portrait in a circular will lead to the reunion of H. J. Rhodes, a naval veteran, whose home is in Elgin, and his brother, David B. Rhodes, chief of police of Baker City, Oregon. The brothers had been lost to each other 37 years.

The brother in Elgin ran away from the family home at Stoughton, Wis., at the age of 15 and joined the navy at 17, serving through the war.

His brother enlisted and fought in the army during the same period. The brothers were in communication during the war, but afterward drifted apart and for a generation have been unable to find one another.

Several years ago H. J. Rhodes retired from business and made his home with his daughter, Mrs. H. A. Wahl, in Elgin. A short time ago an illustrated booklet advertising Baker City came to the home and fell into the hands of Harry Wahl, the little grandson of the veteran.

"Oh, look!" he exclaimed as he turned the pages, "here's the picture of a man with a name like grandpa's, all dressed up like a policeman."

"Yes, son," replied the mother, "there are lots of men with the same name."

"Well, didn't grandpa have any brothers or anything?" persisted the boy. "Anyway, this man looks like grandpa."

"D-a-v-i-d," spelled the boy. "I'm going to call him Uncle David. See, grandpa, here's Uncle David."

The old man studied the picture and then wrote to the man in Baker City. The relationship was established, and Mr. Rhodes will start to Baker City to visit his brother in a few days.

GIRL FRIGHTENS A BURGLAR

Ordered to Get Money, Little Lady Leaves Room and Pretends to Telephone to Police Station.

Stockton, Cal.—That a large quantity of silverware and jewelry is still at the home of Ernest E. Smith is wholly due to the courage and resourcefulness of his fourteen-year-old daughter, Mildred. The other night Mildred was left alone to care for the smaller children.

Hearing a noise, the girl thought it was one of her sisters and told her to wait a moment while she lighted the gas.

As she stepped down, she was confronted by a man, who demanded money.

Mildred told him to wait a moment and went into the next room. After a brief delay she called out loud enough so the burglar could hear, Hello! Is this the police station?"

The burglar heard the girl and, thinking she was telephoning, rushed out of the house. The Smiths have no telephone and the girl merely worked a clever ruse to get rid of him.

"CHANTECLER" IN REAL LIFE

Prairie Chickens on Oklahoma Ranch Mate With Pheasants—Seek Name for Hybrid Offspring.

Muskogee, Okla.—If hunters in the neighborhood of Pryor Creek, Okla., should find a flock of strange birds let them fail to pull the trigger, for the birds may be Dr. F. B. Fite's "mules," a cross between the native prairie chicken and the English ring-necked pheasant. Dr. Fite, who lives in Muskogee, has a ranch near this place well stocked with game birds.

The state game warden last year sent Dr. Fite some pheasant eggs, which were hatched. Other birds were purchased until the flock was increased to thirty. On the ranch is a flock of fifty native prairie chickens, which he has been carefully protecting. Last summer the pheasants and the prairie chickens mated, and from the cross was hatched a flock of young birds.

"The young birds are not yet old enough for me to tell what they look like," said Dr. Fite. "The pheasant is not so hardy as the prairie chicken, and the combination should make an ideal game bird. I am looking for a name for the new fowl."

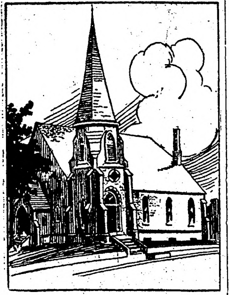
Terrier Mothers Lion Cub.

Tacoma, Wash.—A stepmother in the form of a thoroughbred English bull terrier is believed to have solved the problem confronting the Point Defiance zoo keepers as to how they could save the life of a baby lion, born the other night. The terrier administers to the tiny jungle beast as if it were her own.

CHURCH BUILT OF FOSSILS

Building Constructed of Blocks Hewed From the Petrified Depths of a Nearby Swamp.

Mumford, N. Y.—In Mumford is a church building constructed of fossils. At first glance the walls appear to be constructed of rough sandstone smeared with an uneven coating of gritty, coarse, plaster; but a closer view shows delicate traceries of leaves, lace-work of interwoven twigs, bits of broken branches, fragments of mossy bark, splinters of wood, all preserved against the wasting of time and decay by being turned into the hardest of flinty limestone. Every block of stone in the four walls is a closely cemented mass of dainty fossils, literally packed and interwoven. There is no basic rock at all, but only fossil fibers, which give the rock cohesion and strength. Nevertheless, the stones are light in weight compared with granite and sandstone.



Mumford Church.

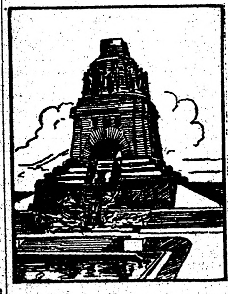
The blocks were hewed from the petrified depths of a nearby cedar swamp. Mumford is situated in the heart of the great area of rock, once the bed of an ocean, known to geologists as the Niagara limestone. It crops out either in the form of the soft, calcarerous stone, or the hard and more serviceable blue limestone. The clear, cold water which gushes from innumerable springs or flows in frequent brooks throughout the Mumford country is alkaline from the lime held in solution.

GERMANY'S GREAT MONUMENT

Colossal Memorial Nearing Completion Is Built to Commemorate the Battle of Leipzig.

Leipzig, Germany.—Perhaps the most colossal monument in all Germany is nearing completion here. Leipzig was the scene of three noteworthy battles—two in the Thirty Years' War and one in the Napoleonic wars. The monument is to commemorate the battles between the French under Napoleon and an allied army of Austrians, Russians, Prussians and Swedes. The monument will be dedicated in October, 1913, on the battle's centenary.

In the accompanying illustration the monument is shown as it will appear when completed. Some of the gigantic carvings—one of them forty feet high—are already in place. Even incomplete, the monument thrills you with its colossal dimensions. It is three hundred feet in height, but it is built on such a mountainous scale that its tremendous height is minimized. It faces the city fronting a concreted lake several acres in extent. A broad boulevard will lead from it straight into Leipzig.



Leipzig Monument.

THE DIMENSIONS OF HEAVEN

Preacher Figures It to Be the Equal of a 792,000 Story Building.

Louisville, Ky.—Heaven's exact dimensions were figured out in the sermon of the Rev. M. E. Dodd, pastor of a Louisville church, preached to his congregation recently. In the course of his sermon the preacher said:

"In Revelations, twenty-first chapter, sixteenth verse, nervous Christians have read where the dimensions of heaven are only 1,500 cubic miles. Immediately they jump at the conclusion that even this space will not accommodate the vast multitude of which the Bible speaks.

"However, calculation will show that this space will accommodate a building 792,000 stories high, and it is easy to demonstrate that such a building would accommodate an innumerable multitude."

THE KITCHEN CABINET

LET onion atoms lurk within the bowl
And half suspected animate the whole.
—Sidney Smith.

So near I shall be that your best friend shall wish I had been further.

VALUE OF THE ONION.

The onion has wonderful properties and is both a food and a medicine. For colds and coughs it is a remedy popular through many generations.

A few onions sliced and sprinkled generously with sugar, put into the oven and baked until the onion and sirup is brown is a cough medicine hard to equal.

Raw onions are said to cure bronchitis and throat affections.

The only drawback to the full enjoyment of this homely vegetable is the odor which it leaves on the breath. Fresh parsley eaten after eating onions is the best remedy to counteract the onion odor.

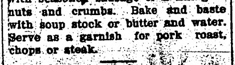
Raw onion is more stimulating than cooked ones and they are said to have a beneficial effect on the complexion, so the onion eaters have some compensation.

Creamed Onions on Toast.—Peel onions all of one size and put to cook in a little stock with a blade of mace, and cook gently until tender. Drain and keep the onions hot, then add a half cup of milk to the onion liquid. Ad a little flour and butter cooked together. Boil and season. Prepare a piece of toast for each onion. Add a yolk of egg to the sauce, lay an onion on each piece of toast, pour over some of the sauce, sprinkle with chopped parsley and serve hot.

Chopped onion seasoned with a bit of mustard, salt and olive oil and vinegar makes a very appetizing filling for sandwiches. Serve them for Sunday night lunch—after church.

The delicious flavor of the onion is used in countless dishes and eaten with relish by many who profess to dislike the flavor.

Stuffed Onions.—Parboil large-sized onions and remove the centers. Fill with seasoned sausage or a filling of nuts and crumbs. Bake and baste with soup stock or butter and water. Serve as a garnish for pork roast, chops or steak.



IF I were asked what was the greatest foe to beauty in both man and woman, I would say, not errors in diet, not lack of exercise, not overwork, nor corsets, nor any of these, but bad mental habits. Fear, anger, worry, regret, irritability, envy, jealousy, lack of trust in one's self and in the great God—all these are bad mental states which destroy beauty, not only by interfering with the action of the vital organs, but by directly disfiguring the expression of the face. —Outing.

AUTUMN DISHES.

Pears and Rice.—Cut six pears in half, remove the cores and peel thinly. Put them into a saucepan with a sirup of sugar and water and cook until the pears are soft. Put a pint of milk into a saucepan with the thinly-peeled rind of a lemon and a tablespoonful of butter. When boiling hot add three tablespoonfuls of rice and cook until the rice is tender. When done, cool. Add the beaten yolks of two eggs and a half cup of cream. Sweeten to taste. Serve the rice in the center of the dish with the pears around it. Pour the sirup over all. Serve hot.

Another delicious way of serving the pear is to wash, halve and core them, leaving the stem on. Put into a baking dish and dot each core with butter, sprinkle with sugar, add a little lemon juice and water and bake slowly for several hours in a slow oven. The sauce will be a rich brown caramel.

Apple Meringue.—Peel and core six apples, being careful to keep them unbroken. Put them in a sirup made of two tablespoonfuls of sugar and two cups of water and bake until tender. Butter a baking dish, put the apples into it and fill the centers with apricot jam. Beat the whites of two eggs, add a tablespoonful of sugar and cover the apples completely with the meringue. Put back into the oven to brown.

Melting Potatoes.—Pare and cook in boiling salted water enough potatoes for the meal. When done, drain and place in a buttered baking dish, cover with a half pint of soup stock (chicken is most savory), put a piece of butter on each potato and bake until the potatoes have absorbed the stock. Serve hot.

IF WE are commonplace and indifferent, we will find other people so. Mind finds its level, just as water does. A really original and sympathetic person will find others interesting and agreeable. To complain of those we meet is really to admit ourselves dull.

HOUSEHOLD HELPS.

Fall is the time when peach stains find a home on our best linen. To remove them, wet with water and cover with cream of tartar, then place in the sun, wetting the spots as they dry. Afterward wash and rinse in the regular manner.

The custom with many thrifty housekeepers is to use yellow napkins, which may be used during the fruit season, and stains will not show on them.

When washing glass, slip it sidewise into the water to avoid cracking.

If a new silk skirt is pressed with a hot iron before wearing it will take out the stiffness and the rustle but keep it from cracking.

Cushions filled with excelsior make a good back for softer cushions on the couch.

Dampen a scorched spot, and if it is not really burned, place in the sun, and it will become white again.

Stuffed Spanish Onions.—Peel six even-sized onions and parboil in boiling water until partly done. Drain and remove the centers, and stuff with sausage. Put some slices of bacon in the bottom of a baking dish, put a little of the onion centers and cooked carrot over each and place on this the parboiled onion. Add stock and bake until thoroughly tender.

Instead of using raisins in the rice pudding try a few bits of chopped Canton ginger. A tablespoonful to a quart of milk will be sufficient to give the pudding a flavor.

Put your hyacinths for winter blooming in their glasses or pots before October is gone or the blooms will be late.

A nice way to keep cheese when a whole one or large pieces are purchased, is to cover the cut side with paraffin, which can easily be removed when the next piece is cut.

Paper doilies come now in such delicate and beautiful patterns that we may save much wear and tear of hand work by using them where ever possible.

THANK God the meanest of his creatures
Has two soul sides, one to face the world with—
One to show a woman when he loves her.
—Browning.

GOOD THINGS TO TRY.

The culinary architect is keenly alive to anything now in combination or serving and a few recipes of new dishes are always hailed with delight. Here are a few to tickle the palate:

Bohemian Pear Dainty.—Dissolve two heaping tablespoonfuls of gelatine in a cup of boiling water, add six ripe pears that have been peeled and rubbed through a sieve, four tablespoonfuls of sugar, a teaspoonful of vanilla and two cups of whipped cream. Mold in a wet mold and turn out when set. Decorate with sweetened whipped cream and peeled pears.

Chocolate Sponge.—Take two and a half squares of chocolate, melted, add two tablespoonfuls of powdered gelatine, and two cups of milk, three tablespoonfuls of sugar. Stir over the fire until melted and smooth, then strain into a basin. Add one cup whipped cream and the white of egg beaten stiff. Pour into a mold and let stand to set.

Lamb Chops With Cucumber.—Cook the chops until brown on both sides. Peel a good-sized cucumber and cut into small dice; simmer in boiling water until almost done, drain and season with butter and cook until quite tender. Add salt, chopped parsley and pepper. Arrange the chops around the edge of the platter and heap the cucumbers in the center.

Orange Pudding.—Scald a pint of milk in a double boiler, add a tablespoonful of cornstarch which has been mixed with a little cold milk, then add the yolks of two eggs and a cupful of sugar. Cook until smooth then remove from the heat. Peel and slice thin two oranges, sprinkle with sugar, then pour over them the chilled custard. A meringue may be added and browned in the oven. Chill and serve cold.

Nellie Maxwell.

Soldiers' Pet Armadillo.

While hunting in the Virginia woods near Bailey's crossroads, in Alexandria county, a few nights ago a pack of dogs belonging to John Monroe and a colored man named Mortimer Wiggins ran down and killed an animal believed to be an armadillo. The dogs were after opossums and coons, but getting on the scent of the animal followed it for an hour or more before they landed their quarry. Later it was learned that the armadillo belonged to one of the troops of cavalry at Fort Myer. The men had secured a number of the animals while on duty on the Texas border and had brought them to the fort.

The one that was killed had escaped and the men had been hunting the woods for it for several days when they learned that it had been killed. This is possibly the only armadillo hunt that ever took place in the vicinity of Washington.—Washington Star.

Distant Courtesy.

"As an artist I suppose you assume to be indifferent to money?"

"No, I'm not indifferent. But I'm not sufficiently acquainted to attempt familiarity."

THE NORTHERN LIGHT

VOL. I. HOLT, MARSHALL COUNTY, MINNESOTA, FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 10, 1911 NO. 15.

MINNESOTA HISTORICAL SOCIETY

BIG GRAIN CORNER

FEDERAL GOVERNMENT PROBES REPORTED HOLDING OF 63,000,000 BUSHELS WHEAT.

MINNEAPOLIS IS INVOLVED

Chicago Declared Center of Move—President of Company Involved Invites An Investigation.

Washington, D. C. — An alleged corner in wheat, centered at Chicago and extending to Minneapolis, Duluth, Buffalo and Baltimore, by which it is declared 60 per cent of the country's wheat supply is controlled, has been under investigation by agents of the department of justice for some time, and the results may be presented to the respective grand juries within a few days.

To insure necessary evidence the government is about to ask the grand jury at Chicago to prevent the Armour Grain company of that city, through which it is alleged those who control the corner operate, from transferring or disposing of any of its warehouse receipts.

Sixty-two million bushels of wheat are being held in the trade centers concerned, but it was impossible to secure the names of the people whom the government believe to be behind the corner.

Armour Man Shown Report.

Chicago.—President George E. Marcy of the Armour Grain company was shown the Washington dispatch about an alleged corner in wheat. He was standing within a few feet of the trading pit on 'change and was busily engaged in directing subordinates, but took time to read the telegram carefully, and then said, with deliberation, referring to the alleged corner:

"It is not true. We are, to be sure, engaged in the grain business, but are not ashamed or afraid of anything we have done, and are entirely willing [illegible] should be made known."

METHODIST BISHOPS GATHER.

Twenty-Five Churchmen From Five Continents at Oklahoma Meeting.

Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.—Twenty-five Methodist Episcopal bishops from five continents are here for the semi-annual meeting. The first session was marked by denunciation of the famous grandfather clause in the Oklahoma constitution, which makes it almost impossible for a negro to vote, by Bishop Hartsell of Monrovia, Liberia. He also said all Christian nations should pray for the success of Italy in its war with Turkey. Bishop Hartsell told of the great progress of Liberia, the negro republic.

Foremost churchmen here include W. S. Lewis, in charge of the Methodist church work in China; Bishop J. C. Hartsell, Monrovia, Liberia; Bishop Frank Bristol, formerly President McKinley's pastor in Washington, now in Buenos Ayres; Bishop William Burt, Zurich, Switzerland; Bishop William A. McDowell, just returned from a trip around the world, giving especial attention to conditions in India; Bishop Henry W. Warren, Denver; Bishop J. F. Barry, former editor of the Epworth Herald; Bishop David H. Moore, Cincinnati; Bishop John M. Walden, retired, of Cincinnati; Bishop Earl Cranston, Washington; Bishop Luther B. Wilson, just returned from Africa; Bishop Edwin H. Hughes, San Francisco, and Bishop C. W. Smith, of Portland, Ore., for 20 years editor of the Christian Advocate at Pittsburg.

SCIENTIFIC SHOP IS FAVORED.

Secretary Simpson Urges Its Introduction Into Government Workshops.

Washington, D. C. — "Scientific shop management" has received the indorsement of the United States government. Secretary of War Stimson is convinced of its desirability and advantages, basing his conviction on report made by Brigadier General William Crozier, chief of ordinance. The secretary is satisfied that its introduction into government workshops would work no hardships to labor.

HOLIDAY TRAIN RATES BARRED.

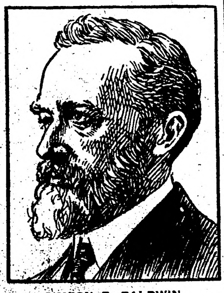
Special Tariffs to M. E. General Conference Also Refused.

Chicago, Nov. [illegible]—No Christmas or New Year's special railroad fares will be granted this year by the Western Passenger association railroads, it was announced after a meeting of the association. The states in which rates will not be changed are Illinois, Iowa, Missouri, Minnesota, Wisconsin, North and South Dakota, Wyoming, Montana, Nebraska, Colorado and Utah.

$60,000 Loss In Explosions.

Paterson, New Jersey. — Three explosions at the Dupont powder works at Haskells caused a loss of about $60,000.

BALDWIN AFTER PRESIDENCY.



SIMEON E. BALDWIN.
Democratic Candidate for Governor of Connecticut.

New Haven, Conn. — The name of Governor Simon E. Baldwin of Connecticut will be presented to the national democratic convention for president. His nomination will have the indorsement of the full Connecticut delegation.

CARDINALS ARE ELEVATED

THREE AMERICAN PRELATES RECEIVE OFFICIAL NOTICES.

Mgr. Falconio and Archbishop Farley to Sail for Rome Immediately.

Washington, D. C. — Monsignor Diomede Falconio, the apostolic delegate to the United States, and Archbishops O'Connell of Boston and Farley of New York, official notice of whose selection as additions to the college of cardinals was received here, probably will sail for Rome not later than Nov. 1.

Monsignor Falconio received his summons to attend the consistory at Rome Nov. 7. He does not expect to return to America as his position will [illegible] venture Corretti, the auditor of the papal delegation, will act as charge d'affairs until the appointment of an ablegate to succeed Monsignor Falconio.

Many telegrams of congratulation from Catholic clergy and laymen and other friends in this country and Europe have reached the newly selected members of the college of cardinals. Monsignor Falconio said he hoped to sail at the date mentioned. He expressed his appreciation for the uniform kindness of the American people since he came to Washington.

"I have become greatly attached to the American people because I am an American," he said. "My work in Washington as representative of the vatican has been most pleasant. I leave here with many regrets, but must obey the call to other fields."

Defeat for "Modernism."

Boston. — "Archbishop O'Connell's elevation means a crushing defeat for modernism in this country, which has used as one of its specious arguments that American Catholic interests were not understood or were ignored by the vatican," said the Rev. Ambrose F. Roche, one of the archbishops' council.

"No one can question the extraordinary ability, courage and prudence of the new cardinal and no one dares to insinuate that he is not intensely loyal to the church and to the flag of his native land."

Official notice of the archbishop's elevation to the cardinalate was received by him.

New York.—Archbishop John M. Farley will said for Rome some time next week to be present at the consistory to be held in the vatican Nov. 27, official confirmation of his elevation to the cardinalate having been received here by mail from Cardinal Merry Del Val, the papal secretary of state.

MOROCCAN TANGLE ENDS.

France to Establish Protectorate, but Will Cede Tract to Germany.

Paris, France.—The contents of the Franco-German accord, officially given out, show that Germany recognizes the right of France to establish a protectorate in Morocco, while both nations engage to obtain the adhesion to this accord of the other signatories to the Algeciras agreement.

France, as compensation for the German recognition of her protectorate in Morocco, cedes to Germany about 250,000 square kilometers in Northern French Congo, touching the German Camerons. The territory ceded is inhabited by about 1,000,000 negroes and has a commerce valued at $2,400,000 annually.

France and Germany agre to submit to The Hague tribunal all difficulties arising from the operation of the accord. In reference to Morocco, France agrees to safeguard the economic equality and commercial liberty for which provision is made in existing treaties.

5C & 10C MERGER

WOOLWORTH COMPANY SWALLOWS ITS NUMEROUS SMALLER COMPETITORS.

600 STORES IN THE CHAIN

New Firm Will Be Capitalized at Sixty-five Millions and Contest Trade in United States and England.

New York, N. Y.—A $65,000,000 corporation, to merge the greatest string of 5 and 10-cent stores in America, is announced by F. W. Woolworth. Six hundred concerns will enter the new corporation, which will be known as the F. W. Woolworth & Co.

The new corporation will take over the business of F. W. Woolworth & Co., of New York; S. H. Knox & Co. of Buffalo; E. M. Kirby & Co., of Wilkesbarre, Pa.; the E. P. Charlton company, of Fall River, Pa.; W. H. Moore, of Watertown, N. Y. and W. H. Moore & Son, of Schenectady, N. Y.

The corporation also will assume a controlling interest in the English business of F. W. Woolworth & Co., Ltd.

All the concerns involved in the merger own a chain of 5 and 10-cent stores, 600 in number, in all sections of the United States, Canada and England. It is said that Goldman, Sachs & Co., Lehman Brothers, of New York, and Kleinwort Sons & Co., of London, will acquire an interest in the securities of the new company when it is organized.

"While I have not heard anything officially," said C. H. Simons, manager of the F. W. Woolworth & Co.'s Nicollet avenue store, today, "I have reason to believe that the Woolworth stores will absorb all other 5 and 10-cent stores in the country. I do not know, however, that this has taken place."

TURKEY PROTESTS TO POWERS.

[illegible] Women and Children, Massacred

Constantinople, Turkey.—The government has lodged a protest with the powers which signed the Hague agreement of 1907 against the execution of Arabs in Tripoli.

Berlin—The Lokal Anzeiger's Tripoli correspondent says Italy's losses in Tripoli since October 23, amounts to 1,500 men, of which 280 were killed. Eighty-seven soldiers are suffering from cholera.

"The Italians," continues the correspondent, "have executed 4,000 Arabs, including 400 women and children. Cholera is rapidly spreading among the Arabs and Jews. No room exists in the city for the expected reinforcements, and their arrival must further increase the ravages of the cholera."

$750,000 FIRE AT LONDON, ONT.

Several Business Places Destroyed—500 Persons Deprived of Work.

London, Ontario. — Fire in the business section of the city caused a loss of $750,000 and deprived 500 persons of employment. The fire originated in the store of J. H. Chapman & Co. The plants of the Burdon Hardware company, the Chapman company and many others were totally destroyed. The firemen were in constant danger of the falling walls, but no one was seriously injured.

ANTI-CIGARET CRUSADE.

Thirty-one Storekeepers at Superior Arrested.

Superior, Wis. — Warrants for the arrest of thirty-one tobacco dealers and storekeepers were prepared by Assistant District Attorney R. E. Kennedy, based on evidence collected by the detectives of the police force. The charge is that of violating the Wisconsin anti-cigaret law. Every cigar store in Superior is on the list, as are several women storekeepers.

Chicagoans to Live in Slums.

Chicago, Ill.—Twelve well-known Chicago business men will forsake their accustomed manner of life and live for a time in the slums of the city, if plans brought out by the "Men and Religion Forward Movement" are carried out. The plan is to have the men get in pairs and live the slum life so that they may have intimate knowledge of the needs of the slums, and "remove the public reproach that half of the world knows not how the other half lives."

Train Is Derailed; 3 Killed.

Atlanta, Georgia.—Three persons were killed and four injured when fast mail train No. 15 on the Southern railway, running from Cincinnati to Jacksonville, Fla., was wrecked at Chattahooche.

REBELS TAKE SHANGHAI

SURENDER MADE WITHOUT RESISTANCE.

Nearly Seven Thousand Are Killed In Fighting at Hankow.

Shanghai, China.—The arsenal and the native city of Shanghai were taken over by the revolutionists. No resistance was offered by the authorities or such of the public as remains loyal. It is expected that Wu-Sung at the mouth of the Wu-Sung river and ten miles north of Shanghai, and the upriver forts will fall tonight. It is confidently believed that Nanking and Ching Kiang will be captured by the rebels.

Some of the foreign warships landed marines in this city before the rebels took possession. Foreign volunteers were called out and have taken every precaution to protect the concessions. It is reported that the rebels at Kiu Kiang have seized the British tugboat Sampson.

The revolutionary leaders here have telegraphed General Li Yuen Heng, the head of the rebel movement, advising him to cease hostilities pending developments at Peking. Their message is being forwarded to General Li from Wu-Hu by a special dispatch boat.

Complaints reached this city today that the rebels holding the forts below Kiu-Kiang have been firing indiscriminately at steamers passing that city in the night time.

Troops Seize Arsenal.

Peking. — The imperial troops at Tse-Nan, capital of Shantung province, mutinied and captured the arsenal. In Yun-Nan province, the imperial forces declared the province's independence. All these outbreaks carry the rebellion into new territory. Practically the whole of Yun-Nan's 12,000,000 population are said to support the declaration of independence.

Nearly 7,000 Killed.

Shanghai.—The native quarter of Hankow has been completely burned. The government troops have not succeeded in clearing the rebels from the city, though they are in control of part of it. In other sections, street fighting between imperialists and rebels continues. Neither side is granting quarter to the enemy. Prisoners are cut down at once. Consequently few are taken, the combatants preferring to die fighting. In the various battles and massacres it is estimated that 6,000 or 7,000 have been killed since fighting broke out in Hankow.

TURKS ROUT ITALIAN TROOPS.

Later, Ottomans' Shells Fail to Explode and They Are Driven Back.

Tripoli, Tripoli.—The Eighty-second Italian infantry was forced to fall back from its position by a force of Turks which appeared before the line of defense Wednesday night.

Failure of shells to explode made ineffective the fire from Turkish guns, brought up south of El Mosri. Italian artillery silenced the guns and forced the Turks to retire.

London.—The Daily Telegraph's Constantinople correspondent says that a sensation has been caused by the revelation that Hakki Bey, the ex-grand vizier, if impeached in the defense of Tripoli, will declare that the German ambassador repeatedly assured him that Italy would never send a regiment or a ship to Tripoli. For that reason his cabinet has not considered it necessary to dispatch troops or war material to Tripoli.

Malta.—It is reported that the whole Italian fleet has left Tripoli for Turkish waters.

CHAMP CLARK TALKS PLAINLY.

Declares He Would Be Elected President on Canadian Merger Issue.

Fremont, Nebraska. — "Nine-tenths of the people of this country favor the annexation of Canada," declared Champ Clark, speaker of the house of representatives, here, "and I don't care who hears me say it."

Beginning with a speech here, Mr. Clark was scheduled to make addresses in twenty-one towns in the third Nebraska district in the interest of Dan V. Stevens, democratic candidate for congress to succeed the late Representative James P. Latta. The speaker's remarks concerning annexation of Canada caused much comment among his hearers.

"I am willing," he said, "to make this proposition. You let me run for president on a platform calling for annexation of Canada in so far as this country can accomplish that end and let President Taft run against me opposing annexation and I would carry every state in the nation."

Steamer Sinks; 24 Drown

Las Palmas, The Canary Islands.—Twenty-four persons were drowned when the French steamer Diolibah sank at sea.

MINNESOTA NEWS

Interesting Items Gathered In the Gopher State

TO CANCEL ORE LEASE.

Steel Corporation Also Recommends Reduction in Freight Rates.

New York, Oct. 27.—At a special meeting the directors of the United States Steel corporation decided to cancel the corporation's lease of the Great Northern ore properties. The directors also adopted resolutions recommending to the directors of the Duluth, Missabe & Northern Railway company a reduction in freight rates on iron ore from points in the Mesaba range to Duluth to a figure not exceeding 60 cents a ton, and to Duluth & Iron Range Railway company a similar reduction on the iron ore rate from the Vermilion & Mesaba Iron range to Duluth and Two Harbors, Minn.

Besides recommending to the two railroad companies the reduction in rates, the resolution embodied the following clauses:

"That all points upon said range" (in the case of the Duluth & Iron Range railroad company the word 'ranges' is used) "reached by the lines of said company, be included in establishing freight rates upon iron ore from the mines to Duluth."

The basis of reduction, according to the resolution is to be the gross ton, 2,240 pounds. It was denied that the resignation of William Ellis Corey as a director in the corporation was received. J. Pierpont Morgan attended the meeting.

STATE WANTS ITS TAXES.

Itasca Logging Road Said to Owe Commonwealth $12,499.

Deer River.—The fact has been established that the Minneapolis & Rainy Lake railroad, known as the Itasca logging road, has kept no record of cars received from the Great Northern, consigned to the Deer River Lumber company and the Itasca Lumber company, and that these companies were given a rate of 50 to 66⅔ per cent of the published freight rates.

There has been withheld from the state $12,499.12 in penalties and back taxes for the period of six years.

A draft for this amount has been drawn on the company by State Auditor Iverson and turned over to the state treasurer's office. This is claimed by the state in accordance with the gross earnings tax law.

The road runs from Duluth to Big Fork and Stanley, on two branches. For some time independent loggers have alleged that freight rates were prohibitive. Deputies from the public examiner's office went over the books of the road here and at Minneapolis and disclosed the fact that no record of the majority of cars consigned to the company was kept after being turned over by the Great Northern.

WIFE AND CHILD BURNED.

Farmer Near Granite Falls Saves Youngest After Stove Explosion.

Granite Falls.—The farm house of Ole Johnson, two miles down the river, was destroyed by fire, and his wife and one child were killed by the flames. Mr. Johnson says he had been trying to start a soft coal fire in the kitchen stove, and as it would not burn readily he went out after some kindling.

While he was away he heard an explosion, and, looking up, saw the entire lower part of the house ablaze. Rushing to the house he succeeded in getting out the youngest child, but his wife and the older child had been left in the kitchen and it was impossible to enter this room on account of the heat.

After the fire had consumed the house pieces of the stove were found scattered about the room and some pieces were found in other rooms, and it is evident that after her husband left the house, the woman thought she would aid in starting the fire by pouring kerosene on the hot coals.

ON TRIAL FOR BREAKING JAIL.

Harry Burke, Wanted for Violating Parole, Pleads Not Guilty.

Fargo.—Harry Burke, wanted by the Minnesota state's prison authorities at Stillwater on a charge of breaking parole, after being released from the full service of a five-year sentence for grand larceny in Minneapolis, was placed on trial on a charge of breaking jail from Cass county. He pleaded not guilty and secured counsel.

According to the decision of Judge Hanson, unless he pleads guilty, Burke will have to remain in jail for two months in order to get the jury trial which he demanded. If convicted of jailbreaking he will be forced to serve six months more time and will then be taken to Stillwater, for the breaking of his parole.

DIVORCE BILL SET ASIDE.

Former Minnesota Banker Said to Be Liable to Arrest for Bigamy.

Salem, Ore.—The report is gaining circulation that J. C. Evans, cashier of the closed First State Bank of Philomath, Ore., now under arrest on charge of false statements of the bank's condition, is a man from Felton, Minn., who, under the name of Charles Evans, has been involved in divorce litigation in Clackamas county and in the supreme court for four years, and who now stands, by reason of a decision of the supreme court, subject to arrest on the charge of bigamy.

Affidavits on file say that Evans and his first wife were married in Columbus, Ohio, in 1889. They were interested in a small bank in Felton, Minn., where his wife gave him $500 to invest.

According to the affidavits, she remained in Ohio with her mother, who was ill, until she could get away, then she went to Minnesota to find Evans living with a girl.

Evans said the girl was an orphan to whom he had decided they would give a home. To strangers he would introduce her as his daughter. Soon his wife objected to the girl and ordered her away. This led to the elopement of Evans and the young woman. Scandal was rife over the affair and people of Felton egged Evans, according to the affidavits.

Later in 1905, Mrs. Evans alleges she heard her husband was in Rainier, Ore., with the intention of starting a bank and that he had changed his name to "J. C. Evers." No trace was found of him until 1910, when Evans obtained a decree of divorce at Oregon City.

Attorneys of Portland were engaged by Mrs. Evans to break the decree, which they succeeded in doing.

DUMAS GETS VENUE CHANGE.

Cass Lake Mayor to Be Tried in Brainerd on Black Duck Charge.

Bemidji. — After saying that he believed that it would not be just and right to Dr. Dumas to try him in Beltrami county on the latest charge lodged against the doctor of having committed the crime of arson in the third degree at Black Duck April 19 last, Judge Stanton, at the conclusion of the reading of affidavits and making of arguments for and against ordering a change of venue for the doctor from Beltrami county to some other county, granted the motion, and ordered the case transferred to Crow Wing county at the term to be held at Brainerd, beginning Dec. 5.

RAIN HALTS DAN PATCH LINE.

Unlikely Road Will Be Completed to Faribault This Fall.

Northfield.—The recent excessive rains have caused so much delay in grading work on the Dan Patch survey south of this city, and have caused so much damage to grading already completed that it is very unlikely the line will be completed to Faribault this fall. Owing to the unsteady nature of the work, the contractors have been unable to keep their men.

All Fire Cases Continued.

Roseau.—The district court is nearing the end of a long and heavy calendar. The suits against Otto Krause and William Story for allowing minors to play pool in their rooms were not tried, as they pleaded guilty and were fined $25 each. All fire cases against the Canadian Northern Railway company were continued. The damage suit against the Warroad Mercantile company, by the administrator of the Nels Johnson estate, for selling gasoline for coal oil, which caused an explosion which killed Johnson, his wife and one child, was dismissed.

Fairmont to Have New Charter.

Fairmont.—Judge J. H. Quinn has appointed the following commission to draft a new charter for Fairmont: E. C. Dean, J. H. Coult, E. R. Flygare, J. H. Gorman, G. B. Goetz, H. D. Gerth, Alex Grant, W. M. Hay, H. P. Johnson, George Lester, A. M. Nelson, W. L. Nicholas, H. M. Serle, D. S. Wade, O. R. Wolf.

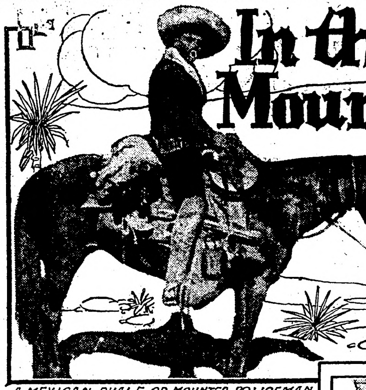
Mann Succeeds Campbell.

Pipestone. — Frank T. Mann of Greenville, Cal., has come to Pipestone to accept the position of superintendent of the government Indian school, taking the place of W. S. Campbell, who has been promoted to a position in the Indian service in California.

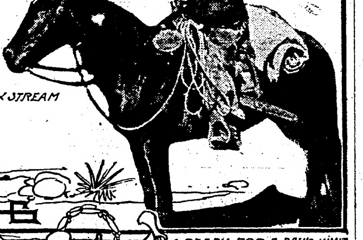
In the Santa Rosa Mountains

By C. R. THOMAS

COPYRIGHT BY FIELD & STREAM



A MEXICAN RUALE OR MOUNTED POLICEMAN.



READY FOR A DAY'S HUNT

JUST imagine yourself getting ready for a hunt into a fine territory where game is plentiful. This is just what happened to our party, composed of Bob Hall, Louis Martin, Ye Scribbler, "Slow" Coatwright (teamster) and Henry the cook.

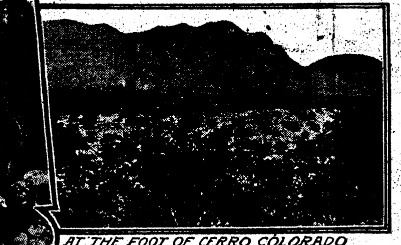
We left Del Rio on the morning of the 28th of November and passed over into Mexico through the little town of Las Vacas where we had to go through a rigid examination, such as paying duty on merchandise, ammunition and bonding our horses and outfit.

We passed San Lorenza about 12 miles out from Las Vacas, this place being the headquarters ranch for the pastures which contain the cattle of Gen. Lorenza Gonzales Trevenio. This place is stocked mostly with well-bred steers which come up to the standard along with our American cattle.

After traveling about 15 miles and still in this pasture we stopped and "nooned it" as grass was fine and our horses certainly relished the feed. Bob, Louis and Myself were riding horseback and of course this made the trip more enjoyable as we could skirmish alongside of the road and hunt and in this manner we kept the outfit well supplied with game while on the move. That day we nooned at Tienete Lake, where we killed several ducks, but did not tarry long enough to have them for dinner. After a good dinner we felt much better, so were up and away as we wanted to get to the mountains where game was plentiful. That evening we arrived at Sorro or Fox Creek where we found excellent water, but encountered one of the worst gravel beds about 500 yards across, and in crossing this we had to assist the chuck wagon over.

POSING BEFORE THE SKIN OF A BIG "BAR"

COLLECTION OF SKINS AND SKULLS



AT THE FOOT OF CERRO COLORADO

Up bright and early next morning and away in a rush as the mountains were our goal. During this day in the forenoon nothing of any importance happened, but long about sundown business began to pick up. We had just arrived at the Baballos (Horse Creek) and watered our horses and intended going beyond about three miles where grass was good. Just after we crossed this creek I left the wagon and rode out alongside at a distance of about one-half mile. In doing this I was in hopes of finding a deer as the range was fine and prospects good. To my surprise I found something better than a deer, a big black bear. I was about 500 yards from the wagon and upon arriving at the top of a nice smooth knoll I noticed Mr. Bruin and he spied me about the same time. The country was rolling and I was riding an excellent horse, so you can imagine my feelings, as I was confident of having some genuine sport. I tightened up my saddle and looked for my rope, but had left it in the wagon. Without a moment's hesitation I reached for my rifle. Then the race began. This bear was not very fat, and of course could put up a fast race. He made for the side of a nearby hill and it was my intention to head him off to keep him from entering a cave. Giving my horse full rein and extra hard spur thrust I was able to turn Mr. Bear and by doing this I got him started across a somewhat level place. Riding alongside at a distance of about 150 feet I took my first shot, hitting him in the fleshy part of the hind leg, but this seemed only to make Bruin run the faster. Seeing I would have to do better than this I tried to get closer, but could not make it. Taking three more shots I still missed as I was running my horse at full speed and could not hit the mark as readily as if I was standing. At the next shot I was within about 20 feet of the bear and this shot took effect. Just as the bullet hit the bear he wheeled and made direct towards my horse, catching him by the tail. Now, good reader, this may not seem scary, but try it one time and see how your blood circulates. Mine nearly pushed my hair off my head. If I had not been riding a good horse it would have been serious sure enough. My horse realized the position he was in and I had to ride to keep my seat as there was some high jumping and quick work done which all happened in a few minutes. After the bear tore loose from the horse's tail he stumbled over to one side and stood there with his head down, badly wounded. One more shot finished him and I was somewhat glad of it as my blood was pumping wildly and neded a rest after such strenuous exercise. This took in all about 20 minutes of as fine sport as I have ever had. Was "something out of the ordinary and a little different" and that's what we all want. Bob being nearby came to my assistance and we both placed the bear on my horse and carried it over to the camp where we skinned the pelt.

That evening we camped at El Remado, where the coyotes were very plentiful, but we did not stop early enough to place our traps. We had five well-trained hounds on this trip. The next morning Louis killed a fine specimen of a coyote, large, with fine fur and nice color. That evening we entered "Cibolo" (Buffalo) canyon, which to start with was quit shy of water. Just at the entrance 'tis awfully rough and very slow going, so rather than to take chances of a break-down we decided to wait till morning and then get an early start so we could make it through this pass in one day. That day we hunted both sides of the road for "tenaho" or pot holes which most generally contain water if one can find one where the cattle cannot reach. Luck was with us as we found one of these "pots" near the road which had sufficient water to water all the horses. The balance of the distance we had to assist the wagon on by the aid of the "saddle horses" on account of bad roads and the grade was continually going higher.

That morning Louis killed a deer and the same evening I killed a big black tail buck, very fat and a fine specimen. We only made about ten miles that day but were up early next morning so as to reach the water hole as the water question was something serious and we had to arrange our traveling accordingly. We passed through a grassy strip of about five miles where grass was fine and green. These grass strips seemed to be all through these mountains. I suppose the rains must have fallen in streaks. We reached the water hole and watered the teams and filled kegs. After a consultation we decided to return to the grass to rest the horses and above all try and get some black-tail deer. We reached this grass about noon as it was only about three miles from the watering place. That evening we did not find the deer as expected but were still in good spirits as our horses were doing nicely on the green grass. After deciding to go further into the mountains as the Cerro Colorado (Red Mountain) was our destination, we went back to the water-hole. Bob, Louis and I rode on ahead of the wagon and on the way over there noticed where a panther had followed down the trail to the water-hole. We went on down to the water and watered the dogs and then turned them loose on the panther's trail, as we were anxious for a chase and we had it from the very start. The old dog "Remus" led off followed by the other four; and let me tell you, gentle reader, we had to do some riding so as to keep in touch with them. The going was awfully rough and on several occasions we had to walk and lead our horses so as to pass over some of the roughest places. The dogs finally stopped our panther and as I was ahead I located him first sitting on a rock upon the side of a big bluff, so, taking no chances as to his getting away, I let go at him, striking him in the stomach. This shot knocked him off the rock but did not kill him. He rolled down among the dogs and business was good for a few minutes, but Mr. Panther was getting weak and could not hold out any longer, so turned in his checks. We measured him to be 8 feet 2 inches from tip to tip. Good size, don't you think?

Next morning Bob killed two fine bucks and I killed one. Louis and myself started up to top of the mountain, which only looked to be about a mile distant, but we were four hours going to the top. Here we had some great sport shooting black-tail deer, as they were plentiful and one could get such good long range shots, which were the kind we wanted as they afforded the greater sport. Killing deer in this way was too easy, as they were plentiful and could be had most any time.

On the top and sides of these mountains one finds juniper trees covered with berries, white and red oak, two kinds of cedar and scrub oak or "shinnery," besides numerous other trees. Wild pears seem to thrive there also. All the deer killed on these mountains were fat and as fine flavored meat as one could wish.

After wandering around over these mountains till about 3 p. m. we decided to return to camp. We reached camp about 7 that evening.

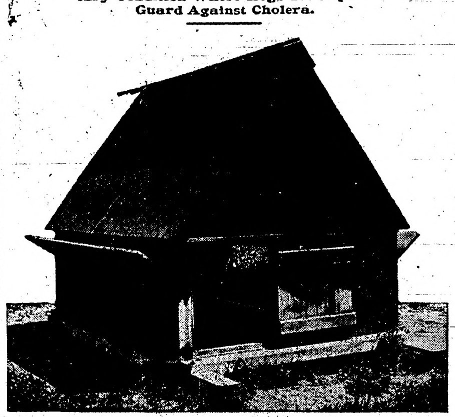
Next day nothing of any interest happened and after deciding to move over to a nearby canyon we broke camp and rode about two miles further where wood was plentiful and where we could find large trees so we could hang the deer, as we wanted to cure the meat.

Returning to camp next morning I found some more good news as Louis had located a bear on top of "Cerro Colorado" and had shot at him, but being so far away did not hit him. This was what we wanted—a bear chase with the dogs. So back to camp came Louis and after a consultation we decided to wait till morning before starting after the bear. The next morning we were away before daylight, Bob and Louis going horseback and leading the dogs while I went afoot up through another canyon and we were to meet at the top at a designated place.

I was about half a mile across a canyon, Louis at another point, Bob at another and Henry, the cook, could not stand the temptation so he had to follow, and was placed at another entrance. During this time the dogs were hot on the trail making good time, and if you have never been in such a suspense as this just try getting on a prominent point overlooking the entrance to several small canyons and in hearing of a good pack of hounds—if you have any sporting blood in your veins it will surely come forth and make you feel for the time being that you are "lord of all you survey." Things had begun to get interesting now as the dogs were getting nearer all the time and each of us expecting the bear to come down through the canyon where we were. Presently Louis heard something that sounded like the exhaust of an automobile, and he knew, just the moment he heard it, that it was the bear breathing, and a fat bear makes an awful breathing noise when tired and hot. Louis made a run over to a small point, as he knew the bear would come in through a small cut, because he could hear the rocks rolling off the side of the hill which was caused by the bear coming down in such haste. When being pursued by a pack of dogs and in close quarters a bear will not run downhill but just puts his head down and forms himself in the shape of a ball and rolls down hill. Rocks half the size of a barrel were falling down these bluffs. Louis rounded the point just in time to intercept Bruin and at a distance of about 30 feet let drive at him with his .30-30, hitting him in the heart. This did not stop him as he rolled and fell along for some 50 feet before stopping. Another shot brought him to a halt. About this time the dogs began to arrive and were pretty much all in, as a run of 6 or 7 miles through so rough a country will tire out the best of them. So back to the horses (a distance of about a mile) we started and after partaking of a lunch and a few minutes rest we were off to bring in the three deer and the bear to camp, as it was getting along about 2 p. m. and we did not want to get caught up in the mountains after dark.

KEEPING SWINE HEALTHY IS OF THE UTMOST IMPORTANCE

There is No Theme Upon Farm That Will So Benefit Farmer as to Keep Quarters and Surroundings in Sanitary Condition Where Hogs are Kept—Guard Against Cholera.



A Desirable Hog Cot.

(By GEORGE W. BROWN, Ohio.)

There is no theme upon the farm that will so benefit the farmer as to keep the quarters and surroundings of the farm in a sanitary and healthful condition where swine are kept.

Nowhere will an outbreak of cholera become so disastrous as upon the farm where these animals are kept with dirty, filthy surroundings, and no care taken in the disinfection of the nesting places and slop troughs during the summer time.

Upon our farm we have never practiced the method of keeping a herd of swine in one place very long, and never do we fatten out more than one bunch of animals in the same field in one year, preferring rather to shift our operations about from place to place.

We have no permanent quarters, but rely upon the service of the cot, shown in the illustration.

These bunks can be shifted about easily upon runners, and many times each year are changed from one field to another, or from one pen to another, thus we always have the animals in fresh sleeping quarters, and upon fresh forage. While the animals are located upon a new range, we break up the old range, cropping it in some profitable farm crop, thus getting the benefit of all excrement from the animals, profiting in its enrichment of the soil, and we as well freshening and sweetening the soil by cultivation.

Then swine should be supplied with some shade aside from a board shelter to ward off the heated rays of the summer sun. There is nothing for this purpose quite so nice as clumps of willows, catalpas or poplars grown in some convenient location in each field, preferably along the fence row, in such manner that the animals may have access to the cooling shade during the heat of the day.

In one of our fields we have such a clump of quaking-asp and it is pleasing to note how contented these animals are during the sweltering heat of the day, as they lie about in the shade of this rustling clump of trees.

If there is not such shade planted along the borders of a field we should not be slow in planting such if we were in the swine growing business, and every wide awake farmer should be, for indeed he should consider himself too poor to be without this profitable animal upon his premises.

Many make a mistake in allowing their swine to run to the creek during the summer for water. We have such a place upon our farm, and we might save much time in getting water to our swine many times if we allowed them to go to this water course, but we are afraid of it. Indeed, in this field we never allow our swine to roam, for we do not know what farmer several miles above us in another district might have cholera or plague, and our animals exposed by contamination in the water flowing down stream.

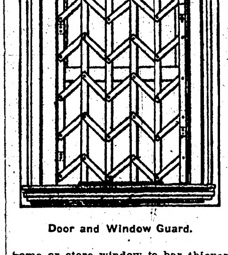
We rather prefer to keep our animals well away from this stream of water, and give them pure water from the well in disinfected troughs, thus doing our part toward keeping down loss from cholera.

We keep down the objectionable and nauseating hog wallow upon our farm and do not tolerate it in the least. We know the swine enjoy it, but we have learned to detest its abominable company, and by changing the animals about, and locating new quarters frequently we keep this mire of mud and filth abandoned. With the advancement along other lines of farm operations, the advancement in this line of work appeals to us as very significant in keeping these animals in a sanitary and healthful location at all times.

USEFUL GUARD FOR A WINDOW

Missouri Man Has Invented Gate That Will be Found Convenient for Variety of Uses.

The door and window guard patented by a Missouri man has a variety of uses. It comprises a gate made of parallel pickets linked together by short cross bars and sliding easily back and forth on rollers. It can be folded up into small compass against one side of the opening it guards or stretched all the way across and made fast. The uses to which such a gate can be put are both numerous and obvious. It can be attached to home or store window to bar thieves and in that case is made of iron and padlocked in its open position, or it can be made of wood and erected at any opening through which a baby could fall, particularly at the head of stairways in the house or on the porch, in place of the gate of solid construction most used for such purpose. The height of the pickets, of course, will vary with the requirements.



Door and Window Guard.

PROPER PLACE FOR CHICKENS

Should Not be Allowed to Roost On Top of Harness or Buggy—Should Have Good House.

One of the most important things in the care of laying hens is the house that they are to live in. On most farms it used to be that the hen roosted any old place, and her favorite place was on top of the harness or buggy. And when they could not reach their favorite place, they took to the trees, but I can say that the hen's life on the farm has changed, for now you see nice houses and yards for them, says a writer in the Successful Farming.

A good poultry house may be defined as one that is dry, warm and ventilated, and fitted to accommodate the kind of fowls that is to be kept. A stationary house suitable for any kind of fowl may be built of stone or brick, but the best house is built of lumber made in a size suitable for moving once a year at least. Lumber is cheaper than brick or stone, and when you find that there is some improvement that you could make to the advantage of the hen and coop, it will be a good deal cheaper remodeling the wooden building.

It is impossible to build a house that will answer for all times of the year. You will find alterations to make in spring and fall, so when wood is used in its construction it can be built in sections and bolted together. In warm weather you can use wire frames in place of the board sections. Give the hens plenty of room, lots of clean straw to be used as scratching material, fight lice nine days a week, and see if the hens don't pay their way.

Swindlers Prosecuted.

The mayor of New York is vigorously prosecuting swindlers who sell short weight potatoes. The law requires the barrel of potatoes to contain 100 quarts, and to weigh 174 pounds, but most of the barrels in use are short from 20 to 50 pounds.

CANADA'S CENSUS

A THIRTY-TWO PER CENT INCREASE IN THE PAST TEN YEARS.

That Canada has come rapidly to the front in the past ten years is amply shown in the results of the census recently made public. The population of the Dominion is now placed at 7,081,869, which with outlying points to be heard from, may bring it up to 7¼ millions as compared with 5,371,315 in 1901. Though these figures are large, they do not present a total as large as was expected but they do show a greater increase of percentage in population for the decade than any similar increase in the United States. The highest percentage ever reached by the Republic was 24%; the percentage of increase in Canada for the decade is 32%. Thus it will be seen that the provinces west of the lakes, with the great broad fertile acres ready for the sowing and immediate reaping of grain and the Valleys of British Columbia capable of producing fruit with which to supply its neighboring provinces east of the mountains, have attracted numbers, which has exceeded the most optimistic of the expectations of ten years ago.

Upon the prairies of the ten years ago there was but a spare scattering of people; but today, no matter in which way you go, take any direction, and you find homes and farms and good ones too, occupied by the very best class of people in good sized settlements with plenty of room for five or six times as many more. The population of Alberta is set down at 372,919, as compared with 73,022 in 1901; Saskatchewan 453,508 as compared with 91,270 in 1901; Manitoba's 454,691 compares well with its 255,211 in 1901; and so does that of British Columbia—362,768 as against 178,657 in 1901; but in a territory as large as this a population of 1,643,000 is little more than discernible in point of numbers. The work through it has been great. Look at the towns that have been built up; its cities, Winnipeg with 135,000; Vancouver with upwards of 100,000; Calgary with 43,000; Edmonton, Regina, Saskatoon; Lethbridge; Medicine Hat, Moosejaw, splendid cities—none better anywhere; well maintained and equipped. These have come with existence and been built as they have been built by reason of the splendid agricultural country by which they are surrounded. The population is scarcely discernible. A population ten or twelve times that shown by the recent census could be easily maintained in even greater wealth than that which maintains the present numbers. There is certainly a wonderful future for Western Canada and that which goes to the development of the west will enrich the last. This is the growing time in Canada and what has been done in the past ten years is but a beginning. The next decade will show a far greater advancement. In the meantime Canada is bidding welcome the progressive and industrious citizen. The invitation is a standing one. At the forthcoming land exposition in Chicago, Canada will have one of the best exhibits of farm products that has ever been made and it will be well worth while inspecting it and getting information from those who may be in charge.

Shipwreck Up to Date.

"Captain, is there much danger?"

"Not a particle. A moving-picture outfit will soon be along and rescue us after they have taken a few films."

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Cures all humors, catarrh and rheumatism, relieves that tired feeling, restores the appetite, cures paleness, nervousness, builds up the whole system.

Get it today in usual liquid form or chocolated tablets called Sarsatabs.

Fargo Directory

KODAKS and KODAK SUPPLIES
Write for catalogues and literature. We do developing and printing. Mail orders given prompt attention.
FARGO DRUG CO., FARGO, N. D.

Dakota Business College
LARGEST and FINEST between CHICAGO AND THE COAST.
FARGO, NORTH DAKOTA

HIGHEST CASH PRICES
paid for sour cream. Price 30 cents this week. Prompt payment, honest test, guaranteed return of cans. FARGO ICE CREAM & CIDER COMPANY. Largest creamery in the northwest.

FARGO TANNERY
Receives hides and skins for tanning to harness leather, robes and coats. Robes lined, hides bought, leather and robes for sale. SEND FOR PRICE LIST.
Andrew Monson, Proprietor, Fargo Tannery
Fargo, North Dakota

TRUNKS
Direct from the factory to the user. Monson pays the freight. Write for catalog.
MONSON TRUNK FACTORY, Fargo, N. D.

MONUMENTS
500 in stock. Write for free catalog.
FARGO MARBLE & GRANITE WORKS, N. P. Ave., Fargo, N. D.

THE NELSON NATUROPATHIC INSTITUTE
NO. 1 NORTH BROADWAY, FARGO, N.D.
A strictly drugless institute, with the very best modern appliances for treating chronic diseases including paralysis and tuberculosis successfully. Consultation free. Write for particulars.

SERIAL STORY

No Man's Land

A ROMANCE

By Louis Joseph Vance

Illustrations by Ray Walters

(Copyright, 1910, by Louis Joseph Vance.)

SYNOPSIS.

Garrett Coast, a young man of New York City, meets Douglas Blackstock, who invites him to a card party. He accepts, although he dislikes Blackstock, the reason being that both are in love with Katherine Thaxter. Coast fails to convince her that Blackstock is unworthy of her friendship. At the party Coast meets two named Dundas and Van Tuyl. There is a quarrel, and Blackstock shoots Van Tuyl dead. Coast struggles to wrest the weapon from him, thus the police discover them. Coast is arrested for murder.

CHAPTER III.—(Continued.)

"Well, so much for Blackstock—until the police get wind of him, at all events. They're trying to locate him by cable now; haven't heard of any success that way, however. Naturally . . . But a few days ago Dundas came to the surface."

Coast started violently. "Dundas!"

"Um-mm; full confession, exculpating you, incriminating Blackstock. Corroborative details: letters from Blackstock—all that sort of thing. Furthermore, Dundas told us why Blackstock feared Van Tuyl: Van knew something—some dirty business Blackstock had cooked up in the west. Immaterial now; tell you later. Also Dundas took us to the shop where Blackstock bought that gun—salesman recalled the transaction. You remember how we failed to prove the gun his?"

"Of course. Go on about Dundas."

"Well . . . it was Truax's doing; nailed Dundas on the street one day, somewhere east of Third avenue. The man had been in hiding ever since Blackstock cleared out; he was in a pretty bad way, broke and seedy; claimed Blackstock hadn't sent him a dollar since he disappeared. So Dundas, thrown back upon his pen for a means of livelihood, went all to pieces; couldn't work—had forgotten the trick—or wouldn't; drank up all he could raise by pawning things. . . . Truax staked him to a meal and drinks, plenty of drinks; and all that on an empty stomach made him maudlin. Confessed he was keeping a conscience—remorse gnawing at his vitals—whatever those are—everything like that. Then Truax bundled him into a taxi and brought him to my rooms. It was near midnight—got me out of bed; I caught a cold. However . . . I own it without compunction, we worked the poor devil through the third degree; simply browbeat and bullyragged him until I was ashamed of myself. But the truth oozed out finally, along with tears—whisky tears. We hadn't stinted the bottle. . . .

"As I say, in the end Dundas owned up to the whole filthy affair, just as you told it—whimpered about selling his soul to Blackstock, price not deposed. We made him sign a brief confession, but I knew that wouldn't be sufficient, and it was then too late and Dundas too far gone to do more with him. So I called in a central office man I happened to know, and turned Dundas over to him to be taken to a Turkish bath and licked into shape; and it did the trick, with a hearty breakfast and plenty of black coffee for a chaser. He was pretty shaky next morning, but I coaxed him into a taxi and had him at the district attorney's office before he knew what was up. There he wanted to hedge, but his signature to the overnight confession took all the starch out of him, and he went all over it again, with a stenographer taking it down—typewritten deposition—all that sort of thing. . . .

"Meanwhile my friend the detective had ransacked Dundas' lodging—some cheap room just off the Bowery—and found a bundle of letters from Blackstock—mostly written during the trial, when they didn't dare be seen together—hints and orders as to the evidence Dundas was to give. That settled it. Dundas was rushed before a magistrate and jailed and the grand jury was asked to indict him for perjury. The poor fool was scared silly, as soon as he realized what he had done—declared Blackstock would get him sooner or later. So he saved him the trouble—killed himself in his cell half an hour after being committed—had a phial of morphia secreted in his clothing . . ."

After a pause Coast said slowly: "So Blackstock did 'get' him after all! That makes two at least—two we know of."

"Yes," Warburton assented uneasily, worried by the hard expression that lined Coast's mouth; "looked at that way, yes. . . . Well, we called your trial judge into consultation—the district attorney and I—and between the three of us drew up a petition for your pardon, the district attorney being the first to sign. . . I got off to Albany by the first train. There wasn't the slightest trouble; the governor granted the pardon without a murmur. . . . And here we are."

"And here we are," Coast repeated, in a whisper. He was quiet for a time. . . . "You know I can't thank you, old man," he said at length, rousing.

Warburton's fat little hand rested a moment lightly upon his shoulder. "You don't have to. I feel too good about it myself. Always knew it would come out all right. Never lost faith in you, not for a second, Garrett."

He rattled on, Coast listening by fits and snatches. He heard a little of this matter and that, heard less of more. He replied at times abstractedly. . . .

Katherine Thaxter? Had she heard? All Coast's thoughts focussed upon this: he must see her. . . .

There came a pause, made awkward by a constraint in Warburton's manner. Coast glanced at him inquiringly. The little lawyer licked his lips nervously.

"There's one thing," he said, "you won't like, perhaps."

Coast smiled. "I'm not in a mood for fault-finding. What is it?"

"Of course, you know it's desirable to get Blackstock."

"Well?"

"You won't be fully cleared, in the public mind at least, until he's convicted in your stead."

"That's true enough."

"So we're keeping it quiet, for the time being—the reasons for your release, I mean."

"Why? What's the sense of that?" Coast demanded, excitedly. "You said 'exoneration!' . . ."

"So it is, so it will be. But we don't want to scare Blackstock. If he hears that Dundas has confessed, he'll never be found. If we permit him to think, as the public will certainly think, that you are pardoned principally because of your social standing and 'pull' . . . then he won't be so wary. You see? So we're withholding the real reason. Be patient; it will only be for a little while. And in the end it will be exoneration, absolute and unquestionable. Will you stand for this?"

Coast nodded somberly at the dull haze hanging over the sweltering city toward which they raced. "I presume I must," he said wearily; "but it's hard—thundering hard. . . . I had hoped . . ."

"I know, old boy." Warburton's hand touched his again. "But it's for the best—for your best interests believe me."

Coast's chin sank despondently upon his breast. "I must go away for a time," he said, or, rather muttered, his accents so soft that Warburton failed to distinguish them—"clear out for a time. . . ."

They passed a corner news stand where a man stood with a paper outspread before him, the width of its front sheet occupied by headlines in huge black type, heralding the sensation of the hour.

They who rode might read:

GARRETT COAST—PARDONED!
AT THE ELEVENTH HOUR!!!

Coast shivered as if chilled and sank back, crouching, faint with dismay, in his corner of the tonneau. Publicity had him in its relentless clutches.

At two in the afternoon the car stopped before the building on Nassau street in which Warburton had offices. Coast alighted, sick with fear of recognition. The sidewalk throng passed him with blank looks, the elevator boy had a copy of the blatant sheet and a stare for Mr. Warburton's client. In Warburton's private room there was business to distract him; papers to be signed, details to be arranged, letters and telegrams of congratulation, already coming in by the score, to be opened and read. He was called on the telephone—Warburton fully satisfying himself as to the caller's identity before turning the receiver over to Coast. His hope was nipped with disappointment; it was merely Truax calling to offer his felicitations and demand Coast's presence at "a little dinner at the club—just a few of us, all friends of yours;" the hour, seven that night. Mechanically Coast promised and rang off. He was unable to refuse; in his heart he knew that he would be unable to go.

"What about my rooms?" he asked, suddenly.

Warburton beamed. "They're waiting for you, everything just as you left it. I kept track of both your old servants; they're there, too. Just walk in and hang up your hat."

Coast meditated. "That's like you, Dick," he said.

An office boy entered. "Reporter from the Joinal wants to see Mister Coast."

"I've left," said Coast.

He thought soberly, frowning for a moment. "That puts my place out of the question; they'll swarm there."

"Yes," agreed Warburton.

"I'll put up at some hotel tonight."

"Made up your mind which?"

"No; I'll call you up when I'm settled. . . . You'd better give me some money."

Warburton's pudgy features contorted themselves to express chagrin. "The one thing I forgot!"

"Then send somebody out for it."

"How much?" Warburton drew a cheque-book toward him. "A hundred?"

A long pause prefaced Coast's estimate. "Five thousand."

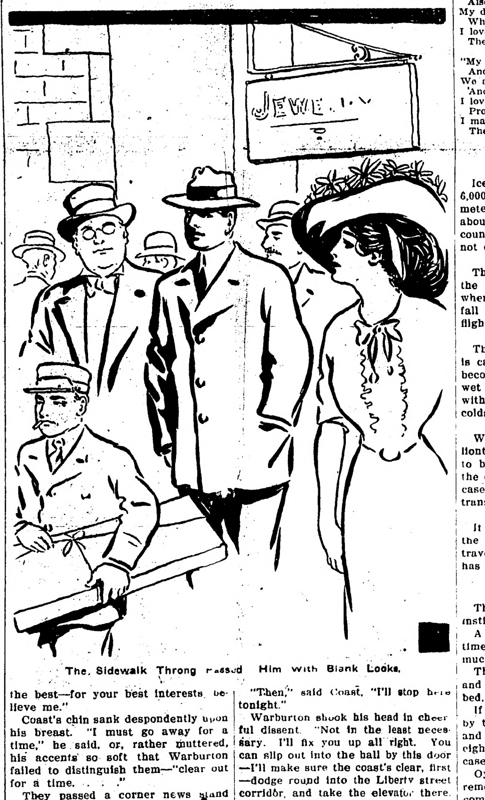
The lawyer whistled. "The devil you say! What d'you want with all that?"

"How can I tell?"

With a sigh and a shrug Warburton drew the check and rang for his head clerk. That person brought with him the information that representatives of the Times, the Sun and the Herald had foregathered with the Journal reporter in the outer office, and would not be denied.

"Get the money," said Warburton. "I'll tend to the rest."

He made a sortie into the reception room and returned crestfallen. "I've lied like a trooper," he confessed, "but they won't budge. You were seen to enter; you haven't been seen to leave."



The Sidewalk Throng Passed Him With Blank Looks.

"Then," said Coast, "I'll stop here tonight."

Warburton shook his head in cheerful dissent. "Not in the least necessary. I'll fix you up all right. You can slip out into the hall by this door—I'll make sure the coast's clear, first—dodge round into the Liberty street corridor, and take the elevator there. You're hardly liable to be recognized on either the subway or the L. if you're careful. Make your own selection of a hotel and call me up at the club any time after five. Meanwhile I'll send a boy to your rooms for whatever you want, and he'll bring everything to you at any hour you name."

Coast smiled agreement. "That's a wonderful head you wear, Dick, but I doubt if your scheme will work; it's too simple . . ."

Its very simplicity made it practicable, however, and a little after four Coast made his escape precisely as Warburton had planned.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

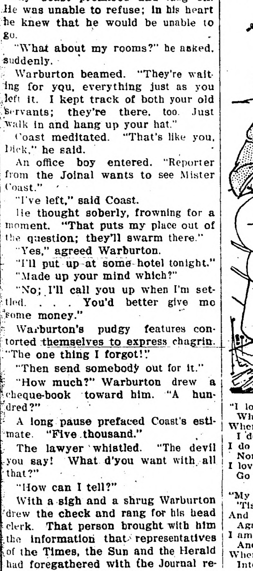
Exactly 2:30 A. M.

Arthur—"Why is it, fairest Evangeline, that when I am with you the hands on that clock seem to take wings and fly?" Stern Voice (at the head of the stairs)—"Without wishin' to be impertinent, young man, I simply want to observe that them hands hain't got nothin' on the ones on our gas meter."—Judge.

The Onlooker

by WILBUR D. NESBIT

The Swatter Maker



"I love the fly, the little fly
Which buzzes on the wall;
When it in flight goes zooming by
I do not care at all.
I do not lift my hand to smite
Nor sticky paper spread—
I love to hear the tricksy sprite
Go humming round my head.

"My head is bald as any egg,
'Tis bare from ear to ear,
And when a fly would scratch its leg
Against it, it brings cheer.
I am not one who pulls a frown
And gives a raucous whoop
When some poor fly may tumble down
Into his plate of soup.

"Ah, no. I lift the poor fly out
And once more set it free;
To see it sailing roundabout
Is happiness to me.
I have an auto that can race,
I have a yacht that's fine,
I have a town and country place,
A bank account is mine.

"My wife wears jewels big and rare,
She has two hundred hats,
And she can buy the finest hair
Also the largest rats.
My daughter's married to a prince
Who has a ruined hall;
I love the fly, I tell you, since
The fly has done it all.

"My son wears an outlandish suit
And yells a college yell;
We always eat imported fruit
And live exceeding well.
I love the fly—I'll tell you why
Prosperity I've got:
I make the swatters that you buy
The little fly to swat."

SCIENTIFIC NOTES.

Ice cream containing no more than 6,000,000 bacteria to the cubic centimeter is considered safe. This means about 18,000,000 to the square inch. By counting them five at a time you will not delay your dinner much.

The force of gravity decreases with the distance from the earth. Thus, when you fall downstairs, you do not fall nearly so hard at the top of the flight as when you are at the bottom.

The theory that a cold in the head is caused by a germ which does not become active until the feet become wet or cold is now placed in conflict with the fact that legless men have colds in their heads.

While reading it requires one-millionth part of a second for the idea to be transmitted from the retina of the eye to the brain. This is in some cases; in others it is impossible to transmit the idea in a million years.

It requires one hundred years for the light of some of the fixed stars to travel to the earth: By that time it has forgotten what it came for.

The Oyster.

The oyster is a calm, unemotional institution.

A clam is alleged to be happy at times, but the oyster never manifests much feeling, if any.

The oyster grows its own clothes; and as it spends all of its time in its bed, its needs to grow but one sort.

If the oysters were to be inspired by the modern fever of advancement and social life, it would have to grow eight or nine suits or dresses, as the case might be.

Oysters are prepared for food by removing their shells, which then become mother-of-pearl. Many people have become fabulously rich because pearls are found in oysters. These people become rich by selling the oysters.

The oyster has never been successfully trained to do a turn in vaudeville.

Agreement.

"O, I don't know that she is so beautiful," says the first individual.

"Not beautiful? Has she not a marble brow, an ivory skin and ruby lips? Not beau—"

"Conceding all that, am I not justified in asserting that she has a hard face?"

The Old Rake.

Old Gentleman—What a pretty little lady.

Five-year-old Boston Girl—Sir, I'll call a policeman if you annoy me further.—Life.

Wilbur D Nesbit

COLDS

Cured in One Day

As a rule, a few doses of Munyon's Cold Remedy will break up any cold and prevent pneumonia. It relieves the head, throat and lungs almost instantly. Price 25 cents at any druggist's, or sent postpaid.

If you need Medical advice write to Munyon's Doctors. They will carefully diagnose your case and give you advice by mail, absolutely free.

Address Professor Munyon, 53d and Jefferson streets, Philadelphia, Pa.

44 Bu. to the Acre

is a heavy yield, but that's what John Kennedy of Edmonton, Alberta, Western Canada, got from 40 acres of Spring Wheat in 1910. Reports from other districts in that province showed other excellent results—such as 4,000 bushels of wheat from 120 acres, or 33 1-3 bu. per acre. 25, 30 and 40 bushel yields were numerous. As high as 132 bushels of oats to the acre were threshed from Alberta fields in 1910.

160 ACRE FARMS IN WESTERN CANADA FREE

The Silver Cup

at the recent Spokane Fair was awarded to the Alberta Government for its exhibit of grains, grasses and vegetables. Reports of excellent yields for 1910 come also from Saskatchewan and Manitoba in Western Canada.

Free homesteads of 160 acres, and adjoining pre-emptions of 160 acres (at $3 per acre) are to be had in the choicest districts.

Schools convenient, climate excellent, soil the very best, railways close at hand, building lumber cheap, fuel easy to get and reasonable in price, water easily procured, mixed farming a success.

Write as to best place for settlement, settlers' low railway rates, descriptive illustrated "Last Best West" (sent free on application) and other information, to Sup't of Immigration, Ottawa, Can., or to the Canadian Government Agent. (36)

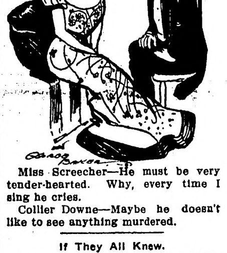
CHAS. PILLING
Clifford Block Grand Forks, N. Dak.
Please write to the agent nearest you

Save Money on Farm Loans

Write us direct for application blank and save local agent's commissions. Quick and reliable service.

THE HATCHER BROTHERS CORPORATION
Grand Forks and Fargo, North Dakota

POSSIBLE EXPLANATION.



Miss Screecher—He must be very tender-hearted. Why, every time I sing he cries.

Collier Downe—Maybe he doesn't like to see anything murdered.

If They All Knew.

A woman speaker told a New York suffrage meeting that "we women haven't concentration. Our minds just go flirting around and don't get anywhere." Considering which, is it not superfluous for mere man to muss about in women's affairs when they know themselves so well?—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Early Training.

"She claims that her ancestors stood torturing with red-hot pinchers."

"I believe it. She can wear shoes three sizes too small and look happy."—Harper's Weekly.

RED.

It's the Red Blood Corpuscles That Proper Food Makes.

An Ohio woman says Grape-Nuts food gave her good red blood and restored the roses of youth to a complexion that had been muddy and blotchy. She says:

"For 10 years I had stomach trouble which produced a breaking out on my face. The doctors gave it a long Latin name, but their medicines failed to cure it. Along with this I had frequent headaches, nervousness and usually pain in my stomach after meals.

"I got disgusted with the drugs, stopped them and coffee off short, and quit eating everything but fruit and Grape-Nuts, with Postum for my table beverage.

"The headaches, stomach trouble, and nervous weakness disappeared almost like magic, which showed that when the cause was removed and good food and drink used nature was ready to help.

"My blood was purified and my complexion became like a young girl's, while my weight was increased from 90 to 120 pounds in a few months—good, solid firm flesh, where it used to be soft and flabby.

"I recommended Grape-Nuts and Postum to one of my friends, who was afflicted as I had been. She followed my advice and in a short time was restored to complete health and in about 8 months her weight increased from 100 to 148 pounds.

"Our doctor, observing the effect of Grape-Nuts and Postum in our cases, declared, the other day, that he would hereafter prescribe these food products for gastritis." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a reason."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

The Northern Light

CHAS. W. LATTA

Editor and Publisher.

Published every Friday at Holt, Marshall County, Minnesota.

Subscription Price: $1.00 per year, strictly in advance.

Entered as second-class matter Sept. 22, 1911, at the post office at Holt, Minnesota, under the act of March 8, 1879.

Be a booster—not a knocker.

One Wm. H. Taft put his seal of approval on the republican candidates at Cincinnati, O., and the people forthwith elected the entire democratic ticket. Maybe this means something.

The fight for an extra session of the legislature waxes warm and the number of its advocates are increasing. Will the governor be the man or the mouse—the man the people hope he is, or the mouse scared out of sight by the corporation cat?

On Tuesday Crookston elected a Socialist for mayor and a couple of aldermen of the same political faith. This does not mean that a majority of the voters in that city are socialists, but it does show that they were awfully sick of the bunch that have been holding the reins in municipal affairs.

East Grand Forks is mildly excited over the discovery that a man was murdered there during Tuesday night. Hold-ups and robberies have been almost of daily occurrence in that city recently but it takes a murder to make some people admit that saloons are in any way liable to produce or foster crime.

It is announced that Marshall County drainage bonds could not be sold in New York because of the legislative investigation of the state drainage board last winter. We are not informed as to the exact connection, even on the New York market, between the state drainage board and county ditch bonds. We were of the opinion that they were entirely separate, and expect that other reasons may develop as to why these bonds could not be sold.

What in the name of republicanism is the matter with the old Polk county machine? After 16 years in office Judge Sullivan was beaten at East Grand Forks on Tuesday. Following the defeat of A. D. Stephens for state senator last fall, the defeat of Sullivan proves that the old machine is dead, deceased, defunct and worthless. For years Stephens and Sullivan have steam rolled county conventions and been regarded as the strongest politicians of northern Minnesota at the state conventions. Does it mean that the state machine is crumbling to pieces? We hope so. The people are tiring of the incompetent officials given them by the old ring and there will be something doing next year in state politics.

Subscribe for The Northern Light: Only $1.00 per year.

ONLY THE OUTSIDE COPIED

Japan's Imitation of Modern Civilization Criticised by a Paper of That Country.

The power of imitation of our people is congenital and greatly developed, and we have with remarkable rapidity grasped and put to our own use the sciences of war, mechanics and education. The rapidity of this progress has made the foreigner speechless, but viewed from within, this newly developed civilization shows a great weakness. It is a grief to the learned and is startling to them. The introduction of this system of civilization was a splendid thing to our countrymen used to the spirit of feudalism. It dazzled the eye like silk damask. The giving up of the old and the taking on of the new system, but vaguely defined in the hearts of men, was the force back of the movement urging men on. There was no suspicion that the tendencies were novel. Thus our people unitedly exerted themselves in the copying of outward things, but it did not permeate to the extent of getting a grasp of fundamentals. It was nothing more than superficial imitation.—Japan Advertiser.

GEORGE DIDN'T DO IT.

She admitted being jealous of her husband. Consequently they quarreled frequently, and, woman-like, she confided in her best friends.

"You are unfair at times to George," said the best friend one day, as the two sat on the veranda of the suburban home. "I saw George in the city yesterday and he didn't see me. So I kept watching him. He had a seat in a crowded subway car. At least two-score women, most of them pretty as a picture, came in and passed by him or stood in front of him. And George never looked at one of them; he was deeply interested in his paper."—Philadelphia Times.

RECTOR'S ERROR.

A former archdeacon visited an out-of-the-way parish when the rector happened to be away. The visitor was shown about by the clerk, and on arriving at the churchyard was surprised to find a crop of wheat growing in it.

"Dear, dear," said the archdeacon "I can't approve of this. I really did not think Mr. Winkley would plant wheat in the churchyard."

"That's just what I told parson," said the clerk. "I says, says I, 'Ye didn't ought to have wheated it; ye ought to have tatered it.'"

CARRYING LIQUIDS IN TRUNK

Having had several articles of value spoiled by the breaking or leaking of little bottles of medicine I hit upon a fine way to pack them. I cut the neck from a hot-water bottle, which had begun to leak, at the top, sewed some brass rings to the top, and drew a stout ribbon through the rings. After packing my small bottles in this, I drew up the top, tied it and packed it in my suit case. Another leaky hot-water bottle I used as a case for too rubbers.—Delineator.

SAD FEELINGS.

"Jaggsby takes even his pleasures sadly."

"How does?"

"Yes, and to such an extent that when he goes on a spree, he never sees green serpents, pink monkeys or purple elephants, like other fellows; he sees nothing but black snakes."

THE DULUTH HERALD

BEATS THE CENSUS THREE TO ONE

During the past ten years the population of Duluth increased 48 per cent., St. Paul 32 per cent., and Minneapolis 49 per cent. In the Same Period the Circulation of The Duluth Herald

INCREASED 150 PER CENT.

This marvelous expansion—so much greater than that of the surrounding territory—is due solely to the merits of The Herald.

The Herald has never used any kind of premium, contest, or price reduction to gain subscribers but prints each day the very best NEWSPAPER in the Northwest. Its editorial page is thoroughly independent and its news columns cover every feature of the world's daily history.

Send for sample copy and get The Herald habit

THREE MONTHS FOR $1.00—Mailed Daily.

ADDRESS HERALD CIRCULATION DEPT., DULUTH, MINN.

MAKING RUGS IN THE ORIENT

Women and Girls Do the Weaving and Methods and Patterns Are Traditional.

For ages reaching back into the mists of antiquity, weaving has been the work of women, though the modern factory of the west has brought about changes in this respect. "In the unchanging east weaving is, with few exceptions, women's work. In the interior of Asiatic Turkey and in Persia the patriarchal system still exists and the sons bring their wives home to live. I have known as many as 35 persons to live in one dwelling," writes Mrs. Eliza Dunn in her new book, "Rugs in Their Native Land." "The mother-in-law is queen of the household and every morning assigns to each woman and girl her task for the day." Methods of working as well as patterns are traditional, according to the same author, and designs are peculiar to special families or tribes and become so familiar that the older workers produce them from memory.

The art of tying in the yarn has to be learned very slowly. The younger children are allowed to tie in only one solid color on the plain background, but when a girl becomes fairly expert she is allowed to make a whole rug, and traces of individuality may be looked for in her weaving. The two classes of rug, Turkish and Persian, are distinguished by the kind of knot in which they are tied, the Ghiordes, or Turkish, the Senna, or Persian, knot.

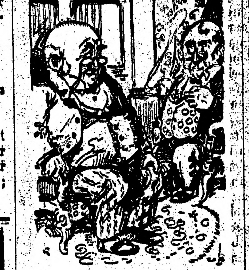
The number of knots to the square inch is one of the tests of value of a modern rug, and the fact that more can be tied to the square inch in a Persian than in a Turkish rug accounts for the greater fineness and consequently greater costliness of the former.

HE IS TIRED OF TIPPING

Experience of Returning New Yorker Drives Him to Safety Razor and Asparagus Farm.

A New Yorker who had voluntarily absented himself from the only town in which life is worth while came back and revisited his old haunts. Going into the barber shop he was greeted at the door by a maiden of tender years, who threw open the [illegible] of entrance with a gracious air. He tipped her. A youth hung up his coat and collar. He tipped him. The barber applied the lather and fed him with gossip worthy of his famous prototype who held the noses of the great in Savonarola's day. He got his tip. Then came the boy who held his coat and the boy who brushed him off, each to be mollified with the only unctuous application that soothed all wounds. As he started to leave, the poodle leaped into a chair by the door and held up his two paws appealingly. The gentleman has since bought a safety razor and is now dickering for an asparagus farm in the wilds of New Jersey.

NATURAL DEDUCTION



"Yes, sir, he's a man of sterling integrity. His character never has been assailed."

"What?"

"I say his character has never been assailed."

"Then he never has been in politics."

AGAINST PRINCIPLES.

"Here is a beautiful painting in oil full of spirit."

"Couldn't think of taking that to a temperance house. I want one in water colors."

AN EXCEPTION.

"I hat that expression, 'Drop me a line.'"

"Still, it's permisible if you happen to be drowning."

DRESSING A LONG PROCESS

Modern Man Must Do Many Things Before He Is Ready for Breakfast.

"Life is too short to sleep," says Mr. Edison. Most of us, however, seem to need sleep. The inventor is more practical when he adds, "It takes me one minute to undress at night, 40 seconds to fall asleep and two minutes to dress in the morning." It takes other people longer to dress and undress, and maybe that is why there is but one Edison.

Nowadays it does not suffice to doff night and don day raiment. Dressing in the morning is a rite an hour or more long. One must swing dumbbells, and have a shower, and brush his teeth, and gargle his throat, and spray his nose, and rub his gums with magnesia, and shave, and apply witch hazel, and knead his scalp, and use an eye cup, and eat quinine for a cold coming or going, and uncork liniment for some local ailment.

Most of these processes are undertaken to promote health, preserve youth and postpone old age. They are like lifting one's self over a fence by the boot straps. They fill the first hour after sleep with fussy activities and bring the subject to breakfast tired out. While he is primping, youth passes and old age arrives. If one will not do as Mr. Edison does, better take a leaf from Garfield's example—he read the classics while shaving—and equip the bathroom with wall charts and improving books, oilcloth bound.—New York World.

POWER OF GROWING PLANTS.

The layman would scarcely associate great strength with so delicate and fragile a thing as maidenhair fern, yet if its roots have not sufficient room they will break the pot in which the plant grows. Blades of grass will force the curbstones between which they spring up out of their place, and in a single night a crop of small mushrooms has been known to lift a large stone. Indeed, plants are on record as having broken the hardest rocks. The island of Aldabra, to the northwest of Madagascar, is now becoming smaller through the action of the mangroves that grow along the foot of the cliffs. They eat their way into the rock in all directions, and into the gaps thus formed the waves force their way. In time they will probably reduce the island to pieces.

QUICK ON THE TRIGGER.

At the risk of cutting off his regular morning tonic, every right-thinking man must have a sense that conditions would be improved in this land of the brave and home of the free if the merry little pistol were not so conveniently accessible at all times. Under stress of passion or in the presence of apparent danger the most peace-loving are at times capable of committing homicide, in what they believe to be the protection of their life, their honor or their property. But the protection assured through the instrumentality of firearms is generally more fancied than real. Honor, particularly, is shattered far more often than it is preserved through recourse to the gun, which has brought death in more than one instance to an innocent victim, and left the survivor a life of bitter but unavailing remorse.—Washington Post.

KEEPS HER OWN ACCOUNTS.

Queen Mary sees to it that her daughter, Princess Mary, learns to keep accounts, and every week the young girl must present her account book, in which she has set down all her expenses. Queen Mary audits the account, and it is said to be all right as a general thing, as the young lady has a head for figures. She does not know any more of mathematics than is necessary, however, as her mother thinks the subject a waste of time for girls.

RATHER SLIM FARE.

"How wuz de feed in de last jail you wuz in, Dusty?"

"Just so-so, me boy."

"How wuz dat?"

"Dejeuner wuz bread an' water. Repeat t'ree times an' you have de daily menu."

QUITE EVIDENT.

"I found a rare biography of Amerigo Vespucci in a book store yesterday."

"I'm not interested very much in the lives of Italian bandmasters."

LIGHTEN YOUR KITCHEN CARES

1892 PURE SPUN ALUMINUM WARE

SAVES MONEY, HEALTH, TIME AND TEMPER

It says "Good Morning" to a million happy housewives who have found kitchen satisfaction in the only ware that will not break, scale or rust, nor scorch the most dainty food.

Say "Good Bye" forever to cooking troubles by throwing away your old rusting, corroding and scaling iron, tin and enamel utensils. Replace them with "1892" Spun Aluminum Ware.

IT IS GUARANTEED FOR 25 YEARS

IT'S WORTH WHILE TO INVESTIGATE

NOW ON EXHIBITION

S. S. KOLDEN & Co.

AXEL NELSON

General Blacksmith Work

HOLT, - - MINN.

All work done Right, at Reasonable Prices.

The Evergreen Hotel

P. A. RESBERG, PROP.

Rates, $1.00 per day.

Serves the best Meal in Eastern Marhall Co. for twenty-five cents.

Livery and Feed Barn in connection.

Red Lake Falls Milling Co.

Makers of the Celebrated

Mascot Flour

and bUYERS of all kinds of GRAIN

Our Elevator will give you satisfaction.

NELS ENGEBRETSEN, Agent - - - Holt, Minn.

Bring us your Job Printing orders

Crookston College...

Is the Leading Business School in the Northwest.

OUR TEACHERS Are all College and University Graduates.

FINANCIAL STANDING It is backed by a capital of $50,000 which is a safe guarantee to its students that every promise will be fulfilled.

ACTUAL BUSINESS The only school in Northern Minnesota having an actual business department.

BOARD and ROOM Can be had in private families for $3 per week. Other school towns will charge from $4 to $6.

POSITIONS The demand upon us for office help is greater than we can supply.

Catalogue and further information given free by writing.

J. C. SATHRE, Crookston, Minn.

Defective Page

Local Items

The Local Market.

(Grain prices furnished by Hanson & Barzen Milling Co. at close of business every Thursday.)

Flax	$1.78
Wheat	.92
Barley d	.86
Oats	.37
Rye	.75

Bring us the news.

When in town call at this office and let's get acquainted.

Emil Johnson was here for an over Sunday visit from Adams, N. D.

Miss Julia Knutson and brother Oscar left for their home at Randen on Monday.

Alfred Larson returned Tuesday from Larimore, N. D., where he has been working during the fall.

The big game hunting season opens today and the light fall of snow will be a great help to hunters.

Miss Mable Knutson and Ed Furr were at Thief River Falls on a combined business and pleasure trip.

Mr. and Mrs. Skiboli are enjoying a visit from some of their relatives who are here from Thief River Falls.

Beginning this week the Great Northern has installed a daily freight service on this line, to be continued indefinitely.

Triple coated enamelled kitchen ware at only 10 cents per piece is a bargain that you never had before. S. S. Kolden & Co.

Chas. Petty and Fred Jordan, both of Stutsman county, N. D., were in this vicinity looking over farm lands on Friday and Saturday last.

Reg. Walker arrived Monday from Emerado, N. D., with a car of stock and machinery which he promptly transferred to his father's homestead in the vicinity of Mud Lake.

We want more subscribers and will take potatoes, chickens, or wood at current market prices on subscription. Of course we prefer the money, but if you haven't the cash bring us the produce. Don't be without your home paper anyway.

M. A. NELSON, M. D.

PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON

Office over Holt Merc. Co's store

HOLT, MINNESOTA.

Be a booster—not a knocker.

Mrs. A. Peterson made a trip to Thief River Falls yesterday.

Henry Wendt left yesterday for a business trip to Middle River.

Magnus Gronwald made a business trip to Thief River Falls Friday.

Oscar Anderson transacted some business at Thief River Falls Wednesday night.

Miss Esther Mickelson came up from Thief River Falls Wednesday for a visit at home.

Harry Werner went to Crookston on Tuesday to take in the buttermakers convention.

Fred and O. M. Larson made a short business trip to Thief River Falls on Friday last.

Oscar Knutson and Ludwig Monson visited at Lancaster, N. D. from Friday until Monday.

Miss Christine Peterson came up from Thief River yesterday and is a guest at the Fosholm home.

Walter and Earl Patten arrived on Tuesday from Bismark, N. D., to remain for a while looking after their claims near Mud Lake.

Enamelled kitchenware at Kolden's. Triple coated, white lined and the best bargains you ever knew, 10 and 69 cents only while they last.

Ludvig Monson is stopping here in town at present and seems to like it. There seems to be some star attraction here for some of the young bachelors.

Through an overlight last week we omitted correcting the market report and the figures shown therein were some higher than they should have been.

Owing to lack of time this week we have had to leave out the last month's creamery statement. We will try to publish it in our issue for next week.

There will be a big dance at the M. W. A. hall in Holt on Saturday evening, the 11th inst. First-class music has been arranged for and supper will be served at the Evergreen Hotel. Everybody invited.

Ole Matson came up from Crookston on Tuesday morning and will take charge of the Red Lake Falls Milling Co's elevator here, Nels Engebretsen resigning in order to give all of his attention to his duties as postmaster and his personal business.

Farms Wanted.

I have prospective buyers for a few good improved farms; also for 900 acres of wild land. All must be in eastern Marshall county.

CHAS. W. LATTA, Holt, Minn.

A PAIR OF SHOES FREE

WE WANT EVERY CHILD TO ENTER OUR

Painting Book Contest

Call at Our Store at Once for One of the Painting Books FREE

With Full Information on how to Use It and the Detail of the Contest

We will give to the child returning to us the best executed book, in the best combination of harmonious colors, a pair of the

Celebrated Gotzian Shoes—FREE

The contest will close Thursday, November 30th, and the winner will be decided by three unbiased and disinterested judges

HERE IS YOUR OPPORTUNITY

Come and Get Your Book Before They Are Gone

Holt Mercantile Co.,

We Sell THE GOTZIAN SHOE

Disastrous Prairie Fires

On Sunday and Wednesday disastrous prairie fires swept over the territory south and east of Mud Lake and destroyed a lot of hay and some buildings and live stock. The fires both started north of the Thorwick ditch, in Grand Plain township, and are supposed to be of incendiary origin. The following are only a few of the losses:

Ole Saastad, dwelling house, barn and horse.

— Steen, one ox, barn and about 40 tons of hay.

Mary Steen, dwelling and barn.

Oscar Anderson, several tons hay,

Gust Nelson, about 85 bushels of flax in sacks. This grain had been left out after threshing.

Numerous other losses of hay and buildings have been reported but we are not informed as to the names of the owners.

Dedication Services Held

With most impressive services the First Lutheran Church of Holt was duly dedicated this week. A large number of visiting clergy and delegates took part in the exercises which commenced on Tuesday and continued until yesterday afternoon.

The dedication proper took place on Wednesday and the church was filled with an intensely interested audience. On that evening Rev. I. T. Aastad, of Thief River Falls, conducted services in the English language and the church was filled to overflowing.

David B. Haugan, one of the prominent farmers from near Plummer was here this week as a delegate to take part in the church dedication services. He found time to extend a hearty greeting to the editor who has been possessed of his friendship for several years.

G. J. Marlin and Gilbert Thompson arrived last Friday from Carpenter, Ia., with an outfit of stock and machinery. They have taken homesteads out east of Mud Lake, where there is quite a colony of Iowans, and they come prepared to develop their land in a hurry.

Buttermaker P. L. Andersen left Wednesday for Crookston to attend the buttermakers' convention in session there this week. From there he goes to St. Paul to take a short course for a few weeks in the State Agricultural College. During his absence Harry Werner will take his place in the local creamery.

Crookston College has placed all its graduates in positions. The demand for office help has been greater than we could supply. School is in session all year. You can begin at any time of year. Good board and furnished room taken care of in private family, for $3 per week. Send for catalog. Address J. C. Sathre, Crookston, Minn.

Mrs. Chas. W. Latta left Monday for Spirit Lake, Ia., in response to a telegram calling her to the bedside of her dying father. He passed away on Tuesday, a little while before she arrived. She will return in a day or two, after the funeral. This makes the third death in the family in about a year, her mother being taken last fall and her only sister last spring.

Scholarship for Sale Cheap

We have for sale, cheap for cash, a scholarship good for three months tuition in Crookston College, and for any subject at any time. It is worth $30 but will be sold for considerably less as we need the cash.

Call or address The Northern Light, Holt, Minn.

THUS A MISSION EXPANDED.

Ten years ago the Rev. P. N. Tsu now the rector of the only self-supporting native church of the Protestant Episcopal mission in China—St. Savior's, Shanghai—came to Wusih with two boys and lived on his boat until he could establish a mission. He was soon joined by the Rev. G. F. Mosher. The work has expanded, as it does in all stations where men can be supplied, until there are now two compounds—on one a dispensary and residence, on the other the chapel, a woman's building, a residence for the missionaries, and soon there will be a church and a catechists' school.—From the Spirit of Missions.

BIG PROBLEM OF COLLEGE

Many Parents Doubtful of Wisdom of Sending Their Boys and Girls There.

Shall we send our boys and girls to college? That is still an open question in the minds of many parents who are not convinced of what they have seen of graduates and undergraduates that the years spent in separations and supposedly in study pay. The answer to this question, we think, may often be found in the wish and ambition of the boy or girl. To cross the settled desire of a thoughtful boy must always be a doubtful matter. The real question is whether the unthoughtful and the unambitious should be sent. Many of these may be waked up to ambition in college, but their chances of success in life will be much greater if they enter with a strong initial purpose and desire. It might be well if fathers and mothers were this summer to question their sons and daughters who are nearing the college entrance age to ascertain whether they have given any real thought to what the college opportunity stands for to themselves in particular. If the nebula of childish thinking that goes with so many of the examinations could be reduced to definite points of light before entrance it would greatly simplify the task of the colleges and increase the chances of success in life for every student. There was a wise father himself a successful educator of boys, who insisted that his sons should have at least a year's experience in business before they went to college. Their success in various walks of life has amply vindicated the wisdom of his plan.—The Congregationalist.

HONORS TO THEIR COUNTRY

Old Maids Gain Due Recognition in New Orleans Movement for Their Aid.

"Honor the old maids, for they are worth more in push, ability and character than the mollycoddles they are replacing right and left every day." Such was the announcement made a few days ago by an organizer of the movement to aid spinsters. Since that time more than 500 letters of appreciation have reached him. One of the latest letters, from Chicago, reads: "I read the surprising announcement that a man is championing the cause of the 'old maid.' I am glad to see that a business man is taking this stand and telling whoever can and will read that the woman who is forced to earn her living, or is doing it through choice has the push, ability and character necessary to insure her an independent and happy life, without waiting for some impossibility to marry her." The man who wrote that letter is a gentleman in two places, and we do our hat to him in reverence and respect. And, returning to the subject of women who work for a living, why they're queens of love, light and liberty and an honor to their country.—New Orleans Picayune.

CHEESE AS FOOD.

Cheese contains all the essentials of human food, according to a pamphlet recently issued by the department of agriculture. The popular belief that cheese, even when green or unripened, is difficult of digestion is not justified. The milk solids in cheese are very digestible and make an almost perfect food. With the addition of rennet and the development of lactic acid in cheese making some chemical changes take place; but these do not transform digestible solids in milk into indigestible solids in cheese. The digestive disturbances attributed to peculiarities in the cheese itself are probably due merely to over-eating, or to the custom of eating cheese only at the close of the meal, when one has already had more than enough food.

MISUNDERSTOOD.

They were discussing the Greenagen case in a Brooklyn trolley car. He was a sturdy German and his companion was evidently his wife. "I hope the little girl don't die from the poisoned candy," said the woman. "Where did she get it?" asked the man. "This paper says it was gift candy." "She knew it was gift and took it—she can't get my sympathy," said the man; and his wife better versed in English than he, had to explain that "gift," which is poison in German, has a different meaning in the vernacular.—New York Tribune.

D. B. Bakke, Pres. S. S. Kolden, Vice-pres.

HOLT STATE BANK

Incorporated June 1st, 1910.

Our List of Customers is Steadily Incrasing.

Why pay out $1.50 in fees for a few Money Orders when a check answers the same purpose without a cent of cost to you? We urge everyone to systematize their business and to pay all bills by check. You not only hold a record of your earnings and expenditures during a season, but also hold a separate receipt for each and every check bearing endorsement. Also, by conducting your business on an economical basis, your balance steadily increases. A surplus entered to your credit in your pass book is a most worthy friend to have and far-reaching in its effects within the community, as it places money in circulation among your fellow neighbors.

Your entire banking business earnestly solicited.

B. L. BACKE, Cashier.

V-I-V-O

The Best there is in FLOUR

Our Elevator and Lumber Yard are always prepared to give the most satisfactory service.

Hanson & Barzen Milling Co.,

OSCAR HANSON, Agent, - - HOLT, MINN.

Want to Sell your Land?

List it with

CHAS. W. LATTA

At The NORTHERN LIGHT Office

HOLT, MINN.

We have a lot of New Goods coming in and they will soon be here.

****

Watch this Space for future Announcements.

****

Funeral Supplies always in stock.

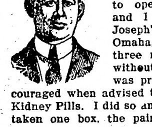
S. S. KOLDEN & Co.

HOLT, MINNESOTA.

Defective Page

IN HOSPITAL NINE MONTHS.

Awful Tale of Suffering From Kidney Trouble.



Alfred J. O'Brien, Second St., Sterling, Colo., says: "I was in the Baltimore Marine Hospital nine months. The urine was in a terrible state and some days I passed half a gallon of blood. They wanted to operate on me and I went to St. Joseph's Hospital at Omaha, putting in three months there without any gain. I was pretty well discouraged when advised to use Doan's Kidney Pills. I did so and when I had taken one box, the pain left me. I kept on and a perfect cure was the result."

"When Your Back Is Lame, Remember the Name—DOAN'S." 50c a box at all stores. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, N. Y.

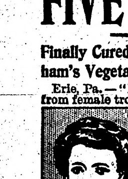
It is by no means sufficient to make an auditor grin with laughter.

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets regulate and invigorate stomach, liver and bowels. Sugar-coated, tiny granules. Easy to take as candy.

Every corrupt judge examines badly the truth.

SHE SUFFERED FIVE YEARS

Finally Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.



Erie, Pa.—"I suffered for five years from female troubles and at last was almost helpless. I went to three doctors and they did me no good, so my sister advised me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and when I had taken only two bottles I could see a big change, so I took six bottles and it has done me a great deal of good. I don't know how to express my thanks for the good it has done me and I hope all suffering women will give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial. It was worth its weight in gold."—Mrs. J. P. ENDLICH, R. F. D. No. 7, Erie, Pa.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs, contains no narcotic or harmful drugs, and to-day holds the record for the largest number of actual cures of female diseases we know of, and thousands of voluntary testimonials are on file in the Pinkham laboratory at Lynn, Mass., from women who have been cured from almost every form of female complaints, such as inflammation, ulceration, displacements, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, indigestion and nervous prostration. Every suffering woman owes it to herself to give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial.

If you want special advice write Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass., for it. It is free and always helpful.

Stops Lameness

Sloan's Liniment is a reliable remedy for any kind of horse lameness. Will kill the growth of spavin, curb or splint, absorb enlargements, and is excellent for sweeny, fistula and thrush.

Here's Proof.

"I used Sloan's Liniment on a mule for 'high' lameness, and cured her. I am never without a bottle of your liniment; have bought more of it than any other remedy for pains." BAILY KIRBY, Cassady, Ky.

"Sloan's Liniment is the best made. I have removed very large shoe boils off a horse with it. I have killed a quarter crack on a mare that was awfully bad. I have also healed raw, sore necks on three horses. I have healed grease heel on a mare that could hardly walk." ANTHONY G. HIVER, Oakland, Pa., Route No. 1.

SLOAN'S LINIMENT

is good for all farm stock.

"My hogs had hog cholera three days before we got your liniment, which I was advised to try. I have used it now for three days and my hogs are almost well. One hog died before I got the liniment, but I have not lost any since." A. J. McCARTHY, Idaville, Ind.

Sold by all Dealers. Price 50c & $1.00

Sloan's Book on Horses, Cattle, Hogs and Poultry sent free. Address

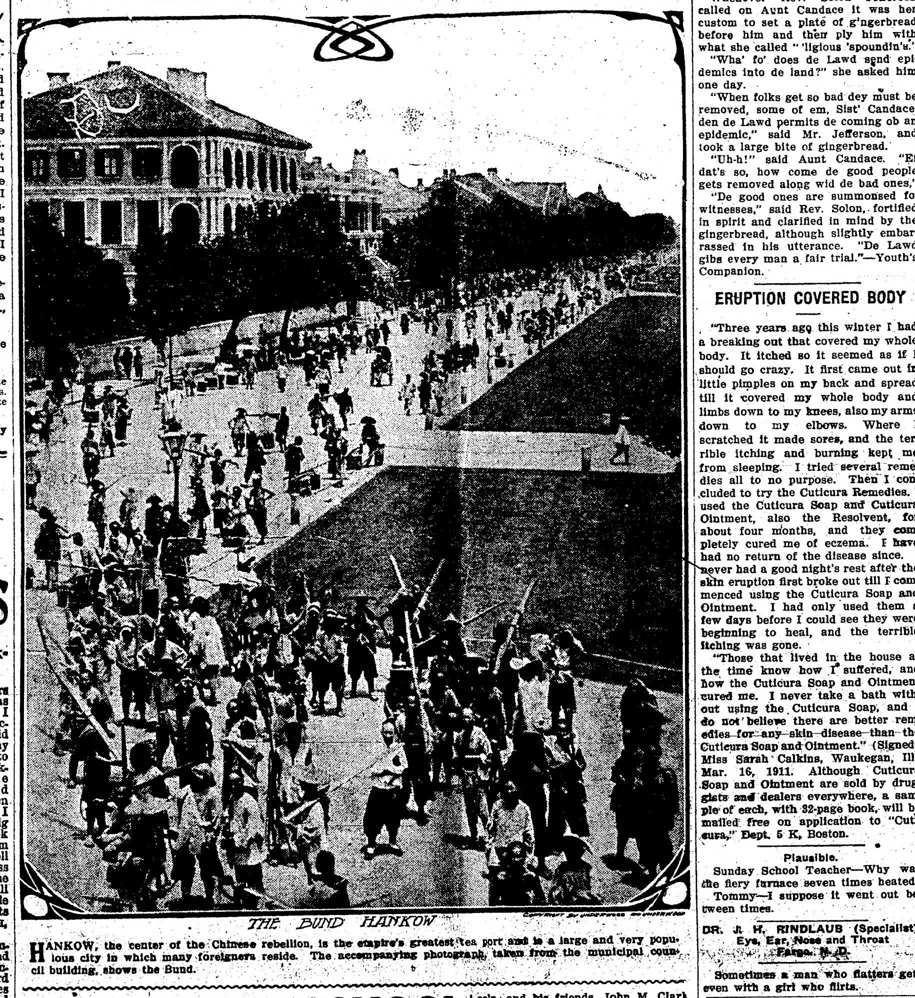
Dr. Earl S. Sloan

Boston, Mass.

Pettit's Eye Salve QUICK RELIEF SORE EYES

PISO'S will immediately relieve COUGHS & COLDS

WHERE THE CHINESE REBELLION RAGES



THE BUND HANKOW

COPYRIGHT BY UNDERWOOD & UNDERWOOD

HANKOW, the center of the Chinese rebellion, is the empire's greatest tea port and is a large and very populous city in which many foreigners reside. The accompanying photograph, taken from the municipal council building, shows the Bund.

BUILD FREE SCHOOL

Technical Institution to Be Erected in Chicago.

Money Left by George M. Pullman Fourteen Years Ago Now Amounts to $2,400,000—To Be Done With Mature Deliberation.

Chicago.—A campus of forty acres at the northeast corner of Indiana avenue and One Hundred and Eleventh street, in the town of Pullman, has been selected for the building of a technical school with the $2,400,000 left by George M. Pullman, over fourteen years ago, according to the official statement made by the board of directors. Mr. Pullman's original bequest was $1,200,000, but the account has doubled in the years since his death. He stipulated in his will that nothing be done without mature deliberation, even if the carrying out of his bequest took many years.

The founding of such a school within what he foresaw was to become one of the greatest industrial centers in the world, was the chief wish of Mr. Pullman's heart. He often spoke of his desire to found a free school for instruction in the principles and practice of the mechanic arts, and thought no more fitting place could be had than Pullman.

"It is my purpose to found, erect and endow, at Pullman, Ill., in my lifetime, a free school of manual training for the benefit of the children of persons living in or employed at Pullman, and, in the accomplishment of that purpose, to expend at least $200,000 for lands and buildings and apparatus, and to provide a fund of $1,000,000 for the maintenance, management and endowment of such school," and requests his executors—Norman B. Ream and Robert T. Lincoln, and his friends, John M. Clark John S. Runnells, Frank O. Lowden, Charles E. Perkins and John J. Mitchell—to act as the first board of directions of the Pullman Free School of Manual Training, at Pullman, Ill.

Three years ago the board, of which Frank O. Lowden, son-in-law of the donor, is president, purchased the selected ground for the price of $100,000, and careful attention has been paid to the selection of a fitting principal. The resignation of Leanas Gifford-Weld from the deanship of the collegiate faculty of the Iowa State university a year ago made his services available, and he was appointed last May.

Mr. Weld may devote a year or more to the examination of and study of the principal technical and trade institutions in this country and Europe, it being the opinion of the board that by such investigation many mistakes may be avoided. The work of building and equipping probably will not be begun till Mr. Weld's return, when he will furnish definite and tangible plans by which to proceed.

FIND WILD MAN IN MONTANA

He Is as Fleet as Deer and Roams About Clad in Skins of Animals—Hides in Caves.

Bozeman, Mont.—Fleet as a deer, dressed in the skins of animals and roaming the wood barefoot, a wild man has been discovered in the Middle Creek canyon, about twenty-five miles from this city. The man has been seen several times but all efforts to communicate with him or to learn his history have failed. C. L. Gregg, a forest ranger, came upon him fishing about two weeks ago and gave chase. This led to the finding of a cabin supposed to be inhabited by the wild man.

Gregg enlisted the assistance of George Flanders, Jr., and two other boys and the four visited the cabin next day. Just as they came in sight of it they saw the same man disappear into the woods at the rear. The vicinity contains unexplored caves, and the strange hermit probably uses these as his hiding places.

The party took occasion to examine the cabin and found a regular habitation. A hot fire was burning in the camp stove and fish were frying upon it, giving evidence that the man had just left. On a board nailed up over the bed the name "Henry Nelson" was carved and this is taken to be the name of the strange man.

Her Brother Kissed Her.

Los Angeles, Cal.—Supposedly insulted by the kiss of a strange man and with an irate husband demanding apologies, Mrs. Harry Carlisle of Philadelphia recognized a long-lost brother. Then she kissed him.

U. S. ARTISTS LEAD ABROAD

Quaker City Member of Fine Arts Academy Talks of "Mona Lisa"—Of No Use While Hidden.

Philadelphia.—Just back after a four months' trip through the art centers of Europe, his first in 18 years, Thomas P. Anschutz, instructor of the life class of the Academy of Fine Arts, says that he was in Paris when the "Mona Lisa" was stolen.

"But I didn't take it," he said. "I can't imagine why any one else would, either, for it can neither be sold nor exhibited, and a painting is not of much use or pleasure stored away.

"Whatever the object, however, it has stirred custodians of other galleries throughout Europe to redouble their vigilance and to guard more carefully their art treasures. All visitors now are watched closely. The worst feature of the whole affair is that it may lead to a curtailment of the privileges accorded to art students."

Speaking of American artists as compared with those of Europe, he said:

"In landscape work American artists are getting rather more than their share of glory. The American landscape artists, in other words, are quite in the lead, and no European group is quite equal to them. In portraiture and figure work our artists are also holding their own.

"American artists are not, however, as well represented in the permanent collections of European galleries as they should be. This is probably due to desire to favor home talent. France is more liberal in this respect than other countries and possesses works of Sargent, Whistler, Walter Gray, Robert Henri and others.

"I noticed a change everywhere, particularly in London and in Holland. They seem to be losing the flavor of antiquity. For instance, there were formerly parts of London where an artist could wander and could imagine much that is historical and full of romance; but now these spots are occupied by twentieth-century hotels and apartment houses, and the spirit of the place has fled. The art world, however, remains the same. It never changes."

TRAINED BEES ROUT ROBBERS

Come to Assistance of Minnesota Man When He Is Attacked and Beaten by Thieves.

Mamel, Minn.—According to Robert Schultz, the farmer attacked and beaten by two robbers the other day, a swarm of bees came to his assistance and routed his assailants.

Schultz had several hives of well trained bees. In describing the attack he said:

"I began to make a noise that I always use to call my bees, and they began to swarm into the barn. One lighted on the back of one robber and he ran out the door yelling, 'stung!' Other bees followed him, and some attacked the other robber. He had me on my back and was beating me when the bees got busy and he ran out the door and took to the woods."

Summoned as Witnesses.

Whenever Rev. Solon Jefferson called on Aunt Candace it was her custom to set a plate of gingerbread before him and then ply him with what she called "ligious 'spoundin's." "What for does de Lawd send epidemics on de land?" she asked him one day.

"When folks get so bad dey must be removed, some of em, Sist' Candace, de Lawd permits de coming ob an epidemic," said Mr. Jefferson, and took a large bite of gingerbread.

"Uh-huh!" said Aunt Candace. "Ef dat's so, how come de good people gits removed along wid de bad ones,"

"Dem good ones are summonsed fo' witnesses," said Rev. Solon, fortified in spirit and clarified in mind by the gingerbread, although slightly embarrassed in his utterance. "De Lawd gibs eberyone a fair trial."—Youth's Companion.

ERUPTION COVERED BODY

"Three years ago this winter I had an eruption that covered my whole body. It itched so it seemed as if I should go crazy. It first came out in little pimples on my back and spread till it covered my whole body and limbs down to my knees, also my arms down to my elbows. Where I scratched it made sores, and the terrible itching and burning kept me awake. I tried several remedies but to no purpose. Then I concluded to try the Cuticura Remedies. I used the Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment, also the Resolvent, for about four months, and they completely cured me of eczema. I have not had a return of the disease since. I had not had a good night's rest after the eruption first broke out till I commenced using the Cuticura Soap and Ointment. I had only used them a few days before I could see they were beginning to heal, and the terrible itching was gone.

"Those that lived in the house at the time know how I suffered, and the Cuticura Soap and Ointment cured me. I never take a bath without using the Cuticura Soap, and I do not believe there are better remedies for any skin-disease than the Cuticura Soap and Ointment." (Signed) Miss Edna Calkins, Waukegan, Ill., Mar. 16, 1911. Although Cuticura Soap and Ointment are sold by druggists and dealers everywhere, a sample of each, with 32-page book, will be mailed free on application to "Cuticura," Dept. 5 K, Boston.

Plausible.

Sunday School Teacher—Why was the fiery furnace seven times heated?

Tommy—I suppose it went out between times.

DR. J. H. RINDLAUB (Specialist), Eye, Ear, Nose and Throat Fargo, N. D.

Sometimes a man who flatters gets even with a girl who flirts.

UNIVERSAL PORTLAND CEMENT COMPANY · UNIVERSAL PORTLAND CEMENT · CHICAGO · PITTSBURGH

Cement Talk No. 11

There are countless uses for UNIVERSAL Portland Cement about the place. For the cellar, concrete is water-proof, rat-proof and everlasting. Concrete is the best material for sidewalks, steps, foundations, well curbs, posts, troughs, water tanks, barn floors and cisterns. It will pay you to build of concrete. It lasts forever. It is fireproof, sanitary and cheap in the long run. Use UNIVERSAL Portland Cement—it makes the best concrete.

UNIVERSAL PORTLAND CEMENT CO.
SECURITY BANK BLDG., MINNEAPOLIS
ANNUAL OUTPUT 10,000,000 BARRELS

Make the Liver Do its Duty

Nine times in ten when the liver is right the stomach and bowels are right.

CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS gently but firmly compel a lazy liver to do its duty.

Cures Constipation, Indigestion, Sick Headache, and Distress After Eating.

SMALL PILL, SMALL DOSE, SMALL PRICE.

Genuine must bear Signature

Brent Good

DEFIANCE STARCH for starching finest linens.

If afflicted with sore eyes, use Thompson's Eye Water

W. N. U., FARGO, NO. 45-1911.

WHAT'S THE MATTER WITH YOUR BABY?

The young mother—and many an old one, too—is often puzzled to know the cause of her child's ill nature. The loudness of its crying does not necessarily indicate the seriousness of its trouble. It may have nothing more the matter with it than a headache or a feeling of general dullness. It cannot, of course, describe its feelings, but as a preliminary measure you are safe in trying a mild laxative.

Nine times out of ten, you will find it is all the child needs, for its restlessness and peevishness are perhaps due to obstruction of the bowels, and once that has been remedied the headache, the sluggishness and the many other evidences of constipation and indigestion will quickly disappear.

Don't give the little one salts, cathartic pills or nasty waters, for these will act as purgatives, and they are too strong for a child. In the families of Mrs. E. A. Thelin, Manvel, N. D., and Mrs. Henry Jensen, Grantom, Wis., the only laxative given is Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. It has been found to answer most perfectly all the purposes of a laxative and its very mildness and freedom from griping recommend it especially for the use of children, women, and old folks—generally—people who need a gentle bowel stimulant. Thousands of American families have been enthusiastic about it for more than a quarter of a century.

Anyone wishing to make a trial of this remedy before buying it in the regular way of a druggist at fifty cents or one dollar a large bottle (family size) can have a sample bottle sent to the home free of charge by simply addressing Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 201 Washington St., Monticello, Ill. Your name and address on a postal card will do.

Idaho Public Land

Water Right $50.00 per Acre

IN TWELVE ANNUAL INSTALMENTS

The Wood River Project began its annual run of water for irrigation on March 29th, 1911. There has been no interruption in the service since the run began. There is no shortage of crop on this project this year.

Some Things You Can Find on Wood River Project

Your choice of 20,000 Acres of new land. The best water right anywhere. Markets for everything you can raise. Good fruit land. Sheep and hogs to feed and feed for all of them every year.

Good Dairy Country

Market for one million pounds of butter. Market for all the chickens and eggs you can raise. The best potato soil on earth. Irrigation system complete and fully tested by two years use. Ample water, splendid soil.

WE NEED YOU

IDAHO IRRIGATION COMPANY, Limited

RICHFIELD, IDAHO

Write me a personal letter and ask questions.

I. W. McConnell, General Manager

A SET OF ANIMAL TRACKS IN SNOW OR MUD

TO EVERYONE INTERESTED IN

HUNTING OR TRAPPING

who will cut out this advertisement and mail it to us with your name and address plainly written on coupon below, together with 2c for postage, we will send absolutely Free a set of Animal Tracks in Snow or Mud showing the foot prints of Rabbits, Deer, Muskrat, Skunk, Mink, Squirrel, Fox, Coon and Otter; running, walking or leaping, and also pattern sheet of sizes for Mink and Skunk. For 4 cents we will send you the above articles and our 40 page Trappers Book. For 6 cents we will send you all these articles and picture of 46 Wild Animals in natural colors with Key. Trap catalog and Price List of Hides and Furs. We pay the highest market price for Hides and Furs and make prompt settlement for each shipment. We also sell Hunters and Trappers supplies cheap. Write your name and address plainly so these articles may be sure to reach you.

Yours always for a Square Deal, the Old Reliable

Northwestern Hide & Fur Co.

ESTB. 1890

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.

COUPON · Name · Town · State · Route

COLDS BREED CATARRH

Her Terrible Experience Shows How Peruna Should Be in Every Home to Prevent Colds.

Mrs. C. S. Sagerser.

Mrs. C. S. Sagerser, 1311 Woodland Ave., Kansas City, Mo., writes:

"I feel it a duty to you and to others that may be afflicted like myself, to speak for Peruna.

"My trouble first came after la grippe eight or nine years ago, a gathering in my head and neuralgia. I suffered most all the time. My nose, ears and eyes were badly affected for the last two years. I think from your description of internal catarrh that I must have had that also. I suffered very severely.

"Nothing ever relieved me like Peruna. It keeps me from taking cold.

"With the exception of some deafness I am feeling perfectly cured. I am forty-six years old.

"I feel that words are inadequate to express my praise for Peruna."

Definition of Velocity.

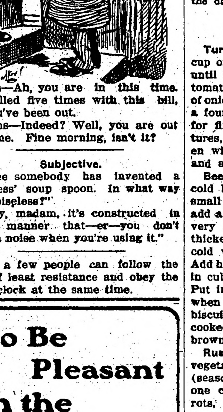
Teacher—What is velocity, Johnny?

Johnny—Velocity is what a chap lets go of a wasp with.

Distemper

In all its forms among all ages of horses and dogs, cured and others in the same stable prevented from having the disease with Spohn's Distemper Cure. Every bottle guaranteed. Over 750,000 bottles sold last year. $.50 and $1.00. Good druggists, or send to manufacturers. Agents wanted. Write for free book. Spohn Med. Co., Spec. Contagious Diseases, Goshen, Ind.

RATHER PLEASANT.



Dunn—Ah, you are in this time. I've called five times with this bill, but you've been out.

Owens—Indeed? Well, you are out this time. Fine morning, isn't it?

Subjective.

"I see somebody has invented a 'noiseless' soup spoon. In what way is it noiseless?"

"Why, madam, it's constructed in such a manner that—er—you don't make a noise when you're using it."

Only a few people can follow the lines of least resistance and obey the alarm clock at the same time.

To Be Pleasant In the Morning

Have some

Post Toasties

with cream for breakfast.

The rest of the day will take care of itself.

Post Toasties are thin bits of White Indian Corn—cooked and toasted until deliciously crisp and appetizing.

"The Memory Lingers"

Sold by Grocers

Postum Cereal Co., Ltd., Battle Creek, Mich.

The KITCHEN CABINET

I FIND earth not gray but rosy;
Heaven not grim but fair of hue.
Do I stoop? I pluck a posy.
Do I stand and stare? All's blue.
—Robert Browning.

HELPFUL HINTS.

A nice little arrangement to use for a birthday cake is the cover of a candy pail. Have holes bored around the board deep enough to hold a candle, stain it any desired color and rest the cake in the center with the candles around it. Of course many more holes may be bored than needed, as the candles used need not fill each place. In this manner each member of a large family has the use of the candle board. It is safe, pretty and economical.

To loosen glass stoppers, pour a little oil around the mouth of the bottle and let it stand an hour of two; if the stopper is not loosened then, set the bottle in a dish of warm water. When hot remove and gently tap the stopper on either side and it will come out easily.

To wash chamois gloves: These gloves are serviceable, and if kept clean are the most satisfactory of gloves. When washing them, put on the hands and wash as you would your hands, rubbing on soap and rinsing all of it off, then wipe as dry as possible on a towel and leave for a few moments on the hands to dry. Pin up in an open window or hang in the air to dry. Do not lay them on a radiator or register to dry.

When you have the tough end of a steak, cut it into cubes and pour over water to cover. Add a small piece of carrot and onion and a potato or two and cook until tender. If the meat has not been previously cooked, brown it in a little hot suet.

Keep a well-corked bottle of chloroform to use in removing spots from delicate fabrics. Rub briskly and there will be no ring to mark the spot.

When a little onion juice is desired in any food, cut off a slice of unpeeled onion and press against the groove, working with a rotary motion. The juice will flow down the groove.

ONE topic is peremptorily forbidden to rational mortals, namely, their distempers. If you have not slept, or if you have slept, or if you have the headache, or leprosy, or thunderstroke, I beseech you by all the angels to hold your peace, and not pollute the morning. Come into the azure and enjoy the day. —Emerson.

A NUTRITIOUS DINNER.

Turkish Soup.—Cook a fourth of a cup of rice in five cups of soup stock until soft. In one and a half cups of tomatoes cook a bay leaf, two slices of onion, one teaspoon of pepper corns, a fourth of a teaspoon of celery salt for fifteen minutes. Combine mixtures, rub through a sieve and thicken with two tablespoonfuls of butter and a tablespoon and a half of flour.

Beef Steak Pie.—Cut remnants of cold broiled steak or roast beef in small pieces, cover with boiling water, add a half an onion and cook an hour very slowly. Remove the onion and thicken with a little flour stirred into cold water, season with salt, pepper. Add half as much potato as meat, cut in cubes and parboil until nearly soft. Put into a buttered pudding dish and when cool cover with baking powder biscuit. Steam until the crust is cooked, then bake in the oven until brown.

Russian Salad.—Prepare each of the vegetables separately and marinate (season) with French dressing. Take one cupful each of cold cooked carrots, potatoes, peas, beans and arrange in four sections on lettuce leaves. Cover each section with mayonnaise dressing. Garnish with hard cooked egg whites cut in rings and the yolks put through a ricer, and sprigs of parsley.

Mock Macaroon Ice Cream.—Mix together one tablespoonful of flour, a cup of sugar and one-eighth of a teaspoon of salt; add a beaten egg, then gradually two cups of scalded milk. Cook over hot water for twenty minutes, stirring constantly at first, then add a quart of cream, a tablespoonful and a half of vanilla. Cool and freeze; when half frozen add a cup of dry brown bread crumbs.

LET us sometimes live—be it only for an hour, and though we must lay all else aside—to make others smile. —Charles Wagner.

COMPANY DISHES.

For occasions when one is to entertain we like to prepare something that will be more appetizing. Here are a few dishes that may be used and will prove highly satisfactory:

Fricasee of Oysters.—Put a quart of oysters into their own boiling liquor, remove as soon as the edges curl. Drain the oysters and put into a hot dish. Into [illegible]

Defective Page

Good Jokes

Bliss From the Proverb.

There's an old codger in Boston who affects to despise a college education. He never had one; he's very successful, and he doesn't see that a university training could have made him any more so. Therefore he sneers at some of the younger fellows who have had more educational advantages.

The other day he was calling down a college subordinate. "If that's all your gilt edged eddication has taught ye," he growled, "by gosh, young feler, I'm thankful for my ignorance."

"Sir," the young fellow answered, bowing respectfully, "you have much to be thankful for."

No Room for Doubt.

The afternoon was warm, holidays were approaching and the teacher was almost worn out in trying to drum the elements of grammar into the wooden craniums of her pupils.

"Now, Johnny," she said, wearily, "tell me—would it be proper for you to say 'You can't learn me nothing?'"

Johnny looked thoughtful for a moment and replied in a tone of conviction:

"Yes, mum."

The teacher sighed.

"Why, Johnny?" she asked. "Tell me why."

And now the answer came quick and pat:

"'Cause yer can't!" said Johnny, triumphantly.—Answers.

True to His Promise.

"Dearest, will you let me share your every sorrow after we are married?" she whispered as she cuddled her cheek against his.

"Yes, darling," he replied, again plucking a delicious kiss from her sweet lips.

It was the same lady who two years later wearily cried out:

"Oh, Tom, why can't you ever come into the house without bringing a tale of trouble with you? I'm so sick of hearing about how hard you have to work to keep the bills paid."

A Good Beginning.

Knicker—Do the trains stop at your suburb?

Bocker—They may in time; the place is only ugly enough now to stop a clock.

Liked Squalling Baby.

"I like to hear a baby cry," said the crusty old bachelor.

"Why?"

"Because, then, the little nuisance is taken out of the room."

SURE OF IT.

The Country Deacon—There must have been a stranger in church this morning.

The Parson—Did you see him?

The Country Deacon—No; but I found a five-dollar note in the collection.

"Extra Release."

"Every little movement"
Togo made while here
In a moving picture
Shortly will appear.

Time Saving.

"So you do not regret being divorced?"

"Certainly not," replied Mrs. Flimgilt. "It's ever so much pleasanter for both John and myself to have my expenses provided for by a regular remittance without any of the formalities or annoyances of personal correspondence."

On the Stump.

"When I arose to speak," related the martyred statesman, "some one threw a base, cowardly egg at me."

"And what kind of an egg might that be?" asked an attentive listener.

"A base, cowardly egg," explained the statesman, "is one that hits you and then runs."

Airy Persiflage.

Jack—Just saw Miss Loveleigh landing from the steamer. Isn't she a poem?

Tom—Yes, and I suppose the poem has been abroad looking for a title.

Jack—Well, I don't think she'd be a-verse to one.

Making a Monkey of Him.

"He says he is going to look up his family tree."

"He had better make sure first that there are none of his ancestors swinging up there ready to throw nuts at him."

Father's Definition.

Tommy—Pop, what is a bigamist?"

Tommy's Pop—A bigamist, my son, is a man with more wives than brains."

WHY SHE DIDN'T WIN.

They were at Monte Carlo, and, like other visitors to that insidious paradise, they considered the Casino a place which ought to be visited. They stood hesitating before one of the tables, and at last the temptation to join the players proved too strong for the lady.

"I must risk just one ten-dollar note," she said to her husband. "Give me one, darling, and I will put it on the number of my age. That is sure to be lucky."

Hubby was inclined to be skeptical, but of course he might have spared himself the trouble of grumbling, and the ten-dollar note was duly deposited on No. 24.

Alas! No. 36 proved to be the winning numeral, and the lady gave a little gasp of despair.

"Serves you right," said her great brute of a husband. "If you'd told the truth you'd have won!"—Tid-Bits.

THE BRUTE.

Mrs. Newwed (after the honeymoon)—You seem to be sorry you ever married me.

Mr. Newwed—You are unusually observant today.

A Warning.

There never was a motor car—
We say it o'er again—
There never was a motor car
That could outpush a train.

A Youthful Quibbler.

Caller—So you go to school, do you, little man? Let me hear you spell "bread."

Bobby—B-r-e-d.

Caller—The dictionary spells it with an "a."

Bobby—You didn't ask me how the dictionary spells it; you asked me how I spelt it.

Not Quite.

Magistrate—Was the defendant right in declaring he was shot?

Conscientious Officer—Well, your honor, he was half right.

Magistrate—What do you mean by half right?

Conscientious Officer—He was half shot.

Mountain Lore.

"Any fish in this brook?"

"Government stocked it with trout once," replied the old-timer.

"But they won't come near a hook."

"They do seem smarter than other fish. I reckon maybe they had to pass a civil service examination 'fore the government would notice 'em."

Hard to Find.

"Decided where you are going on your vacation yet?"

"No; can't seem to find the right spot."

"What sort of a place are you looking for?"

"A place where my pocketbook can enjoy a vacation as well as its owner."

EASY GETTING IN THEN.

Mr. Wilson—How did an old sinner like you, Rastus, ever manage to get into church?

Rastus—I'm one ob de charter members, sah.

Hurrah for Him.

All hail the man of kindly parts,
Of peace the prop:
The fellow who, whate'er he starts,
Knows when to stop.

Consoling.

Tommy—You're not so awful homely. I know two or three girls that aren't so much better lookin' than you."—Life.

The Way.

"To strike in—"

"Yes?"

"Is the way to win out."

NOTES from MEADOWBROOK FARM

By William Pitt

Oats make an excellent ration for laying hens.

Late in the fall is a good time to hatch spring chicks in some sections.

Shorts are more economical feed for sows and growing pigs than corn.

The deepest mudhole and steepest hill measure the real distance to market.

Turkeys will soon become weak and subject to disease where inbreeding is practiced.

Where there is plenty of skimmed milk, beef scraps for hens need not be bought.

When the hogs fail to gain at least a pound a day it is time to say good by to them.

Get your cows started right for the coming cold weather and they will do well all winter.

Build a warm, dry and otherwise comfortable room for the calves for the cold weather.

When selecting a cow for the dairy look and see if the eye of the animal is large and full.

This is the time of the year when dairy cattle require better care and more liberal feeding.

To thoroughly clean milk utensils they first should be rinsed with cold water, to remove all particles of milk.

The successful feeding of lambs depends largely on their being offered great variety of food while in the yards.

Peach trees can be planted any time between last and first frost; the earlier in the winter they are planted the better.

Keep all the rotten fruit well cleaned up around the orchard, as these constitute the winter quarters of numerous orchard pests.

If all of the garden space is to grow profitable crops, no large trees must stand closer than thirty to fifty feet from the garden fence.

The calf that is expected to develop into a strong and profitable cow should be given all the chance possible during its early period of growth.

The best results are usually obtained from the work that is systematized and most carefully planned. This is not always the hardest work on the farm.

The best way to stop a hog from eating chickens is to put it on the market as soon as possible, since it will soon lead other hogs into the bad habit.

The best milking pail is the one so constructed that it will reduce to a minimum the amount of dirt falling into the milk during the process of milking.

An old horseman says that the chief cause of colic in horses, or the cause of the largest per cent. of these cases, is brought through long abstinence from water.

Do not neglect to secure a good supply of fine dust for the fowls during the coming winter, while the ground is yet dry and there is dust in the road.

There is much difference in the individuality of cows and their powers to produce milk as there is in men and their powers to perform certain kinds of work.

The profit in a cow comes from the extra amount of milk she will yield over what she ordinarily gives on common pasture or the coarse feeds usually given her.

The poultry raiser who notes his flock carefully, taking into account what they are doing, and capable of doing, ought to know more how to feed and what to feed, than anyone advising at long range.

It is very dangerous to pasture stock on second growth sorghum or Johnson grass, as this year has been dry in many sections and these crops have been grown under unfavorable conditions.

Skim milk is a good food for poultry. The fat has been taken from it and leaves it proportionately rich in protein, which is a very desirable element in poultry food. Use it to mix a mash for the chickens. You may also give them all the milk they will drin

Winter is coming, batten the cracks

Sour milk is caused by dirt and warmth.

What water is to a person a dust bath is to a hen.

See that your fowls are absolutely free from vermin.

If the feathers are to be sold, ducks must be dry picked.

There is profit in breeding turkeys up to the fifth year.

The value of butter increases as the quality improves.

A good horseman never trots a draft horse, even when he has no load.

Laying hens need from 15 to 25 per cent meat scraps added daily to their mash.

Don't feed hay or other forage, which will raise a dust, before or during milking.

Tainted, musty or mouldy feeds should never be served in the dairy herd rations.

The best market for skim milk on the farm is afforded by good dairy calves and quick growing pigs.

If the cream in the churn foams up and runs over, the churn is too full or the cream is improperly ripened.

Simply because a calf is given her ration of milk each day, it does not signify that she does not need water also.

Cholera and other diseases of swine attack herds which are in poor condition and consequently most susceptible.

If your horse is troubled with indigestion have the animal clipped and its teeth attended to by a veterinarian.

Until recent years the poultry business, especially on the farms, was of so little importance that not much attention was paid to it.

Prune out old canes of raspberries and blackberries and burn them. Thin the hills to three or four shoots. Cultivate, and add some manure to the soil.

The red mites or lice do not stay on the fowls during the daytime, but hide in cracks during the day, sallying forth after dark to seek their prey.

Orchardists who have never used dynamite should be sure to get all possible information from the manufacturers of the explosive before attempting to use it.

If celery is to be brought into the cellar for winter storage cut the top root, lift it from the ground and then with a strong knife cut off the branching roots and most of the earth.

Lousy fowls are necessarily weaker than fowls that are free from lice, and strength and vitality are quite important factors while the fowls are producing their new suit of clothes.

If your fowls have the range of the fields and orchards and can pick up a number of insects and worms daily, you will not need to bother much about the meat supply in the ration.

The raising of poultry on the farm or in conjunction with fruit growing, can be made very profitable with the same kind of management that is devoted to raising good stock or good grain.

Everything should be kept as clean on the little chicks' feeding floors as if it is on the floor of the kitchen. If this is done the little birds will never have gapes or many of the chicken diseases.

If you are feeding clover, remember to cut down the bulk. This is a hearty food and you can't use as much of it as you can of timothy without doing your horse harm.

In filling a silo attention must be given to the outer edges, for when the silage begins to settle there is always a draw away from the wall, leaving an air space that makes the silage spoil.

There is no better germ slayer than an ounce of carbolic acid added to a pail of whitewash. Give the walls and ceiling of the hen house a good coating, working it in rather thick in all cracks and crevices.

There is not a farm in the country where farming is seriously attempted at all where it is necessary to try to raise chickens without decent provision for the safety of the flock and for the convenience of the attendant.

With eggs bringing an average of over 20 cents a dozen and market poultry at 15 cents a pound and over, it is an easy matter to show paper profits that leave most other lines of farming clear round the corner.

The filling of the silo and thus providing a supply of palatable and succulent feed for the stock for the entire year is not only a sign of progress but is an indication that the farmer so doing is producing milk or beef more easily and economically than his neighbors who have no silo.

HIS ATTITUDE

By ANNIE HENRICHSEN

(Copyright, 1911, by Associated Literary Press.)

The new light in her eyes caught Wayne's attention as soon as he entered the room.

"What is it?" he asked. "Something very good, is it not?"

"You know? How did you find out?"

"I don't know anything. Tell me."

She shook her head. "Not yet, Rob."

"Jean," he asked abruptly, "is it about Halstead?"

"No, it is not."

"Some time you will tell me that you intend to marry him and when that time comes—"

"Hush, Rob."

"You love him, don't you?"

"You have no right to question me."

"You know that ever since you were a little girl I have loved you beyond anything in my life. We have been the truest and best of friends. But for several months Halstead has had all your time and thoughts. I have no right to complain. You don't love me. I have no claim. Well, we'll not talk of that. You are looking very happy tonight. Something truly great has happened to you. What is it?"

"I'll tell you soon, Rob, but not—not just yet."

She glanced a little anxiously at the clock.

"I am going," he announced. "When you are ready to tell me, Jean, the glorious thing which has added a new charm to the sweetest face in the world, you will find a deeply interested man."

A few minutes later Halstead came.

"How delightful your fire is," he exclaimed as he entered the room.

He sat down in a large easy chair before the hearth. "I have had a busy day," he remarked. "I've been in court since early this morning."

"A successful lawyer has a hard life. If you were not so brilliant and so clever you would not have to spend all your time handling important cases."

He settled himself more comfortably in his chair and smiled approvingly at her. "I am having a measure of success, of course," he said, a little pompously.

"A great deal of success," she amended.

His smile deepened. "To a man success means more than anything else the power to achieve a definite aim is the most satisfactory gift the gods grant."

"How Do You Know?"

"The power to achieve means much to a woman."

"Does it?" he said, a little absently.

"Ambition has its place in a woman's life."

"Certainly it has. Social position, wealth, beauty popularity are desires of every woman."

Jean's glowing face lost a little of its joy. "I don't mean those things. The world's recognition of one's ability to do something really worth while is as satisfactory to a woman as it is to a man."

"How do you know?" he asked quizzically.

She turned from him and looked into the blazing fire. Her hands were clasped tightly on her knees. Her breath was coming quickly.

"I know," she said softly with the quiet of a great happiness in her voice, "I know, because recognition has come to me."

"To you?"

She nodded, unable for a moment to speak. "I have had a book accepted. The letter from the publishers came today. I have told no one else. I—I wanted you to be the first to know."

"You have written a book? I did not know you had literary aspirations."

"I have always wanted to do something that would stand as proof that I was not merely an idle, happy girl. I began to write stories while I was still in school. For years I have written constantly and without the least encouragement or success. I have never told my family or my friends. Editors have been bombarded with my unfavorable manuscripts. I have had a long, long time of bitter disappointment and discouragement and heartache. At last the first success has come. Behind it there is a tragedy of many failures. Perhaps that is why, now that it has come, it is very precious; it has cost a great price."

"What sort of story is it?"

"It is the simple little story of the childhood good times of myself and some of my friends. I wrote of the things that as a little girl I loved."

"A juvenile book?" There was distinct disappointment in his voice. "I supposed you had written a novel."

A surprised, startled look came into her eyes. "What difference does it make what sort of book it is?" she asked. "The wonderful thing is that I have done something sufficiently good to win the approval of a critical editor."

"Literature is an interesting vocation," he said, patronizingly. "I am glad you have taken it up. I intend to write a novel when I have time. I may do it next summer during my vacation."

After he had gone she sat for a long time before the fire. There was no joy in her eyes, and her face was white and tired.

A clear, trilling whistle called her from her reverie. She went into the hall and opened the front door.

"Come in, Rob."

"I saw you sitting alone as I came up the street and I saluted you. I didn't expect such good luck as an invitation in. Why, Jean," he exclaimed, as the light in the library showed the change in her face, "what is the matter? There is something wrong."

"There is not, Rob, I have had a book accepted."

"What? A book? You have written a book?"

"And an editor has accepted it."

"Of course he has. Any editor that you would honor with a manuscript would accept it. Jean, I'm so glad. I can't tell you how glad. I'll wager it's the very best book that has ever been written. But how hard you must have worked. You are such a conscientious person that you put your whole soul into everything you do, and this book must represent long hours of work, the careful expression of your personality and the realization of a dream."

The joy, greater than before, had come back to her eyes. "Rob," she said solemnly, "you are the most understanding person I have ever seen."

The understanding person looked slightly bewildered. "I want to see the book immediately. I can't wait till it is published. Let me see the manuscript."

"It is only a simple, little tale of my own childhood."

"Then it is the story of a most adorable little girl who became an adorable, thoughtful, ambitious woman. Of course Halstead is immensely pleased and proud."

"He is not. He does not realize what my accepted book means to me. He does not understand, as you do, that a woman has ambitions as real as a man's, and that for them she is willing to work and to suffer as a man does. He is so—so interested in himself and so proud of himself. Rob, a man's attitude toward a woman's dearest interest may decide her regard for him." She laid her hands on his shoulders and looked steadily into the eyes in which she saw the reflection of her own rapture and exaltation. "Your attitude, Rob, toward my little dream. You understand the dream. Don't you understand something else, Rob, dear?"

Saved by Bad Handwriting.

Lord Curzon, when a young man at college, once found his bad handwriting stand him in good stead. Writing two letters, one to a relative, the other to a chum, he inclosed them in the wrong envelopes. It chanced that in the second letter he had made some uncomplimentary reference to his relative, and on discovering the mistake he had made he awaited developments with anxiety. There presently came a letter from the uncle. "I have tried hard to decipher your epistle," it ran, "but your writing is so atrocious that I cannot make head or tail out of it. However, I guess the drift of it to be that you need some money, you rogue, so I inclose a check."

Wedding Cake Pagoda.

At Mingun, on the right bank of the Irrawaddy river, about five miles from Mandalay, in Burma, there stands a peculiar pagoda known as the Wedding Cake Pagoda, because it looks like a marvelously magnified bridal cake. It was built in the early part of the nineteenth century, and is in thoroughly good preservation, only a few of the images inside having been broken. The extreme height to the top of the minaret is 80 feet and the circumference about 600 feet. The pagoda stands back from the river some 300 feet and is hidden from it by a grove of teak trees. Close to it is the famous Mingun bell.—Wide World.

How Birds Keep Warm.

The high temperature of birds enables them to resist cold effectively. Blood heat in a man is 98.4 Fahrenheit, while it is 107 degrees in the domestic fowl, and more in some other birds. In some cases they feel the cold cruelly, regardless of their temperatures. Many of the larger birds have the hottest temperatures, as a great deal of their flying is done in high altitudes.

MINNESOTA
HISTORICAL SOCIETY.

THE NORTHERN LIGHT

VOL. I. HOLT, MARSHALL COUNTY, MINNESOTA, FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 17, 1911 NO. 16.

1911 CORN CROP

GOVERNMENT CROP REPORT SHOWS SHORTAGE COMPARED WITH 1910.

2,776,301,000 BUSHELS

Estimate Potato Yield 281,735,000 Bushels—Average Weight of Wheat 57.8 Pounds to the Bushel.

Washington, D. C. — The crop reporting board of the bureau of statistics of the United States department of agriculture, in its November crop report, estimates from the reports of its correspondents and agents, the yield per acre, total production and quality of the principal crops, not already announced, as follows:

Corn—Production, 2,776,301,000 bushels, compared with 3,125,713,000 bushels last year; yield per acre, 23.9 bushels, compared with 27.4 bushels last year and 26.0 bushels the ten-year average; quality, 80.6 per cent, compared with 84.5 per cent, the ten-year average. The percentage of 1910 crop of corn on farms, Nov. 1, 1911, is estimated at 4.2 per cent (132,063,000 bushels, against 4.3 per cent (119,056,000 bushels) of the 1909 crop on farms Nov. 1, 1910, and 3.8 per cent, the average of similar estimates of the past ten years.

Buckwheat — Production, 17,051,000 bushels, compared with 17,239,000 bushels in 1910. Yield per acre, 21.8 bushels, compared with 20.9 bushels last year and 19.1 bushels, the 10-year average. Quality, 87.9 per cent, compared with 90.9 per cent, the 10-year average.

Potatoes — Production, 281,735,000 bushels, compared with 338,811,000 bushels in 1910. Yield per acre, 80.6 bushels, compared with 94.4 bushels in 1910 and 92.8 bushels, the 10-year average. Quality, 85.3 per cent, compared with 87.7 per cent, the 10-year average.

Flaxseed — Production 21,692,000 bushels, compared with 14,116,000 bushels in 1910. Yield per acre, 7.2 bushels, compared with 4.8 bushels in 1910, and 9.0 bushels, the 10-year average. Quality, 83.5 per cent, compared with 90.3 per cent, the 10-year average.

Tobacco — Production 790,663,000 pounds, compared with 984,349,000 pounds in 1910. Yield per acre, 885.2 pounds, compared with 797.8 pounds in 1910 and 813.6 pounds, the 10-year average. Quality, 86.1 per cent, compared with 86.8 per cent, the 10-year average.

Wheat—Average weight per measured bushel 57.8 pounds, compared with 58.5 pounds in 1910 and 57.6 pounds, the 10-year average.

Oats—Average weight per measured bushel, 33.1 pounds, compared with 32.7 pounds in 1910 and 31.2 pounds, the 10-year average.

Barley—Average weight per measured bushel, 46.0 pounds, compared with 46.9 in 1910.

Apples—Average production of 1911 crop, 62.4 per cent of full crop, against 43.5 per cent of a full crop in 1910 and 49.4, the 10-year average percentage of a full production.

CANADA RULES ON LUMBER.

Alleged Evasion of Duties by Americans to Be Guarded Against.

Ottawa, Ont.—Minnesota, Washington, British Columbia and Western Canada lumber firms will be interested in an important ruling just made by the dominion customs board. A circular regarding it and giving instructions to customs collectors will be sent out immediately.

A delegation of the Canadian Lumbermen's Association argued the case before the board and urged that there are serious violations by United States lumbermen of the rough lumber provision. Under the tariff, lumber dressed on one side is free. When it is also dressed on the edge it is dutiable. It is alleged that the Americans plane the board on one side and also on the edge, subsequently roughening the latter so as to put it in the class free of duty. A British Columbia delegation supplemented the appeal of the lumbermen's association.

By the ruling now made, collectors are instructed to see that a very close inspection of such importations is made and where the lumber has been edged in any way as well as dressed on the side, it will be dutiable to the extent of 25 per cent.

The Western lumbermen claim that there have been extensive shipments into Canada of this class of lumber, but the imposition of the 25 per cent duty should tend to diminish it materially, at least to prevent what is claimed to be an evasion of the customs act.

Maeterlinck Wins Nobel Prize.

Stockholm, Sweden—The Swedish Academy has awarded the Nobel prize for literature for 1911 to the Belgian author, Maurice Maeterlinck.

FLOURING MILLS MERGED

CORPORATION TO BE FORMED IN ACCORDANCE WITH LAW.

Action Necessary to Compete With Canadian and Northwest Combines.

Kansas City, Mo. — Preliminary plans for the formation of a $5,000,000 corporation to merge ten of the largest flouring mills in Kansas were laid here by six men, representing seven of the mills. They decided that if the milling men of Kansas want to make money, they must merge. Property investments of $3,500,000 were represented at the meeting. Final plans for the merger will be completed before January, 1912.

George H. Hunter of Wellington, who is the prime mover in the merger, says the combined Canadian mills and other merged mills in the Northwest are making the Kansas miller hurry for the flour business in the territory east of Kansas City.

The larger plants, according to Mr. Hunter, have a great advantage because under one management, they can make and sell the same grade of flour to the trade, while the unorganized Kansas millers are selling grades that are not uniform. The result is that the baker is disappointed in Kansas flour.

According to Mr. Hunter, the merger will reduce the cost of flour to the consumer through a saving in cost of production. Strict compliance to the anti-trust law, as laid down by the decision of the supreme court, will mark the merger.

FAVORITISM IN RATES.

Albert Lea and Sioux City File Complaints Charging Discrimination.

Washington, D. C.—Favoritism in rates from eastern points to Minneapolis, and from Minneapolis to distributing points in southwestern Minnesota, as against Albert Lea, Minn., and Sioux City, Iowa, respectively, was the basis for complaints which were under argument before the interstate commerce commission.

In the Albert Lea case it is alleged that the roads are also violating the long and short haul clause of the interstate commerce law. The complaint asserts that the first-class rate from eastern points to Albert Lea exceeds the Minneapolis rate by 15 cents a hundred pounds and rates on other classes are proportionately excessive, notwithstanding the fact that the haul is 101 miles shorter to Albert Lea than to Minneapolis. The Business Men's league of Albert Lea which filed the complaint, has asked the commission to give their city the same rate as Minneapolis.

In the Sioux City case the Commercial club of that city alleges that it is discriminated against in competitive territory in southwestern Minnesota, including such points as Lake Crystal, Pipestone, Currie, Elmore, Fairmont, Ceylon, Blue Earth and Granite Falls. Sioux City had the same rates to these points as Minneapolis up to November, 1906, when a reduction from Minneapolis was ordered by the Minnesota railroad and warehouse commission, the traffic being exclusively interstate. The interstate railroads operating out of Sioux City have refused to meet this cut and the interstate commerce commission has been asked to order them to reduce the rates.

ITALIANS FIERCELY ATTACKED.

Heavy Losses Sustained Before Turks Could Be Driven Off.

Tripoli, Tripoli.—Strong forces of Turks and Arabs, supported by artillery, delivered a determined attack on the Italians all along the line btween Hamidieh and Boumeliana, but principally against the extreme left.

Beginning with a series of skirmishes the fighting took on the character of a general action. As usual, the Turks displayed desperate courage, but were unable to withstand the tremendous combined fire from the guns of the armored cruiser Carlo Alberto, which lay in the roadstead. Therefore, they retreated all along line.

While the Eleventh Bersaglieri were attacking the fort at Hamidieh, which had been stormed Thursday night, they were suddenly taken on the flank by a large force of Arabs hidden in the palm and olive groves and heavy losses were sustained before the enemy was beaten off.

Croker Going to Florida.

London, England.—Richard Croker will sail for New York on the Mauretania, which leaves Liverpool today, touching at Queenstown Sunday. Mr. Croker will go to Florida, where he will remain until late next spring.

40,000,000 Bushels of Wheat Buried.

Winnipeg, Man. — Between 30 and 40 million bushels of wheat lie buried and worthless under a foot of frozen snow on the prairies of Western Canada.

CARNEGIE GIVES

IRONMASTER FINANCES A NEW CORPORATION WHICH WILL MAKE ENDOWMENTS.

CORPORATION ORGANIZED

Will Aid Institutions He Has Founded —Gift Bestowed Amounts to $25,000,000 in United States Steel Bonds.

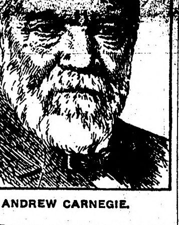
New York, N. Y.—Andrew Carnegie announced that he had given $25,000,000 to the Carnegie corporation of New York, organized here under a charter granted by the New York legislature last June "to promote the advancement and diffusion of knowledge and understanding among the people of the United States."

In bestowing this gift upon the corporation, organized especially to rereceive it and apply its income to the purpose indicated, Mr. Carnegie in a statement given out at his home in Fifth avenue said he intended to leave with the corporate body the work of founding and aiding libraries and educational institutions that he, as an individual, has carried on for many years. The statement follow:

"The Carnegie corporation of New York, incorporated by an act passed by the New York legislature, June 9, 1911, was organized Nov. 10, 1911.

"The purpose of the corporation, as stated in the charter, as as follows:

"'Section 1.—Andrew Carnegie, Elihu Root, Henry S. Pritchett, William N. Frew, Robert S. Woodward, Charles L. Taylor, Robert A. Franks, James Bertram and their successors, are hereby constituted a body corporate by the name of Carnegie Corporation of New York, for the purpose of receiving and maintaing a fund or funds and applying the income thereof to promote the advancement and diffusion of knowledge and understanding among the people of the United States by aiding technical schools, institutions of higher learning, libraries, scientific research, hero funds, useful publications and by such other agencies and means as shall from time to time be found appropriate therefor.



ANDREW CARNEGIE.

"The corporators met at Mr. Carnegie's house, Friday, Nov. 10, 1911, accepted the charter, adopted the constitution and by-laws and elected the following oficers:

"President, Andrew Carnegie; vice president, Elihu Root; treasurer, Robert A. Franks; secretary, James Bertram.

"Mr. Carnegie transferred to the corporation for its corporate purposes, $25,000,000 par value first mortgage gold bonds of the United States Steel corporation."

Carnegie Donations.

Mr. Carnegie's donation of $25,000,000 for the Carnegie corporation increases the total of his gifts for various philanthropic purposes, according to the best estimates, to far beyond the $200,000,000 mark.

His library gifts alone made a girdle of monuments around the world to a man who some 60 years ago began his industrial career as bobbin boy in a cotton factory.

The approximate totals of Mr. Carnegie's donations are:

Hero funds (United States, France, Germany, Norway), $9,000,000; teaching fund, $20,000,000; Carnegie institute at Washington, $22,000,000; colleges in United States and Canada, $20,000,000; colleges in England, $7,000,000; trusts for Scotch universities, $10,000,000; Dumferline trust, $5,000,000; Carnegie institute at Pittsburgh, $22,000,000; relief fund for steel workers, $4,000,000; bureau if American republics, $1,500,000; peace temple at The Hague, $10,000,000; libraries, $50,000,000; international peace endowment, $10,000,000; corporation of "Carnegie Corporation," $25,000,000; totals, $215,500,000.

PROGRESSIVES PLEASED

INTERPRET ELECTION IN FAVOR OF THEIR IDEAS.

Secure Balance of Power in New Mexico—Maryland Safe for Republicans.

Washington, D. C. — The election results of Tuesday afforded little real indication to political observers in Washington as to the sentiment on national issues throughout the contested states. The selection of four members of congress to fill vacancies furnished no great surprises.

While no statement was made by W. L. Houser or other leaders in the progressive Republican campaign headquarters, men active in that organization professed to see a material gain in progressive sentiment in the selection of a Republican legislature in New York and in the re-election of Governor Foss, Democrat, in a tariff fight in Massachusetts.

At regular Republican headquarters, consolation was drawn from the New York and New Jersey legislative returns, as indicating a number of holdover Republican legislators for the 1914 sessions of the legislatures, when United States senators will be chosen.

New Mexico Results.

Albuquerque.—Progressive Republicans will hold the balance of power in the state legislature which will elect two United States senators, according to almost complete returns in the election of members of the legislature. Of the twenty-four members of the senate twelve will be regular Republicans and eleven Democrats and progressive Republicans with one seat in doubt. In the house, the regular Republicans have twenty-one, the Democrats and progressives twenty-four, while three seats are in doubt.

G. O. P. Safe in Maryland.

Baltimore.—With complete unofficial returns from Baltimore, and all parts of the state heard from, the election of Phillips Lee Goldsborough, Republican candidate for governor, over State Senator Arthur Pue Gorman, Democrat, was established. Goldsborough's plurality, it is estimated, will be between 2,500 and 3,000. Both houses of the legislature will be Democratic by safe majorities. Mr. Goldsborough is the second Republican governor of this state since the Civil War, Lloyd Lowndes, in 1895, being the first.

Nebraska Republican.

Omaha.—Indications are that the Republicans captured every state office and that most of the counties returned their usual Republican majorities. The only Democratic victory of consequence was in the Third congressional district, where Daniel V. Stephens was elected to succeed the late Congressman Latta, Democrat.

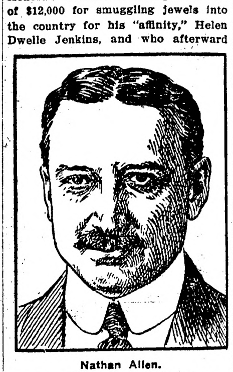
Kansas Congressman Democrat.

Kansas City.—Returns coming in late from obscure precincts and regarded as virtually final, increase the majority of Joseph A. Taggart, Democratic congressman-elect in the Second Kansas district to 1,350. Mr. Taggart's election breaks the solid ranks of a Republican congressional delegation from Kansas.

NATHAN ALLEN QUITS U. S.

Man Who Paid $150,000 for Smuggling, Declares Deal "Raw."

Chicago, Ill. — Nathan Allen, the Kenosha millionaire, who paid a fine of $12,000 for smuggling jewels into the country for his "affinity," Helen Dwelle Jenkins, and who afterward was compelled to forfeit $150,000 to the government for the same offense, has expatriated himself.



Nathan Allen.

Allen has packed up bag and baggage, ordered the whole of the Allen family to follow him and set sail for Europe. According to all reports it will be years before any of them come back. Allen is convinced that the United States gave him a "raw deal" in the Jenkins matter. In retaliation he intends to spend on the continent the millions he made here in the leather business.

CHARITY WORKERS MEET

FOUR STATE ORGANIZATIONS MEET IN DULUTH.

Appeal for Welfare of Juvenile Thespians Made by St. Paul Woman.

Duluth. — The conventions of four bodies of the State Tuberculosis society, the State Child Labor committee, the State Association of County Commissioners and the State Board of Control, met in Duluth in connection with the annual conference of charities and corrections. There will be 300 delegates in Duluth, which exceeds the attendance at Crookston last year by 100. This is the twentieth annual session. P. M. Ringdahl of Crookston is president of the conference. Other officers are W. P. Dyer, Bemidji, first vice president; F. W. Schmidt, Eyota, second vice president; Miss Jean Porier, Duluth, enrolling secretary, and E. T. Lies, Minneapolis, secretary.

Capt. S. J. Hearding is chairman of the local committee of arrangements. Ten-minute speeches were made at the Minnesota child labor commission. E. W. Bohannon presided. "Child Labor and the Stage" was the topic handled by Mrs. C. G. Higbee of St. Paul. Mrs. Higbee produced figures to show that but a small percentage of the successful actors were on the stage earlier than 14 years of age, and that 40 of the greatest actors of the century were not on the stage before 20. Mrs. Higbee argued that the child be protected from the stage.

Henry F. Burt talked on "Child Labor and the Street." He says that of all branches of child labor, the child at work on the street receives the least attention. Mr. Burt urged protection of children from all forms of commercialized recreation that tends to vice. Newsboys bootblacks and messenger boys lead lives which involve exposure, late hours and irregular meals. The situation, he said, was grave and should command general attention.

W. F. Houk, commissioner of the state labor department, discussed "Child Labor and the Factory;" Eugene T. Lies, general secretary of the Minneapolis Associated Charities, discussed "Child Labor and the School," and Miss Elizabeth Dinwiddie of Duluth discussed "Child Labor and Progress."

Charities and Corrections.

The assembly hall of the high school was well filled when the first regular session of the state conference of charities and correction was called to order by B. Silberstein, president of the Duluth Associated Charities, in the absence of Captain P. H. Hearding, chairman of the local committee. Invocation was made by Rev. Dr. Powell, pastor of Endion Methodist church. The address of welcome was given by Mayor M. B. Cullom, and he earnestly indorsed the work of the conference. Response was made by Henry Wolfer, warden of the state prison.

The annual address of P. M. Rindahl, president of the conference, was listened to with deep attention. He recommended that there be more thorough and systematic work in the direction of the prevention of those conditions which produce evils, and said that the legislature had made a good start by the appropriation of $10,000 for the purpose.

Frank L. McVey, president of the University of North Dakota, made a scholarly address on "Quality in Social Service." He declared that there was a crying need of a social program to unite all social workers, and for them all to understand that there is but a single social problem to be solved, though it is one of many phases.

DULUTH CANAL PIER BROKEN.

Diver Reports Finding Large Hole in North Wall.

Duluth—Captain H. H. Thompson, submarine diver, reported to United States engineers that after a thorough examination he had found a hole 10 by 15 feet in size in the north pier head of the Duluth ship canal. The canal piers are built of concrete and have been in place about 12 years. This is the first time that the action of water has had any effect on the piers.

FIFTY-NINE ARE CONFIRMED.

Big Class at Catholic Church at Henderson.

Henderson.—For the first time since 1902, confirmation services were held in St. Joseph's Catholic church. Father Van den Henvil presented a class of fifty-three children and six adults, who were confirmed by Bishop Lawler, of St. Paul. Mathias Bertrang, in behalf of the class, presented the bishop with a generous donation for the building fund of St. Paul's cathedral.

RIGHT OF WAY BOUGHT.

Sioux Falls-Albert Lea Trolley Forerunner For Other Lines.

Blue Earth.—The promoters of the Sioux Falls & Southern Minnesota Traction Company have about completed the survey of the trolley line which is to run from Sioux Falls to Albert Lea, a distance of 200 miles. A large part of the right of way has been bought. The road is to run through the counties of Minnesota, Rock, Nobles, Jackson, Martin, Faribault, and Freeborn, and through some of the best townships in those counties, such as Sioux Valley, Petersburg, Ceylon, East Chain, Pilot Grove, Blue Earth and Barber.

Throughout its entire course the road does not parallel the steam roads, and does not expect to draw its patronage from the lines already in operation. An entirely new field in both freight and passenger traffic will be opened. The towns at the terminals are thriving and growing and the farming section through which it is to run is the garden spot of Minnescota.

The road will make special provision for carrying freight and a wide stretch of country not now supplied with east and west transportation facilities will be served.

The Minnesota offices will be at Albert Lea, and Mr. Knight, the representative of the company in the purchase of the right of way, says he believes this line is only the beginning of a network of trolleys for southern Minnesota.

A. DELACEY WOOD IS DEAD.

Pioneer Editor of the Northwest Succumbs to Pneumonia.

Duluth.—A. Delacey Wood, founder of thirty-two newspapers and pioneer editor of the Northwest, died at St. Mary's hospital in this city. Weakened by age the veteran newspaper man was stricken with a severe attack of pneumonia several days ago and removed to the hospital where in spite of every effort he has been slowly sinking.

This man has had a more varied and picturesque career than falls to most editors. His life work has been mostly that of a newspaper trail blazer. He always was moving onward to new towns to found newspapers and many of the 32 publications that were started by Mr. Wood still are in existence.

Mr. Wood was born at Sauk Rapids, Minn. He organized the first editorial association in Minnesota and served several terms as its president.

His newspaper career started in 1870, since which time he has established newspapers at Prescott, Wis.; Kasson, Minn.; Bessemer, Mich.; Eyota, Minn.; Sauk Center, Minn.; Reedsburg, Wis.; Denton, Minn.; Breckenridge, Minn.; Grand Marais, Minn.; Wahpeton, N. D.; Hillsboro, N. D.; Caledonia, Minn.; Carlton, Minn.; Two Harbors, Minn.; Grand Marais, Mich.; Hermann, Minn., and nearly as many more cities and towns.

STATION KEEPER IS ROBBED.

Soo Employe at Glenwood Is Beaten Insensible and Relieved of $500.

Glenwood.—Thomas Sagvold, cashier at the Soo station, was waylaid on his way downtown, knocked unconscious and robbed of between $400 and $500, the receipts at the station for three days. The station is more than a mile from the business part of town.

Sagvold was found lying beside the cinder path and taken to his home, where he regained consciousness enough to tell that his assailant appeared to be a tall man. No clues have yet been found, but it seems certain that the holdup was familiar with the custom of the cashier to bank his receipts every two or three days, and knew that he had the money with him.

Coming two days after a double store burglary here, the holdup caused not a little excitement. The store of T. Callaghan and Thacker Brothers were entered night before last and the cash registers rifled, but less than $6 was secured in both places.

INSANE; TRIES TO KILL FAMILY.

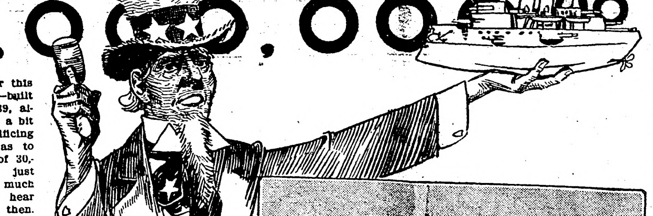
Virginia Man Locked Up After Assault on Wife and Children.

Duluth.—Mrs. Gus Rankola and her four small children were found by a deputy sheriff at Virginia in peril of being murdered by the husband and father who had suddenly become insane. Rankola had a large knife in his hands and was making desperate efforts to kill the members of his family when overpowered and taken to jail. He was violent after being locked up.

Winona's Sons Have Luncheon.

Twenty-five former residents of Winona, now engaged in busines in Minneapolis, met at luncheon to plan the organization of a Winona club. S. R. Van Sant was elected temporary chairman, E. W. Cameron, temporary secretary, said there were more than 150 Winonians now living in Minneapolis and that they represented most every business and profession. He said he had been assured by more than one hundred that they would join the club.

UNCLE SAM'S NAVAL DISCARD $150,000,000



"HOW much am I offered for this fine steel cruiser Detroit—built in 1880, cost me $1,233,039, almost as good as new, only a bit shop-worn, and I'm sacrificing my old naval stock so as to make room for a couple of 30,000-ton battleships I've just asked congress for. How much for the Detroit? Do I hear $50,000? Well, $25,000, then. No? Why, gentlemen, you couldn't buy a tug-boat at that figure, $20,000? Twenty I am offered. Is that all? Going, going—gone at $20,000!"

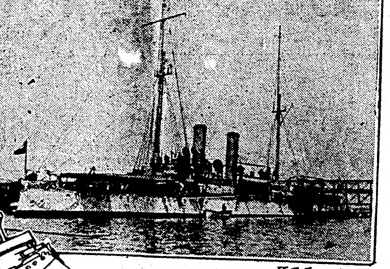
The auctioneer was Uncle Sam, and the occasion was one of his little naval rummage sales, held at the navy yard last January.

Uncle Sam has from $140,000,000 to $150,000,000 worth of battleships, cruisers, monitors, gunboats and other miscellaneous ex-fighting craft piled up in his naval junk-shop. That is to say, the discards, obsolete or obsolescent types, cripples, back numbers and total wrecks at present on his hands cost him the tidy sum indicated for construction alone, not counting guns and equipment. These latter represent a more or less perishable value, too, but that's another story.

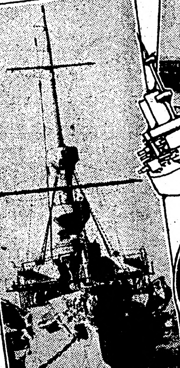
It was doubtless owing to Uncle Sam's reputation for unsentimentality in regard to superannuated war vessels that general credence was given to a recent rumor that Turkey proposed to purchase from the United States the four armored cruisers Olympic, Saratoga, Brooklyn and Raleigh.

This rumor was promptly denied from Washington. Uncle Sam has no authority in law to dispose of naval vessels to any foreign government. Otherwise the idea was not so very far removed from possibility.

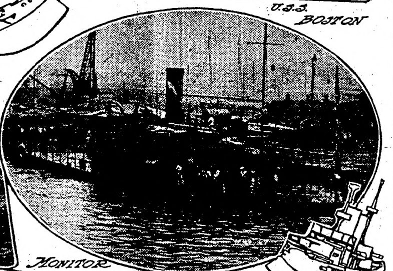
Three of the four cruisers named are at navy yards, or the Naval Academy, the fourth one, the New York (or the Saratoga, as she is called now), being with the Asiatic squadron. The vessels are all of obsolete type, but each has contributed to naval history. The Saratoga was Rear Admiral Sampson's flagship at Santiago, the Brooklyn was Rear Admiral Schley's flagship in the same battle, the Olympia was Admiral Dewey's flagship at Manila Bay, and the Raleigh, also of the Manila squadron, was under command of Capt. Joseph B. Coghlan of "Hoch der Kaiser" fame. The Olympia is at the Naval Academy, the Brooklyn at the Philadelphia yard and the Raleigh at Mare Island.



U.S.S. BOSTON

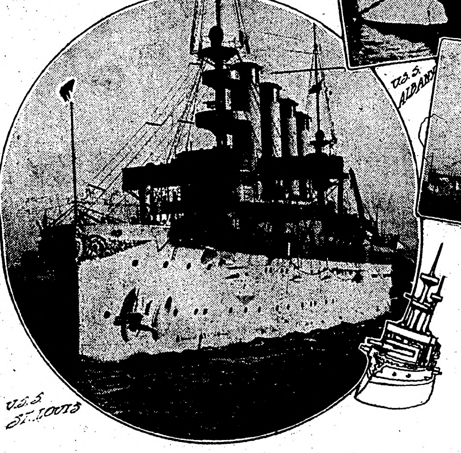


U.S.S. ALBANY



MONITOR JASON, WAITING for AUCTIONEER

U.S.S. CHARLESTON



U.S.S. ST. LOUIS

The armored cruiser Brooklyn, built at Philadelphia in 1895-96, is the largest of the vessels named. She is of 9,215 tons' displacement, and was completed at a cost of $3,067,915. The next largest of the four vessels is the Saratoga (ex-New York), an armored cruiser of 8,200 tons displacement, built at Philadelphia in 1891 and costing almost as much as the Brooklyn. The Olympia is a second-class cruiser, built at San Francisco in 1892-95. The Raleigh is a third-class cruiser, built at Norfolk at about the same time. Both are of the protected type.

Some of the big armorclads are but recently out of commission, or "in reserve"—that means headed for Davy Jones's locker, though as yet the marked-down price tag has not been attached. Others—for instance the $20,000,000 job lot of monitors—would probably be unsalable at any price as floatable or fighting vessels.

Admiral Jack Philip's old battleship Texas, which bore the brunt of the fighting at Santiago, was rechristened the San Marcos, so that her state name might be given to one of the new dreadnoughts. Then, last spring, the venerable war-horse was towed out into Chesapeake Bay and set up as a target for the New Hampshire's big guns and dynamite shells to batter into scrap iron. What a come-down from twenty-five years ago, when the Texas, constructed at a cost of $4,202,121, was a beauty of the new squadron!

Sampson's old flagship is now the Saratoga—having surrendered her name to the newer New York. She has been rebuilt at a cost of more than half a million dollars, and is now in the Philippines—the only one of the Santiago fighters in actual commission today.

Schley's famous Brooklyn, in her declining days, reposes peacefully in the League Island navy yard, Philadelphia. The Iowa, "Fighting Bob" Evans' ship, is in reserve, as are also the Massachusetts, the Indiana and the Oregon—the gallant battleship that Captain Clark brought halfway around the world in record time, without a break.

These and other good old-timers are not yet "all in" by any means. Still they couldn't hold their own in the fighting line with such husky youngsters as, say, the Connecticut or the North Dakota, today, much less with the super-dreadnoughts of the Florida type of tomorrow. Therefore, according to up-to-date standards they are in the obsolete class. When a vessel once gets there, as a rule, the rest is silence.

Even the proud Atlantic fleet battleships of 1907, that in December of that year sailed out of Hampton Roads on the famous around-the-world cruise — the Alabama, Illinois, Maine, Missouri, Ohio, Kearsarge, Kentucky, Wisconsin and New Jersey—are out of the front line now. Some of them participated in the recent theoretical coast maneuvers against New York and Boston, but they were technically "sunk" by the submarines and torpedo boats.

For an example of rapid tobogganing into desuetude, look at the three stately protected cruisers St. Louis, Charleston and Milwaukee, which cost about $3,800,000 apiece when they were built in 1902. Even then, certain Dick Deadeyes of the navy declared that this type was obsolete before the cruiser triplets went into commission. Be that as it may, at the present day these $11,000,000 worth of cruiers are generally regarded as three white elephants which the navy is bothered to know what to do with.

The monitors stand for a picturesque but expensive fad, dating from the infancy days of ironclads in the Civil war of fifty years ago, when Ericsson's small "cheesebox on a raft" in Hampton Roads put the Confederate Merrimac out of business and saved the nation. If it were not for "past performances" prestige there would not be ten million dollars' worth of monitors rusting in the rivers today. Four of these curios, which have been within a decade reomdeled into single-turret coast defenders, are the Cheyenne, once the Wyoming, the Ozark, formerly the Arkansas, and the Tallahasse and the Tonopah, which used to be respectively the Florida and the Nevada.

When a special class craft is tried out, such, for example, as the Vesuvius dynamite gunboat of nearly twenty years ago, she soon either goes to the lumber attic herself or else puts some other type in the obsolete class. In either case, Uncle Sam's scrap-heap grows larger and more miscellaneous.

Such is the universal law of naval evolution. England, France and Germany are in this same naval junk business on a vast scale, and Italy and Austria in a smaller way.

The excuse is the general one of modern militarism—that competitive war preparation is the price of peace. From the financial viewpoint of the taxpayer the high cost of peace is about the same as that of active hostilities.

At any rate, the most recent practical lessons of war are applied with marvelous results of progress to the world's navies, and in no country is this more strikingly exemplified than in the United States.

Walter S. Meriwether, the well-known naval authority, has shown in illustration of the development of gunnery since the Spanish war that in the target practice of United States warships today the percentage of misses is actually smaller than the percentage of hits was at Santiago.

According to the same authority, the idea of the modern dreadnought or all-big-gun battleship originated in our own navy. Years before the first English dreadnought was put in commission American-drawn plans for two such vessels, tentatively called the Feasible and the Possible, reposed in dusty pigeonholes in the navy department at Washington. They were resurrected later in the light of developments abroad.

Thirty-five sea-going battleships and dreadnoughts—beginning with the Indiana, Massachusetts and Oregon group, laid down in 1891, and including the new $8,000,000 dreadnoughts New York and Texas, yet unborn—may be said to constitute the main line of Uncle Sam's sea fighters.

The other battleship groups and types, in chronological succession are 2, Iowa; 3, Kearsarge and Kentucky; 4, Alabama, Illinois, Wisconsin, Maine, Missouri and Ohio; 5, Virginia, Rhode Island, New Jersey, Georgia, Nebraska, Kansas, Connecticut, Louisiana, Vermont, New Hampshire, Minnesota, Mississippi and Idaho. After these, beginning in 1905-6 with the near-dreadnoughts South Carolina and Michigan, come the present dreadnought series: North Dakota, Delaware, Florida, Utah, Wyoming, Arkansas, Texas and New York.

In the meantime, as demonstrated in the mimic "Battle of Block Island" this summer, the submarines have practically proved the battleships vulnerable, therefore outclassed and obsolescent. These maneuvers may be said to have borne out the prediction of a plank in the "Proposed Platform for the American Party, published in 1907:

"We desire that the American navy shall be the most powerful and efficient in the world; but we consider that new inventions have displaced or are about to displace the battleship, cruiser, torpedo-boat and monitor, and therefore hesitate to make further appropriations for these types of fighting craft."

Conservative statesmen in the United States senate have denounced the vast appropriations for armored ships—sums estimated in the aggregate at more than $10,000,000—as a bad investment. They have stigmatized the United States navy as "a lot of old tubs, more dangerous to those on the inside than to those without."

Even in England the day of the dreadnought is beginning to decline, while the submarine—to say nothing of the war aeroplane—is yet in infancy.

At this rate, ere long, our congress may hear the cry of the armed-peace advocates changing to "Millions for development of the diving-boat; not one cent more for dreadnoughts!"

The naval men themselves are not slow to read the signs of coming change.

It may be only a question of a very few years when the general adoption of a 14-inch gun capable of shooting with accuracy at a distance of fifteen miles will revolutionize naval warfare. Such a gun is now in process of trying-out, and if it proves a success it will make all the coast defenses of today practically useless.

"There is no doubt," declares Rear Admiral Francis T. Bowles, U. S. N., retired, "that a fleet equipped with the new 14-inch gun of the latest type could raze New York or any other seaport in less than an hour. It seems to me that the answer to this problem of coast defense is made by the submarine. I believe that the submarine is going to be taken more seriously every year by naval experts. It is the most deadly enemy of the battleship."

Rayo Lamps and Lanterns

The strong, steady light.

Rayo lamps and lanterns give most light for the oil they burn.

Do not flicker. Will not blow or jar out.

Simple, reliable and durable—and sold at a price that will surprise you.

Ask your dealer to show you his line of Rayo lamps and lanterns, or write to any agency of

Standard Oil Company (Incorporated)

FATE AND THE FLETCHERS

Intervention That Made It Certain Hour for Senator's Death Had Not Struck.

Senator Duncan U. Fletcher of Florida sought his berth one night on a sleeping car on the way south from Washington. Pulling back the curtains of a lower nine, he saw that his bed was already occupied.

"Hi, there!" called the senator, shaking the stranger by the shoulder.

The sleeper awoke and protested angrily.

"My name's Fletcher," explained the statesman, "and this is my berth."

"You've got nothing on me," answered the other. "My name's Fletcher, and this is my berth."

"My full name is Duncan U. Fletcher," the senator elaborated.

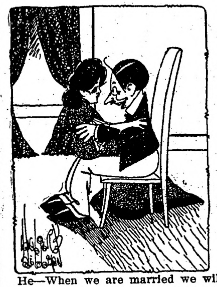
"So's mine," agreed the intruder.

"Ah, I see," said the senator, politely. "There must have been a mistake in reserving the same berth for two men of the same name. "I'll go into the next sleeping car."

The stranger, by this time, was fully awake, and proceeded to apologize, and to offer to give up the berth. This the senator would not do, but went into the car ahead, and found a place to sleep.

An hour later the train was wrecked. The car in which the stranger occupied the lower nine fell through a trestle, and that Fletcher was killed. The senator's car was not damaged at all.—Popular Magazine.

OTHER PART ALL RIGHT.



He—When we are married we will live on bread and kisses, won't we, darling?

She—Oh! I don't like bread.

MRS. SELBY AND PRIZE BABY

"I have always used Cuticura Soap and no other for my baby and he has never had a sore of any kind. He does not even chafe as most babies do. I feel sure that it is all owing to Cuticura Soap, for he is fine and healthy, and when five months old, won a prize in a baby contest. It makes my heart ache to go into so many homes and see a sweet-faced baby with the whole top of its head a solid mass of scurf, caused by poor soap. I always recommend Cuticura, and nine times out of ten the next time I see the mother she says: 'Oh! I am so glad you told me of Cuticura.'" (Signed) Mrs. G. A. Selby, Redondo Beach, California, Jan. 15, 1911.

Although Cuticura Soap and Ointment are sold everywhere, a sample of each, with 32-page book, will be mailed free on application to "Cuticura," Dept. 20 L, Boston.

A Matter of Constitution.

"There's no use talking about women making themselves the equals of men. They never can do it. It's a were matter of constitution."

"How do you make that out? It has been demonstrated that women can endure hardships even more stoically than men."

"Oh, I don't mean it that way. They will always wait for the change, even if it doesn't amount to more than a cent."

A Question of Art.

"Was that play you speak of highly artistic and poetical?" asked the girl who poses.

"I don't believe it could have been," replied the girl who is frank. "I understood and enjoyed every word of it."

After all, young women judge a man more by his accomplishments than by what he has accomplished.

Youth and Age.

"The difference between youth and age was never so well put," said Rev. C. W. Penlow, in an address at an Ocean Grove beach meeting, "as by a playwright who once wrote:

"'Youth, which is forgiven everything, forgives itself nothing. Age, which forgives itself everything, is forgiven nothing.'"

Pain and Swelling seldom indicate internal organic trouble. They are usually the result of local cold or inflammation which can be quickly removed by Hamlins Wizard Oil.

People who take the will for the deed never break into the millionaire class.

A practical joke is never what it's cracked up to be.

Marriage is a contract—and there are lots of contract jumpers.

Don't Persecute Your Bowels

Cut out cathartics and purgatives. They are brutal, harsh, unnecessary. Try CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS

Purely vegetable. Act gently on the liver, eliminate bile, and soothe the delicate membrane of the bowel. Cure Constipation, Biliousness, Sick Headache and Indigestion, as millions know.

CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS.

SMALL PILL, SMALL DOSE, SMALL PRICE.

Genuine must bear Signature

Brent Good

Pettit's Eye Salve STOPS EYE ACHES

Fargo Directory

KODAKS and KODAK SUPPLIES

Write for catalogues and literature. We do developing and printing. Mail orders given prompt attention. FARGO DRUG CO., FARGO, N. D.

Dakota Business College

LARGEST and FINEST between CHICAGO AND THE COAST.

FARGO, NORTH DAKOTA

STONE PIANO COMPANY

FARGO, N. D.

New Pianos $128.50 and up. Write for catalogs. Satisfaction guaranteed

WE MAKE RUGS

FROM YOUR OLD CARPETS

Write for information. Solicitors wanted.

FARGO CARPET & RUG CO., 103 8th St. So., Fargo

Shotwell Floral Co.

Growers and shippers of cut flowers, plants, etc. Write for catalog. Funeral designs on short notice. Phone day or night. Fargo, N. D.

We Furnish Positions To Graduates

A Beautiful Catalog Free

Aaker's Business Colleges

Fargo or Grand Forks

H. H. AAKER, Pres.

Guns, Sporting Goods, Hunter's and Trapper's Supplies, Camp Outfits, Tents, Foot-ball Suits and Supplies. BUCKMAN HARDWARE COMPANY, 57 Broadway Fargo, North Dakota

FARGO TANNERY

Receives hides and skins for tanning to harness leather, robes and coats. Robes lined, hides bought, leather and robes for sale. SEND FOR PRICE LIST.

Andrew Monson, Proprietor, Fargo Tannery Fargo, North Dakota

SHIP YOUR HIDES, FURS & WOOL to BOLLES & ROGERS, Fargo, N. D.

If we get your goods, you get the money. HAVE YOUR BANKER LOOK US UP

WANTED Sufferers from Asthma to know that they can be cured in two to four weeks at the Electro-Medical Association and Sanitarium. Money back if not satisfied. Write for particulars. J. C. R. Charest, M. D., Office: Suite 301 deLendrecie Bldg., 620 Front St., Fargo, N. D.

BUILDERS MATERIAL CO.

FARGO, NORTH DAKOTA

Face Brick, Hollow Block, Hollow Face Tile. Fire Places and Fixtures. Wall Ties, Mortor Color, Metal Lath, Fire Brick, Water Proofings, Prepared Roofings, Ideal Ventilators, Cement Coatings, Asphalt.

PERFECTION SMOKELESS OIL HEATER

In every cold weather emergency you need a Perfection Smokeless Oil Heater. Is your bedroom cold when you dress or undress? Do your water pipes freeze in the cellar? Is it chilly when the wind whistles around the exposed corners of your house?

A Perfection Smokeless Oil Heater brings complete comfort. Can be carried anywhere. Always ready for use—glowing heat from the minute it is lighted.

Ask your dealer to show you a Perfection Smokeless Oil Heater; or write for descriptive circular to any agency of

Standard Oil Company (Incorporated)

ADVENTURES of the WORLD'S GREAT DETECTIVES

By George Barton

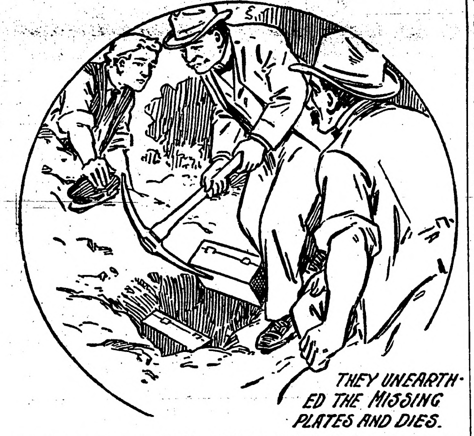
The Great Staten Island Conspiracy

An Episode in the career of W. W. Applegate, once Chief of the New England District of the United States Secret Service

COPYRIGHT 1911 BY W. G. CHAPMAN

NEXT to the duty on imports, the internal revenue tax on spirits and tobacco do more to maintain the government of the United States than the revenue obtained from any other source. Consequently, some of the biggest frauds that have ever been attempted in this country have been embodied in schemes to avoid or evade that particular payment. In recent years few plots of that kind have troubled the national authorities, but during the period immediately after the Civil war audacious counterfeiters not only imitated the money of the nation but also brought forth bogus internal revenue stamps such as are pasted around cigar boxes.

One of the boldest of these schemes was detected during the time that Colonel Whitley was head of the United States secret service. The counterfeit stamps were first discovered in New York, and later on similar bogus slips made their appearance in eastern Maryland and in certain parts of the west. Colonel Whitley was very anxious to break up the whole fraudulent business. He did not believe in spasmodic arrests and the imprisonment of minor offenders. He desired to detect and arrest the principals. With this end in view, he sent for Mr. W. W. Applegate, one of the shrewdest and most reliable men in the service. He told him just what he wanted and said that he would be given all the assistance that was required to make a successful fight against the counterfeiters.



THEY UNEARTHED THE MISSING PLATES AND DIES.

At that time Mr. Applegate was the chief operative of the Secret Service division and had charge of the New England district, with headquarters in Boston. One who knew him well has said that he possessed "good judgment and tact, and that he was clear-minded as well as right-minded." Colonel Whitley, who was a good judge of men, frequently said that Mr. Applegate possessed in a marked degree the requisite qualities for a detective in the Secret Service. At any rate, his persistency and his steadiness of purpose, his zeal and his integrity, had been proven, and he was regarded as the man who was especially fitted to go after the internal revenue counterfeiters.

After he had fully digested all of the facts that were in the possession of his chief, Mr. Applegate journeyed to New York, where he believed the conspiracy had its head and front. For the purpose of his business he disguised himself as a merchant—a Mr. Oldbach, a western manufacturer of cigars who was visiting in the metropolis for the purpose of improving his trade. He stopped at a second-class hotel, and after a few days of parleying managed to get into the confidence of John Breme, a German, who was known to have once been a counterfeiter.

A few evenings together, a few visits to the theater, and a general exchange of good fellowship, and Breme was ready to do his part in solving the big fraud against the government. He introduced the detective to one James Walker, who, after a great deal of talk, mysteriously permitted him to have a peep at the new counterfeit tobacco stamp. It was so perfect that it would have taken the skill of an expert to tell it from the genuine article. Walker said that if Mr. Oldbach was discreet, he might be able to buy quantities of the stamps at a very low price. The bogus merchant said he would take the bogus stamp proposition into consideration. He immediately reported to Colonel Whitley at Washington and asked for further instructions. They came quickly by wire. He was instructed to agree to the purchase of a quantity of the stamps, but was told to have witnesses present so that arrests could be made.

Walker arranged to meet his supposed customer at one of the typical French cafes on the west side of one of the uptown streets just off Broadway. Walker and two of his pals were there. Mr. Oldbach came along, much to the gratification of the counterfeiters. The waiter, a very French-looking person, with waxed mustache, ushered them into the private dining room with much bowing and scraping and shrugging of shoulders. A bright-looking fellow took their hats and coats, and after they had been comfortably seated about a round table, an intelligent waiter, who wore an imperial that made him look like Napoleon III, came and took their order.

The food was good and the service was betetr, and all of the diners united in saying that it had been one of the best table d'hote dinners they had ever enjoyed. They had passed the soup and roast and salad and were engaged on the dessert before the subject of their meeting was even suggested. It was Oldbach then who started the conversational ball in motion.

"Well, gentlemen," he said, "I suppose we will have to get down to business."

"Very well," responded Walker; "I've had a talk with my friends and they say that if you will take the stamps in wholesale quantities you can have them at twenty-five cents on the dollar of the amount they represent."

"That seems quite reasonable," replied the detective. "Have you got any of the stamps with you?"

"Yes," was the response, "here is a package of them," and suiting the action to the word, he handed a big bundle to the supposed merchant.

Mr. Oldbach opened the package, examined it very carefully, wrapped it up again and put it in his pocket.

Walker laughed.

"I think you have forgotten something," he said.

"What is it?" was the reply.

"You haven't paid us," said Walker.

"Oh, indeed, that was an oversight. Well, perhaps I ought to tell you now that I do not intend to pay you."

"What?" cried the crook, and in his astonishment he arose from his seat and stood with his hand on the back of his chair.

"I think I have spoken distinctly."

"Why, what do you mean?"

Oldbach arose now and said quietly. "I mean that all three of you are my prisoners!"

The three counterfeiters looked around the room. The waiter stood at a respectful distance, pulling away industriously at his waxed mustache; the coat room boy was gazing out of the window, taking in the sights of Broadway, while the chief waiter or door tender seemed to be asleep on the chair near the entrance.

It was Walker who spoke.

"Oldbach, you're a fool."

The disguised man laughed.

"No, I am not. I am a representative of the United States Secret Service," and he pulled aside the lapel of his coat and showed the chief crook the silver badge that was fastened to his waistcoat.

All three of the counterfeiters were now standing up, and they looked, in the words of the poet, fit for "treason, strategem and spoils." Walker threw out his arm in a gesture of impatience.

"We're three to one. We're desperate men, too, and if you try any funny business we will kill you on the spot! Do you understand?"

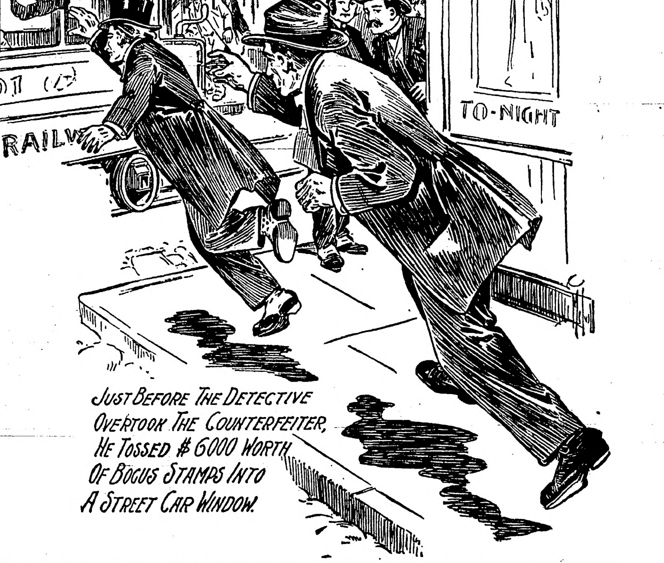
The detective did.

He raised his napkin in the air as though to wipe his mouth, but he changed his mind at the last moment and waved the piece of white linen in the air.

It was a signal.

Instantly the waiter with waxed mustache, the indolent coat room boy and the sleepy door tender made a dash for the table. Before any one of them could say "Jack Robinson" the three counterfeiters were seized from the rear and a pair of handcuffs slipped on each pair of wrists.

It was one of the cleanest bits of work ever performed by the United States Secret Service, and Applegate complimented his three assistants on the clever and perfect way in which they had carried out their respective parts.



JUST BEFORE THE DETECTIVE OVERTOOK THE COUNTERFEITER, HE TOSSED $6000 WORTH OF BOGUS STAMPS INTO A STREET CAR WINDOW.

Bogus stamps to the value of $4,000 were found in the possession of Walker. He was arrested and imprisoned. In an effort to save himself, Walker "squealed" on Volney Wright, a young man who lived by his wits and who had been foolish enough to become mixed up in the great counterfeit plot. Wright, in turn, "squealed" on Phil Hardgrave, who was in the disreputable business, and, at the instance of Detective Applegate, agreed to meet Hardgrave and purchase counterfeit stamps from him.

The corner of Amity and Mercer streets was fixed as the place of the rendezvous. The hour was seven o'clock in the evening, just about dusk, when that section of the city was likely to be deserted. The detective prepared for the meeting with great care. Chief Whitley, Operative Applegate and six other men were scattered about the neighborhood. Hardgrave appeared at the time appointed but he noticed some of the men lurking in the shadows and he took alarm and ran away. Chief Whitley pursued him for several blocks, but just before he overtook him Hardgrave very cleverly tossed $6,000 worth of bogus stamps into the window of a passing street car. A struggle took place between the two men, and after the counterfeiter had been overcome the street car was out of sight. No bogus stamps were found in possession of Hardgrave, and under the law the chief was compelled to release him.

Colonel Whitley and Operative Applegate were persistent. They knew that the tobacco stamp counterfeiting scheme snake had been merely scotched and not killed. They were determined to carry the matter to a conclusion. Hardgrave was shadowed for three months. Finally, one day he was followed to a room on the upper story in a house on Nassau street. He escaped, but Applegate got Hart L. Pierce, an engraver, who lived and did business in the building. Pierce was terrified when he was accused of being an accomplice of the counterfeiters. A search of his place revealed a number of plates and various other paraphernalia used in the manufacture of bogus money and stamps.

He finally admitted that he had made the plate from which the counterfeit tobacco stamps had been printed. In short, he made a full confession of the whole business. He added, however, that the printing of the tobacco stamps had ceased, but the schemers had developed a new line of business. He said that they were now located at a house on Staten Island, where they were busily engaged in turning out millions of bogus internal revenue match stamps. These operations, he said, were being carried on under the direction of a well-known character by the name of Colonel Robert Clark.

For the next two or three days the employees and operatives of the Secret Service were as busy as bees. They first visited the room of Colonel Clark on East Thirteenth street. A careful search revealed upwards of fifty thousand bogus stamps of all kinds and for all purposes. Some were for cigar boxes; others were match stamps, and others still were for war stamps used on bank checks. Even Col. Whitley was amazed at the small denominations of some of the stamps. He knew that counterfeiters had manufactured bogus five-cent pieces, but he was surprised to discover that counterfeiters could make money in forging penny stamps.

All of the stuff found in Colonel Clark's room was confiscated. The colonel himself was arrested, but the news of his incarceration was jealously kept from public knowledge. Chief Whitley and Mr. Applegate were not ready for publicity.

On the following morning the chief, Operative Applegate and six of the best men in the service journeyed to Staten Island. They found the place without any difficulty and made a number of arrests. Some sort of alarm must have been given, however, because the plates and dies were not in evidence. Mr. Applegate walked about the grounds surrounding the building and presently came upon a spot where the earth had been freshly disturbed. He called for picks and shovels.

"What are you going to do?" asked Colonel Whitley, amused. "Dig a grave?"

"Yes," was the significant response, "I think I am going to dig the grave of this business."

The men worked with a will and they had not gone more than three or four feet in the ground when they struck a hard substance. It proved to be the missing plates and dies. They were all dug up and subsequently destroyed.

About twelve men altogether were arrested in connection with this gigantic scheme to defraud the government.

Colonel Clark, who had permitted himself to become involved in the disreputable work, had served in the Civil war with great distinction. He was colonel of the Thirteenth New York regiment of volunteers, and had a creditable record for bravery in battle.

As an incident of the big raid, a large match factory and all of its contents were confiscated by the government.

The Unwise Samaritan.

A certain woman went down from Jerusalem to Jericho, and it chanced that her gown was not fully buttoned up in the back.

Now, a priest and a Levite, meeting the woman and perceiving her plight, passed by on the other side, without saying a word.

But a certain Samaritan, journeying that way, was touched with compassion.

"Madam," quoth he, "your ha—hum—"

"Sir!" the woman thereupon exclaimed, and gave him a look which froze him on the spot.

Whence it appears that discretion is the better part of valor.—Puck.

Easy.

"Doctor, I want you to look after my office while I'm on vacation."

"But I've just graduated, doctor Have had no experience."

"That's all right, my boy. My practice is strictly fashionable. Tell the men to play golf and ship the lady patients off to Europe."

No Sign.

"When Blank gives a dinner, does he show a good cellar?"

"Not when I go there. We generally have it in the dining-room."

White Spots on the Map

It is odd that so much fuss is made about the poles. There is still enough unexplored land in the world to make a new continent, if lumped together.

For instance, within ten days' journey from London there is a tract of country the size of Germany, France and Holland combined, and as unknown as the mountains of the moon, says London Answers. It occupies nearly the whole of central southern Arabia.

This pleasing district is known as the Dahkna, on the "Dwelling of the Void," and consists of what Lord Salisbury once politely referred to as "chiefly light soil," when he was speaking of the French possessions in Africa. It is a mighty waste of sand, with not a single river—as far as can be judged—in more than 400,000 square miles.

Compared with this country the Sahara is a pleasant and fruitful tract. It defies even the Arab and the camel.

Another wholly unknown tract of country—one that is likely to show its future explorers more profit than the last mentioned—is to be found in Tibet, along the lower Brahmaputra, and is about the size of the United Kingdom.

Of course, central Tibet, Lhassa, and so forth, are mere "tripper" districts now, since the British expeditions to the secret city. But the southwestern part of the country has yet to see a white man's face.

It seems quaint that any part of the British empire should remain untraversed by white men. The coast of New Guinea is comparatively civilized and the British portion is administer by the crown. Certain parts of the hinterland, too, are well known—so much so that the birds of paradise which once swarmed in one of two tracts have been nearly exterminated by skin collectors employed by Paris and London millinery firms.

Large portions of the interior, however, are still jealously preserved by families who dine, for choice, upon each other. In spite of this, the whole island is divided between the British, German and Dutch nations.

Perhaps, on the whole, the finest place to get absolutely lost is in the interior of South America, where 300,000 square miles or so are still waiting for the first white man's foot to intrude on any of them. Most of this lies around the water shed of the Upper Amazon and its tributaries.

Many of the names politely ascribed by the atlas to the rivers and mountains here are efforts of imagination. Only a small number have really been reached or surveyed.

The principal joys that await forthcoming expeditions are fever of a very malignant sort, armies of ants that can decimate a baggage train, and even overwhelm and eat its proprietors; impassable cypress swamps and snake bite. The latter commodity cannot be equaled anywhere else—there is no place on the globe where deadly snakes swarm to such an extent and hardly any of them permit the least hope of life after a bite.

Even the natives—mainly harmless forest Indians—have no notion of the way about, but all places are alike to them. They have been known to bring gold dust down from places which they cannot, or do not want to, describe.

In the Himalayas themselves, on the doorstep of India, and no very great way from Siam, there is a district across the border that is still unexplored, and nothing is known of the hill tribes that inhabit it, except by rumor.

According to native accounts it is a country of suffragettes, for the hill women rule entirely, and each woman with the property qualifications has at least four or five husbands, who do all the house and farm work and have no voice in affairs.

Solomon and the Boastful Butterfly.

That Solomon talked with butterflies is a tradition which dates back to the very days of that wisest of kings. The origin of the tradition is to be found in one of the Midrashi, those quaint and ancient rabbinical commentaries upon the Old Testament. The way the Midrash tells the tale is about as follows:

One day Solomon was standing at a window, when a female butterfly perched upon the sill. She was almost immediately followed by a male who settled beside her and began to woo her in butterfly language. Solomon listened to the butterfly's wooing and was much interested when he heard the fair one scornfully reject her lover's advances. At last the wooer began to brag to her of his prowess, telling her what a powerful hero he was and winding up with this extravagant boast:

"I can with one flap of my wings throw down this magnificent stone palace."

The lady butterfly was much impressed by the boasting of her lord and finally yielded to his entreaties and accepted his suit. After a few minutes of dalliance the female butterfly flew away and the successful wooer remained alone upon the window sill preening his beautiful wings in the sunlight. Having him alone, Solomon addressed him in this wise:

"Didn't you know that you told that lady butterfly some terrible lies?"

To which the butterfly returned in astonishment: "And are you Solomon, the wisest of men, the husband of 600 wives?"

"I am," replied the king.

"I should have thought," answered the butterfly, "that you had had too much experience with women to address such a reproach to me. Don't you know that we married men have to say things like that to our wives sometimes?"

Cleaned Out.

Mrs. Grouch—Oh, is there anything I haven't been through since I married you?

Grouch (calmly)—Nothing in the shape of a pocket, certainly.

Defective Page

The Northern Light
CHAS. W. LATTA
Editor and Publisher.

Published every Friday at Holt, Marshall County, Minnesota.

Subscription Price: $1.00 per year, strictly in advance.

Entered as second-class matter Sept-22, 1911, at the post office at Holt, Minnesota, under the act of March 3, 1879.

Be a booster—not a knocker.

The governor has given out a statement to the effect that he does not intend to call an extra session of the legislature. We never expected he would call it; the big interests dont want it, and the people cut no figure.

Some astute politicians of Kandiyohi county started a boom for Prof. Cyrus Northrup for governor a few days ago. They allege that he is the type of man that Minnesota has need of as chief executine. Lack of ability, stability and reliability in the governor's chair is daily emphasizing the fact that the state needs men of sterling character in its high places.

Governor Eberhart says he does not believe he can be present at the coming meeting of the Northern Minnesota Development Association at St. Cloud because he has planned to be in Washington and some other places about that time attending some semi-social functions. He can be relied upon to plan some way to be out of the state every time when he ought to be home giving his personal attention to state business.

Down at Grand Rapids a few days ago a hunter mistook his brother-in-law for a moose, shot at and killed him. Now the man who did the shooting is reported as "going insane." There's a whole lot of them toting rifles around in the woods who really ought to be in an asylum for the insane. A hunter, who goes after deer with a rifle in his hand and a bottle of booze in his pocket, exhibits strong tendencies to insanity and ought to be locked up until the season is over.

Our advice to the public is to patronize the merchants who advertise in the home paper. The home paper does more than any other influence for the upbuilding and general good of a community. Even if advertising were absolutely without merit in itself, the man who advertises must be considered as willing to do his share for the welfare of the community, while the merchant who does not advertise must expect to be considered as not caring, to say the least. But advertising has merit in itself. The advertiser dares not misstate the facts or misrepresent his goods; if he did, advertising would injure instead of helping his business. The man who advertises is willing to do something to get your patronage; he is willing to give you a bargain and wants you to know it. This makes it appear that the merchant who will not advertise is simply looking for a chance to get a crack at your pocketbook and is unwilling to do anything to make it worth your while to spend your money with him. Think it over.

LATE INFORMATION.

The little maid stood in the doorway, one hand on the handle. For a moment she gazed thoughtfully at her father, who was preparing to take his afternoon siesta.

"Papa," she said, "do you know what I'm going to give you for your birthday when it comes?"

"No, dear," answered her fond father. "But tell me."

"A nice new china shaving mug with gold flowers on it all 'round," said the little maid.

"But, my dear," explained her parent, "papa has a nice one, just like that, already."

"No, he hasn't," his little daughter answered thoughtfully, "cos—'cos—I've just dropped it!"—Exchange.

SAVING THE YOUNGSTERS.

Mrs. Booker T. Washington says that the idea of the juvenile court grows very slowly in the south. She says that boys and girls are sent to prison for slight offenses and there associating with older prisoners learn much evil. Local colored women's clubs in Alabama have taken the matter up, she says, and have succeeded in establishing reformatories where bad boys and girls may be taught as well as punished. The governor of the state found the reformatory of so much good that he took charge of it. In Pennsylvania, Arkansas and Kentucky colored women's clubs have been working along the same lines.

SURGICAL SEWING MACHINE.

A New York surgeon has invented a surgical sewing machine, one of the kind that will patch up your lacerations just as a dressmaker or tailor sews bolts of cloth together. And while he was claiming this to be the greatest invention of the age another wizard shouted that he had conquered one-seventh of the law of gravitation, having struck upon a means that would prevent crippled air craft from tumbling to earth. As soon as he covers the other six-sevenths of the situation there is no telling what he shall be able to do.

THE END OT IT.

Boaster—I'm the big gun in this establishment.

Roaster—Well, don't say it so loud, or you might be fired.

WANTED!

500 Subscribers before January 1st

We want to have that number of subscribers by New Year's and will make a special offer that should get them.

An Extra Special Offer to Subscribers who want to send The Northern Light to absent friends. No better Christmas Gift.

For particulars call at this office or write to

Northern Light, Holt, Minn.

HINTS FOR THE HOUSEHOLD

How to Wash White Pique Waistcoat and Make Pretty Neckties at Home.

Washing a White Pique Waistcoat—Remove the buttons with a sharp hatchet, and wash the waistcoat with any soap that is advertised. If there are spots on the garment which do not belong there, use a small scrub brush and white sand. If this does not take them out, dip the waistcoat into hot naphtha. The principal time to be careful is in the drying of the thing. Waistcoats should never be hung on a line or clothes horse but, to preserve their shape, must be dried on the person. Put on the waistcoat while it is wet and stand in front of the fire. Revolve very slowly until it is partly dry, and then go into a dark closet and shut the door. White goods must be dried in the dark. Keep on revolving. As the material shrinks, inflate your lungs to the fullest extent, or, if you are sufficiently puffed up with pride, this will not be necessary.

Homemade Neckties—Very pretty white neckties may be made from ordinary lamp wicks. Choose the flat kind, buying a sufficient number to make the necktie long enough. Join the ends neatly with a drawn-work stitch, and tie in a four-in-hand or butterfly bow, according to taste. A delightful fob chain may also be made from a single lamp wick. The natural color of the wick may be used with duck or white serge suits, but for evening wear the wick should be dyed black.—Judge's Library.

MYSTERIOUS RUINS IN PERIL

Remains of Great City Near Lake Titicaca of Which Even the Incas Knew Nothing.

On the plateau adjoining Lake Titticaca in Peru, the largest lake in South America, are found the ruins of a city as large as Boston. The stone walls of the principal buildings are of excellent workmanship and the gateways are elaborately carved. Some of the single stones weigh over 150 tons. There is some evidence that the inhabitants were the original discoverers of corn and potatoes. At all events, they were skilled masons and had attained an organized civilization. The origin of these ruins was as much a mystery 900 years ago, as is shown by the earliest records of the Incas, as it is now. At present the region in which they are situated is cold and arid and entirely incapable of ripening cereals. It is inhabited by a few hardy mountaineers. It is evident that the climate is entirely different from what it was when the plateau was the center of a large population. This change must be due to the elevation of the mountains on the east, and perhaps of the entire plateau.

ABDUL HAMID'S JEWELS.

One of the most remarkable auctions ever held in Paris is to take place toward the end of November, namely, the sale of the jewels formerly belonging to the former sultan, Abdul Hamid.

It will be remembered that when Abdul was deposed the Ottoman government seized this property as belonging to the nation. Since then they have been stored with the Imperial Ottoman bank, but now the government intends to apply the proceeds of its sale to the purpose of increasing the Turkish fleet.

The collection is very large and varied, and contains a large number of magnificent pieces, although somewhat barbaric to modern tastes.

TOURISTS INCREASE.

The high water mark of tourists visiting Switzerland was reached last July, when the Swiss Federal railways, exclusive of the funicular lines, transported 7,972,000 travelers, and the receipts amounted to $3,600,400, which totals have never been attained in previous years. At present, owing to the weather becoming suddenly chilly in the higher resorts after two months of heat, crowds are coming down to the large towns, while the express trains are also taking away many visitors, especially Germans and Italians.

ITS HAVOC.

"Love certainly does play havoc with a man's anatomy."

"In what way?"

"It makes him lose his head, give away his hand and often breaks his heart."

FOR THE CHILD'S SLIPPERS

Dainty Bag for Her Dancing Pumps That Every Little Girl Will Appreciate.

If you are a lover of children you will not fail to make glad the heart of your favorite little girl friend by giving her a dainty bag to carry her slippers in when she goes to dancing school. This you can make from three-fourths of a yard of a dark colored silk and the same amount of a bright flowered satin or brocade for a lining.

Cut the pieces the same size, fold over once, sew together and run a double casing around the top two inches from the edge.

Ribbon is run through these casings, so the bag can be drawn up tight.

Sewed flat to the lining is a little patch pocket that has a flap which buttons over its opening. In it is a tiny hand mirror, so the little lady can arrange her curls before entering the room where the class is held.

Another pocket contains a small pin book fitted out with various sizes and kinds of pins, not forgetting several small and a few large safety pins. In this pocket is a folding shoe buttoner and in a similar packet is a little purse where the child can safely carry her handkerchief and the change for her fare.

The slippers and fan are carried in the main portion of the bag.

Such a bag would be acceptable and pleasing to any little girl who knows the joys of attending dancing class.

SPOILING HIS FUN

Bronson—Going to the city to hear the election returns.

Woodson—You bet.

Bronson—What excuse will you make to your wife when you get home in the morning?

Woodson—I won't make any.

Bronson—Eh?

Woodson—She always insists on going with me.

HEARING OF ANTS.

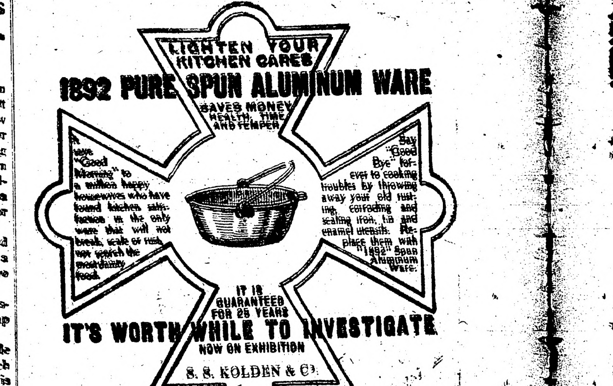
Naturalists generally appear to have accepted the opinion that ants are not able to perceive any sounds that are audible to human ears, but there are those who controvert this opinion. One investigator conducted careful experiments with four species of American ants, from which he deduced the conclusion that these species, at least, were able to perceive sounds, but whether they did it by means of organs of hearing, or through the sense of touch being excited by atmospheric vibrations, he was unable to ascertain. This experimenter inclines to the opinion that ants do really hear, as some individuals showed a perception of the direction of the sound, such as that of a shrill whistle, and others, which were not disturbed and violently shaken in their glass prisons, seemed greatly to be perturbed by shrill sounds.—Harper's Weekly.

NOT SO FAR FOR MAD TO GO

Hewitt—Which can get more angry—a thin man or a fat man?

Jewett—It's much easier for a thin man to get mad clear through.

Subscribe for The Northern Light. Only $1.00 per year.



LIGHTEN YOUR KITCHEN CARES
1892 PURE SPUN ALUMINUM WARE
SAVES MONEY HEALTH, TIME AND TEMPER
Say "Good Morning" to a million happy housewives who have found kitchen satisfaction in the only ware that will not break, scale or rust, nor spoil the most dainty food.
Say Good Bye forever to cooking troubles by throwing away your old rusting, corroding and scaling iron, tin and enamel utensils. Replace them with "1892" Spun Aluminum Ware.
IT IS GUARANTEED FOR 25 YEARS
IT'S WORTH WHILE TO INVESTIGATE
NOW ON EXHIBITION
S. S. KOLDEN & Co.

AXEL NELSON
General Blacksmith Work
HOLT, - - MINN.

All work done Right, at Reasonable Prices.

The Evergreen Hotel
P. A. RESBERG, PROP.

Rates, $1.00 per day.

Serves the best Meal in Eastern Marhall Co. for twenty-five cents.

Livery and Feed Barn in connection.

Red Lake Falls Milling Co.
Makers of the Celebrated
Mascot Flour
and bUYERS of all kinds of GRAIN

Our Elevator will give you satisfaction.

NELS ENGEBRETSEN, Agent - - - Holt, Minn.

Bring us your Job Printing orders

Crookston College...

Is the Leading Business School in the Northwest.

OUR TEACHERS Are all College and University Graduates.

FINANCIAL STANDING It is backed by a capital of $50,000 which is a safe guarantee to its students that every promise will be fulfilled.

ACTUAL BUSINESS The only school in Northern Minnesota having an actual business department.

BOARD and ROOM Can be had in private families for $3 per week. Other school towns will charge from $4 to $6.

POSITIONS The demand upon us for office help is greater than we can supply.

Catalogue and further information given free by writing:

J. C SATHRE, Crookston, Minn.

Local Items

The Local Market.

(Grain prices furnished by Hanson & Barzen Milling Co. at close of business every Thursday.)

Flax	$1.85
Wheat	.93
Barley d	.88
Oats	.39
Rye	.75

Bring us the news.

When in town call at this office and let's get acquainted.

Albert Knutson has returned from Adams, N. D., where he spent the threshing season.

Special subscription offer from now until January 1st. Call at this office for particulars.

W. M. Walker was here from Steiner last Saturday on a combined business and pleasure trip.

Miss Emma Olson left Monday for Fargo, N. D., where she will spend some time visiting with her sister.

Knut O. Flakne came in yesterday from his claim east of Mud Lake and went down to Thief River Falls on business.

Jesse Sorum returned last week from Hillsboro, N. D., after a successful season spent in harvesting and threshing.

Triple coated enamelled kitchen ware at only 10 cents per piece is a bargain that you never had before. S. S. Kolden & Co.

Mesdames Furr, Paulick and R. Schenkey went to Thief River Falls on Wednesday afternoon to visit with friends and transact some business.

Mrs. Chas. W. Latta returned Saturday from Spirit Lake, Ia., where she attended the funeral of her father on Thursday last. She was accompanied here by her brother, Bert Terwilliger, who may remain permanently.

We want more subscribers and will take potatoes, chickens, or wood at current market prices on subscription. Of course we prefer the money, but if you haven't the cash bring on the produce. Don't be without your home paper anyway.

M. A. NELSON, M. D.
PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON
Office over Holt Merc. Co's store
HOLT, MINNESOTA.

Be a booster—not a knocker.

Miss Sophie Olberg is visiting with friends at Crookston.

Miss Julia Knutson returned Sunday from a visit with the home folks out at Randen.

Miss Christine Peterson returned to Thief River Falls yesterday after a visit at the Fosholm home.

Miss Nellie Sorter returned Monday from Minneapolis where she has been for the past year or so.

Louis Hanson, the genial chief of the Hanson & Barzen Milling Co., was a visitor here between trains on Tuesday.

Miss Elvina Severson, who has been staying in Thief River Falls for the past three months, returned to her home yesterday.

Enamelled kitchenware at Kolden's. Triple coated, white lined and the best bargains you ever knew, 10 and 69 cents only, while they last.

S. M. Siverteon, manager of the Red Lake Falls Milling Co., was a business visitor here yesterday from Crookston and found time to make the print shop a friendly call.

For a holiday gift why not send this paper for a year to a friend? It would please the friend and help to boost this community. Call and get acquainted with our attractive Special Offer for such subscriptions.

There will be a big dance given in the Woodman hall here tomorrow, Saturday, evening. First-class music has been arranged for and supper will be served at the Farmers Home restaurant. Everybody invited to come and have a good time.

O. Brenna transacted business here between trains Tuesday afternoon and went to Karlstad from here. He had five big auction sales to conduct before returning to his home at Middle River and expected to be gone until some time next week.

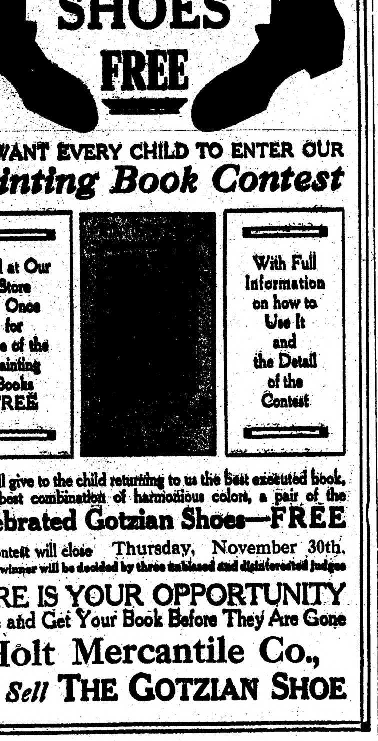
S. Svenkeson returned on Wednesday from Maddock, N. D., where he has been working for the past three months or so. He reports having had a pretty good run of work and is prepared to stay home and enjoy life during the winter months.

Lars Backe, mayor-elect of Thief River Falls, was in Holt yesterday for a visit with his son, B. L. Backe of the Holt State Bank, and was the recipient of numerous congratulations on his recent election to the office of mayor of his home city last week.

Farms Wanted.

I have prospective buyers for a few good improved farms; also for 960 acres of wild land. All must be in eastern Marshall county.

CHAS. W. LATTA, Holt, Minn.



A PAIR OF SHOES FREE

WE WANT EVERY CHILD TO ENTER OUR Painting Book Contest

Call at Our Store at Once for One of the Painting Books FREE

With Full Information on how to Use It and the Detail of the Contest

We will give to the child returning to us the best executed book, in the best combination of harmonious colors, a pair of the Celebrated Gotzian Shoes—FREE

The contest will close Thursday, November 30th, and the winner will be decided by three unbiased and disinterested judges

HERE IS YOUR OPPORTUNITY
Come and Get Your Book Before They Are Gone

Holt Mercantile Co.,
We Sell THE GOTZIAN SHOE

Creamery Statement

Business done at Holt creamery in month of September, 1911.

Cream received	24,937lbs
Average test	29.73
Total butterfat	7,418.63lbs
Per cent overrun	14.89
Total butter made	8,523lbs
Price paid patrons	27cts.
Balance on hands	$533.90
Receipts for month	2,142.70
Paid patrons by check	$1,977.69
Buttermilk, etc to patrons	8.87
Running expenses	151.96
Sinking fund	16,02
Balance on hand	522.05

The total number of patrons was 93, and the following drew checks of $40 and over:

John Knudson	$85.43
E. L. Neilson	63.09
C. E. Smith	52.96
Steinhauer Bros.	50.70
Fred Heiser	49.16
Fred Wegge	46.74
Carl Larson	45.41

JOHN A. SORUM, Secretary.

Grand Masquerade Ball

There will be a Grand Masquerade Ball given by the M. W. A. at their hall in Holt on Thanksgiving night, Thursday, the 30th inst. Special efforts are being made to make this ball the biggest and best event of the year. The best music obtainable will be furnished and supper will be served at the Evergreen Hotel at midnight. Dancing will commence at 9 o'clock sharp and the floor will be under control of the masks until midnight. The price of tickets, including supper per couple, will be only $1.00. Everybody is invited to attend and have a royal good time.

School Report.

Report of the Holt school for the month ending November 10th, 1911.

Total number of pupils enrolled, 18.

Total attendance in days by all pupils, 668.

Average daily attendance, 16.

Those present every day are: Arthur Davidson, Harry Heinze, Frank Heinze, Ernest Silnaugh, Myrtle Thomas, Renie Werner and Esther Werner.

MARTHA MORTENSON, Teacher.

Dr. Dumas Indicted Again

A special from Fergus Falls yesterday states that Dr. Dumas, mayor of Cass Lake, Martin Behan and Ed Davis were indicted by the federal grand jury for conspiracy to rob the postoffice at Puposky. Dr. Dumas was recently convicted for this offence in district court at Bemidji but is out under bonds pending an appeal to the supreme court.

The editor made a business trip to Middle River between trains Tuesday and received some information from some of the business men there that will be commented upon next week.

Crookston College has placed all its graduates in positions. The demand for office help has been greater than we could supply. School is in session all year. You can begin at any time of year. Good board and furnished room, taken care of in private family, for $3 per week. Send for catalog. Address J. C. Sathre, Crookston, Minn.

Engebret Moe arrived home on Wednesday from Milton, N. D., where he has been harvesting and threshing since the first of August. He reports having an unusually good run. Before going out to his Mud Lake claim he called and subscribed for the Northern Light in order to keep posted on the home happenings while he is resting up.

John Batten and son Roscoe arrived here Tuesday night from Donnelly in Stevens county, with two cars of horses, cattle and machinery. Mr. Batten bought the Olson farm, four miles west of here last April and has moved on prepared to farm properly. They brought ten head of fine horses and an equal number of good cattle and their success here is assured. We want more like them.

A GUARANTEE.

"Why are women so ready to marry in the army and navy?"

"Perhaps because they want a uniform affection."

BOY SCOUTS IN RUSSIA

Tiny Warriors Go Through Their Evolutions Under the Eye of the Emperor.

The review of the boy scouts by the czar at St. Petersburg was a delightful spectacle. The vast expanse of the Mars field was checkered by the scarlet, green, white and khaki uniforms of the tiny warriors, whose evolutions were watched with delight by immense crowds. The bright sunshine was tempered by a breeze.

As the emperor and his suite rode down the lines, greeting each detachment, the boys answered in Russian soldier fashion: "We wish good health to your majesty." Each separate command then demonstrated its special aptitudes. To the accompaniment of their own bands they went through drills and gymnastic exercises. The Tashkent battalion produced some excellent fencers; the Odessa contingent, 1,000 strong, showed admirable training; there was a football team, which kicked the ball among the imperial suite, much to the czar's amusement; and small firemen climbed dummy houses. The march past of the 6,000 boys lasted 40 minutes. One little drummer was five years old. A tiny brigade had a tiny ambulance drawn by a donkey. The czar, who was hugely delighted, thanked each detachment, and after the review expressed his gratitude to the officers and the schoolmasters.

The movement is growing rapidly. Russia will soon have 200,000 boy soldiers.

ONCE COSTLIEST OF WARES

Vessels of Odoriferous Clay So Rare Only Wealthiest Collectors Could Afford One.

Vessels of odoriferous clay were imported early in the sixteenth century from Peru, Chile and Mexico by the Portuguese merchants, to which were given the name of buccaros. So highly was this ware esteemed that only the wealthiest collectors could afford to possess entire specimens. Broken pieces were set in gold or silver or ground to powder to be used to scent cakes and confections and to perfume gloves and handkerchiefs. It was also supposed to possess medicinal properties and was prescribed by contemporary physicians for certain ailments. The great demand for the buccaros resulted in the alleged discovery of scented clays in Portugal and the potters of the time used them to fashion all sorts of drinking vessels, on which they impressed a seal or stamp, hence the adoption of the name terra sigillata.

KEEP SHOULDERS STRAIGHT.

Comparatively few people have really evenly balanced shoulders; there may not be much difference according to the casual observer, but a dressmaker or tailor will make no secret of the fault. Of course, padding is resorted to, but this does not always remedy the fault. The worse the deformity the more patient and persistent effort is required. Because the right shoulder dips just a trifle, do not ignore the fact, for middle age will find the trouble to have progressed considerably. Take your place in a stiff backed chair and practice raising and lowering the higher shoulder for 20 to 30 times a day. In fact, practice this exercise whenever the occasion will permit. Keep the back erect against the back of the chair, and you will soon see an improvement.

OSCAR LIKED THE TITLE.

Miss Kitty Cheatham had an encounter with Oscar Hammerstein which is worthy of relating.

Miss Cheatham was making a Fourth of July call on Ambassador Reid in London, and on the steps she met Oscar, who raised his tall hat and bowed low. He clung to Miss Cheatham's side as she entered the house, and she introduced him to the military and naval attaches as the "world's greatest impresario."

"Stay by me," begged Oscar. "You can make them all believe that."

Scholarship for Sale Cheap

We have for sale, cheap for cash, a scholarship good for three months tuition in Crookston College, and for any subject at any time. It is worth $30 but will be sold for considerably less as we need the cash.

Call or address The Northern Light, Holt, Minn.

D. B. Bakke, Pres. S. S. Kolden, Vice-pres.

HOLT STATE BANK
Incorporated June 1st, 1910.

Our List of Customers is Steadily Incrasing.

Why pay out $1.50 in fees for a few Money Orders when a check answers the same purpose without a cent of cost to you? We urge everyone to systematize their business and to pay all bills by check. You not only hold a record of your earnings and expenditures during a season, but also hold a separate receipt for each and every check bearing endorsement. Also, by conducting your business on an economical basis, your balance steadily increases. A surplus entered to your credit in your pass book is a most worthy friend to have and far-reaching in its effects within the community, as it places money in circulation among your fellow neighbors.

Your entire banking business earnestly solicited.

B. L. BACKE, Cashier.

V-I-V-O
The Best there is in FLOUR

Our Elevator and Lumber Yard are always prepared to give the most satisfactory service.

Hanson & Barzen Milling Co.,
OSCAR HANSON, Agent, - - HOLT, MINN.

Want to Sell your Land?
List it with
CHAS. W. LATTA
At The NORTHERN LIGHT Office
HOLT, MINN.

We have a lot of New Goods coming in and they will soon be here.

Watch this Space for future Announcements.

Funeral Supplies always in stock.

S. S. KOLDEN & Co.
HOLT, MINNESOTA.

Defective Page

SERIAL STORY

No Man's Land
A ROMANCE
By Louis Joseph Vance

Illustrations by Ray Walters

(Copyright, 1910, by Louis Joseph Vance.)

SYNOPSIS.

Garrett Coast, a young man of New York City, meets Douglas Blackstock, who invites him to a card party. He accepts, although he dislikes Blackstock, the reason being that both are in love with Katherine Thaxter. Coast fails to convince her that Blackstock is unworthy of her friendship. At the party Coast meets two named Dundas and Van Tuyl. There is a quarrel, and Blackstock shoots Van Tuyl dead. Coast struggles to wrest the weapon from him, thus the police discover them. Coast is arrested for murder. He is convicted, but as he begins his sentence, Dundas names Blackstock as the murderer and kills himself. Coast becomes free.

CHAPTER III—(Continued.)

His journey uptown in the subway which he accomplished without misadventure, shielding himself behind a newspaper, was his first taste of unrestricted freedom—and by that token a delight without alloy.

At a quiet and inconspicuous hotel in the Forties, some distance from Broadway he registered boldly as "Brainerd West, Philadelphia," and paid for his room in advance, explaining that his luggage would come in later. The open stare of the room clerk irritated him but little, whose thoughts were preoccupied with a hundred half-formed and less than half-considered plans.

In his rooms, forgetful of his promise to telephone Warburton, he threw himself upon the bed to ponder the next move; and exhaustion, superinduced by excitement, overcame him almost immediately. For the better part of an hour he slept without stirring, and awakened in the end only to the shrilling, prolonged and not-to-be-denied ring of the telephone by the head of his bed.

Still a little stupid with sleep, he required a moment or two to grasp the import of the switchboard operator's advice, to the effect that a Mr. Cross, representing the Evening World, would like to see Mr. Brainerd West. The message was repeated in accents peremptory before he comprehended that he had been run to earth.

"Ask the gentleman to come up at once," he said, and, seizing his hat, left the room as soon as he had finished speaking.

Ascending a single flight of the stairway that wound round the elevator shaft, he waited until the car began to rise, then rang. As he had foreseen, it paused at the floor below to discharge the newspaper man before coming up for him. As he stepped into the cage he pressed a dollar into the operator's palm.

"Down," he demanded; "ground floor. And don't stop for anybody."

A single minute later he was in the street. Haste being the prime essential of the situation, he dodged round the corner into Sixth avenue, walked a block uptown and turned through to Broadway.

There suddenly, as he paused at the upper end of Longacre square, doubting which way to turn, what to do, he quickened to sensibility of his solitude, and knew himself more utterly alone in that hour than ever he had been throughout his days.

A passing handsom pulled in to his signal. He entered, giving the address of Katherine Thaxter's home.

There was a crimson glare of sunset down the street when he alighted and paid his fare.

"Just in time," said Coast; "I was to come to tea today—I begged the privilege only yesterday. . . ."

He paused, silenced by a presentiment bred of the aspect of the house. At every window the shades were drawn level with the sills. The flight of brownstone steps, littered with wind-swept dust and debris, ran up to heavy oaken doors, tight-closed. The seal of a burglar-protective concern stared at him from a corner of one of the drawing-room windows. Only in the old-fashioned basement were there signs of life; the area-gateway stood open; a gas jet glimmered through sash-curtains.

Heavily Coast turned into the area, and rang the basement bell.

After some time the door was opened to him and he entered, to have his hand caught and fawned upon by the aged butler who had smuggled him sweets when Coast in the pride and pomp of his first knickerbockers had come to stay with Katherine in her nursery.

"Oh, Mr. Garrett, Mr. Garrett!" the old voice quavered. "God bless the day, sir! I've seen the papers and I said that you'd be here, sir, as soon as ever you got back home. I knew 'twould turn out so, sir, from the first; I've never failed to stand up for you and say you never done it. . . . But a black shame it is justice was so long in coming—"

Soames rambled on, garrulous in semi-senile joy. Coast leaned wearily against the wall of the gloomy basement hallway, with no heart to interrupt. At length, however, he found his voice.

"Thank you, Soames," he said, gently. But—Miss Katherine?"

The answer he had foreseen, hopelessly. "Gone, sir—gone this many a day. . . . You know what happened, sir?"

"I can guess. But tell me." He steeled himself against the disclosure of what he already knew with intuitive certainty.

"Mrs. Gresham died—you knew that, sir?" Soames named Katherine's aunt, with whom she had lived after her parents' death.

"During my trial—yes, I knew."

"She never believed you guilty, sir. Perhaps you'd like to know . . ."

"But Miss Katherine?"

The old man shook his head mournfully. "Mad, sir, mad . . ." he mumbled.

Coast caught his wrist fiercely. "What's that you say?"

"I say she was mad, sir, to do what she done, and that I'll say though it cost me my place. . . . It wasn't a decent three months after Mrs. Gresham passed away, sir—you'd been—been sent away barely a month—when she married him—"

"Blackstock?"

"Yes, sir. . . . She didn't know what she was doing, sir. I've thought it was what I've heard called infatuation. She didn't know her own mind when he was talking to her. He carried her clean off her feet, so to speak. . . . So they were married and went away."

"To Germany, I understood, sir."

"You've heard—"

"Never a word—not a line. I sometimes wonder at it, sir. She left me a bit of money to run things on till she returned, but that's gone long ago, sir, and I've had to draw upon my savings. . . . She must know. . . ."

Blindly Coast turned and reeled into the servants' dining-room, where he fell into a chair by the table, pillowing his head upon his arms.

A passion of blind, dumb rage shook him by the throat; blackness of despair succeeded that; he sat motionless, witless, overwhelmed.

An hour or two passed before the butler aroused him with an offer of biscuits and a decanter of rare old port; all the house had, he protested, fit to offer to his Mr. Garrett.

Coast ate and drank mechanically, without sense of taste or refreshment. Even the generous wine lay cold within him.

Still later he asked for writing materials and scrawled a few lines to Warburton, briefly requesting him to look after Soames and advance him money from time to time, according to his needs, pending the return of his mistress.

Then, rising, he stumbled forth into the night, at once unconscious and heedless of whither his feet were leading him, walking far and blindly under the sway of a physical instinct dumbly demanding of him action and exertion.

Midnight found him on a hilltop far beyond the city limits, insensibly comforted by the great calm of the tranquil countryside, blanketed with kindly darkness, lighted only by the arching stars. There was a wind of freedom in his face, sweet with the keen tang of the sea. Before him there was only the mystery of chance, the grateful oblivion of the open spaces; behind him a lurid sky, overhanging the city of his renunciation.

Without a thought of choice, he trudged onward into the unknown.

So, plodding, the night enfolded him to her great bosom, warm with peace.

CHAPTER IV.

To the boatyard and ship-chandlering establishment of a certain Mr. Huxtable in the town of Fairhaven, on the eastern bank of the Acushnet river, there came—or, rather, drifted with the tide of a casual fancy—toward the close of a day in June, Garrett Coast.

A declining sun threw his shadow athwart the floor of the chandlery. Huxtable glanced up from the muddle of papers on his desk. Coast lounged easily in the doorway, with one shoulder against the frame; a man notably tall and slender and graced, besides, with a simple dignity of manner that assorted oddly, in the Huxtable understanding, with clothing well-worn and travel-stained. Out of a face moderately browned, his dark eyes glimmered with a humor whimsical, regarding Huxtable.

The object of their regard pushed up his spectacles for a better view. "Well?" he inquired, not without a suspicion of grim resentment, who was not weathered to laughter at his own expense.

It happened, however, that Coast's amusement sprang from another cause; his own utter irresponsibility, which alone had led him to the chandlery, he considered hugely diverting.

"I was just thinking," he said, smiling, "that now would be a useful time to buy a boat."

Huxtable, possessed of an inherent predilection for taciturnity, liable, ever and anon, to be sore beset if not wholly put to rout by the demon Curiosity (a familiar likewise legitimately handed down to him by several generations of New England forebears), with a mute nod to signify that he had heard and now awaited without prejudice a more explicit declaration.

Carried Her Clean Off Her Feet, So to Speak."

"A boat," Coast added, "preferably of the center-board cat type, with a hard-working motor auxiliary."

The Huxtable mind, which you are to believe typical of its caste, like a ship wisely navigated, moved cautiously in well-buoyed channels. It clung to tradition, whether in the business of boat building, which it pursued to admiration, or in the lighter diversion of humor, to which its attitude resembled that of the ancestor worshiping heathen Chinese. Premonitory symptoms of a reversion to type in the matter of wit were betrayed by the corrugation of the Huxtable wrinkles.

"To go sailin' in?"

After this utterance, tradition flapped its wings and screamed; Huxtable himself condescended to chuckle; Coast, to a tolerant smile.

"Possibly," he conceded. "Have you such a boat?"

"I might have," Huxtable admitted cautiously. "Come along." He rose and led the way through a back door into the boat yard.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Take Your Choice.

"Don't you think, Dr. Fourthly," said his literary parishioner, "that the larger, fuller intellectual life of the present day, with its freedom from the baseless fears and superstitions that have kept the human soul in bondage through the centuries, has been a potent agency in bringing about the demonstrated and well established increase in the average duration of human life?"

"O, yes, to be sure," said the Rev. Dr. Fourthly; "and then people take better care of their teeth nowadays than they used to, you know."

He Needed One.

She—"Jack has a strong face." He—"It has to be. You should see his wife."—Fort Worth Record.

LABOR GIVES ITS APPROVAL

Powerful American Federation Cordially Joins in Fight Against Spread of Tuberculosis.

Direct approval of the campaign for the sale of Red Cross seals has been given by the American Federation of Labor, according to an announcement by the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis. At the last annual convention of the American Federation of Labor a resolution was adopted calling on all the members of the Federation to further the sale as much as possible. The resolution reads as follows:

"Whereas, The American Federation of Labor has in every possible way aided the movement for the study and prevention of tuberculosis throughout the United States and Canada; and,

"Wheras, The American National Red Cross has been in the past and is now making an especial effort, through the sale of Red Cross Christmas seals, to secure funds to carry on the war against tuberculosis, and by means of the funds raised in this manner has been able to do much effective work in this direction, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That the American Federation of Labor give its endorsement to the movement of the American National Red Cross, and encourage its members to further in every reasonable way the sale of these seals in their respective communities."

Insulted.

A strapping German with big beads of perspiration streaming down his face was darting in and out of the aisles of a Philadelphia department store.

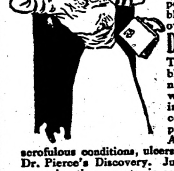
His excited actions attracted the attention of all salespersons, and they hardly knew what to make of it. A hustling young man of the clothing department walked up to him and asked, "Are you looking for something in men's clothing?"

"No!" he roared; "not men's clothing; vimen's clothing. I can't find my wife!"—Lippincott's.

Apricultural.

Mother—Yes, Johnny, the queen bee is boss.

Johnny—How about the presidential bee?



Faint?

Have you weak heart, dizzy feelings, oppressed breathing after meals? Or do you experience pain over the heart, shortness of breath on going up-stairs and the many distressing symptoms which indicate poor circulation and bad blood? A heart tonic, blood and body-builder that has stood the test of over 40 years of cures is

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery

The heart becomes regular as clock-work. The red blood corpuscles are increased in number—and the nerves in turn are well fed. The arteries are filled with good rich blood. That is why nervous debility, irritability, fainting spells, disappear and are overcome by this alterative extract of medicinal roots put up by Dr. Pierce without the use of alcohol. Ask your neighbor. Many have been cured of scrofulous conditions, ulcers, "fever-sores," white swellings, etc., by taking Dr. Pierce's Discovery. Just the refreshing and vitalizing tonic needed for excessive tissue waste, in convalescence from fevers or for run-down, anæmic, thin-blooded people. Stick to this safe and sane remedy and refuse all "just as good" kinds offered by the dealer who is looking for a larger profit. Nothing will do you half as much good as Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery.

DANGEROUS VARIETY.

Caroline—She may be a gossip, but I believe she tells the truth.

Pauline—My dear, the truth is frequently the worst form of gossip imaginable.

No Jury.

"Didn't you give that man a jury trial?"

"Look here," replied Broncho Bob; "there ain't a big lot o' men in this settlement. We couldn't possibly git 12 of 'em together without startin' a fatal argument about somethin' that had nothin' whatever to do with the case."

JUST BEFORE THE TROUBLE

How Could the Listener Know What His Friend Was Trying to Say?

If any man ever admired his wife, that man was Howler. And when the Fitzboodles asked Mrs. Howler to get up and sing "There Is a Garden in My Face" the husband glowed with pride.

No matter that she had a face like a hippopotamus and a voice like an elephant, he sat beaming as she sang, and could not refrain from bending over to his neighbor and whispering: "Don't you think my wife's got a fine voice?"

"What?" said his neighbor, who was a little deaf.

"Don't you think my wife has got a fine voice?" repeated Howler.

"What?"

"Don't you think my wife's got a fine voice?" roared Howler.

"Sorry!" returned the neighbor, shaking his head. "Can't hear a word you say. That awful woman over there is making such a frightful row singing."

Rubbed Hard.

The Venus of Milo explained her missing arms.

"I tried to get the tan off," she said.

Herewith she rejoiced she hadn't used the same method on her neck.—Harpr's Bazar.

We Get a Slap

POSTUM
Brazilian Coffee Grower

The big coffee trust, made up of Brazilian growers and American importers, has been trying various tactics to boost the price of coffee and get more money from the people.

Always the man who is trying to dig extra money out of the public pocket, on a combination, hates the man who blocks the game.

Now comes a plaintive bleat from the "exasperated" ones.

The Journal of Commerce lately said: "A stirring circular has just been issued to the coffee trade." The article further says:

"The coffee world is discussing what is to be the future of coffee as a result of the campaign of miseducation carried on by the cereal coffee people. We have before us a letter from one of the largest roasters in the South asking what can be done to counteract the work of the enemies of coffee.

"The matter should have been taken up by the Brazilian Gov't when they were completing their beautiful valorization scheme."

Then the article proceeds to denounce Postum and works into a fine frenzy, because we have published facts regarding the effect of coffee on some people.

The harrowing tale goes on.

"Where a few years ago everybody drank coffee, several cups a day, now we find in every walk in life people who imagine they cannot drink it. (The underscoring is ours.) Burly blacksmiths, carpenters, laborers and athletes have discontinued or cut down the use of coffee; as there is not a person who reads this and will not be able to find the same conditions existing among his own circle of acquaintances, is it not well for the Brazilians to sit up and take notice?"

Isn't it curious these "burly" strong men should pick out coffee to "imagine" about? Why not "imagine" that regular doses of whiskey are harmful, or daily slugs of morphine?

If "imagination" makes the caffeine in coffee clog the liver, depress the heart, and steadily tear down the nervous system, bringing on one or more of the dozens of types of diseases which follow broken-down nervous systems, many people don't know it.

But it remained for the man who has coffee, morphine or whiskey to sell, to have the supreme nerve to say: "You only imagine your disorders. Keep on buying from me."

Let us continue to quote from his article.

"Notwithstanding the enormous increase in population during the past three years, coffee shows an appalling decrease in consumption."

* * * * *

Then follows a tiresome lot of statistics which wind up by showing a decrease of consumption in two years of, in round figures, two hundred million pounds.

Here we see the cause for the attacks on us and the Brazilian sneers at Americans who prefer to use a healthful, home-made breakfast drink and incidentally keep the money in America, rather than send the millions to Brazil and pay for an article that chemists class among the drugs, and not among the foods.

Will the reader please remember, we never announce that coffee "hurts all people."

Some persons seem to have excess vitality enough to use coffee, tobacco and whiskey for years and apparently be none the worse, but the number is small, and when a sensible man or woman finds an article acts harmfully they exercise some degree of intelligence by dropping it.

We quote again from the article:

"These figures are paralyzing but correct, being taken from Leech's statistics, recognized as the most reliable."

* * * * *

This is one of the highest compliments ever paid to the level-headed, common sense of Americans who cut off about two hundred million pounds of coffee when they found by actual experiment (in the majority of cases) that the subtle drug caffeine, in coffee, worked discomfort and varying forms of disease.

Some people haven't the character to stop a habit when they know it is killing them, but it is easy to shift from coffee to Postum, for, when made according to directions, it comes to table a cup of beverage, seal brown color, which turns to rich golden brown when cream is added, and the taste is very like the milder grades of Old Gov't Java.

Postum is a veritable food-drink, and highly nourishing, containing all the parts of wheat carefully prepared to which is added about ten per cent of New Orleans molasses, and that is absolutely all that Postum is made of.

Thousands of visitors to the pure food factories see the ingredients and how prepared. Every nook and corner is open for every visitor to carefully inspect. Crowds come daily and seem to enjoy it.

"There's a Reason"

Postum Cereal Company, Limited
Battle Creek, Michigan

Makes a Bad Cough Vanish Quickly—or Money Back

The Quickest, Surest Cough Remedy You Ever Used—Family Supply for 50c—Saves You $2.

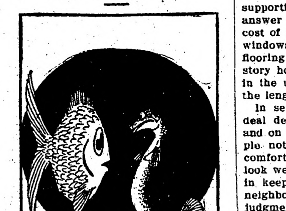
You have never used anything which takes hold of a bad cough and conquers it so quickly as Pinex Cough Syrup. Gives almost instant relief and usually stops the most obstinate, deep-seated cough in 24 hours. Guaranteed to give prompt and positive results even in croup and whooping cough.

Pinex is a special and highly concentrated compound of Norway White Pine extract, rich in guaiacol and other healing pine elements. A 50-cent bottle makes a pint—a family supply—of the best cough remedy that money can buy, at a saving of $2. Simply mix with home-made sugar syrup or strained honey, in a pint bottle, and it is ready for use. Easily prepared in 5 minutes—directions in package.

Children like Pinex Cough Syrup—it tastes good, and is a prompt, safe remedy for old or young. Stimulates the appetite and is slightly laxative—both good features. A handy household medicine for hoarseness, asthma, bronchitis, etc., and unusually effective for incipient lung troubles. Used in more homes in the U. S. and Canada than any other cough remedy.

Pinex has often been imitated, but never successfully, for nothing else will produce the same results. The genuine is guaranteed to give absolute satisfaction or money refunded. Certificate of guarantee is wrapped in each package. Your druggist has Pinex or will gladly get it for you. If not, send to The Pinex Co., 238 Main St., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

EVEN IN THE DEEP.



Mr. Sunfish—I hear that Mr. Black Bass couldn't get on the police force.

Mr. Eel—No, they drew the color line on him.

Distinction.

Senator Lotsmaun—Who is this McChunkerson that wants a consulship, and what claim has he on me for a political job?

Private Secretary—He says he's the only man who hasn't been mentioned as a candidate for governor of Illinois.

Squelched.

Gerald—What do you think of this recall idea?

Geraldine—One call will be enough, thank you.

DR. J. H. RINDLAUB (Specialist),
Eye, Ear, Nose and Throat
Fargo, N. D.

Even the prude has occasional thoughts that she likes to think.

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup for Children teething, softens the gums, reduces inflammation, allays pain, cures wind colic, 25c a bottle.

Every time you meet a grouch hand it a lemon.

MY DAUGHTER WAS CURED

By Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Baltimore, Md.—"I send you herewith the picture of my fifteen year old daughter Alice, who was restored to health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. She was pale, with dark circles under her eyes, weak and irritable. Two different doctors treated her and called it Green Sickness, but she grew worse all the time. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was recommended, and after taking three bottles she has regained her health, thanks to your medicine. I can recommend it for all female troubles."—Mrs. L. A. CORKRAN, 1103 Rutland Street, Baltimore, Md.

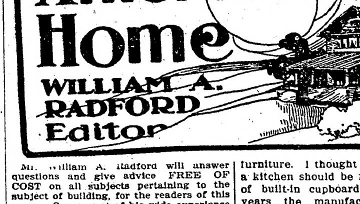
Hundreds of such letters from mothers expressing their gratitude for what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has accomplished for them have been received by the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Company, Lynn, Mass.

Young Girls, Heed This Advice.

Girls who are troubled with painful or irregular periods, backache, headache, dragging-down sensations, fainting spells or indigestion, should take immediate action and be restored to health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Thousands have been restored to health by its use.

Write to Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass., for advice, free.

PISO'S
IS THE NAME OF THE BEST MEDICINE for COUGHS & COLDS



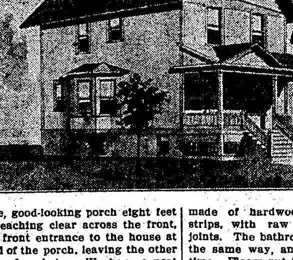
The American Home
WILLIAM A. RADFORD Editor

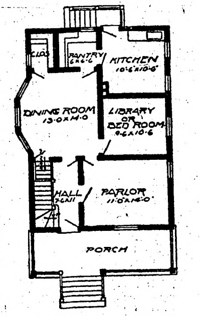
Mr. William A. Radford will answer questions and give advice FREE OF COST on all subjects pertaining to the subject of building, for the readers of this paper. On account of his wide experience as Editor, Author and Manufacturer, he is, without doubt, the highest authority on all these subjects. Address all inquiries to William A. Radford, No. 178 West Jackson boulevard, Chicago, Ill., and only enclose two-cent stamp for reply.

Money may be saved in building by selecting a design that is plain and compact. American houses usually contain six, seven or eight rooms. These easily may be built all on one floor, in what is usually termed a cottage or a bungalow; but it is cheaper in building, heating and unkeep to make the house two stories high, and arrange one set of rooms below and the other on the second floor. A smaller excavation, less stone for cellar walls and supporting walls, less supporting timber, and a smaller roof, answer for a two-story house. The cost of finishing each room, providing windows, etc., is about the same; the flooring is about the same. The two-story house has a little more material in the up-and-down work, and less in the lengthwise measurement.

In selecting a house plan, a great deal depends on the size of the lot, and on the location and outlook. People not only want houses neat and comfortable, but they want them to look well, to fit the ground, and to be in keeping with other houses in the neighborhood. It requires very nice judgment to proportion a house properly to the lot, to the pocketbook, and to the needs of the family. A great deal of subsequent comfort and happiness depends on the manner in which it is done.

There are some very nice features about the house design shown in the accompanying cuts. In the first place, the design is that of a small house, 23 feet wide by 33 feet long, exclusive of porches; and it can be built for about $1,500, under favorable circumstances. Such a price for a comfortable seven-room house is attractive to commence with; then we have a comfortable, good-looking porch eight feet wide, reaching clear across the front, with a front entrance to the house at one end of the porch, leaving the other end free for chairs. We have a neat little front hall with room for a hat-rack at the side of the door entering the dining room. There is a china closet off the dining room, with a little window to light it. This is a great convenience, one that any housekeeper would appreciate. Besides this, the pantry is very conveniently arranged, and the pantry is a good-size and shape; it also has a small window for light and ventilation. A pantry arranged like this may be kept cold in the winter, to save several dollars' worth of ice each year.





First Floor Plan.

The kitchen is very conveniently arranged; it is not large, but is in keeping with the size of the house. There is an advantage in a small kitchen, in that it saves steps. A small kitchen may be made much more convenient than a large one when there are only one or two women to work in it at the same time.

The kitchen should have suitable furniture. I thought a kitchen should be of built-in cupboard years the manufac kitchen furniture h

fered with my cupb
A kitchen cabinet
so conveniently that over anything of the can build as part cabinet rightly made bottom, back and si and it is mouse-proof are hard to secure board. A carpenter careful with his wor unless thoroughly ki to shrink in time, a big enough to let i

Second Fl

dust, and the mice a way into such over, a portable ki easily be cleaned be moved out from vals, and the cleaned under it kitchen should be in the house. He great extent on the
A kitchen floor
portant feature.

made of hardwo strips, with raw joints. The bathro
the same way, an time. Floors put for many years, a satisfactory.

Upstairs we ha with a clothes clos an extra closet linen. Every ho linen closet upsta one downstairs f towels. Few sm very large house lences in this res deemed necessary have much linen, little cupboard roo
that is because th
the real satisfacti the possession of linen.

Linen is someth be continually bu expensive lots, bu offers to get a t three really good that is the time t articles are alwa costs less to hav than to buy in e nately, too many have fallen into t in a sort of hand-depend on wash
linen for the wee a variety to draw more in the end to feel that you
time; in fact, it you can buy to b
the wear and tea
have a liberal su

Queer C

"My pupil has ing impertinent."

"What is it?"

"He is always back talk."

Disc

"What a rich has."

"Yes, but in th is in poor taste."

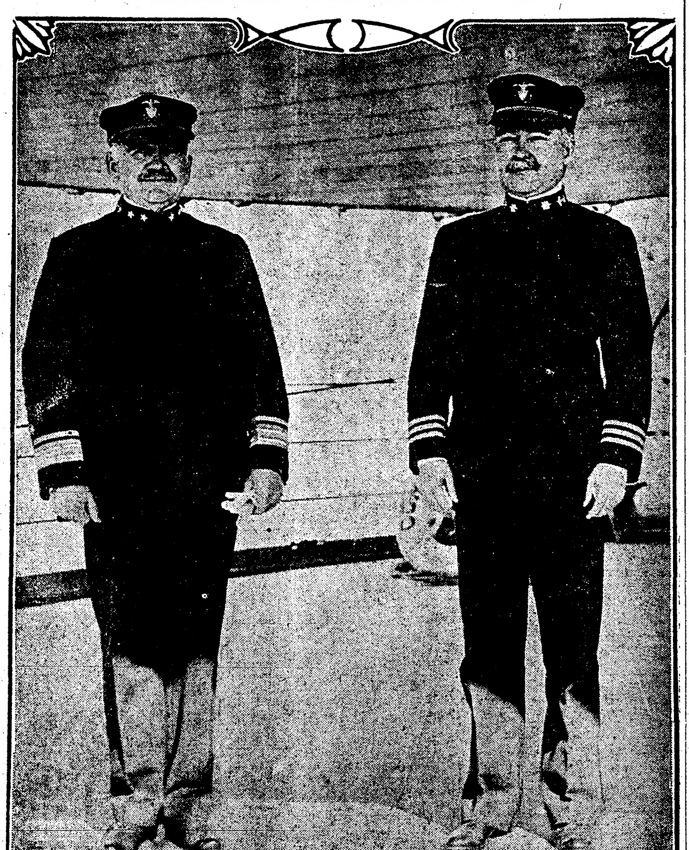
Defective Page

COMMANDING GREAT ATLANTIC FLEET



© BY UNDERWOOD & UNDERWOOD, N.Y.

OUR photograph shows Rear Admiral Hugh Osterhaus (left), and Capt. William R. Shoemaker, chief of staff, on the flagship Connecticut in New York harbor just previous to the review, by Secretary of the Navy Meyer, of the Atlantic squadron. Over nine miles of the Hudson river stretched the vast Armada, in which were 102 war vessels with a total tonnage of 577,285.

GRAND CANYON GOLD LURES

Men Seek Riches Washed Into Bed of Colorado River for Centuries—Dredges Being Installed.

Denver, Colo.—Endeavors at last are being made to compel the Grand canyon of the Colorado to give up the gold which has been washed into its bed for centuries. Several concerns are preparing to conduct operations on a large scale to overcome obstacles to get these riches.

It has long been known that there was much gold in the bed of the Colorado canyon. Explorers who have been in various parts of the great abyss have reported deposits of gravel and black sand that apparently ran to a great depth and that promised values, although well distributed in the sand and gravel. Attempts have been made to interest capital in plans to get out this wealth, but heretofore there has been no success, because propositions easier to get at and involving smaller expenditures of money and risk have attracted most of the capital available.

In recent years, however, several syndicates have been formed to get out the gold. One, backed by eastern capital, has been at work for some time at Lee's ferry. This is a desolate place, far from any railway, but it has offered the best opportunity for such work, being at the point where the river runs out of the sand hills after cutting through them for hundreds of miles and running for a few miles about at a level before dipping into the marble canyon. Dredges have been installed here after being hauled far over the desert. Black sand impregnated with gold and platinum and gravel having small nuggets of gold in it have been found here, and the enterprise promises to be highly profitable. This sand and gravel runs to a depth of from thirty to sixty feet before bedrock is touched, and the dredges can take it out in great quantities.

Above this point, in Utah, where the cliffs are not high, similar operations have been put under way. Here it is said that the conditions are similar to those found at Lee's ferry, except that there are evidences of even richer values. Parties have gone out into the wild regions between these two points to explore for places where the river can be reached. Reports have been received that wherever the prospects can be made conditions are found favorable. Nature, however, has provided huge battlements to defend these riches, and there is doubt whether many of the deposits can be exploited profitably.

Horse Bus Is Gone.

London.—When Andrew Gibson, for 37 years the driver of an omnibus in London, throws down his reins some night near the end of the present month, the last horse-drawn bus will have finished its final trip through the streets of the world's metropolis.

Gibson shakes his gray head sadly over the prospect and declares that the London of the motorbus and taxicab is not as happy as the London of the days when people were content to move slower. At the hey-day of Gibson's career the two omnibus companies of London owned 31,000 horses.

RICH MAN WORKS AS WAITER

Son of Russian General Seeking Material for Play Which He Will Write Labors in St. Louis Cafe.

St. Louis.—Waiting on table in a fashionable cafe is the latest means an embryo playwright has chosen in order to get materials for plays in which he may put to use his observations of the weaknesses and foibles of the rich, the newly rich and the class which Clyde Fitch termed "the climbers." There is such a waiter at the Planters hotel. He is James J. Grain, son of a Russian general.

When seen recently he was reluctant to tell of his ambitions. He said he did not wish his people to know what kind of work he was doing. He admitted he found his occupation favorable for making observations which might be utilized in plays, essays and poetry, at all of which he has tried his hand.

"I have never had anything published yet," he said. "But I hope to get into print some day. I feel a man who writes for the sake of money is likely to do poor work; so I prefer to do it at my leisure. I have to work ten hours in the day and the rest of the time I spend reading or writing, taking only as many hours off as are needful for sleeping. I feel that if persistence can do it, I shall succeed."

Largest Hog in World.

Montgomery, Mo.—J. R. Robinson, living in Pike county, brought to town a hog weighing 1,100 pounds. The hog is 5½ years old, measures nine feet from tip to tip and seven feet four inches around the girth. It is said to be the largest in the world. The hog was valued at $1,000.

MORE CURIOUS THAN WOMEN

Observations Tend to Prove Assertion That Inquisitiveness Is Really Masculine Trait.

London.—Once more man is being convicted of what is supposed to be almost exclusively a feminine failing.

Men, it is now suggested, are much more inquisitive and anxious to poke their fingers into other people's pies than are women.

A well-known lady novelist, whose experience of social conditions is exceptionally large, made this interesting statement:

"One has only to go to the theater or a garden party to notice the insatiable curosity of the modern man," she said.

"In theaters it is the men who discuss the appearance of other people, asking innumerable questions and standing up, glasses in hand, between the acts to glean more information

"It seems to me that a man's curiosity grows with his age. The elderly gossip, who is always fishing for scandals, is to be found everywhere nowadays.

"Women, on the other hand, especially elderly women, are not really curious concerning their surroundings. Girls, of course, are prying and inquisitive; but they do not count.

"It is high time that the fallacy about women being more curious than men were exploded."

Recently a newspaper man visited the west end and made several "observation tests."

Crowds of men and women passing Charing Cross on their way to the theaters were first observed. The number of people who "looked around"—who turned their heads to watch passersby—within a space of five minutes was roughly, as follows:

Out of 100 people 20 men looked around and ten women looked around.

A visit to a teashop on the Strand revealed groups of young men gossiping together and discussing other customers.

A station official on the Southeast & Chatham railway said that a test of the curiosity of the sexes could be obtained by watching those people who read the labels of other people's luggage.

There were piles of luggage destined for the continent in Victoria station, and the numbers of men who sauntered by, turning their heads at all angles to catch a glimpse of the hotel labels and the names of the owners, was remarkable.

"Bell Hop" for 52 Years.

San Diego, Cal.—Lester Ladd, 52 years a bellboy, celebrated his 68th birthday anniversary here. His last job in a hotel was at the U. S. Grant, which he left but a few weeks ago. He is now running the elevator in the Union building. He was born in Hudson street, New York, when that thoroughfare was one of the fashionable residence streets of the metropolis.

He became a bellboy at 16 and since then has worked at the Buckingham, St. Louis; the Palmer house, Chicago; the Morton house, New York; the Piedmont, Atlanta; the De Soto, Savannah, and the Tampa Bay hotel at Tampa.

TEMPLE OF HEAVEN

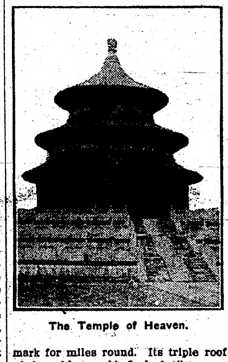
Remarkable Chinese Holy Shrine in Peking.

For Imperial Worship Only, and Ceremonies Never Witnessed by Foreigners—Customs of Centuries Observed.

Peking, China.—The Temple of Heaven is the most sacred as well as the most beautiful of all Chinese religious edifices. It is used only for imperial worship, and no foreigner has yet seen the stately and elaborate ceremonies that take place here on fixed dates every year. The buildings of which it consists are situated in a large walled in park in the southeast section of the Chinese city of Peking. A broad, stone paved road leads to the temple from the Chinamen, the largest gate of the Tartar city. This gate is exactly in front of the main entrance to the imperial palace. The massive doors at its central entrance are thrown open only when the emperor leaves his palace to visit the Temple of Heaven or the Temple of Agriculture.

The park in which the Temple of Heaven lies is almost square in shape and is surrounded by a stout wall, nearly four miles long. Inside it is divided into sections by other walls and the visitor is bewildered by the number of gates through which he passses when being shown round the sacred buildings. At each he has to pay a small sum to the gatekeepers, who rely upon these tips as their main source of income. Some of the inclosures contain majestic buildings; others encircle the grazing grounds of the sacred animals, reared for immolation upon the temple altars.

The striking edifice, which is generally known as the Temple of Heaven, but is called by the Chinese the Temple of Prayer for the Year, to which the emperor repairs each spring to make offerings and pray for an auspicious year for his people, is a landmark for miles round. Its triple roof of deep blue, gold flecked tiles, surmounted by a massive gilt sphere, can be seen from the railway some time before Peking is reached.



The Temple of Heaven.

It is comparatively a new building, having been erected since 1889, when the old temple, of which this is an exact copy, was destroyed by fire. It stands on a triple marble terrace, having a stairway at each of the four points of the compass. When the emperor comes here to worship, the tablets of his ancestors, which are usually kept in an adjoining building, are placed round the single lofty chamber of which the temple consists. A long marble paved terrace leads southward from the Temple of Heaven past a smaller building of similar design, known as the Temple of the Universe, to the inclosure containing the altar of heaven.

It may be doubted whether any structure in the world excels this for grandeur and beauty. The marble paved courtyard that surrounds it, like all the terraces in the park, is ill kept and overgrown with weeds, and even the altar terraces themselves are spattered with shrubs and grasses. But nothing can detract from the majestic simplicity of the altar.

It is on the main altar, kneeling on the circular slab of marble that marks its center that the emperor at each winter solstice, officiating as the high priest of his people (by whom he is known as the "son of heaven"), worships heaven and his ancestors at dawn.

The previous night is spent in meditation and fasting in the Hall of Abstinence, a fitting preparation for the solemn rites that are to follow. Nearly two hours before dawn the emperor is called and arrayed in ceremonial raiment, after which he makes his way to the altar in a sedan chair, and kneeling on the center stone of the topmost terrace, burns incense to heaven, and renders an account of the important events of the year. Burnt offerings of animals are made on an altar of green porcelain to the southeast of the main altar. In bronze braziers ranged round the court the death sentences and offerings of silk and jade are committed to the flames.

Groves of cypress trees surround the altar inclosure, except to the north, where a series of triple gates marks the way to the Temple of the Universe, while in the distance beyond, the roofs of the Temple of Heaven can be seen.

THE KITCHEN CABINET

I RETURNED and saw under the sun, that the race is not to the swift, nor the battle to the strong; neither yet bread to the wise, nor yet riches to men of understanding, nor yet favor to men of skill; but time and chance happeneth to them all.—Eccl. 9:11.

THE UBIQUITOUS POTATO.

This common vegetable of Mother Earth has many possibilities for food depending upon the skill and training of the hand that prepares it. In the use of the potato there is a varying degree of proficiency.

The bachelor maid or man may prepare a delicious and wholesome soup with a little gas burner and a potato or two.

A variety of soups may be served to vary the monotony, by adding fresh celery to the potatoes while cooking, or celery salt for seasoning. Onion may be scalded in the milk, thus giving each soup an individuality of its own.

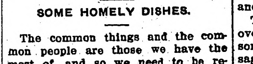
The variations and seasonings of potato soup, though many of them slight, will count up into the hundreds.

Jackson Soup.—Pare three large potatoes and one carrot, cut in small pieces and cook until tender. Chop a small onion and brown in a tablespoonful of fat. Add a tablespoonful of flour; add to the mashed potato and the water in which they were cooked. Season to taste.

Potato Soup.—Cut up and boil two potatoes in a quart of water; mash and strain. Add a pint of milk and a tablespoonful of flour and butter that have been cooked together; season with salt, pepper and onion or garlic and a little chopped parsley. Serve very hot.

Another Potato Soup.—Chop a slice of salt pork and put into a sauce pan with a small piece of onion, chopped; fry a light brown. Add four potatoes cut fine, cover with a quart of boiling water and cook until the potatoes are tender. Rub through a sieve, season with salt, pepper and add a cup of milk. Reheat and serve.

A beaten egg added to a potato soup makes a great improvement in its appearance.



EMPLOYMENT, employment,
Oh, that is enjoyment.
There's nothing like something to do,
Good heart ocupation
Is strength and salvation,
A secret that's known to but few.

SOME HOMELY DISHES.

The common things and the common people are those we have the most of, and so we need to be reminded that it is just as necessary that the common foods, because so important, making the bulk of our living, should be well prepared.

Rice, which is such a cheap food, and forms the chief article of food of a large portion of the population of the world, may be cooked and served in hundreds of ways.

Round Steak With Rice.—Cut one and a half pounds of steak into two or three-inch squares; put into a saucepan to steam without water. Slice an onion and fry in a little suet, add to the steak and season with salt and pepper. Cut up a tomato and add with water to the meat, enough to cover the meat. Let simmer for two hours, then add a half cup of rice and more water if needed, and cook until the rice is tender.

Mutton With Rice.—Wipe with a damp cloth a pound and a half of meat cut from the shoulder, into small pieces, adding a little fat. Cut up a third of a carrot and one onion in small pieces. Put over the fire with water to cover and cook at the simmering point for two hours. Add salt, pepper and finely-minced parsley. Mix two tablespoonfuls of flour with two of cold water and add to the stew. Cook five minutes. Place the stew on a platter and arrange around it by spoonfuls, salted, boiled rice.

Servian Rice With Meat.—Cut up a pound of beef from the shoulder, cut in inch squares. Fry a large onion in a little suet, then put in the meat, season with salt and paprika and cook slowly over a slow fire. Add a half pound of rice and boiling water. Cook until the rice is tender. Serve hot.

KINDNESS is contagious. The spirit of harmony trickles down by a thousand secret channels into the inmost recesses of the household life. One truly affectionate soul in the family will exert a sweetening and harmonizing influence upon all its members.

HELPFUL HINTS.

It is the skill of the cook that converts the simple soup into a creation, the pinch of this or the pinch of that which, given at the right moment, of the right thing, that separates by a spanless chasm the commonplace from the novel. We all like originality and desire, above all things, to have our homes, tables and persons express a pleasing individuality.

We all like immaculate homes, free from dust, disorder and confusion, but when one pair of hands has to do all the choice must be made between the necessities and the things that can be slighted. We can do away with a few les frills and furbelows on our cooking and clothes, unnecessary scouring of things already clean, but we needs must look after the health of the family, to see that the food that they have served is both nourishing and good to look at; that our sinks and wash bowls are kept clean, that our dishes are washed with care and cleanliness. Other things can wait or take less time, but the things that affect the health and happiness are essentials and of course vary in different homes.

Tomatoes and Macaroni.—Scald a pint of cream over hot water, add half a pound of diced cheese and when it is melted add a fourth of a cup of butter and a dash of salt and paprika. Arrange around five baked tomatoes a half pound of cooked macaroni laid in a wreath. Pour over the cheese mixture, and serve.

Meat Balls.—Put through the meat grinder sufficient cold meat to make a cupful; add a cup of cold cooked rice and season with salt and pepper. Beat one egg and add to it two tablespoonfuls of milk. Pour about two tablespoonfuls of this over the meat and rice to bind them together; if too dry, add a little more milk. Dip out a spoonful of the mixture, roll in crumbs, dip in egg and fry in just enough butter to keep them from burning.

HOWEVER good you may be you have faults; however dull you may be, you can find out what some of them are, and however slight they may be, you had better make some not too painful, but patient efforts to get rid of them. —Ruskin.

THE THANKSGIVING TURKEY.

In choosing a turkey, as any other poultry, it should be plump, have smooth legs and the cartilage at the end of the breast bone should be pliable. Cock turkeys are usually considered better eating than hen turkeys, unless the latter are young and plump.

A turkey weighing nine pounds should roast from two and a half to three hours. There are such differences in taste as regards stuffing that a few recipes may not be unacceptable at this time.

There is the old-fashioned sage stuffing liked by our grandmothers, and one that is hard to improve on.

To a cupful of breadcrumbs pour over boiling water to moisten, season with butter, pepper, salt and dry sage leaves rubbed to a powder, using two teaspoonfuls of the sage to a cup of the crumbs. In stuffing a fowl care should be taken to give it room to swell, otherwise the stuffing will be soggy and indigestible.

Turkey Stuffing (Swedish Style).—To two cups of stale bread crumbs add two-thirds of a cup of melted butter, a half cup of raisins cut fine, a half cup of walnut meats broken in pieces, salt, pepper and sage to taste.

Oyster Stuffing.—Mix together three cups of bread crumbs, a half cup of butter, melted; a pint of chopped oysters, salt, pepper and a few drops of onion juice.

Chestnut Dressing.—Shell and blanch three cups of chestnuts and cook in boiling salted water until soft; add a half cup of butter, a teaspoonful of salt, pepper to taste, a cup of crumbs and a fourth of a cup of cream. Mash the nuts, add the cream and the crumbs, which have been buttered by adding the melted butter to them; season and fill the turkey. More stuffing may be needed, as the cavity must be well filled.

Nellie Maxwell.

Victims of Superstition.

Eighteen girls of Vasard, Transylvania, have been drowned in the River Aluta. There is a local tradition that any young woman who bathes in the river at midnight will be married before the year has expired.

Twenty young women from the town, desirous of obtaining husbands, went at the appointed time to bathe. The current was very strong and swept the girls away, only two being saved.

Ages Add Garments.

Centuries ago, as Sir Walter Scott says, in "Ivanhoe," men wore one thickness of clothes, whether of wool, leather or velvet. The shirt was invented, but for a long time was worn only by the nobility and gentry. Then followed the waistcoat, breeches and, later on, trousers. The overcoat, which succeeded the medieval cloak, was rare until the seventeenth century.

Self-Made.

It is better to be a self-made man—filled up according to God's original pattern—than to be a half man—made after some other man's pattern.—J. G. Holland.

MINNESOTA HISTORICAL SOCIETY

THE NORTHERN LIGHT

VOL. I. HOLT, MARSHALL COUNTY, MINNESOTA, FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 24 1911 NO. 17.

PULITZER'S WILL

GIFT FOR JOURNALISTIC SCHOOL IS RATIFIED IN WILL FILED FOR PROBATE TODAY.

NEWSPAPERS TO HIS SONS

Million Will Go to Harvard If Columbia Fails to Fulfill Conditions—Many Institutions Are Remembered.

New York, N. Y.—The terms of the will of Joseph Pulitzer which has been filed for probate were made public. Its conspicuous features are the Columbia university for the establishment of a school of journalism and also the ratification of an additional $1,000,000 for the same purpose, subject to certain conditions, which, if not complied with by Columbia before the amount is paid over, will result in the sum going to Harvard university, one-half of it for a school of journalism and one-half for many unusual prizes and scholarships as set forth in the will.

The document sets forth a large number of interesting bequests not previously known. Among these is $250,000 for a scholarship fund at Columbia university; $500,000 to the Metropolitan Museum of Art; $500,000 to the Philharmonic society of New York; $100,000 to Mr. Pulitzer's faithful valet, Jabez Dunningham; $100,000 to be distributed by the executors among his personal secretaries, readers and companions and certain editorial writers on the New York World; $50,000 for the erection of a fountain in Central park and $25,000 for the erection of a statue of Thomas Jefferson in New York city.

The capital stock of his two newspapers, the New York World and the St. Louis Post Dispatch, are left in trust for his sons and their male issue during the lives of the two younger sons.

The [illegible] stock of the two [illegible] as George L. Rives, president of the board of trustees of Columbia university; Charles E. Hughes, justice of the United States supreme court, who has expressed his intention not to accept, owing to his public duties; Harrington Putnam, justice of the supreme court of New York state, to take the place of Justice Hughes in case the latter resigns; Frederick N. Judson of St. Louis, and J. Angus Shaw of New York.

The will was executed in April, 1904, with several later terms in codicil. In addition to the provisions for the sons, Mrs. Pulitzer is given the income of a fund of $2,500,000, and two daughters are provided for by an income of a fund of $1,500,000.

The income of a million dollars is set aside for the perpetuation of scholarships at Barnard college, which Mr. Pulitzer established some time ago in memory of his daughter, Lucille.

If at any time within seven years after the death of Mr. Pulitzer the executors shall be satisfied that the school of journalism established at Columbia is a success, it is directed that Mr. Pulitzer's additional gift of a million dollars be paid over and in this connection the will outlines a number of novel annual prizes to be awarded annually, including:

Some Novel Prizes.

$1,000 for the best paper on the future development and improvement of the school of journalism; gold medals costing $500 for the most disinterested and meritorious service rendered by any American newspaper; $1,000 for the best history of the service rendered to the public by the American press; five annual traveling scholarships of $1,500 each; $1,000 for the best example of a reporter's work during the year; $1,000 for the American novel which shall best present the wholesome atmosphere of American life; $2,000 for the best book of the year upon the history of the United States; $1,000 for the original play performed in New York which shall best present the educational value and power of the state in raising the standard of good morals, taste, and manners.

TO APPEAL SPOKANE CASE.

Supreme Tribunal Will Be Asked to Review Commerce Court's Decision.

Washington, D. C.—The department of justice will file an appeal from the decision of the commerce court in the Spokane rate case. The supreme court of the United States will be asked to review immediately the decision which revoked the rate reductions to intermountain cities and stripped the interstate commerce commission of much of its power.

Iowa Football Player Dies.

Sioux City, Iowa—Rolland Schneckloth, the football player of the Correctionville high school, who suffered a fractured spine in a game played against the Sioux City high school eleven at Correctionville, Oct. 14, died.

REBELS READY FOR PEACE

INSURGENT LEADER PROMISES THRONE PROTECTION.

Edict Issued Calling Representatives of Provinces to Conference in Pekin.

Pekin, China.—Optimism is the prevailing note in government circles. This feeling is caused by the report that Prince Ching, the acting premier, received a telegram from Gen. Li Yuen Heng, commander of the rebel forces, saying that he was prepared to treat for peace on certain terms, and by the statement that the army divisions one to six, inclusive, would agree to uphold the monarchial constitution, and support Yuan Shi Kai, provided the rebel leader's terms agreed with those of the army.

The imperial government promptly issued an edict commanding Yuan Shi Kai to consider the country's welfare and ordering the viceroys and governors of all the provinces to select three or five able representatives who shall come to Pekin and consult concerning the state of affairs.

The edict also appoints delegates to visit the sixteen disturbed provinces and pacify the people and announces that the throne donates one tael to each and all of the soldiers and police of Pekin, presumably in the hope of purchasing their loyalty.

Yuan Shi Kai Undecided.

While the imperial government is endeavoring to force the premiership on Yuan Shi Kai, China's 'strong man," the acting premier, Prince Ching, and other members of the nominal cabinet, pointed out the insecurity of that office, the retention of which depends upon the caprice of the national assembly.

Yuan Shi Kai, if he accepts the premiership at all, desires a fixed term of office, and he so stated to the regent. But he must obtain this through the national assembly as an edict would be likely to arouse suspicion.

It is not considered probable that Yuan Shi Kai will undertake the gigantic task set for him, unless he considers the chances favorable for carrying it to a successful issue. There is still another possibility—he may be considering the alternative of a republic and may himself recommend the abdication of the emperor.

He reported that the rebel leader, Gen. Li Yeun Heng, said he would obey his orders if Yuan would consent to become president, but would not recognize him as a Manchu premier. In his opinion it would not be difficult to reconcile the provinces, most of which are giving the strongest evidences of a desire for peace. The complete constitution alrady pledged would satisfy the revolutionaries, except for the fear that Manchu intrigue would begin immediately after arms were laid down. The president of the Ta Ching government bank has deserted his post and fled from the city. Financial stress is being felt by the administration. The board of finance has only about $200,000, while the late empress dowager's hoarded silver and gold is not thought to amount to more than $3,000,000.

Another Province to Rebels.

Washington.—Another independent republic was set up in China, according to American Consul Fowler at Chee Foo, who reported to the state department that the former governor of the province of Chantung, Sun Hao Cho, had been selected as head of the republic of Shantung, which yielded to the revolutionists without a struggle.

Pekin, China.—Premier Yuan Shi Kai's new cabinet was named in an imperial edict, but it is questionable whether it will stand. One of the members expressed amazement at his appointment. It is believed that few of the ministers have been consulted and it is expected that several will decline to serve.

The cabinet comprises curious appointments. Liang Chi Chiao, appointed vice president of the board of justice, is the great Chinese reformer who was exiled by the late empress dowager at Yuan Shi Kai's suggestion. Chang Chien, appointed president of the board of agriculture and commerce, is a member of the new government of Kiang Su. He signed, with Wu Ting Fang, the demand for the throne's abdication, which the reformers sought to have delivered to the prince regent through the American legation. Several other members of the cabinet are known to be strong sympathizers with the revolutionary movement.

Opinion is divided with respect to the object Yuan Shi Kai has in view. Some think he has lost his astuteness and intuition, while others hold that he is playing a deep game.

Hing Hwa, a coast city, about 50 miles south of Foo Chow, has accepted the new government quietly and many of the old officials remain at their posts. In this city the radical element is organizing the republican government. The moderates, who wished to declare Amoy independent, without committing it to the revolutionary cause, are not being consulted.

PACKERS RESIST

SURRENDER THEMSELVES BEFORE COURT AND ASK WRIT OF HABEAS CORPUS.

TO TEST SHERMAN LAW

Object Is To Carry Fight to United States Supreme Court—Claim That Body Has Already Nullified Statute.

Chicago, Ill. — The indicted Chicago meat packers, by precipitating a federal court decision on the constitutionality of the Sherman anti-trust law, when they surrendered themselves into custody and asked for a writ of habeas corpus, merely took steps necessary to carry the fight before the United States supreme court without the cost or delay of a trial.

Government attorneys, taken unawares, were cut off from much of the result of their long investigation into the meat packing industry, by the sudden move of the packers. Instead of a promise to be supported by evidence carefully brought together, the fight, for a time at least, must be conducted purely as an argument of law.

The fight thus becomes, not a question of first issue as to the guilt or innocence of the packers, but a plain attack on the validity of the Sherman act, according to attorneys for the packers. They explain their position, briefly, in this wise:

"The supreme court in the Tobacco and Oil cases, converted the Sherman law into an illegal enactment, since the court, by placing each individual or corporation on a standard of its own, built upon its peculiar individual acts, took away from all individuals the possibility of knowing how their acts were to be viewed by a jury, and in the light of reason, that this obscurity of definition of what constituted crime was contrary to the eighth [illegible] tion."

In short, the petition, say the attorneys, charges the supreme court interpretation with nullifying the Sherman law, in spite of the court's action in ordering the dissolution of the American Tobacco company and the Standard Oil company. Only an adverse decision to the packers' contention by the United States supreme court will give the government attorneys an opportunity to use the material they have gathered for the prosecution.

The move made by the packers was a complete surprise to the government and consisted in the surrender of the packers to the United States marshals and an immediate appeal to United States Circuit Judge C. C. Kohlsaat for a writ of habeas corpus.

Violations of the fifth, sixth and eighth amendments to the United States constitution, ambiguity and its alleged failure either to create an offense against the government or so to define what it set up as an offense in a manner that would enable the citizen to know when he erred and when not, were charged against the Sherman law as interpreted by the nUited States supreme court in the Standard Oil and Tobacco cases.

The packers were released on bonds of $30,000 each.

Of the ten packers indicted, all but J. Ogden Armour were temporarily in custody while the petition was being heard. The nine were:

Louis F. Swift, president Swift & Co.; Edward F. Swift, vice president of Swift & Co.; Charles H. Swift, director of Swift & Co.; Edward Tilden, president National Packing Co.; Arthur Meeker, general manager of Armour & Co.; Edward Morris, president of Morris & Co.; Francis Fowler, director of Swift & Co.; Thomas J. Connors, director of Armour & Co.; Louis H. Hayman, manager of Morris & Co.

Chicago, Ill. — With the trial of members of the so-called "beef trust" set for Monday in the United States district court on the charges of criminal violation of the Sherman anti-trust act, it became known that since the return of the indictments there has been a complete reorganization of the National Packing company. In the opinion of the government officials this company is the central point of the so-called trust.

Private weekly meetings, at which the government charges prices were fixed, territories allotted and amounts of interstate shipments by each firm decided, have been discontinued and in their place monthly meetings are now held by the directors.

Edward Tilden, president of the company and one of the ten men under indictment, remains as president and director. J. Ogden Armour, Edward Morris, the Swifts and the other defendants have resigned. Nine men, instead of nineteen, now make up the board of directors.

BEATTIE TO DIE NOV. 24

GOVERNOR MAN REFUSES TO INTERFERE.

Fake Affidavit of Paul Beattie Fails to Influence Executive.

Richmond, Virginia. — Henry Clay Beattie, Jr., will die in the electric chair, on Nov. 24, for the murder of his young wife, Louise Owen Beattie. The next to the last chapter in the sensational murder case was enacted when Governor Mann refused to interfere.

"I believe Beattie is guilty of the cruel and malicious murder of his young wife," said Governor Mann in his decision, in which he dwelt upon the fact that Judge Watson, in the trial at Chesterfield, gave the prisoner every advantage in all his rulings.

"I followed the case during the trial and, as its horrible facts were developed, regretted that a crime so cruel and malicious should have occurred within the confines of this state. In the decision of every question which was presented to the able and impartial judge who presided at the trial, he was careful to give the benefit of every reasonable doubt to the prisoner; his instructions were as favorable as the counsel for the prisoner could have expected; that he did not err in the admission or exclusion of evidence, or in his instructions given to the jury, is shown in the refusal of the supreme court of appeals to grant a writ of error."

Affidavits Not Sufficient.

"In the administration of my office, I am required to see that the criminal laws are executed unless there shall be some facts or circumstances arising since the action of the court, or some important evidence existing but not presented to the court, tending to create in the mind of a reasonable man a substantial doubt as to the guilt of the prisoner. I do not think the affidavits of Paul Beattie, printed in the papers, or any other evidence or consideration brought to my attention, sufficient for that purpose. Nor do I question the wisdom, I might add, of the necessity of capital punishment in cases where human life has been wickedly and deliberately taken.

AMERICAN MAY RULE CHINA.

Military Government for Period Under U. S. Officer Is Suggested.

London, England.—Archibald Ross Colquhoun, journalist and explorer, in an article in the Daily Graphic, which professes to outline the program of the Chinese rebels on the authority of leaders of the rebellion, says the revolutionary committee has summoned Dr. Sun Yat Sen, one of the instigators of the present revolt, and that he will shortly arrive in Shanghai to take up the direction of affairs.

The intention is, according to the article, to institute a military government under the direction of an American, General Homer Lee. There will be a period of three years or less of martial law, during which administrative reforms will be undertaken, this to be followed by another period of three years during which the military government will be assisted by certain elected bodies.

At the expiration of this time it is expected the country will be prepared for a constitutional republican government, with a president and two elective chambers.

PROBLEM OF FARM LABOR.

Federal and Northwest State Officials Form Organization.

Washington, D. C.—Co-ordination of the working forces in the states with the federal government in bringing about closer connection between land and labor and immigrants from foreign countries is expected to be the object of the new organization perfected here as a result of the conference of the state immigration, land and labor officials of the various states. This conference was called upon the initiative of T. V. Powderly of the United States immigration bureau.

Representatives of the Minnesota, Wisconsin and other northwestern state boards of immigration, land and labor, were in attendance at the meeting and they became members of the national association.

FILM EXCHANGE IS BURNED.

Milwaukee Concern Suffers Damages of $200,000.

Milwaukee, Wis.—Fire caused a loss of $200,000 to the Western Film Exchange, located in the Enterprise building, at Second and Sycamore streets. No insurance was carried, the building being considered fireproof.

The fire started from a film coming in contact with an electric wire. The loss on the building was small.

SANITARY DAIRY METHOD

CREAMERY MEN ATTEND AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE.

Farmers Shown Proper Handling of Milk and Care of Milch Cows.

The proper care of milk in the dairies, and the most sanitary methods of handling it in the creameries will be emphasized in the short course for dairymen and creamery men at the state agricultural college, which begins this week, acording to Professor T. L. Haecker, who has charge of the course. Most of the students in this course are the young men who are engaged in the management of creameries throughout the state.

"We aim to educate these young creamery managers so they will not only be able to take good care of the milk and cream, but so they may be in a position to instruct the farmers in the proper care of cows. The students who have taken up the work here in previous years have been very successfull in this capacity in their respective communities.

"The course which we offer only lasts about five weeks, and is too short to allow the students to master the bacteria testing process. We feel that it is more important to impress them with the value of pure milk. They are given a lecture course, dealing with bacteria, in which lantern slides are used, showing the effects of carelessness and unscientific methods in handling the dairy products. They have to leave the testing of the milk for bacteria to experts, but we can train them to test for butter fat, to determine whether any cream has been taken from the milk and to tell if it has been diluted in any way.

Instructed In Diseases.

"The veterinary department offers a course instructing the students in the more common diseases of cattle, and they are taught the scientific methods of selecting and feeding. This work is intended to make the creamery men helpful to the farmers of communities who have not had a chance to study scientific dairying.

"They are instructed in heating, plumbing and ventilating creameries by the engineering department. Most of the instruction is given by graduates of this same course who are now employed as creamery inspectors throughout the state.

"Minnesota has taken the first prize in butter, making eight times out of ten in the 20 years that the biennial butter show has been going on, and one of the times they lost, the prize went to one of our graduates. In my opinion, this is because of the course in creamery management, which tends to produce better and purer dairy products all over the state."

AUSTIN TO HAVE TAG DAY.

Will Raise a Fund for Maintenance of Nurse on Saturday.

Austin.—Austin women are responding enthusiastically to the support of a visiting nurse. The plan has passed the experimental stage, Miss Lowry having been employed here in that capacity several months. The fund that supported the work has been exhausted, and now to further the plan a tag day will be instituted—Saturday, Nov. 18. The joint chairmanship has been assumed by Mrs. S. D. Catherwood, Mrs. Arthur W. Wright, Mrs. Roy Holmes and Mrs. C. A. Negge. Under their direction the city will be divided into small sections and canvassed by other efficient chairman. Five thousand tags have been made ready. Three years ago a tag day was launched here, the fund gathered at that time providing a finely equipped ambulance.

FOR CLOSER UNION OF SCHOOLS

Chapman, Norsen and Others Hold Series of Meetings.

Sauk Center.—With County Superintendent W. A. Boerger presiding at the meetings, the school board has just completed a series of meetings in five districts. The object was to discuss association of schools. Consolidation is not sought, as it is not desired to close the districts schools, but merely to have the students who have completed the grade work in the rural schools made eligible for admission to the departmental work in the Sauk Center school, which has an agricultural department under the Putnam law. Professor Norsen of the Sauk Center agricultural department and Superintendent Aygarn of Sauk Center took part in the meetings.

DISSIPATION ENDS IN SUICIDE.

Man's Body Found Hanging From Tree at Cloquet.

Cloquet.—Men traveling through the woods northeast of Cloquet, near the boom house, found the body of Victor Lund hanging from the limb of a tree. He had probably been dead for several days. He had spent the last few weeks in dissipation and had lately been subiect to fits of despondency.

MPLS. DEMANDS DEPOT

NOTABLE DINNER IN THE MILL CITY.

Railroad Stubborness to Be Answered by Forming Private Terminal Company.

One thousand representative Minneapolitans assembled at a dinner at Donaldson's tea rooms unanimously indorsed the new Minneapolis Union station project. Resolutions were passed authorizing the appointment of a committee of five to raise funds to push the work of getting the station for the city. The dinner and meeting were given under the auspices of the Commercial and Publicity clubs.

The meeting was one of the most notable and enthusiastic that had ever taken place in Mineapolis. The project had the indorsements of every commercial, industrial and civic improvement body in the city. Organized labor, financiers, and the Commercial and Publicity clubs, sectional commercial clubs, the city council, Minneapolis Real Estate Board, all expressed a unanimous desire to cooperate in getting the station.

For over a year a committee of one hundred has been working with the railroads for a union station, meeting with encouragement, but finally a flat refusal on the part of James J. Hill to participate put a stop to the matter and the dinner was the result.

Fifteen or twenty leaders in all branches of local activity, including Hon. James Gray, late Democratic candidate for governor, spoke and all condemned the present disgraceful terminal facilities and the policy of the roads in showing discrimination against Minneapolis in transferring through passengers.

The upshot of the meeting was a resolution authorizing the appointment of a committee to take immediate steps towards forming a union terminal company to build the station. A law of the last legislature compels the roads to use such a station if built.

KOOCHICHING SA[illegible]

8,575 Acres Sold to Farmers and Minneapolis and St. Paul Investors.

International Falls.—The best sale of state land in Koochiching county was held by State Auditor Iverson and Sales Manager Nelson. About three hundred persons attended. Mr. Iverson outlined the policy which has been followed by the state for fifty years in the sale of its land and timber and showed that ultimately a fund of $200,000,000 would be held in trust for the benefit of the schools because of this wise policy. He also spoke of the interest that is being taken by the state in its vast properties in the northern counties and prophesied for this and adjoining counties rapid development.

He also said that when the legislature met he believed generous appropriations would be made for drainage in this county. He read a letter from the Commercial club of International Falls asking that school section 16 in township 70, range 24, be withdrawn from the market and that the new farm experimental school that had been suggested for this county be located on this section. Mr. Iverson said it would give him pleasure to withdraw this section and he was pleased to know that the Commercial club was taking such a lively interest in this important matter.

The sale then began and was carried on with lively interest until about 8,575 acres had been sold. Much of the land was sold to settlers around Big Falls. The land drained by the state ditch dug by Elzy & Son of St. Paul, two years ago was in strong demand. Before the digging of this ditch this vast area of state land was an impassable swamp; now it is so dry and solid that teams are driven across it.

Practicaly all of the land sold yesterday went into the hands of either actual settlers or to those who are making plans to clear and cultivate a goodly portion of each tract before offering it for sale to others.

Men from Minneapolis and St. Paul, L. L. Enger, Dr. Dunsmore, Roy S. Brubaker, W. E. Kirkwood and others bought good-sized tracts. There were also some tracts sold to farmers in Michigan. General Manager W. H. Gemmell of the M. & I. railroad, also purchased land for his personal use and some for the railway to experiment with.

This is the last sale of state lands advertised for this county this year, and it is believed that before the sales begin next spring there will be such an increased development that the average sale price will be increased.

Land Under Mining Option.

Brainerd.—M. K. Swartz and wife have given a mining option to Percy A. Gough of Deerwood on lands lying near Clearwater lake, in Bay Lake township, east of Brainerd, covering eighty acres in section 8-45-28. If 250,000 tons of ore assaying 40 per cent or over is shown up Mr. Swartz agrees to sell a half interest to Gough for $16,000 cash.

RAISING TURKEYS FOR THANKSGIVING

THIS is the season of the year when the prospects for the turkey crop outweigh almost all other questions in the minds not only of produce men, but in the estimation of the great mass of householders. The supply, and consequently the prices, of turkeys have fluctuated so widely in different years within the past decade or two that there is always an uncertainty in the minds of the ultimate consumers akin to that mystery that invariably envelopes the "peach crop" early in the season. This explains in a measure why many far-sighted citizens to whom a few cents per pound difference in price is ever a source of worry now make it a practice to order their Thanksgiving turkey long in advance and it explains, too, why many of the turkey buyers who handle the birds on a large scale begin their rounds of the poultry farms earlier in the season than was once their wont and keep close tab on the growing fowl.

PREPARING THE TURKEY FOR MARKET

A THANKSGIVING BIRD

This "scouting" by the purveyors of our principal Thanksgiving delicacy is a wise move for, be it known, weather conditions throughout the spring, summer and autumn have a most important bearing upon the turkey crop at the end of November. For instance, if a wet spring be encountered great numbers of the young turkeys suffer. In some instances they are almost literally "drowned out." The autumn is a yet more crucial time in the turkey-raising industry. A open autumn, even if it be mild, is fairly auspicious, but the ideal condition is found in cool, crisp, bracing weather which inspires the turkeys to roam in search of food and causes them to fatten in prime condition. Such weather conditions also lighten the cares of the farmer who does not devote his entire attention to turkeys, and who usually has so many other responsibilities that he is mighty glad when the turkeys can shift for themselves—to say nothing of the benefit to his pocketbook. These farmers and poultry raisers, it may be added, are about the only classes in our national community who never need give a thought to a bird for the home table on Thanksgiving. There is always some sort of a turkey for the gathering round the festive board at the homestead. We may digress for a moment, too, to add that in late years there has come a great change in sentiment on the part of many of the farmers as to the Thanksgiving turkeys for their own tables. In days gone by there was often a disposition to regard almost any old gobbler as sufficient for the home folks. All the choice birds were sent to market, because they would bring the best prices, and the farmer and his household not infrequently had to put up with the leavings, as it were. Latterly, however, as greater prosperity has come to so many of the farmers there is a growing disposition to regard the best as none too good for the kings of the soil, and this applies to turkeys as to everything else. Consequently it is usual for the progressive farmer to retain one of his tenderest birds for the kith and kin that break bread with him on Thanksgiving, and not infrequently the chosen bird has been singled out from the others long in advance and is specially fattened in accordance with the tastes of the family.

HANDLING CRATED TURKEYS AT THANKSGIVING

READY FOR THE THANKSGIVING RUSH

SCENE ON A TURKEY FARM

There has been much discussion on the part of the public in recent years regarding the comparative scarcity of small turkeys—that is six to eight pound birds—in the Thanksgiving market. There is no difficulty in fixing the responsibility for this disappearance of the small turkeys. It is due to the growing tendency among turkey raisers to devote their best efforts to the "bronze" variety of fowl—the largest variety of the bird. The lure of the American love of bigness has made itself felt in the turkey realm, and the 30 to 36 pound birds which have attracted so much attention at fashionable hotels and on banquet boards have come to be regarded as the most desirable specimens of that fowl, which becomes for one day each year our national bird.

It must be admitted, however, that the bronze variety of turkey not only holds the post of honor because of its size and its rich plumage but also, in the estimation of many epicures, because of its flavor as well. There is no doubt that the size of the bronze variety—its standard weight ranges from 16 to 36 pounds—is to be attributed to the fact that the birds of this family originated from a cross between the wild and the tame turkey. For that matter, the wild turkey of North America was the ancestor of all our present-day domestic turkeys, but the "crosses" which have been made in the case of the bronze variety have been particularly fortunate in inducing mammoth size. However, one of the officials of the department of agriculture recently declared that the bronze turkey had been developed too much in the direction of size, and if he can convert the turkey raisers to his way of thinking we may see some years hence an era of smaller bronze turkeys of even finer flavor than those regarding which such enthusiasm has been manifested by lovers of the good things of life.

Of course the vaunted bronze variety is not the whole thing in turkeydom, for there are six other standard varieties, the branches of the family in addition to the bronze, being, the Narragansett, the buff, the slate, the white, and the black. Many people who think that we have been enjoying pretty appetizing turkey from time out of mind may be surprised to learn that the prestige of the turkey as an article of food was seriously threatened a few years ago through carelessness and lack of foresight in breeding methods. Not much was said about it, except in the poultry papers and at the conventions of poultry raisers, but the menace was sufficient to arouse the more progressive turkey raisers, with the result that they mended their ways, put a ban on inbreeding and went in for the purebred or standard-bred turkey, with the welcome outcome that rich, new, vigorous blood made its influence felt in infusing strength and vigor in turkey flocks all over the country.

In the case of growers who have had the benefit of enough experience to qualify them for the work, turkey raising is, under favorable conditions, a highly profitable occupation. No other kind of live stock wil return so large a profit to the successful producer as will poultry, and turkeys constitute the most profitable class of poultry if properly handled. As a matter of fact, from the time the turkey is six weeks old he virtually makes his own livelihood, wandering around and eating bugs, grasshoppers, waste grain and other eatables that if not an actual pest are useless to the farmers. To be sure, some of the fancy turkey raisers are credited with fattening their Thanksgiving offerings on milk and chestnuts and other delicacies, but they get for such fancy fowl prices sufficiently higher than the regular quotation to recompense them for their trouble.

An expert who recently made an investigation of the turkey raising industry on behalf of the United States government declares that turkeys can, if grown in a favorable locality, be made to return a profit to the growers if sold as low as eight cents per pound, live weight, whereas if they bring three or four cents per pound above that figure, as they usually do, the turkey grower should feel well satisfied with his occupation. Now, as a matter of fact, there are few sections of the country where at Thanksgiving time turkeys do not bring two or even three times the eight cents that Uncle Sam's expert has set down as a figure that will yield a profit. Of course, the farmer who can sell his turkeys direct to housewives can get from 25 cents per pound up—according to the state of the market and the quality of the fowl—but even the growers who market through commission merchants, as most of them do, ought to net from 16 to 20 cents per pound, providing the sales agent is not allowed to pocket more than his share of the sales price. Of course, for the grower to net 20 or 24 cents a pound, it is necessary to have the choice, specially fattened turkeys that bring top-notch prices in the markets catering to the wealthy class in the large cities.

Recent years have witnessed a change in the methods of shipping turkeys to market. Many fowl are yet hauled to town, as in days of old, in the farmer's wagon, but the largest share of the turkeys for city markets are now shipped by express. Just at Thanksgiving time when turkeys are coming to market in car-load lots many of the birds make the journey by fast freight, but under such conditions a man must be sent along with each car load to feed the birds, so that in the end it is likely to be just as cheap to send the birds by express, the transit thus being accomplished in a few hours and no feeding en route being necessary. To carry out the present-day policy of haste in transferring the turkeys from the farms to the dinner tables of the folk in towns and cities, we find special automobile trucks waiting at the railroad stations to receive the crated birds as they are unloaded from the cars; and these motors rush the turkeys without loss of time to the commission houses, hotels or other destinations. A few years ago a car load of live turkeys was a shipment of such unusual size as to cause comment. Nowdays such consignments are handled by the hundreds at Thanksgiving time, and a car load of live turkeys was, on one occasion, sent from New York to San Francisco, the rental of the special car for this journey amounting to $70. In Chicago there are dealers who receive a dozen car loads of turkeys a day at Thanksgiving time, and as many as 25,000 birds have been received in that city in one day at the height of the rush to stock larders for Thanksgiving.

Coat of Mail in Garment

While rummaging in some boxes to which he had fallen heir from a former tenant of the house he lives in at Lander, Wyo., Pat Curry came across what appeared to be an ordinary blue serge coat. He tried to haul it from the box and it required both hands to get it out.

Curry at first thought he had found a treasure coat and that it contained gold coin. When he lifted it out of the box it gave forth a metallic rattle. He slit one of the pockets and discovered that between the serge and the heavy silk lining was concealed a complete suit of steel armor. The steel plates are two inches square, a sixteenth of an inch in thickness, perforated at one end and sewed, lapping each other, on to a cloth framework that exactly fits the interior of the garment.

No one can be found in Lander who can give any clue to the identity of the owner of the strange suit or armor. It is thought by many that it is a relic of the days of the Overland mail and was worn by some one who feared attack from Indians and that it came to Lander in the early days. Others believe it belonged to some one who had a mountain feud on his hands and feared an ambush by the enemy.

The Soldier's Wit.

A veteran of the Civil war, having received from the government a new cork leg in place of the one lost in battle, perpetrated this witticism in his return letter of thanks:

"'Tis sweet to be re-membered for what I have done."—Lippincott's.

Good Jokes

HIS BIT OF EMPIRE.

It is a well known fact that some Englishmen are more inclined to talk about the Empire's fringe, of which they are ignorant, rather than about its heart, which they possibly know something of. A housewife whose husband was addicted this way turned his thoughts into more homely channels by her ready wit.

One Saturday evening he came home late smelling strongly of tobacco, and very red in the face.

"Oh," he said. "I've had a fine time. I've been to an Empire meeting. It was grand."

Then he frowned and said, impatiently:—

"What's the matter with supper? Ain't it ready yet?"

His wife, who was peeling potatoes and holding a squalling boy, rose and extended the baby to him.

"Here," she said; "take hold of your bit of the Empire while I fry these chips."

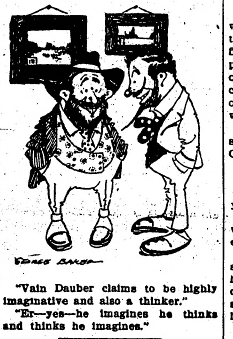
How It Is Done.

"Rollo," said the eminent statesman, speaking rather severely to his private secretary. "Rollo, it has been rather more than a week now since I have said something really brilliant. Are you aware of that?"

"Y-y-yessir," stammered the hireling.

"I'll give you three days more," continued the statesman, assuming his well-known attitude in which the right hand is thrust into the front of the shirt, as though to bring forth an important document or to scratch a hidden chigger bite—" and if I haven't uttered something exceedingly intellectual or startlingly new, by that time, I shall have to employ a new press agent."

GOOD IMAGINATION.



"Vain Dauber claims to be highly imaginative and also a thinker."

"Er—yes—he imagines he thinks and thinks he imagines."

Even Then.

The wise men never speak till they
Have something well worth while to say,
And, being wise and thoughtful men,
They say but little even then.

The Puff Personal.

"You are evidently very fond of books, sir," said an old gentleman to a young man in a train car. "May I ask you whom you consider the best novelist of the day?"

"Jenkins, undoubtedly," said the young man. "There's nobody can write like Jenkins. Why, sir, the circulating libraries can't supply his novels fast enough."

At this moment another man entered the train car and addressed the young man.

"Hello, Jenkins," he said. "How are you today?"—Tit-Bits.

Unworthy of His Love.

"George Tillson and Mamie Sprague are engaged."

"For goodness sake! I always thought he had good taste."

"Well, Mamie isn't a bad looking girl."

"But look at the style of her. She doesn't hide her ears by combing her hair over them."

Try It.

"Mary," said a mother to her quick-tempered little girl, "you must not get mad and say naughty things. You should always give a soft answer."

When her little brother provoked her an hour afterward Mary clinched her little fist and said: "Mush!"—The Watchword.

He Knew the Game.

"Now, Archie," asked the schoolmistress, dilating on the virtue of politeness, "if you were seated in a tram car, every seat of which was occupied, and a lady entered, what would you do?"

"Pretend I was asleep," was the prompt reply.—Tit-Bits.

A Sure Sign.

"That woman pretends to move in the most aristocratic social circles, but I have found out one fact which strongly intimates she does nothing of the sort."

"What is it?"

"She pays all her bills."

Unreasonable.

"Did your friend have a good time on his hunting trip?"

"No; didn't enjoy himself at all. The guides got peevish about his shooting so many of them for game."

Not Consoling.

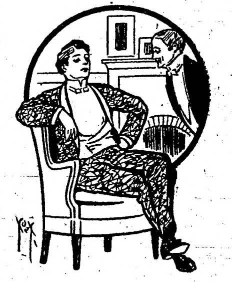
One of the boys had broken one of the school rules and no one would own up.

The teacher announced that he would thrash the whole class if some one did not tell him who had committed the offense.

All were silent, and he began with the first boy, and thrashed every one in the class until finally he reached the last one. Then he said: "Now, if you will tell me who did this I won't thrash you."

"All right, sir. I did it," was the reply.—Ideas.

WHY A BACHELOR.



Hinten—I've a mind to get married.

Henpeck—If you had a mind you wouldn't think of such a thing.

Sweet Melody.

'Tis sweet, indeed, to hear the hen
Lift up her voice a peg;
For now when cost of living's high
It means another egg.

His Economy.

The children in the Blank family were taught habits of neatness at the table by being compelled to pay a fine of one cent for every spot they put on the tablecloth. One day Harold, a boy of seven years, was discovered rubbing the overhanging part of the cloth between his fingers, and, when taken to task for it, he said:

"Why, I wust just trying to rub two spots into one."—Woman's Home Companion.

Not So Very Romantic.

"Gloriana," faltered the ardent youth, "is this the end?"

"Reginald," she answered with a world of compassion in her soft brown eyes, "it is!"

Weary of the strain of holding the skein of flossy yarn which the maiden had been winding into a ball, Reginald dropped his exhausted arms to his sides and drew a long breath of relief.

The Reason.

"Though actors are superstitious as a rule, they are not afraid of being in haunted houses."

"They are not?"

"No; you can't scare an actor by putting him any place where the ghost walks."

Took Precautions.

Mrs. Brown—I'm thinking of giving up using fresh milk. I read an article in the paper saying all kinds of infection can be got from it."

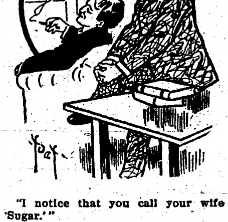
Milkman—Don't worry, madam; our water is always well boiled, first.—London Sketch.

Classifying Himself.

Eve (on seeing him for the first time)—Who are you, sir?

Adam—I'm Exhibit A, madam.

THREE OR FOUR.



"I notice that you call your wife 'Sugar.'"

"I've always called my wives 'Sugar.'"

"Ump! How many lumps have you had?"

Looking Forward.

"There'll be no prunes in heaven,"
A boarder softly sighs,
Who dreams of sins forgiven
And a mansion in the skies.

A Good Suggestion.

The horse editor was substituting for the "Answers to Correspondents" editor.

"How'll I answer this?" he demanded. "Girl wants to know how she can improve her complexion."

"Tell her to send you a sample of it," suggested the snake editor.

Canada at the Chicago Land Show

WILL MAKE A MAGNIFICENT EXHIBIT OF GRAINS AND GRASSES, VEGETABLES AND FRUIT.

A carload of grain in straw, grasses and other of the products of Western Canada arrived at Chicago the other day, and is now installed in the Coliseum, where the United States land and irrigation exposition is under way. Those who are interested in the "Back to the land movement" will find in the Canadian exhibit one of the best displays of the agricultural products of Western Canada that has ever been made. There are representative men there, who will be pleased to give the fullest information regarding the country.

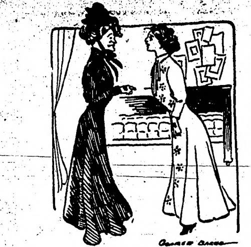
The exhibit shows what can be done on the free grant lands of that country and most of the grain was produced on the farms of former residents of the United States who have taken advantage of the homestead lands of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

The vegetable exhibit will attract a great deal of attention, and some marvelous potatoes, carrots, turnips, cabbage and cauliflower are shown.

It is true that the homestead area is being rapidly taken up and the bulk of that now to be had lies north of the Saskatchewan river in a portion of the country known as the park country. Here there is a large quantity of open prairie interspersed by beautiful groves of poplar and willow. Water is in abundance, hay is plentiful and consequently fodder for animals is right at hand. Those who have taken advantage of farming in these districts and watched the efforts of those in the prairie proper feel that they have the advantage of their brother, who is not able to secure fuel and the other conveniences, of the park district on his own farm.

The crop conditions throughout Western Canada the past year have been generally good, and some wonderful crop yields of wheat, oats and barley are recorded. The Canadian Government, under whose auspices the exhibit spoken of is being made, is preparing reports on crops in the different Western Canada districts, and while these will not be ready for distribution at the land show commencing on the 18th of November and closing on Dec. 8th, application made to the Canadian Government agent nearest you will bring them to you as soon as they are published.

MERE SUGGESTION.



Miss Antique—I have so much on my mind; I wish I knew what to do for relief.

Miss Caustique—Why not remove your switch?

PHYSICIAN ADVISES CUTICURA REMEDIES

"Four years ago I had places break out on my wrist and on my shin which would itch and burn by spells, and scratching them would not seem to give any relief. When the trouble first began, my wrist and shin itched like poison. I would scratch those places until they would bleed before I could get any relief. Afterwards the places would scale over, and the flesh underneath would look red and feverish. Sometimes it would begin to itch until it would waken me from my sleep, and I would have to go through the scratching ordeal again.

Our physician pronounced it "dry eczema." I used an ointment which the doctor gave me, but it did no good. Then he advised me to try the Cuticura Remedies. As this trouble has been in our family for years, and is considered hereditary, I felt anxious to try to head it off. I got the Cuticura Soap, Ointment and Pills, and they seemed to be just what I needed.

"The disease was making great headway on my system until I got the Cuticura Remedies which have cleared my skin of the great pest. From the time the eczema healed four years ago, until now, I have never felt any of its pest, and I am thankful to the Cuticura Soap and Ointment which certainly cured me. I always use the Cuticura Soap for toilet, and I hope other sufferers from skin diseases will use the Cuticura Soap and Ointment." (Signed) Irven Hutchison, Three Rivers, Mich., Mar. 16, 1911. Although Cuticura Soap and Ointment are sold by druggists and dealers everywhere, a sample of each, with 32-page book, will be mailed free on application to "Cuticura," Dept. 17 K, Boston.

Tilted.

"Is Mr. Biffit a believer in the uplift?"

"Can't say for certain, but I notice that he wears his cigar at a dizzy angle."

SERIAL STORY

No Man's Land

A ROMANCE

By Louis Joseph Vance

Illustrations by Ray Walters

(Copyright, 1910, by Louis Joseph Vance.)

7

SYNOPSIS.

Garrett Coast, a young man of New York City, meets Douglas Blackstock, who invites him to a card party. He accepts, although he dislikes Blackstock, the reason being that both are in love with Katherine Thaxter. Coast fails to convince her that Blackstock is unworthy of her friendship. At the party Coast meets two named Dundas and Van Tuyl. There is a quarrel, and Blackstock shoots Van Tuyl dead. Coast struggles to wrest the weapon from him, thus the police discover them. Coast is arrested for murder. He is convicted, but as he begins his sentence, Dundas names Blackstock as the murderer and kills himself. Coast becomes free, but Blackstock has married Katherine Thaxter and fled.

CHAPTER IV.—(Continued.)

With a twist of his eyebrows spelling doubt, Coast followed. He was not wholly satisfied that there was any wisdom latent in this latest freak of his errant fancies. For a fortnight he had given impulse its head, and so, docile to its aimless divagations, had found contentment of a sort—more a parody than the real thing; dreamless rest won through wholesome bodily fatigue, a waking distraction bred of constant change of scene; thin ice over the troubled deeps of a heart embittered. Eastward from New York he had wandered, mostly afoot, unknown, unrecognized, Warburton alone cognizant of his movements, and that under strict injunction of silence; thus he had come blindly, seeking surcease of his distemper, finding only the oblivion of fatigue. And recently he had become uneasily conscious that even that was losing its effect, as an opiate will in a frame too long habituated to its action; now and again the thought of Katherine and Blackstock would crawl in his mind, viperous, poisoning the very sunlight.

Here, without presage, he found his whim aiming for salt water. Was he wise to humor it? Would he find healing in the swing of the seas, the savor of spray, the hiss of waters broken by plunging bows, the gurgle astern?

Huxtable led him directly to a little vessel in a cradle on the ways and bright with new paint. "The Echo," he introduced her: "five year old, weather-wise, sound and sweet, fast and able. Owner left her with me for sale. Seven hundred and a bargain."

Coast strolled round the boat with an eye critical of her lines, then clambered up the skeleton ribs of the cradle and dropping into her cockpit, verifying Huxtable's catalogue of attractions. Presently he climbed down again, impressed that the boat would probably justify its recommendation to the letter.

"When can you put her in the water?"

"In fifteen minutes."

"Do so, then, please, and have the gasoline tanks filled and the batteries wired up. . . . I'll want these besides." He found a pencil and scrap of paper and scribbled a list of supplies, . . . "You've a spare mooring off here?" he inquired, and received an affirmative. "Then put her off; I'll sleep aboard her tonight. Now I'll take a turn up town and buy provisions and things."

He fitted out without thought of economy: in the list of his acquisitions he could find no lack; by nightfall the Echo was furnished with everything that Coast could think of as essential or desirable for coastwise cruise, whether brief or protracted.

There was no plausible excuse for his failing to sleep; the Echo rode without much perceptible motion, moored about a hundred yards off shore; waters whispered somnolently alongside; the town was quiet. Yet slumber was denied him; an unwonted excitement sparkled his imagination, kindled by a sense of adventure distilled from tomorrow's promise.

At five bells he rose and went on deck to smoke, his trouble heavy upon him. The cockpit was not more drenched with moonlight than with dew, but the air was motionless and suave; in pyjamas and slippers, lolling upon the dry side of an overturned seat cushion, he felt no need of heavier clothing.

Presently a breath of air stirred feebly; catspaws darkened the silver; sighing, the air died; the flawed surface of the harbor smoothed and brightened. Then again the breeze fanned up out of the northwest, vacillant; advancing, languishing, waxing gradually in volume until it blew full and free.

Coast shrugged to the chill and rose to go below, but paused, attracted by a stir of life aboard a small, two-masted schooner that had been riding idly at anchor between two and three hundred feet away toward the ship-channel.

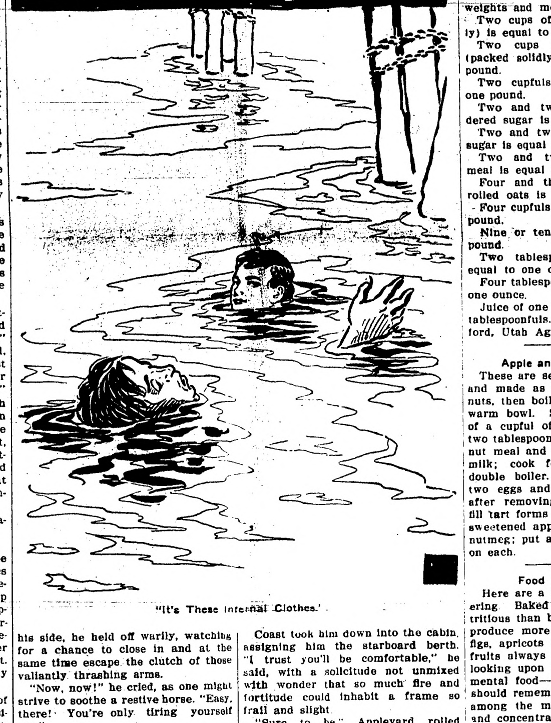
He saw a movement of bustling men upon her deck. Her sailing lights appeared: a green starboard eye glared at him fixedly. The mainsail was hoisted, the foresail went up. Then, falling off broadside to the ebbing current, the vessel shaped her course handily for the harbor-mouth, booms crashing to port as the red eye swung to bear on Coast. As she drew abeam he could see her deck quite clearly, glistening in the white glare that threw the scurrying figures of the crew into clear black relief. They went about their tasks adeptly, surefooted and alert, with a curious detachment of attitude, having no regard whatever, apparently, for that which held Coast spell-bound.

In the waist two men were struggling, locked in one another's arms and staggering, now this way, now that, neither uttering a sound. They fought strongly, each with a passionate concentration of effort, each in silence.

He saw one suddenly give way, as though his foot had slipped. He went down upon a knee, the weight of his antagonist heavy upon him, and recovered only with a tremendous and convulsive effort, but now with his hold broken and at the other's mercy. In half a dozen breaths he was rushed to the rail (where he attempted futilely a last stand), forced backward over it and so held. A fist was lifted above him and fell like a hammer. There followed a splash, but no outcry. The man went under like a log. The schooner slipped onward with growing impetus, sails bellying luminous. No life-preserver was thrown, not a hand raised, not, so far as Coast could discern, a head turned to see the fate of the defeated.

Loosening the draw-string of his pyjamas and ripping off the jacket, Coast leaped to the Echo's stern, poised himself lithely and shot out, cleaving the water almost without a splash.

Warmth came of exertion; refreshed, invigorated, he swam with swiftness and strength, concerned only to reach his goal before the man could sink finally. At length winning to his side, he held off warily, watching for a chance to close in and at the same time escape the clutch of those valiantly thrashing arms.



"It's These Infernal Clothes."

"Now, now!" he cried, as one might strive to soothe a restive horse. "Easy, there! You're only tiring yourself out."

The splashing ceased in some measure, the man wiggling awkwardly round to bring the source of that voice within his range of understanding "Lord!" he said, breathless. "You're welcome."

Encouraged by this note of sanity Coast swam nearer. "Need any help?"

"What do you think?"

The moderate exasperation of this reply educed a spontaneous laugh from Coast, which he checked abruptly as the other man again went under, to an accompaniment of frantic kicks and splashes. Before Coast could reach him he re-emerged, blowing and sputtering.

"Beastly tasting water," he commented between gasps, resting.

"What the devil are you trying to do?"

"Get rid of these damnable trousers: they won't let me swim."

"If I lend you a hand, will you—"

"No; I won't grab you. I know the answer to that, and I've had one slam between the eyes already. Come along and be a hero, why don't you?"

Coast chuckled as he ranged alongside. "Put one hand on my right shoulder," he advised, "and keep as still as possible. I'll do the swimming."

"You're the doctor." The man followed his instructions promptly. "Sorry to trouble you, though."

"That's all right . . ."

"It's these infernal clothes. I can swim, without them. Every try to disrobe on the bed of the sea?"

After a time, in a reflective tone "Me for the Demon Rum after this." came over his shoulder. "I never knew water could taste so vile."

Coast made no reply; apparently none was expected. Laboriously gaining to the side of the catboat, he clung to it, panting, while the other considerately transferred his hold. Hanging so, he rolled an inquiring eye to his benefactor.

"This occasion," he observed, "is quite too unique. Never have I met a man I liked so well, under similar auspices. Permit me: my name is Appleyard, Christian name (from the Old Testament) Melchisedec—kindness of sponsors in baptism. Please don't look like that: I regret it, likewise."

He paused, watching Coast gravely. "Melchisedec means 'king of righteousness,' but don't be alarmed; mistakes will happen even at the baptismal fount. . . . And you, sir?"

"Coast—Garret Coast."

"Congratulations: that has a human ring. And I am pleased to meet you. None the less, I owe him no gratitude who cheats me of a watery grave to freeze me to death. Upon my word of honor (whatever that may be), I cannot move . . . anything except my jaw."

Laughing, Coast scrambled aboard the boat, and leaning out caught the man beneath the arms. After considerable exertion on the part of both, he tumbled into the cockpit and incontinently, with a heavy sigh, collapsed on the deck, in a dead faint.

In alarm his rescuer dived below and returned with towels and a bottle of brandy. The latter being immediately resorted to, brought Mr. Appleyard back to consciousness.

"Very good stuff," he commented, half-strangled. "I had a premonition that my season-ticket on the water-wagon had run out. . . . I assure you I swallowed a cubic foot of Fairhaven harbor; all my insides are insulted."

"Get up," said Coast, "get those clothes off and dry yourself. I'll lend you a blanket and a berth for the night."

"With all the pleasure in life."

Coast took him down into the cabin, assigning him the starboard berth. "I trust you'll be comfortable," he said, with a solicitude not unmixed with wonder that so much fire and fortitude could inhabit a frame so frail and slight.

"Sure to be." Appleyard rolled himself luxuriously into his blanket and breathed deeply of his content. "But how can one feel at ease . . . who strolls stark-naked . . . aboard a perfect stranger's . . . private yacht . . . and — eyah! — makes himself at home without . . . so much as by your leave . . .?"

"Don't—" Coast started to reassure him.

He was interrupted by a slight but unquestionably sincere snore.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Insects That Use Rubber.

When Para trees are tapped, after the gum has run into receptacles and stiffened, a species of large black ant is accustomed to cut out pieces of the rubber and carry them away. Bees also find uses for india rubber, and some species in South Africa actually cut the bark of trees that produce resinous substances in order to cause a flow of the sap. The gum is employed by the bees as a ready-made wax for their nests.

To Cultivate Memory.

The best way to remember a thing is thoroughly to understand it, and often to recall it to mind. By reading continually with great attention, and never passing a passage without understanding and considering it well, the memory will be stored with knowledge, and things will recur at times when we want them, though we can never recollect the passages or from whence we draw our ideas.

CARE IN MEASURING

SUCCESS OF MANY COOKS DUE TO ACCURACY.

Very Difficult to Measure Foods With the Eyes, and It Can Only Be Done After Long Experience.

Much of the success attained by good cooks can readily be traced to their accurate measuring. Many housekeepers will say without thinking: "I never measure anything." You may not actually have a measuring cup and measure materials as girls are taught to do in the cooking schools. You have become so accustomed to cooking and making certain dishes that you always know the amount to use; in other words, you measure with your eyes. This is very difficult to do and can only be done after long experience. Try and keep a couple of measuring cups, either glass or tin, in your home. They do not cost very much and will save you a great deal of trouble in teaching your girls to cook.

Directions for Measuring.

Sift or shake up lightly with a spoon all dry material (flour, baking powder, etc.) before measuring. All measures are to be taken at a level unless otherwise stated. To measure a cupful of dry material fill the cup with spoon or scoop and level off with a case knife. To measure a teaspoon or tablespoon fill full and then level off by holding a caseknife erect and passing over the top. To measure one-half spoonful divide a spoon lengthwise with a knife, crosswise for quarters. A cupful of liquid is all the cup will hold.

Handy Equivalents.

Three teaspoonfuls make one tablespoonful.

Sixteen tablespoonfuls of any dry material make one cupful.

Twelve tablespoonfuls of liquid make one cupful.

Four cupfuls make one quart.

A half pint cup is the standard.

Table of comparison between weights and measures:

Two cups of butter (packed solidly) is equal to one pound.

Two cups finely chopped meat (packed solidly) is equal to one pound.

Two cupfuls of granulated sugar, one pound.

Two and two-thirds cupfuls powdered sugar is equal to one pound.

Two and two-thirds cupfuls brown sugar is equal to one pound.

Two and two-thirds cupfuls oatmeal is equal to one pound.

Four and three-fourths cupfuls of rolled oats is equal to one pound.

Four cupfuls of flour is equal to one pound.

Nine or ten eggs is equal to one pound.

Two tablespoonfuls of butter is equal to one ounce.

Four tablespoonfuls flour is equal to one ounce.

Juice of one lemon is equal to three tablespoonfuls.—Mrs. Hazel L. Dunford, Utah Agricultural College.

Apple and Chestnut Tarts.

These are served in pumpkin cases and made as follows: Blanch chestnuts, then boil them, then mash in a warm bowl. Sift together a quarter of a cupful of granulated sugar and two tablespoons of flour, add the chestnut meal and half a cupful of sweet milk; cook for five minutes in a double boiler. Beat stiff whites of two eggs and fold into the custard after removing from the fire. Half fill tart forms of puff paste with well sweetened apple sauce, flavored with nutmeg; put a dab of whipped cream on each.

Food Value of Fruit.

Here are a few facts worth considering. Baked apples are more nutritious than baked potatoes, and will produce more work. Dates, prunes, figs, apricots and raisins are dried fruits always available. Instead of looking upon them as merely supplemental food—like confectionery—we should remember that they are really among the most healthful, palatable and concentrated of vegetable foods.

Among fresh fruits, bananas, apples, figs, grapes, blackberries, strawberries and oranges have decided food value and may be used as economical sources of nourishment.

Minced Liver on Toast.

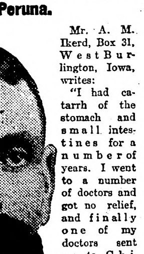
Chop fine cold liver, to make one cupful. Cook one tablespoon of chopped onions in three tablespoons butter until a pale brown, add three-fourths cup of milk, into which are stirred two tablespoons flour; add liver, season with salt and pepper, and when piping hot pour over slices of nicely browned toast. Very appetizing. Fine for breakfast or lunch, and very easy to make.

Butterscotch Pie.

Melt thoroughly together two cupfuls of light brown sugar and one large tablespoonful of butter, to this add one cupful hot water or milk and yolks of two or three eggs, four tablespoonfuls of flour and a pinch of salt. Beat the whites of the eggs with a little powdered sugar and spread over the tops.

To Whip Thin Cream.

If the cream is too thin to whip, place the dish containing it in an other dish of cold water, leaving it there until it is well chilled. Then put into a pan of hot water. It will whip without difficulty.—The Housekeeper.



Mr. A. M. Ikerd.

CATARRH OF THE STOMACH

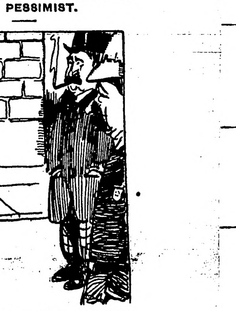
Could Hardly Eat. Gradually Grew Worse. Relieved by Peruna.

Mr. A. M. Ikerd, Box 31, West Burlington, Iowa, writes:

"I had catarrh of the stomach and small intestines for a number of years. I went to a number of doctors and got no relief, and finally one of my doctors sent me to Chicago, and I met the same fate. They said they could do nothing for me; said I had cancer of the stomach and there was no cure. I almost thought the same, for my breath was offensive and I could not eat anything without great misery, and I gradually grew worse.

"Finally I concluded to try Peruna, and I found relief and a cure for that dreadful disease, catarrh. I took five bottles of Peruna and two of Manalin, and I now feel like a new man. There is nothing better than Peruna, and I keep a bottle of it in my house all the time."

THE PESSIMIST.



Policeman—That fellow is hunting trouble.

Mr. Want-to-Know—Why?

Policeman—He's looking for the marriage license bureau.

Wine-Drinking.

France alone pays taxes in a good year on more than a thousand millions of gallons of wine—and there are six bottles to a gallon—while Algeria, planted with vines in the days of the phylloxera, supplies no less than two hundred millions. A tonneau of 200 gallons is a pretty large vessel; a thousand such would fill a good-sized ship; and we have to multiply that by a thousand before we reach the production of this one French colony—one-fifth of all the wine consumed in France.

Heathen Nations Invent Nothing.

Bishop Thoburn, who has been a missionary in India for 50 years, and knows India better than any other living American, says: "If you visit the patent office at Washington, you will see 600 improvements on the plow. India has not invented one improvement on the toothpick in 2,000 years. The nations without God have no inventive faculty. They are almost universally the savage, unenlightened nations of the earth."

A "Teaser" For Jaded Appetites—

Post Toasties

with cream or preserved fruit.

Ready to serve instantly—just open the box and enjoy an extra good dish—

Convenient, crisp, delicious, wholesome.

"The Memory Lingers"

Sold by Grocers

Made at the
POSTUM CEREAL CO., Ltd.,
Pure Food Factories
Battle Creek : : Mich.

The Northern Light
CHAS. W. LATTA
Editor and Publisher.

Published every Friday at Holt, Marshall County, Minnesota.

Subscription Price: $1.00 per year, strictly in advance.

Entered as second-class matter Sept. 22, 1911, at the post office at Holt, Minnesota, under the act of March 3, 1879.

Be a booster—not a knocker.

It is not at all likely that the governor will remove the board of control, when it is considered that their opinion was unanimous in the Whittier affair.

The Clearbrook Journal can always be depended on to start some freak thing or another. Its latest proposition is Senator Clapp for president, which may be interpreted as an attempt to head off LaFollette feeling. Nothing doing.

A Kansas schoolma'm was given a coat of tar and feathers a few days ago by a bunch of henpecked husbands who are alleged to have been incited to commit the deed by their respective peckers. The schoolma'm lays no claim to be a leader of fashion but the new dress handed to her is certainly an innovation in the way of clothing for women considering that Kansas is supposed to be located in a civilized country.

The people of a community who take and pay for a newspaper ought to get what they pay for. But it takes more than subscriptions to keep up a newspaper so that it can give its subscribers good service and help the development of its territory. In their own interists the subscribers should read the advertisements and see to it that the business men who are not willing to help in local development do not steal away the benefits that the subscribers and others are working and paying for.

The Red Wing Training school sensation is over. The Board of Control, after weeks of hearing evidence and then digesting it, unanimously exonerated Supt. Whittier. Then Whittier handed in his resignation, which the board accepted, to take effect as soon as a suitable successor can be found to take his place. Everybody claims to be satisfied, but every body can't be believed. However, it may not be easy to find a suitable successor to Whittier as the Red Wing institution is notoious for its insufficient equipment and the legislature has steadily refused to make suitable appropriations for its proper maintenance.

Farms Wanted.

I have prospective buyers for a few good improved farms; also for 960 acres of wild land. All must be in eastern Marshall county.

CHAS. W. LATTA, Holt, Minn.

Scholarship for Sale Cheap

We have for sale, cheap for cash, a scholarship good for three months tuition in Crookston College, and for any subject at any time. It is worth $80 but will be sold for considerably less as we need the cash.

Call or address The Northern Light, Holt, Minn.

Enamelled kitchenware at Kolden's. Triple coated, white lined and the best bargains you ever knew, 10 and 69 cents only, while they last.

M. A. NELSON, M. D.
PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON
Office over Holt Merc. Co's store
HOLT, MINNESOTA.

WANTED!

500 Subscribers before January 1st

We want to have that number of subscribers by New Year's and will make a special offer that should get them.

An Extra Special Offer to Subscribers who want to send The Northern Light to absent friends. No better Christmas Gift.

For particulars call at this office or write to

Northern Light, Holt, Minn.

THE DULUTH HERALD
BEATS THE CENSUS THREE TO ONE

During the past ten years the population of Duluth increased 48 per cent., St. Paul 32 per cent., and Minneapolis 49 per cent. In the Same Period the Circulation of The Duluth Herald

INCREASED 150 PER CENT.

This marvelous expansion—so much greater than that of the surrounding territory—is due solely to the merits of The Herald. The Herald has never used any kind of premium, contest, or price reduction to gain subscribers, but prints each day the very best NEWSPAPER in the Northwest. Its editorial page is thoroughly independent and its news columns cover every feature of the world's daily history.

Send for sample copy and get The Herald habit.

THREE MONTHS FOR $1.00—Mailed Daily.
ADDRESS HERALD CIRCULATION DEPT., DULUTH, MINN.

SURE GAUGE OF MAN'S AGE

Is Seen in Degree of Interest He Takes in Announcement of Opening of School.

A man may gauge how old he is by the degree of interest he feels in the announcement that school's open again. If he is still a young man, with considerable of the boy left in him, he will hear that boy exclaim in some recess of his outdoor-loving consciousness: "Gee, that's too bad." Minds in which there is not the least symptom of momentary regret that the long and delicious vacation is over are minds which have long been engrossed by the cares of the workaday world and in which not even a living memory of the romance of boyhood days remains. As for the children themselves, they have our sympathy. Also the teachers. For teaching an unwilling child is no child's play, and it takes some time to get the wheels of discipline running smoothly. And yet there is a great deal in school life nowadays that is almost delightful. It is at least interesting to wide-awake boys and girls, and the progress that they make in their studies after the seductive call of outdoors has been forgotten is the best evidence that they appreciate the charm which comfortable schoolrooms combined with intelligent and kindly pedagogical methods have contrived to instill into our modern public school education.

HOW WAR HELPS A NATION

Sir Reginald Hart Says It Consolidates a People While Long Peace Is Disintegrating.

Peace for a nation is like a sleep for an individual, it gives time for rest and recuperation. But we must not sleep too long or we infallibly deteriorate. Peace is a disintegrating force, whereas war consolidates a people. War is no doubt a dreadful ordeal, but it clears the air, and refines the race as fire purifies the gold and silver in the furnace. Nations, like individuals, ultimately benefit by their chastenings—this is one of the mysteries of nature.

So long as any people, white, black, brown or yellow, hold weapons in their hands we must not commit the folly of beating our swords into plowshares.

The sufferings of man and beast in war are horrible beyond description, and yet, is it not true that it is not in war, but in peace, and in great commercial prosperity that our worst vices are developed, fostered and grow rank? With our material prosperity we become self-indulgent, luxurious, inconsiderate, selfish and even unmanly. In war many of the noblest traits in human nature assert themselves and a high sense of honor comes before everything.—Sir Reginald Hart, B. C., in Nineteenth Century.

DICTUM OF CAMERA MAN

Woman Subject Required to Rest an Hour Before Posing for Picture.

Three o'clock was the hour of the busy woman's appointment with the photographer, but early in the day he telephoned for her to come at two o'clock. She went, and found him busy with another subject.

"I wanted you to come ahead of time," he said, "so you could lie down and rest for an hour. It is the hardest kind of work to get you busy people into a proper condition to be photographed. You rush around up to the last minute, then come here nervous wrecks and expect me to take good pictures. I can't do it. Nobody can. Tightly drawn lips, sunken eyes, and a generally tense expression don't look well in a photograph. You are a good looking woman and deserve good looking pictures, but you won't get them unless you rest an hour before facing the camera."

The woman appreciated the wisdom of his remarks, but she was so angry because she had been cheated out of a valuable hour that it was doubtful if the rest imprdved her appearance.

POPULAR GERMAN PRINCESS.

The most talked of princess in the German emperor's household is Princess Eitel Frederick, the wife of the second son. She is a very charming woman and the kaiser is quite fond of her, his only regret being that his son has no children. The wife of the oldest son, heir to the throne, is the mother of three children, which pleases the kaiser.

HE WAS DIFFERENT KIND

Magnate Makes Wrong Guess on College Man Who Applies for Job.

The young man entered the magnate's office.

"So you want a job, do you?" the latter gruffly remarked. "Just out of college, no doubt?"

"Yes."

The magnate sized him up.

"Think you know it all, eh?"

"No, sir."

"Imagine you own the earth, no doubt?"

"No."

"Believe yourself to be a much better man than your father?"

"No."

"What was the subject of your graduating essay?"

"'Human Dynamos.'"

"Remarkably practical. Too clever to do any real work, of course?"

"No. I want to learn the business."

The sneer on the magnate's face deepened.

"O, I've heard of you college smarties. The newspapers are all on to you. If I gave you a job in a week you'd be showing me how to run the business, wouldn't you?"

"No, sir."

The magnate stared at him.

"All right, son. That will be your desk over yonder. You'll get $25 a week as a starter, with an increase as soon as you familiarize yourself with the work. Good luck to you."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

PUTTING THE WOOD TO IT

Umpire O'Loughlin Fails to Appreciate One Handed to Him by St. Louis Catcher.

"An umpire must be dignified on the field, and if there is one thing that peeves 'Silk' O'Loughlin it is to ruffle his dignity," says Umpire Billy Evans in the Cleveland Press.

"Catcher Kriehell of the St. Louis Browns put one over on 'Silk' one day that drew a laugh from both teams. O'Loughlin failed to appreciate it.

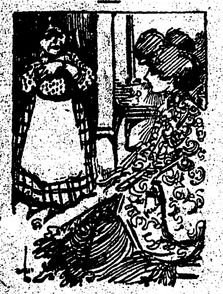
"In baseball, when a player hits the ball squarely, some of his teammates sing out: 'That's putting the wood to it, old boy.'

"In the game in question O'Loughlin was working the plate, and a foul tip struck his mask, near the top, sailing into the grand stand at great speed.

"'Nice work, "Silk." That's putting the wood to it, old boy.'

"In an instant O'Loughlin's expression changed from pain to astonishment. He glared at the St. Louis player, and O'Connor was relieved when he didn't start a procession of athletes to the clubhouse."

HER REPUTATON



Mrs. Clawem—So you're going to leave, eh! I suppose you will be asking me for a reference.

The Cook—No'm. If I tell anybody I worked for you for two months that'll be all the reference I'll need.

"SONGS WITHOUT WORDS."

Mendelssohn's "Songs Without Words" are said to have originated in an idea in a letter sent to his sister, whom the composer loved most devotedly. He wrote: "I wish I were with you; but as that is impossible I have written a song for you expressive of my wishes and thoughts." Then followed what many conclude was the germ of the "Songs Without Words."

MANY DO.

"Now, there's Pipps. He never bets on a horse race."

"May be not, but he does worse."

"In what respect?"

"He bets on the outcome of murder trials."

V-I-V-O
The Best there is in FLOUR

Our Elevator and Lumber Yard are always prepared to give the most satisfactory service.

Hanson & Barzen Milling Co.,
OSCAR HANSON, Agent, - - HOLT, MINN.

AXEL NELSON
General Blacksmith Work
HOLT, - - MINN.

All work done Right, at Reasonable Prices.

The Evergreen Hotel
P. A. RESBERG, PROP.

Rates, $1.00 per day.

Serves the best Meal in Eastern Marhall Co. for twenty-five cents.

Livery and Feed Barn in connection.

Red Lake Falls Milling Co.
Makers of the Celebrated
Mascot Flour
and bUYERS of all kinds of GRAIN

Our Elevator will give you satisfaction.

NELS ENGEBRETSEN, Agent - - - Holt, Minn.

Bring us your Job Printing orders

Crookston College...

Is the Leading Business School in the Northwest.

OUR TEACHERS Are all College and University Graduates.

FINANCIAL STANDING It is backed by a capital of $50,000 which is a safe guarantee to its students that every promise will be fulfilled.

ACTUAL BUSINESS The only school in Northern Minnesota having an actual business department.

BOARD and ROOM Can be had in private families for $3 per week. Other school towns will charge from $4 to $6.

POSITIONS The demand upon us for office help is greater than we can supply.

Catalogue and further information given free by writing.

J. C. SATHRE, Crookston, Minn.

Local Items

The Local Market.

(Grain prices furnished by Hanson & Barzen Milling Co. at close of business every Thursday.)

Flax	$1.83
Wheat	.93
Barley d	.87
Oats	.39
Rye	.77

Bring us the news.

When in town call at this office and let's get acquainted.

Rev. M. B. Ordahl will conduct services at Thief Lake next Sunday.

John A. Sorum transacted business at Warren last week and returned on Saturday.

Special subscription offer from now until January 1st. Call at this office for particulars.

Axel Nelson went to Crookston Tuesday afternoon to attend to some business matters.

D. B. Bakke is here today from Thief River Falls on one of his regular trips looking after business at the Holt State Bank.

Triple coated enamelled kitchen ware at only 10 cents per piece is a bargain that you never had before. S. S. Kolden & Co.

The Misses Mickelson and Edna Risberg were up from Thief River Falls for an over Sunday visit at their homes here and returned on Monday.

Ye editor and Bert Terwilliger went to Thief River Falls Monday where the latter filed on a nice homestead in the Mud Lake district about 18 miles east of Holt.

Christmas Candies—We carry a very complete line of finest candies for the holiday trade. In packages at prices from 5 cents to $10.00. Mail orders given special attention. J. A. Sworz, Thief River Falls, Minn.

We want more subscribers and will take potatoes, chickens, or wood at current market prices on subscription. Of course we prefer the money, but if you haven't the cash bring on the produce. Dont be without your home paper anyway.

Be a booster—not a knocker.

Subscribe for The Northern Light. Only $1.00 per year.

Rev. and Mrs. Ordahl transacted business and visited with friends in Holt on Wednesday.

Miss Bella Solum went down to Thief River Falls yesterday for a short visit and to do some shopping.

S. S. Kolden drove to Thief Lake on Saturday and remained until Tuesday attending to business matters.

Willie Wendt and Christ Christianson went to Thief River Falls yesterday on a combined business and pleasure trip.

Are you preparing to take in the big mask ball at the Woodman hall in Holt on Thanksgiving night? Don't miss it.

Walter Johnson arrived home on Tuesday from Maddock, N. D., and reports having spent a good season harvesting and threshing.

Sam Mickelson has finished up a building job at Thief River Falls and arrived home yesterday after an absence of about three weeks.

The mask ball at Woodman hall here Thursday night next will be the big event of the year. If you care for danceing and a good time this will be your best chance this winter.

Dr. M. A. Nelson welcomed the arrival of his wife from Minneapolis on Saturday. Mrs. Nelson has come to stay and they will make their permanent home on their fine claim in Mud Lake township.

Miss Minnie Sorum came in from the family home east of town on Monday to assist Mrs. P. L. Anderson for a while during the illness of her baby. The little one has been quite ill but is now improving.

P. L. Anderson, buttermaker, etc., who is at present taking a post graduate course in the Agricultural College at St. Anthony Park, writes that he is progressing very nicely and expects to get back to Holt about December 7th.

Mrs. John Batten and daughter LaVon arrived from Donnelly, Stevens County, on Saturday to join Mr. Batten, whose arrival we chronicled last week. They have commenced housekeeping in the residence formerly occupied by Mrs. Thomas and expect to reside there during the winter months.

WATCH
For Our Big
Special Announcement
Next Week

HOLT MERCANTILE Co.
"The Big New Store"

Your Wife and Children
Are entitled to some Christmas Presents this Year.

In making a selection for your wife or daughter why not come and see our Big Line of ROCKERS and LADIES' DESKS? They make ideal Christmas Gifts and their Prices are Very Reasonable.

We carry a complete line of Musical Instruments and Supplies. Mail orders receive our prompt and careful attention.

TORRISON BROS.
THIEF RIVER FALLS, MINN.

Shanty and Supplies Burned

On Monday last fire destroyed the building occupied by M. Green, excavating and logging contractor, of Minneapolis, and situated a short distance north of the bridge over the Thief river six miles east of here. The entire outfit of supplies, bedding etc., belonging to Mr. Green and his four helpers, was destroyed and he estimates the total loss at about $500. The fire was caused by the explosion of an airtight heating stove. Chas. Teimel, one of the men, was at the building when the explosion occured and he did his best to extinguish the flames but was forced out in a hurry. Mr. Green and his other men were after hay and returned in time to view the smoldering ruins.

Mr. Green has been doing some construction work for the Northwestern Drainage Co., and during the past season dug 18 miles of ditch No. 20 in the Mud Lake system. He has taken the contract to haul out 1,500 tons of coal from here for use of the Northwestern Drainage Co's dredges at work on ditches 11 and 200 and has just moved his outfit here to begin that work. He had intended to make his headquarters at the building which was burned, which belonged to the company. He took his men and teams up stream a mile or so, hitched onto another vacant building belonging to the company and had it moved to the site of the burned one before the fire was out. Then he drove to town and bought a complete new outfit and installed it in the new quarters the same day.

For a holiday gift why not send this paper for a year to a friend? It would please the friend and help to boost this community. Call and get acquainted with our attractive Special Offer for such subscriptions.

Rev. M. B. Ordahl will conduct services in the Holt church Thanksgiving day at 10:45 A. M. There will be childrens meeting at 2 P. M. and the Young Peoples Society and services in the English language in the evening. Everybody invited.

W. R. Hoag, the drainage engineer was a visitor in Holt over Tuesday night. He was on his way to Thief River Falls and the twin cities and was looking over the drainage work in the Thief River and vicinity. He reports good progress with the work and good work done by the contractors.

W. B. Fuller, secretary of the Hanson & Barzen Milling Company, was here Tuesday on one of his periodical bus'ness trips. He worked a few minutes too long and missed connections with the train for home. Mr. Hager, of Thief River Falls happened to be here the same afternoon and took Mr. Fuller home by team.

Yesterday the mail clerk omitted throwing off the mail sacks for this point and local people were considerably put out by the omission. There has been numerous complaints regarding the mail service on this line recently and there may be some shaking up among the clerks if they do not develop more careful methods.

Crookston College has placed all its graduates in positions. The demand for office help has been greater than we could supply. School is in session all year. You can begin at any time of year. Good board and furnished room, taken care of in private family, for $3 per week. Send for catalog. Address J. C. Sathre, Crookston, Minn.

TWO MILLION YEARS OLD.

An important discovery recently made in Spain appears to place beyond doubt the existence of primitive man in the Pliocene period—say between one million and two million years ago. Simple and roughly fashioned tools were found associated with rocks and fossils which undoubtedly belong to this period. Modern discoveries have greatly extended knowledge of man's antiquity, and have shown that the human race was in existence long before the Ice period which succeeded the Pliocene era.

JUGS FOR FLOWERS.

The girl who likes a few growing things around her, no matter how simple they are, should not bother about procuring handsome vases. She should take up the new fancy for using old English beer jugs. They are made in America as well as in England, and have all sorts of pictures on them, from Westminster Abbey, in London, to the Independence hall, in Philadelphia.

The jugs are low and broad and have wonderful coloring. They come in purple, in green and in brown, and sell for reasonable prices.

PERILS OF MODERN LIFE

Aviator Cites Case of Jorkins to Show Walker Is in as Great Danger as Flyer.

Miss Harriet Quimby, after one of her daring aeroplane flights at Mineola, L. I., smiled lightly at a reporter's mention of the danger of flying.

"Oh, there's danger everywhere," she said. "The walker is in as much danger almost as the flier. Did you never hear about the fate of Jorkins?

"Jorkins, poor fellow, came from the country to New York. The noise and confusion of New York quite upset him. Threading his way across the busy street, he thought he would go mad.

"'Clank! Clank!'

"Jorkins leaped to the right just in time to escape a motor car.

"'Ding-a-ling! Ding-dong.'

"He darted to the left from under the very wheels of an automobile fire engine.

"'Hum-m-m!'

"Jorkins, looking up in the air, now saw a monoplane, its tail smashed, falling straight upon him. He glared wildly round, caught sight of a manhole, lifted the cover and jumped down into a black hole just in time to be cut in half by an underground electric train."

STRADIVARI.

Antonio Stradivari, the Italian violin maker, was born in 1649 and died in 1737. He was the pupil of Nicoli Amati, in whose employment he remained until about 1679, when he began making violins on his own account. He settled the typical pattern of the Cremona violin, and his instruments, for tone and finish, have never yet been excelled. His improvements consisted chiefly in lowering the height of the arch of the belly, in making the four corner blocks more massive, in giving greater curvature to the middle ribs, in altering the setting of the sound holes and in making the scroll more massive and prominent. He reached his greatest perfection in his art about 1714. He also made many other kinds of musical instruments, but it is on his violins of all kinds that his fame rests.

There are many so-called Stradivari violins in existence, but few, if any of them, are genuine.

STORAGE FOWL POISONS SIXTY.

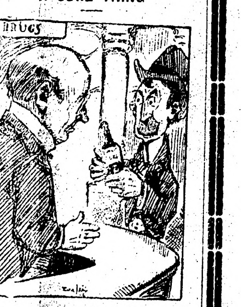
Cold storage chicken served at the wedding supper of C. M. Artman, Chicago, caused ptomaine poisoning among about sixty of the guests.

Dr. George B. Young, health commissioner, concluded an investigation of the affair. He refused to give the name of the concern which sold the chicken, saying, "It might hurt their business." No prosecution will be instituted.

The chicken was served in a salad. On the morning after the supper nearly every one who had eaten of it became ill. Those who had not partaken of the salad were unaffected. That circumstance, in the opinion of Dr. Young, fixed the guilt upon the chicken.

Alderman Joseph T. Mahoney of the Thirtieth ward was one of the victims.

A SURE THING



Customer—Is this cough medicine a good thing?

Druggist (absently)—It is, for the manufacturer.

OLD ACQUAINTANCE.

"Why, how do you do, my dear sir?"

"You can't just place me, can you?"

"Oh, yes, indeed. You are Mr. Bjenks, whom I meet in the humorous paragraphs nearly every day."

D. B. Bakke, Pres. S. S. Kolden, Vice-pres.

HOLT STATE BANK
Incorporated June 1st, 1910.

Our List of Customers is Steadily Incrasing.

Why pay out $1.50 in fees for a few Money Orders when a check answers the same purpose without a cent of cost to you? We urge everyone to systematize their business and to pay all bills by check. You not only hold a record of your earnings and expenditures during a season, but also hold a separate receipt for each and every check bearing endorsement. Also, by conducting your business on an economical basis, your balance steadily increases. A surplus entered to your credit in your pass book is a most worthy friend to have and far-reaching in its effects within the community, as it places money in circulation among your fellow neighbors.

Your entire banking business earnestly solicited.

B. L. BACKE, Cashier.

LIGHTEN YOUR KITCHEN CARES
1892 PURE SPUN ALUMINUM WARE
SAVES MONEY HEALTH, TIME AND TEMPER

It says "Good Morning" to a million happy housewives who have found kitchen satisfaction in the only ware that will not break, scale or rust, nor scorch the most dainty food.

Say "Good Bye" forever to cooking troubles by throwing away your old rusting, corroding and scaling iron, tin and enamel utensils. Replace them with "1892" Spun Aluminum Ware.

IT IS GUARANTEED FOR 25 YEARS
IT'S WORTH WHILE TO INVESTIGATE
NOW ON EXHIBITION
S. S. KOLDEN & Co.

Want to Sell your Land?
List it with
CHAS. W. LATTA
At The NORTHERN LIGHT Office
HOLT, MINN.

We have a lot of New Goods coming in and they will soon be here.

Watch this Space for future Announcements.

Funeral Supplies always in stock.

S. S. KOLDEN & Co.
HOLT, MINNESOTA.

Prejudice Is a Serious Menace

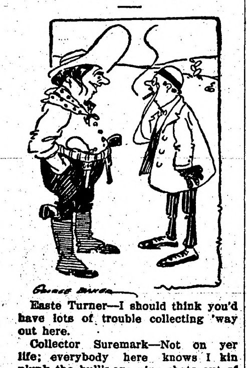
Prejudice is a hard thing to overcome, but where health is at stake and the opinion of thousands of reliable people differs from yours, prejudice then becomes your menace and you ought to lay it aside. This is said in the interest of people suffering from chronic constipation, and it is worthy of their attention.

In the opinion of legions of reliable American people the most stubborn constipation imaginable can be cured by a brief use of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. You may not have heard of it before, but do not doubt its merits on that account, or because it has not been blatantly advertised. It has sold very successfully on word of mouth recommendation. Parents are giving it to their children today who were given it by their parents, and it has been truthfully said that more druggists use it personally in their families than any other laxative.

Letters recently received from Mr. E. M. Connelly, Genoa Jct., Wis., and Mrs. E. Bolch, Hatfield, Wis., are but a few of thousands showing the esteem in which Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is held. It is mild, gentle, non-griping—not violent, like salts or cathartics. It cures gradually and pleasantly so that in time nature again does its own work without outside aid. Constipated people owe it to themselves to use this grand bowel specific.

Anyone wishing to make a trial of this remedy before buying it in the regular way of a druggist at fifty cents or one dollar a large bottle (family size) can have a sample bottle sent to the home free of charge by simply addressing Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 201 Washington St., Monticello, Ill. Your name and address on a postal card will do.

SUCCESSFUL COLLECTOR.



Easte Turner—I should think you'd have lots of trouble collecting 'way out here.

Collector Suremark—Not on yer life; everybody here knows I kin plunk the bull's-eye nine shots out of ten!

A Hunting Story.

An old backwoodsman that Abraham Lincoln often told of had very heavy, over-hanging eyebrows, and wore big spectacles with brass rims. One day he came rushing into his cabin and seizing his rifle, aimed it carefully through a crack of the door at a great oak tree that stood near, and fired.

"What is it?" whispered his wife.

"A wildcat, Sairy," he said, excitedly, "an' I missed him!"

He hastily loaded and fired again, and then again.

"Now, hold on, Joshua," said his good wife. "Let me look at you. Why, laws-a-daisy, it's nothin' but a little bug on one o' your eyebrows!"—Housekeeper.

Adam Bede on Pittsburg.

Pittsburg patriots twisted their faces awry at a Smoketown pun delivered by former Congressman Bede of Minnesota.

Bede put it over in the climax of a sparkling speech at a chamber of commerce banquet.

After telling how dearly he loved old Pittsburg and her fine old people, her rich people and her toilers, he said:

"I like Pittsburg because if I ever get tired of the town I can wash it off."

A BRAIN WORKER.
Must Have the Kind of Food That Nourishes Brain.

"I am a literary man whose nervous energy is a great part of my stock in trade, and ordinarily I have little patience with breakfast foods and the extravagant claims made of them. But I cannot withhold my acknowledgment of the debt that I owe to Grape-Nuts food.

"I discovered long ago that the very bulkiness of the ordinary diet was not calculated to give one a clear head, the power of sustained, accurate thinking. I always felt heavy and sluggish in mind as well as body after eating the ordinary meal, which diverted the blood from the brain to the digestive apparatus.

"I tried foods easy of digestion, but found them usually deficient in nutriment. I experimented with many breakfast foods and they, too, proved unsatisfactory, till I reached Grape-Nuts. And then the problem was solved.

"Grape-Nuts agreed with me perfectly from the beginning, satisfying my hunger and supplying the nutriment that so many other prepared foods lack.

"I had not been using it very long before I found that I was turning out an unusual quantity and quality of work. Continued use has demonstrated to my entire satisfaction that Grape-Nuts food contains the elements needed by the brain and nervous system of the hard working public writer." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

"There's a reason," and it is explained in the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

FIRST AID FOR MINE DISASTER VICTIMS

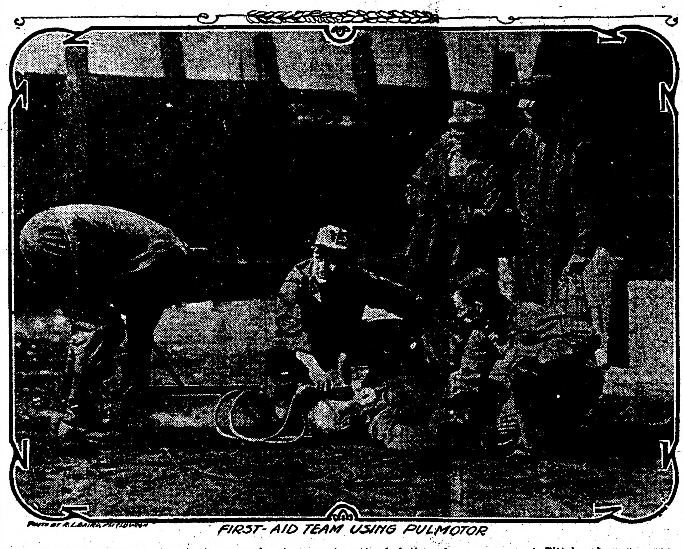


PHOTO BY R. L. LAIRD, PITTSBURGH

FIRST-AID TEAM USING PULMOTOR

PRESIDENT TAFT and the other prominent men who attended the mine congress at Pittsburgh were especially interested in the demonstration of developments in first aid to those injured in mine disasters. Among the new devices exhibited was the pulmotor, used to resuscitate those who are asphyxiated by noxious gases.

WOMEN AS FARMERS

Outdoor Life Is Luring to Dwellers on Prairies.

Daughters of Two Men, Who Were Disabled, Prove Expert Agriculturists—Perform All Kinds of Manual Labor.

Topeka, Kan.—Many Kansas women are turning to agriculture and to a life out of doors. Within the last two years a score or more of young women have chosen the farming vocation in preference to teaching and to clerkships in stores and stenographic positions. Some of them declare that much of the work may be done by women now that modern machinery has lightened the burdens of the farmer. But the greatest benefits come, they say, from the needed exercise and the life in the open air.

Prominent among the young women of Kansas who are making a success at farming are the Misses Ruby and Olive Herd of Hodgeman county. These two sisters own a farm seven miles west of Jetmore. Preferring a life of independence, they bought the land and built a modest cottage and turned their attention to small farming, poultry raising and fruit growing. There are no Saturday half-holidays with the two Herd sisters, for they are not seen at the county seat or the local trading place on that afternoon talking politics.

These two young women were formerly school teachers. Their little home is comfortable, and it shows every evidence of refinement.

Miss Tillie Rheinschimdt, eighteen years old, has demonstrated this year that she knows how to run a farm. Her father is a well-known citizen of Sumner township, Reno county, but in the summer he was disabled by a serious accident and the burden fell upon his daughter to manage the work. Bossing a hired man and a boy, and doing a lot of the work herself, this bright Kansas girl has put in nearly 100 acres of wheat, and personally helped in the work of gathering the corn from a field of 80 acres. She proudly boasted that hers was the first field of corn gathered in Sumner township.

Probably the best record made by young women on Kansas farms this year is that of the three daughters of Rennie Griem, a Kingman county farmer. One of them was teaching school near Zenda, and the other two were attending Kingman high school. When their father was taken ill the three girls came home from their schools and sailed in to run that farm. The elder sister, the school-ma'am, prepared the ground and planted several acres of corn with her own hands, besides putting out other crops. The two high school girls rolled up their sleeves and made full hands on the farm.

The three of them plowed corn, milked cows, delivered cream, harvested wheat and oats, cut 30 acres of alfalfa three cuttings, put up a lot of prairie hay, raised corn that made 50 bushels to the acre and performed every bit of the farm work unassisted. Not a man was seen on the Griem place all summer. When their father was able to be out they pointed to granaries full of corn and wheat, the barns housing fat cattle and sleek horses, and the bank account intact. They were proud of the fact that they did not pay out a dollar to men to achieve this record.

Generally the women of Kansas who have turned from the cities to the simple life out in the country are not concerned about marriage. They are women of mature years and judgment, to whom marriage relation does not appeal unless it carries with it energy and the ability to make a living.

Says Our Music is Trashy

Dr. Brunner of Berlin Declares Ragtime Will Drive Us All Crazy—It Jars Nerve Centers.

Los Angeles, Cal.—That Ragtime music will eventually drive the American public crazy because of its effect upon the nerve centers and brain cells of the human system, and that it is mainly responsible for many business failures and cases of hopeless insanity, is the belief of Dr. Ludwig Brunner, late instructor in the Imperial academy of medical research at Berlin, who arrived here recently.

"Your ragtime air jars the nerve centers and causes an irritation of the brain cells," says the doctor. "While the roll and thump of ragtime is exhilarating to the senses and acts as a stimulant, it has the after effects of an injurious drug that will eventually stagnate the brain cells and wreck the nervous system.

"I have been in this country several months and everywhere I have visited, New York, Chicago, New Orleans and San Francisco, the little minds are crazy with ragtime.

"If something be not done the classics of the long ago will be a thing of the past entirely, and they will be singing national hymns in ragtime."

Good Eye Removed, Sees.

Carlisle, Pa.—By removing his active eye, Jacob Shields, who has been blind in the other for 17 years, has been enabled to see perfectly out of the one formerly defective.

Recently Shields suffered a sudden attack of total blindness from the strain imposed on the good eye by the blind. He was removed to a Philadelphia hospital, and there the physicians determined that his good eye, which had been affected, would have to be done away with. They discovered, however, that the blind eye was made so by a cataract. That removed the blind eye regained its sight.

Dog Has Costly Gold Teeth

Little "Mexy" Had Bad Toothache and His Owner Gave Him Brand New Set of Incisors.

Chicago.—In the future, when Mexy's playmates laugh at him for having no hair, he will open his mouth in a yawn, carelessly displaying a mouth full of gold teeth that would fill the soul of some people with envy. The set of bridgework cost $112.

At least, those were Mexy's plans when he was interviewed. Not that he was so ill-bred as to say anything about his teeth. In fact, he said nothing intelligible to the average man, for he is a Mexican dog.

He belongs to Dr. Henri Grosser, a student at the Western Dental college, and lives with Grosser and his wife at 934 La Salle avenue.

Dr. Grosser took Mexy from the refuge of the Anti-Cruelty society several weeks ago and soon afterward discovered that the dog was suffering from toothache.

An examination disclosed the presence of two abscessed incisors and several other teeth that needed attention.

The basement of the Grosser home was turned into an operating room, with Mexy as the patient and Dr. Grooser the dentist.

"Mexy seemed to know that I was doing what was best for him," Dr. Grosser said, "and, although he objected a good deal at first, he gave me no trouble after the teeth were out. It was a great relief to him, you see, for as soon as I had removed the teeth the pain stopped.

"He used to lie perfectly still when I was taking the impressions and made no trouble, even when I was fitting the new teeth in place. They are good and sound, too, and not a dog in Chicago is better able to chew bones and meat than he."

By reason of his teeth, Mexy has become one of the celebrities of the neighborhood.

KISSES RETARD A WEDDING

Osculation Nettled Kansas Justice Who Was Performing Ceremony—Bride Was 40 Years Old.

Kansas City, Kan.—William W. Shannon will be known about the courthouse in future as the kissing bridegroom. While he and Minnie I. Stockey, both of Ottawa, Kan., were being married by Justice Cass Welch in the county recorder's office, he kissed his bride five times. After every question the justice asked Mr. Shannon insisted on kissing the bride before the question was answered.

"If you don't cut out the kissing I won't go any further with this ceremony," Justice Welch told the bridegroom. "You not only violate the anti-kissing rules of this office, but interrupt a most solemn ceremony."

"Guess I can wait 32 seconds if you finish up in that time," Mr. Shannon told the justice. He kept his promise. Mr. Shannon is 39 years old and until the ceremony was a bachelor. The bride is 40 years old.

RELIGIOUS HOAX IN INDIA

People Drink From Stagnant Pool Scented With Stolen Perfume and Story Spreads of Spring.

Calcutta.—One of the most extraordinary religious hoaxes ever recorded even in India has just occurred in the northern part of Calcutta.

A pool of stagnant water formed from the accumulation of sewage from roadside drains suddenly began, according to the local inhabitants, to emit a sweet perfume which had a lovely lemon flavor. Many people came, smelt, and were conquered, and the rumor spread that the pool was holy and that a new goddess would soon rise from its waters to redeem the world.

The pool became a place of pilgrimage. Diseased people bathed in it and drank of it, and those of uneasy conscience washed away their sins in it. The water was carried away in jugs and bottles and a brisk trade sprang up under the aegis of an astute young Bengalee in selling the "holy water" in all parts of the city at as much as $1.50 a bottle.

News of the holy perfume came to the ears of Bose & Co., scent manufacturers, who sent a connoisseur to investigate. His nose immediately provided him with a clew to the mysterious disappearance of several cases of essential oils belonging to the firm. The police found that several broken bottles of the oils had been thrown into the pool. This was the explanation of the holy smell.

The young Bengalee and a carter, suspected of having stolen the oils, were arrested.

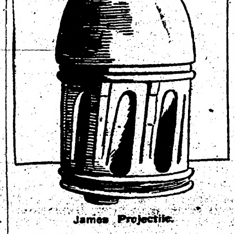
MISSILE OF SIXTIES

James Projectile Used During Civil War.

An Old-Time Artillery Missile Made of Cast Iron, and of Most Peculiar and Interesting Construction.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Of the many styles of artillery projectiles made and used during the War for the Union those constructed on General James' place were among the most interesting and useful. This invention, however, was not one of those springing directly out of the sudden and intense study given by Americans to military matters, the system having been devised and subjected to severe tests several years before the opening of the Civil war.

Shot and shell on this principle were elongated and, of course, were intended for rifled cannon only. The James missile was of cast iron, cylindro-conoidal, the whole forward portion—the point—being solid, if a shot, and hollowed and provided with a percussion fuse, if a bombshell. In the base of the projectile there is a central orifice extending into the cylinder and from this orifice (as seen in the illustration) ten almost rectangular openings diverge (like the mortises for spokes in a wheel-hub) through the body to the exterior. In recesses on the outside of the projectile is the "packing," an envelope of strong canvas, sheet-tin and lead, suitably arranged for the peculiar work assigned for it. On the outside is the canvas, which is well-saturated with a tallow lubricant. In making, the heavy tin envelope is secured in its place by an iron collar, and the space between the tin and the body of the cylinder is filled with molten lead, which, adhering to the tin and to the iron, forms a compact mass around the projectile.



James Projectile.

When the gun is fired the powder gases are forced into a base of the projectile, and through the ten openings against the packing, and this, expanded into the rifling of the gun, imparts to the shot or shell the required rotation in flight. The "packing" selected by this inventor was carefully thought out; and, as the lead, melted into its place, had an exceedingly tenacious grip, and as the force of the powder charge could expand the "packing" no farther than the grooves of the gun, there were no complaints as to the packing being blown off in fragments before the missile had completed its journey.

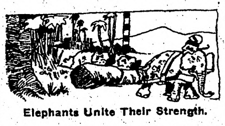
The average weight of the James solid shot for a 42-pounder is 81¼ pounds, or if a shell, 64¼ pounds, of which, in either case, 6½ pounds is the weight of the "packing."

AN INTELLIGENT ELEPHANT

Incident Which Helps to Solve the Much Discussed Problem, "Do Animals Think?"

London.—Recently an Indian elephant has covered considerable territory toward the solution of the much discussed problem, "Do animals think?" Ordered to drag a tree, which proved too heavy, urged and excited to continue her efforts, the chain by which the beast was fastened finally broke and she made a dash for the jungle.

It was supposed she would mix with the wild elephants and be seen no more, but in an hour back she came bringing with her two other elephants, and by their united strength the tree was easily moved. After the job was finished the two strange animals disappeared, but the one faithfully remained to go forward with her higher education.



Elephants Unite Their Strength.

Wasps Enjoy Church Service.

Germantown, N. Y.—Because he allowed a swarm of wasps to build a nest in the church, Sherman Likely, sexton of the Dutch Reformed church, is in danger of losing his position. The wasps nearly broke up the services, and now a committee is investigating. The swarm made its home in the church during two weeks the church was closed, and when the fires were started Sunday the wasps descended upon the worshipers.

UNDEFEATED CHAMPION OF THE NORTHWEST.

T. A. Ireland, Rifle Shot of Colfax, Wash., Tells a Story.

Mr. Ireland is the holder of four world records and has yet to lose his first match—says he: "Kidney trouble so affected my vision as to interfere with my shooting I became so nervous I could hardly hold a gun. There was severe pain in my back and head and my kidneys were terribly disordered. Doan's Kidney Pills cured me after I had doctored and taken nearly every remedy imaginable without relief. I will give further details of my case to anyone enclosing stamp."

"When Your Back Is Lame, Remember the Name—DOAN'S." 50c, all stores. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, N. Y.

Doubtless.

"She left me for some motive or another."

"Probably another."—Lippincott's Magazine.

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets regulate and invigorate stomach, liver and bowels. Sugar-coated, tiny granules, easy to take as candy.

It is only those who live on low ground who complain that the world is overcrowded.

DR. J. H. RINDLAUB (Specialist), Eye, Ear, Nose and Throat
Fargo, N. D.

Wisdom, like flowers, requires culture.—Ballon.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Eradicates scrofula and all other humors, cures all their effects, makes the blood rich and abundant, strengthens all the vital organs. Take it.

Get it today in usual liquid form or chocolated tablets called Sarsatabs.

Constipation Vanishes Forever

Prompt Relief—Permanent Cure. CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS never fail. Purely vegetable—act surely but gently on the liver. Stop after dinner distress—cure indigestion, improve the complexion, brighten the eyes. SMALL PILL, SMALL DOSE, SMALL PRICE. Genuine must bear Signature Brent Good

CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS.

CARRY A TEXAS GUN made into our attractive Watch Fob, Holster of good leather, with metal gun inserted. Actual reproduction of holster and gun typical of the gun carrying days of the West. A Novelty Worth Having. Now is the time to obtain this novelty fob—new on the market. Sold by all up-to-date druggists, newsdealers, tobacconists and novelty stores. Mail us twenty-five cents (coin) and we will send you one of these unique fobs by return mail. Five for one dollar, charges paid. ALAMO LEATHER & NOVELTY CO. Dept. K, 425 Ave. D., San Antonio, Tex.

Fargo Directory

KODAKS and KODAK SUPPLIES. Write for catalogues and literature. We do developing and printing. Mail orders given prompt attention. FARGO DRUG CO., FARGO, N. D.

Dakota Business College. LARGEST and FINEST between CHICAGO AND THE COAST. FARGO, NORTH DAKOTA.

HIGHEST CASH PRICES paid for sour cream. Price 32 cents this week. Prompt payment, honest test, guaranteed return of cans. FARGO ICE CREAM & CIDER COMPANY. Largest creamery in the northwest.

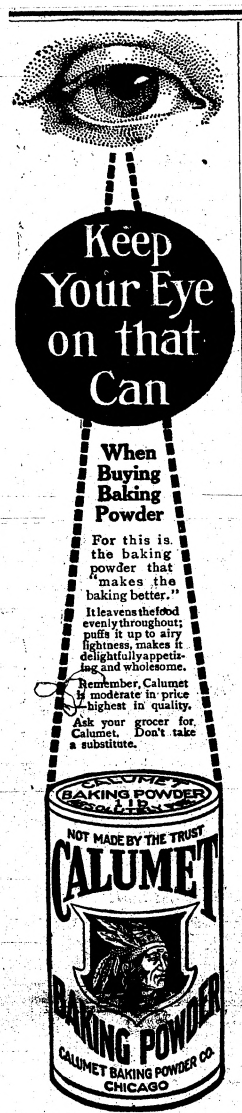
FARGO TANNERY. Receives hides and skins for tanning to harness leather, robes and coats. Robes lined, hides bought, leather and robes for sale. SEND FOR PRICE LIST. Andrew Monson, Proprietor, Fargo Tannery, Fargo, North Dakota.

STONE PIANO COMPANY, FARGO, N. D. New Pianos $128.50 and up. Write for catalogs. Satisfaction guaranteed.

TRUNKS. Direct from the factory to the user. Monson pays the freight. Write for catalog. MONSON TRUNK FACTORY, Fargo, N. D.

MONUMENTS. 500 in stock. Write for free catalog. FARGO MARBLE & GRANITE WORKS, N. P. Ave., Fargo, N. D.

THE NELSON NATUROPATHIC INSTITUTE, NO. 1 NORTH BROADWAY, FARGO, N. D. A strictly drugless institute, with the very best modern appliances for treating chronic diseases including paralysis and tuberculosis successfully. Consultation free. Write for particulars.



Keep Your Eye on that Can

When Buying Baking Powder

For this is the baking powder that "makes the baking better." It leavens the food evenly throughout; puffs it up to airy lightness, makes it delightfully appetizing and wholesome. Remember, Calumet is moderate in price—highest in quality. Ask your grocer for Calumet. Don't take a substitute.

CALUMET BAKING POWDER. NOT MADE BY THE TRUST. CALUMET BAKING POWDER CO. CHICAGO

Stops Neuralgia Pains

Sloan's Liniment has a soothing effect on the nerves. It stops neuralgia and sciatica pains instantly.

Here's Proof

Mrs. C. M. Dowker of Johannesburg, Mich., writes:—"Sloan's Liniment is the best medicine in the world. It has relieved me of Neuralgia. Those pains have all gone and I can truly say your Liniment did stop them."

Mr. Andrew F. Lear of 50 Gay Street, Cumberland, Md., writes:—"I have used Sloan's Liniment for Neuralgia and I certainly do praise it very much."

SLOAN'S LINIMENT is the best remedy for rheumatism, backache, sore throat and sprains.

At all dealers.

Price 25c., 50c. and $1.00

Sloan's book on Horses, Cattle, Hogs and Poultry sent free. Address Dr. Earl S. Sloan, Boston, Mass.

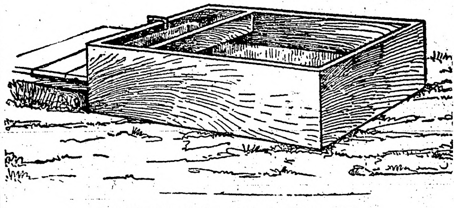
DEFIANCE STARCH. 16 OUNCES TO THE PACKAGE—OTHER STARCHES ONLY 12 OUNCES—SAME PRICE AND "DEFIANCE" IS SUPERIOR QUALITY

IF IT'S YOUR EYES PETTIT'S EYE SALVE is what you need

REMEMBER PISO'S for COUGHS & COLDS

COMBINATION TANK AND TROUGH FOR SHEEP, HORSES AND CATTLE

Illustration Shows Convenient Addition Which Will Eliminate One Great Difficulty and Will be Found of Much Value Where Water Is Pumped by Hand, Engine or Wind Mill.



Drinking Trough for Sheep in Water Tank.

Frequently a simple method of watering stock will mean much on many farms, especially where horses, cattle and sheep drink from the same trough. Large tanks do not permit sheep to drink unless the tank is full, therefrom, if cattle and horses lower the water in the tank so it is only a quarter of half full, the sheep will be unable to reach it. The illustration shows a convenient addition, says the Orange Judd Farmer. This will be found of great value where either water is pumped by hand, by gasoline engine or wind power.

A small trough is sent in the end into which the water is pumped, and as it overflows it runs into the larger tank. A raised platform at this end will make it possible for sheep to reach into the tank. Where hand power is required and the tank is nearly empty, without this convenience it would be necessary to pump the tank nearly full in order that sheep might reach the water, whereas by this method they will be able to drink at once. The same is true in the use of wind power. As soon as the pump begins to work, the sheep have access to the water.

This method is used with great success in Conedale farm in Winona county, Minn. In this case the water source is a large spring and the power a couple of hydraulic rams. These rams work night and day, year in and year out, and the inflow is adjusted as shown in the illustration. Of course, there is a continual flow of water into the tank, but there is an outlet which permits the water to run from this tank into another one in another yard at a lower level. Though simple in construction this attachment will mean a great deal in watering stock.

BEST WAY TO TOP DRESS GRAIN

Should be Done During the Fall Months to Afford Proper Protection for Roots of Crop.

If grain is to be top dressed, the work should be done in the fall, as it is very necessary to have the grain deep-rooted with sufficient top to protect the roots. Haul and spread direct from wagon or cart when the ground is dry enough to haul over. The manure should be fine and well rotted.

Clean, mellow ground should be seeded to grass at the time of drilling and sown to clover in the spring. The early seeded grain nearly always gives the best yield. Rather thin land drilled to grain should be top dressed with long strawy manure. If manure cannot be had spread straw or leaf mold from the woods. A thin covering will protect the grain and grass, and when rotted will help to keep the soil moist and cool during the hot weather. Straw is worth fully $1.50 to $2.00 per ton to spread over the grain. All straw not wanted for feeding and bedding should be used for top-dressing grain and grass. Where the land is not too rolling and the snows are not too heavy, there is no better way to use the winter manure than to haul it out, and when the weather is suitable and the ground is in condition to haul over and spread it on either the grain or grass fields. Much of the value of manure is wasted when it is piled in the yard, exposed to heavy rains and snows. There is litttle loss when spread over sod land.

CROSSCUT SAW IS VERY HANDY

Where Logs of Medium Size Are to be Cut Implement Shown Will be Found Convenient.

Crosscut Saw for One.

It is often convenient to have a crosscut saw that one man can use for cutting medium sized logs, says the Orange Judd Farmer. The one shown herewith fills the bill very well. It consists of a blade, a handle, set as shown, and a bow re-enforced with wire around it at various points.

Preferably this bow should be of well-seasoned hickory, ash or some other tough, but not too heavy, wood. It is not necessary to have very much spring in the bow, although some spring adds rigidity and tension to the saw, which can thus be run more easily. The most important points for the winding are toward the ends, where the pole is split by sawing to admit blade. The pole should be only a few inches longer than the saw when laid out straight.

Crosscut Saw.

White Corn Is Best.

Experiments carried on at the Missouri experiment station during the past four years show that Boone county white corn is the best variety for general use in that state. The next in order below this are Commercial White, St. Charles White and Reeds Yellow Dent. These varieties are doubtless well adapted to other southwestern states.

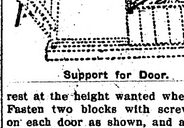
SUPPORT FOR CELLAR DOOR

Excellent Device Is Shown in Illustration for Use When Passage-Way Is Wanted Open.

Support for Cellar Door.

The illustration shows a self-opening and self-closing support for a cellar door. One-half of the door is shown opened and resting on the support A. The other half shows the support fastened in place. It is very simple to make and attach.

Use a strip of wood for the support, seven-eighths by two inches, with the required length to allow the door to rest at the height wanted when open. Fasten two blocks with screws, one on each door as shown, and attach a support to each block with a tee hinge. The folding bracket B is easily made of a piece of hoop iron. The support will lie flat on the door when it is closed, according to the Popular Mechanics, but will open up to the right position for a support as soon as the door is opened.



Support for Door.

NEED OF LIME ON SOME SOILS

There Is but One Sure Way of Making Known the Fault and That Is by Practical Trial.

There is only one sure way of determining whether a soil needs lime and that is by trial. An application of lime over a whole field would be a waste of both time and money if the field were not in need of such an application. It is suggested that the farmer who has not already proved for himself whether his soils need lime would better conduct a few simple experiments at different points on his farm.

A few barrels of lime or a few tons of limestone would not cost a great deal and the labor of treating a strip with lime or ground limestone here and there across different fields in which crops were to be grown or so treat a small area here and there, at different points in the fields in which crops are to be grown, would involve but a small amount of labor. These areas should be very carefully located and marked and the results of the applications should be carefully studied on the succeeding crops. It is possible that the effects, good and bad, may be easily apparent. It is possible that the effects can be discovered only by carefully cutting and weighing the crops from portions of the treated areas and comparing them with the crops produced upon equal adjacent areas.

Lime should not be applied to manure piles nor to the litter in the barn.

Lime should not be applied to land being prepared for potatoes.—Circular 11, Michigan Experiment Station.

Caterpillar's Big Appetite.

In a single month, a single caterpillar devours six thousand times its own weight in food.

SHE SAVED 18 LIVES

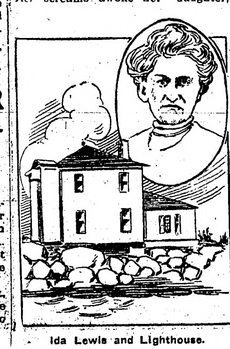
Noted Woman Lighthouse Keeper Dies on Duty.

"Grace Darling" of America—The Only Woman to Hold a Commission From the Government in Her Work.

New York.—In the closing of the career of Ida M. Lewis, for 60 years keeper of the Lime Rock Light in Narragansett bay, one of the most famous heroines of the world passes from the stage of American history. Since early girlhood she watched the tumbling waters of the Narragansett from her little white house on the rock and through the long years her lights never failed to guide mariners to a safe port through storms and heavy mists.

Sixty years ago, when but a stripling of a girl, her father, the keeper of Lime Rock Light, was stricken suddenly ill. She took his place and for weeks, while the old man lay dying, she tended the lights. When he died she was appointed keeper in his place and since that time her deeds have kept her before the world in a remarkable way. Her record of rescues is 18 lives. Eight times she has ventured onto an almost impossible sea and taken struggling humans from the water.

The rescue that made Ida Lewis the most famous heroine of America occurred on a stormy morning in March of 1869. It was hardly dawn and Ida's mother was the first to awaken. From her window she saw two men, out in the raging sea, clinging to a boat that had turned turtle. Her screams awoke her daughter, who stopped not for shoes nor hat, but, clad only in a thin dress, dashed out of the house into the cold, driving wind and faced the snow and sleet. It took Ida fifteen minutes to launch her dory in the dangerously high surf. At last she pushed beyond the inshore breakers; and then she rowed for dear life. When the nearly exhausted men saw Ida one of them cried: "It's only a girl!" Whereupon he let go his hold of the capsized boat and sank. A moment later, when he reappeared, she seized him by the hair and with abnormal strength dragged him into the boat. The second man shouted that he was so frozen that he could not help himself and so a second time Ida pulled a half dead man out of the freezing water and into her little dory.



Ida Lewis and Lighthouse.

For all of her wonderful rescues Ida Lewis received fitting recognition. Congress honored her with medals. She was a pensioned member of the Carnegie Hero Fund and the Massachusetts Humane society rewarded her with a token of its esteem.

For years the home of Ida Lewis on Lime Rock was the Mecca of the world's greatest men and women. They felt themselves honored to be able to call on her. President Grant and General Sherman were among her most noted visitors.

Her latest recorded rescue was of a woman five years ago when she was sixty-seven years old. There are a number of brave deeds to her credit that have never been made known.

PRINTH PAPER WITH A LITHP.

Thomebody Thole All Etheth to Thop Ithue of the Thawtelle Thentinel.

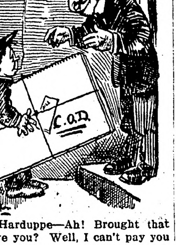
Los Angeles, Cal.—The oddest newspaper ever printed in southern California is this week's issue of the Sawtelle Sentinel, which makes its appearance without the letter "s" except in the advertisements and a few leading articles. Henry Schultz, county statistician and editor and publisher of the paper, makes the following explanation:

"At the time the Thentinel wath about half thet an evil-diphpothed thief entered thith office and carried away all our etheth and for thith reathon our thurbthcriberth will have to do the very betht they can in reading thome of the articleth which are thpelled in the manner which they may have noticed in thith announcement."

Cusses Cost One Cent Each.

Bridgeport, Ohio.—An Anti-Swearing society has been organized here with twenty members, and they expect to treble that number. Each member is fined one cent for every oath used, all being put on their honor to tell. The money will be spent in banquets and lunches during the winter.

COLLECT ON DELIVERY.



Jack Harduppe—Ah! Brought that suit; have you? Well, I can't pay you now. I'll write your employer a letter.

Errand Boy—N. G., boss. I bought three letters with that suit and they is C. O. D.

Important to Mothers

Examine carefully every bottle of CASTORIA, a safe and sure remedy for infants and children, and see that it Bears the Signature of Chas. H. Fletcher. In Use For Over 30 Years. Children Cry for Fletcher's Castoria

Poor Conversationalist.

"Is your husband a good after-dinner talker?"

"No, indeed. As soon as he's had dinner he lies down on the couch and falls asleep, and I never get a word out of him."

Consequences.

"The men came to clean the furnace out."

"Yes."

"Then they cleaned me out."

For over fifty years Rheumatism, Neuralgia, and other painful ailments have been cured by Hamlins Wizard Oil. It is a good honest remedy and you will not regret having a bottle ready for use.

When one is sad or out of sorts for any cause whatever, there is no remedy so infallible as trying to make somebody else happy.—J. W. Carney.

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup for Children teething, softens the gums, reduces inflammation, allays pain, cures wind colic, 25c a bottle.

No man will have any trouble about understanding as much of the Bible as he is willing to live.

COLDS Cured in One Day

As a rule, a few doses of Munyon's Cold Remedy will break up any cold and prevent pneumonia. It relieves the head, throat and lungs almost instantly. Price 25 cents at any druggist's, or sent postpaid.

If you need Medical advice write to Munyon's Doctors. They will carefully diagnose your case and give you advice by mail, absolutely free.

Address Professor Munyon, 53d and Jefferson streets, Philadelphia, Pa.

Why Rent a Farm

and be compelled to pay to your landlord most of your hard-earned profits? Own your own farm. Secure a Free Homestead in Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta, or purchase land in one of these districts and bank a profit of $10.00 or $12.00 an acre every year. Land purchased 3 years ago at $10.00 an acre has recently changed hands at $25.00 an acre. The crops grown on these lands warrant the advance. You can

160 ACRE FARMS IN WESTERN CANADA FREE

Become Rich by cattle raising, dairying, mixed farming and grain growing in the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. Free homestead and pre-emption areas, as well as land held by railway and land companies, will provide homes for millions. Adaptable soil, healthful climate, splendid schools and churches, good railways. For settlers' rates, descriptive literature "Last Best West," how to reach the country and other particulars, write to Sup't of Immigration, Ottawa, Canada, or to the Canadian Government Agent. 36

CHAS. PILLING, Clifford Block, Grand Forks, N. Dak.

Please write to the agent nearest you

Save Money on Farm Loans

Write us direct for application blank and save local agent's commissions. Quick and reliable service. THE HATCHER BROTHERS CORPORATION, Grand Forks and Fargo, North Dakota

PARKER'S HAIR BALSAM. Cleanses and beautifies the hair. Promotes a luxuriant growth. Never Fails to Restore Gray Hair to its Youthful Color. Cures scalp diseases & hair falling. 50c, and $1.00 at Druggists

If afflicted with sore eyes, use Thompson's Eye Water

PATENTS Watson E. Coleman, Washington, D.C. Books free. Highest references. Best results.

W. N. U., FARGO, NO. 47-1911.

When You Think

Of the pain which many women experience with every month it makes the gentleness and kindness always associated with womanhood seem to be almost a miracle. While in general no woman rebels against what she regards as a natural necessity there is no woman who would not gladly be free from this recurring period of pain.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription makes weak women strong and sick women well, and gives them freedom from pain. It establishes regularity, subdues inflammation, heals ulceration and cures female weakness.

Sick women are invited to consult Dr. Pierce by letter, free. All correspondence strictly private and sacredly confidential. Write without fear and without fee to World's Dispensary Medical Association, R. V. Pierce, M. D., President, Buffalo, N. Y.

If you want a book that tells all about woman's diseases, and how to cure them at home, send 21 one-cent stamps to Dr. Pierce to pay cost of mailing only, and he will send you a free copy of his great thousand-page illustrated Common Sense Medical Adviser—revised, up-to-date edition, in paper covers. In handsome cloth-binding, 31 stamps.

PERFECTION SMOKELESS OIL HEATER

Smokeless Odorless Clean Convenient

The Perfection Smokeless Oil Heater warms up a room in next to no time. Always ready for use. Can be carried easily to any room where extra warmth is needed.

A special automatic device makes it impossible to turn the wick too high or too low. Safe in the hands of a child.

The Perfection burns nine hours on one filling—glowing heat from the minute it is lighted. Handsomely finished; drums of blue enamel or plain steel, with nickel trimmings.

Ask your dealer or write for descriptive circular to any agency of Standard Oil Company (Incorporated)

W. L. DOUGLAS $2.50, $3.00, $3.50 & $4.00 SHOES

WOMEN wear W. L. Douglas stylish, perfect fitting, easy walking boots, because they give long wear, same as W. L. Douglas Men's shoes.

THE STANDARD OF QUALITY FOR OVER 30 YEARS

The workmanship which has made W. L. Douglas shoes famous the world over is maintained in every pair.

W. L. Douglas shoes are warranted to hold their shape, fit and look better and wear longer than other makes for the price.

CAUTION The genuine have W. L. Douglas name and price stamped on bottom

Shoes Sent Everywhere—All Charges Prepaid.

How to Order by Mail.—If W. L. Douglas shoes are not sold in your town, send direct to factory. Take measurements of foot as shown in model; state style desired; size and width usually worn; plain or cap toe; heavy, medium or light sole. I do the largest shoe mail order business in the world.

Illustrated Catalog Free. W. L. DOUGLAS, 145 Spark St., Brockton, Mass.

ONE PAIR of my BOYS' $2, $2.50 or $3.00 SHOES will positively outwear TWO PAIRS of ordinary boys' shoes. Fast Color Eyelets Used Exclusively.

The Famous Rayo Lamps and Lanterns

Rayo lamps and lanterns give most light for the oil used.

The light is strong and steady. A Rayo never flickers. Materials and workmanship are the best. Rayo lamps and lanterns last.

Ask your dealer to show you his line of Rayo lamps and lanterns, or write for illustrated booklets direct to any agency of Standard Oil Company (Incorporated)

Defective Page

ADVENTURES of the WORLD'S GREAT DETECTIVES

By George Barton

The Story of the Purple Lining

A thrilling adventure in the career of Otto Busdorf of the Royal Police of Berlin.

COPYRIGHT 1911 BY W. G. CHAPMAN

THE town of Myslowitz is on the Prussian frontier. It has a population of about ten thousand persons and is a thriving little community. The fact that it is almost on the line between Germany and Russia, and that it has zinc and coal mines, has given it more than ordinary prominence. It has its schools, churches and theaters, and a conspicuous-looking financial institution which is known as the Markowski bank.

The constant exchange of money for use in the two countries has made the bank one of the most prosperous establishments in the town. The cashier of the bank, Franz Onoil, occupied a little cage by himself in one corner of the counting room. On New Year's eve of last year the young cashier was practically alone in the building, barring, of course, the messengers and watchmen. It was a few minutes before closing time when four men stopped in front of the building and engaged in conversation with persons who happened to be going in or out of the place. Presently two of the men stationed themselves at each corner of the building, and the other two went inside. One of them, a tall, smooth-faced, fair-haired young man, asked the cashier to exchange Russian for German money. Anoil readily assented. He brought the cash out of the drawer and had counted out what would be about a thousand dollars in our money in German marks and Russian rubles. After he had made the proper amount he gazed up at his customer and found that he was looking into the muzzle of an automatic revolver.

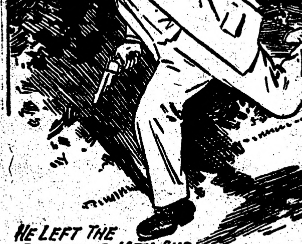
"Give me that money," said the intruder, making a reach for the cash with his disengaged hand.

"You'll not get it," retorted the plucky cashier.

"If you don't give it to me, I'll kill you," was the fierce retort.

"You can't have it," was the uncompromising rejoinder.

The next moment the stranger began firing. He sent five bullets into the heroic cashier's body. Then, with his pal, he broke into the enclosure and tried to open the safe. Anoil, though badly wounded, got hold of him and tried to throw him out of the room, but he was already dying from the effects of the pistol shots and could do but little. However, he clutched the inside of the assassin's coat and in the struggle that ensued he tore away a large part of the purple lining of the garment.



HE LEFT THE BLEEDING MAN AND FLED DOWN THE STREET

By this time the noise of the encounter was heard on the outside and some people started to come into the bank. A woman was the first to enter, and as the crooks saw her they hastily gathered up their booty and started for the door. She endeavored to stop them and they promptly knocked her down. When they reached the outside of the building a number of citizens started after them, but the four robbers ran at the top of their speed, while the murderer kept the pursuers at a distance at the point of his pistol. In a few minutes they had crossed the bridge leading to the Russian side and were soon on their native soil. The pursuers, returning to the bank, found that the cashier was dead. He lay there clutching the bit of purple lining in his icy fingers.

The police made a careful investigation, but did not succeed in obtaining any facts beyond those that have already been related. The few people who were in and around the bank at the time were too much excited to give an intelligent description of the assassin and his accomplices. The local authorities did all in their power to run down the crooks, but without result. Their resources naturally were not great enough to cope with a gang of such audacious and bloodthirsty criminals.

In addition to this, the local police seemed to have a wholesome fear of the thieves. They did their duty as far as that term is commonly accepted, but they did ont appear to have any great desire for a hand-to-hand encounter with men who were so ready to shoot and kill.

In this emergency the authorities of Myslowitz appealed to the police of Berlin. They asked that a first-class officer be detailed to run out this case and to bring the offenders to justice, and thereby put an end to the reign of terror which was otherwise sure to continue in their town for some time to come. As a consequence of this, Otto Busdorf, of the Royal Police of Berlin, was assigned to the task of bringing the criminals to justice. He came unannounced and he wandered about the quaint little frontier town until he knew the place and the people by heart. He sat in the rathskellars with a mug of beer before him and studied the people who came and went. He dressed in a commonplace style and acted in such a self-effacing way that his presence was scarcely noticed. Busdorf is a small, compactly-built man. He is smooth-faced, red-headed, has blue eyes, a positive chin and jaw, and is about thirty years of age. His only weakness, and he confesses it with a smile, is his love for the cornet. To him it is the music that "hath charm to soothe the savage breast." What his neighbors think of it is not to be mentioned in this connection. Envious persons say that bootjacks, hairbrushes and other missiles have been found in the yard under his bedroom window on more than one morning. However, that has nothing to do with the case.

His phlegmatic exterior merely masks his tenacious intensity of purpose. He became acquainted with the haunts of the under world in Myslowitz, which, after all, was not a difficult achievement in such a comparatively small community. One night, at a cheap boarding house in the lower part of the town, he managed to make an examination of the overcoats that hung on the hall rack. One of them had a purple lining and a large part of it had been torn out. It matched perfectly with the fragment that had been found in the stiffened fingers of the murdered cashier.

Busdorf learned that the garment belonged to one Julius Woolwich. The latter was a youth of only nineteen years of age, but he had already compressed as much crime into that time as the ordinary crook accomplishes during a long life. He had passed most of his life along the river which marks the border of Silesia, Prussian and Russian Poland. He was known as a common pickpocket and had been engaged in what we call "second story" robberies. It was not surprising to know that he had finally added murder to his catalogue of crimes. Busdorf arranged to arrest him, but Woolwich took alarm and left the country. The shrewd German, however, knew that the fellow would return, so he bided his time and waited patiently. He learned that Woolwich was infatuated with the eldest daughter of a widow who lived in Myslowitz, so he kept a close watch on this house, but a man, even though he be a detective, must have his intervals of rest, and one evening Busdorf quit his vigil, leaving a substitute to watch the house. This was in February of the present year, on the night of the eighth of that month. The murderer crept back to Myslowitz and went to the house of his fair charmer. The daughter happened to be away from home.

The mother did not like the young man and was decidedly opposed to the match. She knew of his misdeeds and that both Germany and Russia had offered rewards for his arrest, so she decided to give him over to the police. She managed to send a younger daughter to the authorities. During the interval she entertained her undesirable visitor in the sitting room of their modest home. The young girl could not find a policeman, so she made her appeal to a prison guard whom she happened to meet on the street. He was unarmed, but started immediately for the house.

Woolwich saw him coming in the front door. He suspected that it was a trap. He hurried out and met the guard half way, and when the man tried to arrest him, pulled his pistol and shot at him four or five times. He left the bleeding man, while he ran down the street and once again crossed the bridge and made his way into Russian Poland.

It must be remembered that all this time Busdorf had not seen Woolwich. But he had a description of him and a good photograph. Besides, he was certain that he had once arrested the boy for pocket picking. He got on his trail now in earnest. Before many days he received a tip that the murderer had been seen in Halle, the quaint city of Prussian Saxony. He went there and caught a glimpse of him standing beneath the old clock tower which is one of the show places of the city. The detective and the criminal played a game of hide and seek. They went in and out of the Church of Our Lady, the famous Moritzburg stronghold, and the grounds of the University of Halle. The disciple of Cain next proceeded to Bremen with the stolid but persistent detective still on his trail. In that city Busdorf met a peasant boy and asked him the way to the nearest police station.

"I don't know," replied the youth, with a Polish accent.

"Don't you live here?"

"No," nodded the peasant.

With that last word they recognized one another. The boy's disguise was good, but it was penetrated by the detective. But by a clever strategem the clever youth eluded him, and once again Busdorf lost the trail. He regained it in a short time, however, by persistent work.

Although Busdorf had left his cornet at home, his thinking faculties were still in good working order. He sat down and reasoned out the whole matter to his own satisfaction. He decided that Woolwich's destination was America and that he had disguised himself in the belief that his youth and his peasant dress would permit him to enter the new world without suspicion. Having reached this conclusion, the detective secured a list of the various immigrant boarding houses in Bremen—and they were quite numerous in that city—and visited them one by one. He had gone almost to the end of his list when he found the proprietor of a house where the fugitive had evidently taken temporary quarters.

"He answers your description," said the boarding house keeper, "but I am not certain that he is the man you want."

"Well, we will soon determine that," said Busdorf.

"How?" asked the proprietor.

"By permitting you to take a look at this picture," and the detective pulled out a cabinet photograph of the youth of whom he was in pursuit.

"That's the man! That's the man!" cried the landlord. "But I'm afraid you are too late."

"Why?"

"He left the house about two hours ago and said he was going to leave the city."

"What did he mean by that?"

"I think he meant he was going to America."

"What makes you think that?"

"Because the steamer 'Zeitan' is to sail this afternoon."

Busdorf waited to hear no more, but secured a conveyance and hurried to the wharf. The boat had already sailed and was out of sight. But the Berlin detective did not despair. He was as calm and as phlegmatic as usual. Also, he was as inexorable as fate. He went into the steamship office and learned just when the "Zeitan" was expected to arrive in New York. He was pleased to learn that it was a slow boat. Next he made inquiries and found that there was a possibility of his overtaking Woolwich if he could catch the American line steamship "St. Louis" at Southampton. He made the journey to that place in record-breaking time. Phiness Fogg, in his famous journey around the world, never overcame more obstacles in less time than did the little red-headed detective from the Berlin police department.

He reached the big American liner only two minutes before her time set for sailing and boarded her. Then, in true German fashion, he ate a hearty dinner, taking his time and including everything on the bill from soup to nuts. After that he was ready for business.

He interviewed Captain Jamison, the commander of the ship, and explained his mission. The mariner placed the wireless outfit of the ship at the service of the detective. They had not been out very long when the "St. Louis" in this way managed to get in touch with the steamer "Caronia" bound for Liverpool. Through the wireless operator the detective asked the captain of that ship if he had picked up the "Zeitan," remarking that if so would he please say for the German government that there was a murderer named Julius Woolwich on board of the boat and that the commander of the "Zeitan" should place him in irons. The wireless operator of the "Caronia" replied that they had picked up the "Zeitan," but that the latter had heard nothing about Woolwich. However, the operator very obligingly said that he would spread the news all over the ocean by means of the wireless.

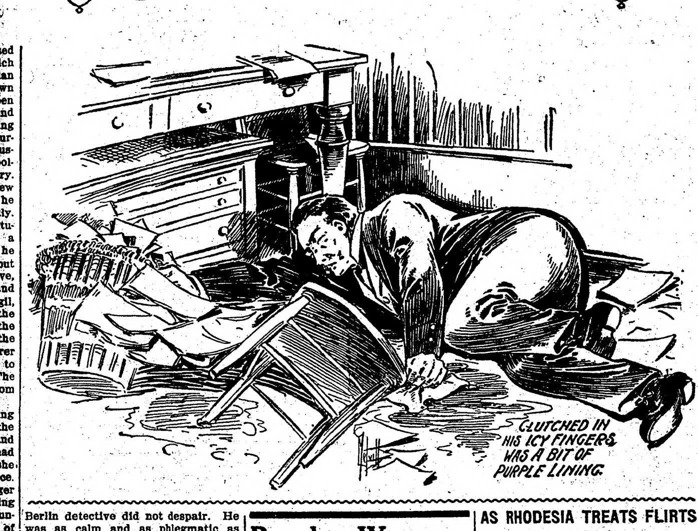
While nothing definite had been accomplished, much progress was being made. On Tuesday night the "St. Louis" once again, by means of the wireless, got into conversation with the Italian liner "Ancona," whose operator was told all about the escaping murderer. The "Ancona" replied that she would endeavor to get into communication with the "Zeitan," which was then outside of the wireless zone of the "St. Louis." On Wednesday morning the "St. Louis" conversed with the Italian liner "Virginia," who was on her way to New York, and said that she was in touch with the "Zeitan." On Thursday morning out the "St. Louis" actually got into communication with the "Zeitan." The operator thereon acknowledged the message, admitted that Woolwich was aboard and said that he had been placed in irons in the hold of the ship.

That was all that Busdorf desired to know. He immediately went to bed and slept the sleep of a successful detective. He reached New York, hurried to the pier where the "Zeitan" was expected to arrive, met the murderer of the bank cashier, and promptly placed him under arrest. He did it in the most matter-of-fact manner. The American detectives, who assisted him, were lavish in their praise. They glorified Otto Busdorf; they even gave him a dinner. He was thoroughly appreciative of their kindness, but did not appear in any way elated over his accomplishment. He had been sent to arrest a murderer and he had carried out his orders.

After the necessary legal formalities had been complied with, the detective and his prisoner sailed for the other side. Some admirers accompanied him to the dock. One of them said:

"I suppose you will be delighted to get home?"

"Yes," said Busdorf, "I will have a chance to play my cornet again."



CLUTCHED IN HIS ICY FINGERS WAS A BIT OF PURPLE LINING.

Posed as Woman for 35 Years

The Chevalier D'Eon De Beaumont was a famous character in his time, which covered the period of eighty-two years from 1728 to 1810. His title to celebrity rests chiefly on the fact that during the last thirty-five years of his life he adopted feminine attire and passed as a woman at the French court and in London and then left the world in doubt as to whether he was not, in fact, a woman. Attention again has been directed to him by the publication in France of a new book, "D'Eon De Beaumont, His Life and Times," which has just been issued in London as an English translation.

The chevalier began public life as a soldier, and later was attached to the French legation at St. Petersburg, where he took part in negotiations of the most important nature. Even at that early date, 1757-62, the question arose at the Russian court if D'Eon were not a woman. Probably D'Eon did secret service work at St. Petersburg in feminine attire which aroused the comment. After some years at St. Petersburg the chevalier rejoined the army and was aid-de-camp to Marshal Broglio in the campaign on the Rhine in 1762. The next year he went to London as secretary to the Duke di Nivernois, who went over to negotiate the peace of 1763. For his services in that matter D'Eon was invested by the French king with the order of St. Louis, and when the Duke di Nivernois returned to France he was for a time appointed minister plenipotentiary of France to England.

About 1771 the St. Petersburg gossip reached London and there it soon grew into a debate which was backed by immense sums of money. In the next few years the wagers on the question as to whether the chevalier was a man or a woman amounted in the aggregate to one hundred thousand pounds sterling, and the question got into the courts before so distinguished a jurist as Lord Mansfield. The result was that the chevalier thereafter was universally regarded as a woman, although he repeatedly insisted that he was not. Leaving England, he returned to France, where it seems that he was induced, willingly or unwillingly, to adopt feminine attire, and from that time on till his death he dressed as a woman and passed as a woman at the French court and in London. He remained in France until the Revolution and then returned to London, where, still in feminine garb, he gave public exhibitions in fencing in which art he was an expert. The chevalier died in want May 21, 1810, and was buried in the Church of St. Pancreas, London.

The most famous painters of his time painted him, and the most skillful engravers engraved his portraits. The multitude of portraits that remain bear witness to the vogue of the chevalier in the zenith of his career. He was caricatured, a poet likened him to Joan of Arc, and a privateering ship was named the Chevalier D'Eon. In the early part of the nineteenth century so celebrated a person as Horace Walpole wrote a life of him and edited his letters. With the appearance of the new story of his life the riddle of his sex is solved. The chevalier was a man.

Different.

A full-grown elephant can carry three tons on his back; but a full-grown elephant, unlike a man with a large family, is not always required to do it.

AS RHODESIA TREATS FLIRTS

Women Have Their Faces Disfigured There When They Are Found Guilty.

Doctor Dunbar-Brunton, a well-known big game hunter, who has spent some years in northeastern Rhodesia, has some interesting stories to tell of that country, where he lived as a district medical officer.

The lions which roam the country stretching southward from Lake Mwern have been man eaters from time immemorial. Within a recent period fifty-three men have been killed by them in one district. The natives cannot protect themselves, as they have no guns, and run additional risks owing to their carelessness.

It happens not seldom that two or three men sitting in the open telling the old folk lore stories which they love so dearly will be pounced upon by a man-eating lion and killed before they can turn their heads. Many a man stooping over his tobacco plants has been seized and carried off by a lion which has made its way stealthily through the outskirts of the village.

It is no wonder that they hold to this superstition, for the ferocity of their chiefs has been beyond words to describe. The late Mwamba was a blood-thirsty monster. Determined to show his power over his tribe and to punish them for the immoralities of which they are too often guilty, he put them to torture and death for the least offense. Fifty men and women were spiked on stakes, and as they did not die quickly were roasted in their last agonies by bonfires lighted close to them.

For flirting and light behaving women had their noses, ears and lips cut off and Doctor Dunbar-Brunton has seen many of these creatures. For speaking against a chief the punishment was mutilation of the tongue and ears. For stealing one hand was chopped off at the first offense and the other hand at a second offense. This penal code was in full operation as lately as ten years ago. The present Mwamba is a man of somewhat milder disposition.

A Rocky Mountain Echo.

"Hoot mon," said Christine McDonald, the charming "Spring Maid," "we've got fine echoes in Scotland, but they canna beat your American liars. An American and a Highlander were walking one day on the top of one of the Scotch mountains. The Scotchman, wishing to impress the visitor, produced a famous echo to be heard in that place. When the echo returned clearly after nearly four minutes, the proud Scotchman, turning to the Yankee, exclaimed:

"'There, mon, ye canna show anything like that in your country.'

"To which the other replied: 'I guess we can better that. Why, in my camp in the rockies, when I go to bed I just lean out of my window and call out: "Time to get up; wake up!" and eight hours afterward the echo comes back and wakes me.'"—Young's Magazine.

The Cost.

A Japanese diplomat, during Admiral Togo's American tour, said at a dinner at Narragansett Pier:

"Admiral Togo well merits his wealth and his honors. But a boyhood friend one day—after the manner of the boyhood friend—sneered at the admiral's success, whereupon our great warrior retorted:

"'Come now, I'll resign all my money and titles to you, but on one condition—that you pay the same price for them I did. We'll just go out into the garden there, and I'll fire a cannon at you ninety times. All I have shall be yours if you survive.'"

MINNESOTA HISTORICAL SOCIETY

THE NORTHERN LIGHT

VOL. I. HOLT, MARSHALL COUNTY, MINNESOTA, FRIDAY, DECEMBER 1, 1911 NO. 18.

TWO CONVICTED

SENTENCE DEFERRED TO PERMIT APPEAL—THIRD DEFENDANT ACQUITTED.

IN KANSAS 'TAR' OUTRAGE

Four Confessed Assailants of Teacher Are Given a Year Apiece—Convicted Men Take Fates Calmly.

Lincoln Center, Kansas—Two of the defendants in the sensational "tar party" case, John Schmidt and Sherill Clark, were found guilty of assault and battery by a judge in Judge Grover's court. A. N. Simms, another of the defendants, was acquitted. Sentence on the two convicted men was deferred to permit their attorneys to argue a motion for a new trial. Earlier in the day sentences of one year each in the county jail, the extreme penalty in Kansas for the offense charged, was passed on Everett G. Clark, Jay Fitzwater, Watson Scranton and Edward Ricord, confessed assailants of Mary Chamberlain. These defendants were accused of the same crime.

Ricord already was in jail, having been surrendered by his bondsmen 77 days ago. The court told the three other men they might have a reasonable time in which to straighten up their business affairs. Fitzwater says he will go to jail next week. Clark's immense business interests may make it necessary for him to be free for a month or more. Scranton said he would be ready in a few hours and would not appeal his case. Both the convicted men took their fates calmly. The four confessed men expressed themselves as actually being glad the long period of waiting was over. Sherill Clark and John Schmidt hardly expected conviction, but they had no complaint to offer. They are still free on their bonds.

Altogether, 42 ballots, or thereabouts, were taken by the jury. The verdicts for acquittal were made on the strength of the testimony of Anderson and the elder Clark.

The jury decided that it was Sherrell Clark who had furnished the tar, and that Schmidt had been privy to the plot from the beginning. No such testimony had been brought against Simms, and he was given the benefit of the doubt, though one of the jurors declared that all the jurors still consider him probably guilty.

Ballots were taken every three-quarters of an hour. Schmidt was first found guilty; Clark was found guilty next; and Simms finally found innocent. On the first ballot the jury was unanimous as to the guilt of all the men, but on the conscientious examination of the matter during their 30 hours' vigil, Simms was cleared.

CALVARY TO PATROL BORDER.

Activities of Mexican Revolutionists in Texas Prompt Action.

San Antonio, Texas.—Because of the activity of revolutionists along the Texas Mexican border, especially in the vicinity of Laredo, troop I, Third United States calvary, under Captain G. B. Conly has been ordered to that point for patrol duty.

Gen. Bernardino Reyes, arrested on a federal grand jury indictment charging conspiracy against a friendly nation, will appear before United States Commissioner Edwards and make another bond for his appearance at the next term of federal court. Governor Colquitt has received a telegram from President Taft stating that he has instructed Secretary of War Stimson to co-operate with the Texas governor to stop the movement within this state.

ORDERS WESTERN RATES CUT.

Washington, D. C.—Class freight rates from Tacoma and Seattle, Wash., and Portland, Ore., to points in Washinton, Oregon, Idaho and Montana today were declared unreasonable by the interstate commerce commission and reductions averaging about 20 per cent were ordered by Jan. 2, 1912.

The decision of the commission affects all the railways operating in the Pacific Northwest. The proceedings were popularly known as "the back haul rate cases," in which the railroads charge for a theoretic back haul from Pacific coast terminals to intermediate points, although the freight is unloaded and delivered on the west-bound haul.

GOVERNMENT SEIZES RIFLES.

San Antonio, Texas—Federal authorities detained an express car containing 161 cases of rifles and ammunition bound from New York to Laredo. The car is now under guard in the yards of the International & Great Northern railway. District Attorney C. A. Boynton says the car will be held until an investigation can be made today

MASSACRES CONFIRMED

MOB WIPES OUT BAND OF MANCHUS AT SIAN FU.

Brigands Roaming Country, Burning, Robbing and Killing the Inhabitants.

Pekin, China—Missionaries arriving in Pekin from Tung Chow Fu, 80 miles northeast of Sian Fu, give accounts of the recent revolution in the province of Shen Si, where the anti-foreign element declared its intention to exterminate foreigners, Christians and Manchus, but only partly succeeded.

The rebel general at Sian Fu, they say, issued a proclamation to the people not to harm merchants, foreigners, or non-combatant Chinese, but only to destroy Manchus. The Manchus thereupon prepared for defense within their own walled section of the city. They withstood one attack by a mob made up of students and soldiers, but in an attack next day nearly all the Manchus were slain. According to the missionaries the Chinese informed them that horrible barbarities accompanied the slaughter and that Manchu women were speared or carried off by Chinese officers or soldiers.

After the massacre the revolutionists neglected to properly police the city and bandits plundered shops and demanded money of inhabitants. They also burned the school of the Scandinavian-China alliance mission and killed Mme. Backman and another teacher. A missionary was wounded, but succeeded in rescuing a number of the school children.

When the rebels restored order they decapitated many of the outlaws. During the disorder the English Baptist mission was threatened, but not attacked.

When the missionaries left Tung Chow Fu the rebels continued to administer the city capably, but the brigands swarmed through the province. Another party arriving in Pekin from southern Shen Si, believe the Sian Fu missionaries will be unable to get away owing to the condition of the [illegible] party was attacked while on the way here by 20 highwaymen, who badly beat Dr. Blom, a Swedish missionary, who was in advance of the refugees, and twice slashed his wife on the head with sabers. They declare that 14 soldiers who were escorting the party did not once lift their riflest against the outlaws.

The party also gives an account of a massacre at Tung Kwan. Brigands posing as revolutionists captured and looted the town, killing 2,000 of its inhabitants.

Big Battle Near.

Nanking.—The revolutionary force advancing on Nanking has reached the south side of Purple Hill, the north side of which commands the city. Other points to the southward have been reoccupied as a base.

General Chang still remains obdurate and says he will fight the revolutionists to a finish. The outlook here is for a long and bloody fight.

OIL CAKE MILL PLOWS UP.

Thirty-Three Men Killed and 100 Injured.

Liverpool.—Thirty-three workers are known to have been killed and upwards of 100 injured by a boiler explosion, which occurred at the oil cake mills of J. Bibby & Sons. The force of the explosion was so terrific that the roof of the great mill was blown off while the walls split and crumbled. An outburst of flame followed.

Nearly 400 workers were engaged in the building at the time. The bodies of those in or near the boiler room were horribly mangled, some of them being thrown into the streets, together with bricks and debris. Men could be seen at every window with fire behind them frantically appealing for rescue.

Many of those who were taken to the hospital are suffering from shocking injuries. Some of them have lost legs or arms and others are fearfully burned.

Two Killed in Wreck.

Washington.—Two men were killed and several badly injured in a head-on collision this morning at Scotland, Ga., between a passenger train of the Southern railway, from Chattanooga and Atlanta, bound to Jacksonville, and an extra train bound north.

Boat is Wrecked—60 Drown.

Vienna —The Austrian steamer Romania was wrecked near Rovigno. Sixty persons were drowned. A sirocco has swept the coast of the Adriatic for three days and has caused much damage to shipping.

Train Crash Fatal.

Macon, Ga. — Several persons lost their lives in a collision between a passenger train and a freight train on the Southern railroad near Cochran, Ga.

BEATTIE IS DEAD

CELEBRATED VIRGINIA MURDERER FINALLY GOES TO FACE HIS MAKER.

LAST HOURS IN PRAYER

Final Blow Comes to Aged Father Who Loyally Stood by His Favorite Son Through All His Troubles.

* * * * * * * * * * * * *

> BEATTIE'S CONFESSION.
>
> "I, Henry Clay Beattie, Jr., desirous of standing right before God and man, do on this, the 23rd day of November, 1911, confess my guilt of the crime charged against me. Much that was published concerning the details is not true, but the awful fact, without the harrowing circumstances, remains. For this action, I am truly sorry and believing that I am at peace with God, and am soon to pass into His presence, this statement is made."

* * * * * * * * * * * * *

Richmond, Va., Nov. 25. — The clang of a steel door—then the momentary picture of a white-haired father and a young son gazing at each other for the final time on earth—was the climax in the Virginia state penitentiary of the next to the last act in the tragedy of Henry Clay Beattie, Jr. At 7:30 o'clock, twelve hours before the execution, the boy condemned to die in the electric chair for the murder of his young wife last July, had to part with the parent who stood by him with fortune and fidelity throughout his ordeal. The youth never admitted his guilt to his father.

But young Henry Beattie's conscience would not allow him to leave the rest of the world retaining the same impression and so, according to authentic report, he made a statement to his brother, Douglas, earlier in the evening. What this statement was no one knows save Douglas. But the general impression is that the only statement the boy could make would be a confession.

The last act of the tragedy began at 5 o'clock Friday morning, when Beattie was awakened by the arrival in his death chamber of his two spiritual advisers, Rev. J. J. Fix and Rev. Dr. Benjamin Dennis. They prayed with him until a short time before 7 o'clock when his breakfast was served. Just at 7 the 12 witnesses of the electrocution were summoned and watched in the room where sits the electric chair, tests that made sure it is all right. Then at 7:20 with the clergymen preceding him, and a guard on each side of him, he was led to his fate. Still maintaining his bravado, he smiled as his guards strapped him in the chair. A moment more and Henry Clay Beattie, Jr., stood before his Maker, for the trial from which there is no appeal.

He was the thirty-seventh victim of the electric chair since its installation four years ago. Of the 37 he would only be the sixth white man. The first white man, one Gilbert, was a youth of only 23, just like Beattie. He went to the chair numbed and speechless from fright.

Nature Beats Government Engineers.

Bellingham, Wash. — A freak of the flood in the Skagit river has done work gratis that was contemplated by the United government at a cost of $1,000,000. It was done in 24 hours, without a cent of cost. The stream cut through Sterling Bend, above Mount Vernon, Skagit county, where a channel now runs 300 feet wide and 20 feet deep, shortening the channel three and one-half miles. For 17 years the federal government has considered this improvement and many surveys have been made.

Castro Defeated.

London, England.—The Venezuelan consul here received advices from Caracas informing him that former President Castro at the head of a considerable body of revolutionists, has met with a disastrous defeat near San Cristobal.

Crown Prince Under Knife.

Stockholm, Sweden—His highness, Crown Prince Gustav Adolph of Sweden was operated on for appendicitis. His condition is satisfactory.

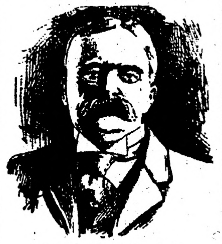
Arctic Islands in Wireless Zone.

Christiania, Nor.—Wireless communication has just been established with Spitzbergen by Norway and messages have been received here successfully.

Three Killed By Explosion.

Chicago, Illinois.—Three men were killed and two injured in an explosion of a refrigerating pipe in the lard house of Swift & Co., at the Union stockyards here.

SURGEON GENERAL WYMAN DIES



DR. WALTER WYMAN.

Washington, D. C. — Walter Wyman, surgeon general of the United States public health and marine hospital service, died at Providence hospital, after an illness of several months.

NORTHWEST LAND FRAUDS

OLD SOLDIERS USED AS DUMMYS BY GRAFTERS.

Report of Indictments at Aberdeen Is Received at Washington.

Washington, Dist. of Col.—Extensive land frauds through the use of soldiers' declaratory statements have been unearthed by agents of the general land office in the Northwest, and the commissioner of the land office has received a report of the indictment at Aberdeen, S. D., of a half dozen persons, including women, charged with conspiracy in these practices.

At the land office at Timber Lake in South Dakota, 2,100 such statements, each covering 160 acres of land, have been filed within the last year, while 100 such statements were filed in the land office at Lemmon. The effect of the filing of these declarations is to hold the land indefinitely, thus shutting out legitimate entrymen.

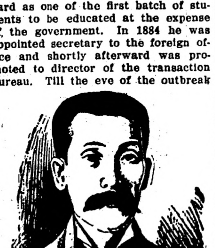
It is asserted that not one out of 20 of the statements is followed by actual proving up. The plan is to get old soldiers or the widows of soldiers to make preliminary declaration of their intention to take up land under the law, and at the same time procure from them a relinquishment which is sold to the land seekers. Sometimes $500 has been obtained for these relinquishments.

Inasmuch as there was no original intention to acquire the land by the soldier claimants the government contends that the use of the names of these people clouds the lands covered by their declarations and deprives legitimate home hunters of their rights.

MARQUIS KOMURA IS DEAD.

Formerly Minister to Washington—Helped Make Treaty of Portsmouth.

Tokio, Japan.—Marquis Jutaro Komura, former minister of foreign affairs and privy councilor, is dead. Marquis Komura, former minister of foreign affairs and former ambassador to Great Britain, was born in 1855. After graduating from the imperial university he was sent to Harvard as one of the first batch of students to be educated at the expense of the government. In 1884 he was appointed secretary to the foreign office and shortly afterward was promoted to director of the transaction bureau. Till the eve of the outbreak of the Chino-Japanese war in 1894, he was charge d'affaires at Pekin.



BARON JUTARO KOMURA.

In June, 1896, he assumed the post of vice minister of foreign affairs and in 1898 was transferred to Washington as Japanese minister. In 1900 he was sent to St. Petersburg in a similar capacity. In 1901 he accepted the foreign portfolio in the Katsura cabinet. His name also will be remembered as Japan's chief plenipotentiary at the Portsmouth peace conference. He was created a count in 1906 and was made a marquis in April of this year.

DULUTH DISCRIMINATION

EVIDENCE SHOWS TWIN CITIES ARE FAVORED.

Charges Compared and a Mass of Testomony Put Before Commission.

Duluth. — Duluth, as far as the grain and flour trade is concerned, is almost shut out of the South Dakota and southern Minnesota by a rate structure that is obviously discriminately against Duluth and preferential to the Twin Cities, Chicago, Milwaukee and even Winona, and La Crosse, was the claim made by the introduction of testimony on the part of the Duluth board of trade in the hearing of the action brought by that body for a readjustment of the rates on grain in southern North Dakota, South Dakota and southen Minnesota.

The hearing was taken up before Commissioner E. E. Clark of the interstate commerce commission. Summed up, the claims of the board of trade are:

That in general, grain rates to primary centers are equal or nearly so for equal distances.

That rates on grain from the territory under consideration are higher to Duluth than the rates to other primary centers from points of equal distance.

That the Great Northern, which is the short line, does not make rates in South Dakota, but that the rates to Duluth are based on combinations, which are higher than they would be based on the short line mileage.

That in nearly every case the differential in favor of Minneapolis over Duluth is much greater than the differential in favor of Duluth over Chicago, though the differenec is much greater, Chicago over Duluth, than Duluth over Minneapolis.

That in many cases the rates to Duluth are higher than to Chicago for a much longer haul.

About 50 attorneys, rate experts, railroad and steamship line officials and interested individuals were gathered in the courtroom during the hearing. G. Rohyall, traffic commissioner for the Duluth Commercial club, was called to the stand. The mass of detail work done in preparation of the case was disclosed by his testimony which consisted largely of the presentation and explanation of exhibits. Nineteen tables and about ten maps, setting forth in minute detail the rates complained of with comparisons between rates to Minneapolis, Chicago and Milwaukee from identical or equidistant points with the rates to Duluth, were introduced.

OWNERS OF THE J. S. SUED.

Actions for Damages of Over $14,000 to be Tried at Winona.

Winona.—Litigation growing out of the burning of the steamer J. S. at Bad Ax, on the Mississippi river, in June 25, 1910, is likely to come to trial at this term of the United States court. Most of the litigants and the defendants are here.

As a result of the burning of the J. S., damage suits for some $14,000 were instituted against the Acme Packet company. The company has invoked an old admiralty law to escape payment of the claims outside of the value of what was left of the steamer and its supplies after the fire, which articles are now in the custody of Sheriff W. E. Parr of this city. The principal claims are as follows:

Anthony Plein, administrator of the estate of John Plein, who lost his life in the burning of the steamer, $50,000; Elizabeth G. Joseph of De Soto, Wis., personal injuries, $5,000; Bertha E. Kaeppler, La Crosse, personal injuries, $1,124; Anna Peterson, Lansing, Iowa, personal injuries, $1,000; Minerva F. Myers, Lansing, Iowa, personal injuries, $1,000; Mae Caldwell, De Soto, Wis., personal injuries, $1,000; L. L. Witberker, Lansing, Iowa, loss of band supplies, $388.90. Other claims are all for amounts less than $100.

NEW HOTEL AT ST. CLOUD.

Brewing Company Planning $50,000 Building.

A brewing concern has a Minneapolis architect preparing plans for a $50,000 hotel for St. Cloud. The proposed site is in the heart of the business section. Negotiations have been commenced with the owners of the property but as the title cannot be cleared until an estate has been probated, the deal has not been closed.

IMPROVEMENTS AT VIRGINIA.

Canadian Northern Completes Its New Buildings.

Virginia. — The Canadian Northern has completed nearly a quarter of a mile of trestle work across Virginia lake in a curve extending around the north and east sides, where large quantities of filling material will be dumped and allowed to settle. The repair shops, storehouse, roundhouse and coal dock are well along towards completion.

HEAVY FINES FOR HOMESTEADER

Illegal Hunting and Fishing Charged to Man Near Virginia.

Virginia. — Having been informed through the county attorney's office that John Runyon, a farmer residing near Bphl, had lost three milch cows through having them shot by some hunter with a 35-caliber automatic rifle of a type seldom used in this part of the country, there being half a dozen cartridges near where the cows were found dead, Game Warden Geo. E. Wood made an investigation and arrested Victor Puttika, a homesteader residing in that vicinity.

Puttika had in his possession a 35-caliber rifle of the description given in the county attorney's letter, several cartridges, a carbide light and a net. He was arrested on a warrant issued by Judge Carey, charging him with hunting with a carbide light, and the warden swore out a warrant charging the man with maintaining and abetting a nuisance and with illegal fishing with a net. Puttika pleaded guilty last evening before Judge Barrett on the latter charge and was fined $100 and costs, which he paid.

13-ACRES POTATOES PAYS $1,684.

Barnesville Farmers Report Good Yields—250 Bushels an Acre.

Minneapolis.—Although Cass county was in first with a report on the potato crop yields in this state, and reported 176 bushels to the acre, the older potato growing portion of the state is not to be outdone by northern Minnesota, and Barnesville sends in the record of Charles Bergquist, a farmer near that place, who sold thirteen acres of potatoes for $1,684, while Frank Perry, a farmer also near Barnesville, got 250 bushels to the acre.

Osakis is also in with a good report, Peter Butler, near that town, getting 2,600 bushels of potatoes from twelve acres of land, a yield of 217 bushels to the acre, or 216⅔ bushels, to be exact.

On one acre separately planted to the Rural New York variety, he got 308 bushels. This was done, Mr. Butler says, on old land that had been formerly devoted to wheat raising, and no fertilizer was used.

DAIRY LAW VIOLATORS FINED.

One Insanitary Dairy and Milk Below Standard Served at Hotel.

St. Paul.—A fine of $90 was imposed on Anton Frigno of Chisholm for keeping an insanitary dairy, according to a report received by John McCabe, assistant state dairy and food commissioner.

J. A. Harding of Detroit was caught giving the guests at his hotel milk below standard, it is said, and was fined $15 and costs.

Ole Uness of Paddock was fined $15 for overreading the Babcock test when buying cream.

The Langseth Mercantile Company of Thief River Falls was fined $15 for the alleged selling of almond extract below standard. L. D. Rose of Two Harbors paid $15 on a charge of having two cases of candy colored with coal tar dye.

WILL INCREASE OPERATIONS.

Corporation to Push Work at Mines on Which Leases Will Soon Expire.

Virginia.—The Oliver Iron Mining company is planning to increase its mining operations in the Virginia district, so as to get as much ore out as possible before leases expire. A steam shovel is operating in the Norman pit for the first time since spring, and it is said four shovels will be operated at the Alpena. Several other properties in which leases will expire within two years will be worked.

BEGINS HAZEN PROBE.

State Examiner Fritz in Bemidji to Investigate Charges.

Bemidji.—Andrew E. Fritz, public examiner, is in Bemidji and will personally investigate the charges which Viggo Peterson, chairman of the board of county commissioners, has lodged against A. B. Hazen, sheriff of Beltrami county. The visit of Mr. Fritz is at the request of Governor Eberhart and is the result of a demand made by Sheriff Hazen that the charges be investigated.

BUT CROP IS HEAVY.

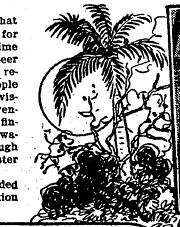
Three Hundred Acres Grown in Rice County.

Faribault.—From four to six carloads of sugar beets are being shipped from this city each day. About 300 acres were put into beets the past season and the crop is being shipped to the factory at Chaska. Each year the acreage is increased. The soil here is well adapted to raising beets and it is thought that eventually a sugar factory will be established in Faribault.

MARVELOUS PROGRESS OF ISTHMIAN CANAL

By EDWARD B. CLARK

COPYRIGHT BY W.A. PATTERSON

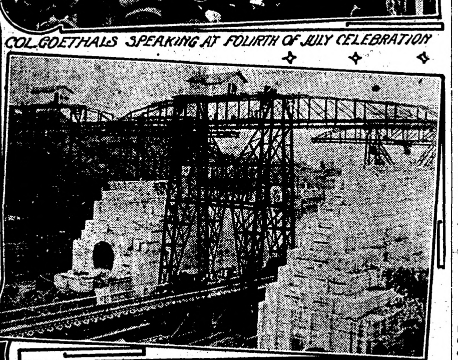


PRESIDENT Taft's word of hope that the Panama canal may be opened for traffic two years earlier than the time tentatively set by Chief Engineer George W. Goethals seems to have redirected the attention of the people to the marvelous (word used advisedly) progress of the isthmian venture since the time when it was finally definitely determined that a waterway was to be opened through Panama and not through its sister State, Nicaragua.

Former President Roosevelt recently has defended vigorously his action in the case of the recognition of the independence of Panama, an "overnight proceeding" which made it possible for the United States to enter into a treaty with the twelve hour old republic which would allow operations to begin at once. Colombia has not yet forgiven us for giving the Panamans recognition. Mr. Roosevelt said that if Panama had continued under the rule of Colombia the canal still would be a dream, for the Colombians simply temporized with us and acted as if they thought that in seeking the strip of land for canal purposes, the United States had malevolent territorial designs toward all Central and South America.

COL. GOETHALS SPEAKING AT FOURTH OF JULY CELEBRATION

MIDDLE LOCKS AT GATUN



PEDRO MIGUEL LOCKS

ENTRANCE TO ANCON HOSPITAL GROUNDS

GUIDE WALL OF PEDRO MIGUEL LOCKS

No one had any conception that progress on the canal would be as rapid as it has proved to be. Much more time was spent in talking prior to the beginning of operations than has been spent since in digging. Now that it is long in the past, the country is perhaps forgetful, but it may be of interest to remember that for many weary months the congress of the United States gave itself over to debate, discussions and even bickerings upon the relative values of two routes for the waterway, the Nicaraugan route and the Panama route.

Senator Morgan of Alabama, who died a few years ago, was an advocate of the Nicaraugan route. He was an old man at the time that he undertook to voice sentiment and argument on behalf of the more northern waterway. He worked night and day, studying the questions involved from every possible viewpoint and the long speeches which he made on the matter in hand were written almost entirely by his own hand. He was indefatigable in labor, and what he did on behalf of the Nicaraugan route and on behalf of the waterway scheme generally is best told in the words of Senator Jonathan F. Dolliver of Iowa. Dolliver, like Morgan, is dead. The Iowan was in favor of the Panama route, while the Alabaman was in favor of the Nicaraugan route The two men were opposed to each other politically, but they were personal friends. When bitter disappointment came to Morgan in the final defeat of the Nicaraugan project, Dolliver rose in his seat and paid this tribute to his aged colleague:

"He stands here in his old age, one of the historic figures connected with this canal controversy. He may not be the man who began the discussion, but for nearly a generation he has kept it up. No man has ever exhibited within our knowledge any such marvelous industry, energy and sagacity as he has put into the argument for the Nicaraugan canal. Day and night he has labored, not with the assistance of others, but personally, often with his own pen writing the speeches which have become the chief part of the agitation which has resulted in unifying public sentiment in the United States in favor of the canal.

"I regret more than I can say that he was disappointed in his own personal ambition in respect to the route that finally was chosen, but that does not prevent me from adding that long after the little controversies of this hour are forgotten, his name will be connected in immortal reputation with the Isthmian canal, wherever it is built.'

Few people probably have forgotten the first attempts of President Roosevelt and Secretary of War Taft to secure the service of a civilian engineer who would stick at his post until the Panama canal was dug. Three great engineers, one after another, resigned their positions as engineers-in-chief.

It is perhaps useless to discuss the causes which led to the resignations of the civilian engineers. All sorts of stories were told, from the fear of yellow fever to inability to maintain discipline in the working forces. It is probable that one engineer's ears tingled for a long time with the rebuke which was given him by Secretary of War Taft, who is now the president of the United States. It was one of the severest scorings ever given a public official.

Probably the country does not know the inside history connected with the final employment of army engineers to build the Panama canal. The engineer corps of the army at the outset thought that it should be given charge of the canal work, but influential civilians brought pressure to bear on the administration on behalf of engineers in civil life. It was said by certain civilians of prominence that the army was not accustomed to handling great business propositions and that no army engineer ever had done a work of anything like the magnitude of the one proposed. There were all sorts of attempts to belittle the engineering work of the army.

This sort of thing had its effect, although it is probable that it was with considerable reluctance that the administration disappointed the proper ambition of army engineers to be assigned to the work of canal building. When three civilian engineers, one after another, had given over the work, President Roosevelt and Secretary of War Taft concluded that the time had come to give the army a chance. In effect the president told the secretary that no army officer would desert his post, even by the resignation route, for discipline and inculcated will to do his duty would keep him at the digging until it was finished, or until failure had come. Moreover, it was known that no army officer would flee in the face of yellow fever or in fear of death from any cause.

Colonel George W. Goethals of the West Point class of 1880 was selected by the secretary of war to take up the work that the civilian engineers had dropped. Colonel Goethals is still at it and success has marked every step of the way. The colonel chose at the outset as two chief assistants, Lieutenant Colonels David D. Gaillard and William L. Sibert, who graduated from the military academy in the class of 1884. Since that time other army officers have been detailed in addition to the three who were first assigned, three who are still working and who hope to be present when the first ship pokes its prow into the completed canal

Colonel George W. Goethals is a tall, slender man with a firmly knit figure and snow white hair. He has a face remarkably youthful and neither the climate, the hard work nor the anxieties of the isthmian life have touched his vigor. He is a sort of court of last resort in the isthmus. He travels from place to place on certain days and establishes headquarters for the hearing of complaints. He brings hard, common sense to bear on all kinds of matters, from the settling of a family row to controversies as to seniority in rank of some of the civilian superintendents. Laborers can go to him with complaints of bad food and be sure of a hearing, and also be sure that any kind of a wrong will be righted. He is a sort of a shepherd of the flock, a father of a family of 43,000 children.

Colonel Gaillard, who is the engineer in charge of the central division of the work, and Colonel William L. Sibert, engineer in charge of the Atlantic division, as has been said, were classmates at West Point. Gaillard's first name is David. When he and Sibert entered the military academy as "plebes" they took a great liking to each other. They were chums and confidants all through their cadet course. Sibert is a big man, physically, and the cadets nicknamed him Goliath. Gaillard always was called David and so the military academy held a friendly David and Goliath, thereby establishing a better record for amity and friendliness than that contained in the Scriptures.

When the army engineers went to Panama to take charge of the work they knew that in order to make progress with the digging they must have a contented family of laborers. They also knew that they must maintain discipline. In the army discipline is maintained as a matter of course, the men who enlist knowing that they must submit themselves without question to the proper orders of their superiors.

The men who work on the Isthmus of Panama are mostly civilians, and Colonel Goethals and his assistants knew that they would resent anything like army disciplinary methods, even though they were intended for their benefit and would soon prove their worth. Goethals is a most tactful man. With his assistants, he secured army discipline on the isthmus without allowing the civilians even to appreciate that gradually they were coming under the guidance of rules laid down for men who wear the uniform of the service. The army officers worked at first in a suggestive way. Men were directed to "try" certain things and see how they came out.

Trial was made and then other suggestions were made and finally the big working force found that it was living a regular, healthful life with time for regulated recreation, and that it was possible to get pleasure out of existence by other means than by drinking it in. Suggestion rather than command made a disciplined force out of the forty-odd thousand laborers.

There probably is not a healthier place on the face of the earth today than the canal strip of the Isthmus of Panama.

Colonel William C. Gorgas of the medical department of the United States army is the head of the department of sanitation on the isthmus Under his direction disease virtually has been killed and fear itself has been set at defiance.

A large part of the food for the isthmus is purchased in the United States and it is shipped under the most favorable conditions. A paper called "The Canal Record" is published at frequent intervals and its last page is devoted to a list of the food which can be obtained at the commissary department, with the prices affixed. Living on the isthmus is just as cheap if not cheaper than it is in this country and the food is of the highest possible quality. Many of the civilian employes constituting clerical and engineering forces have taken their families to Panama. They have fine quarters and they buy their food virtually at cost price.

The army was on its metal when it was put in charge of the Panama canal building. Thus far, admittedly, its work has been nothing short of wonderful in all lines of isthmian endeavor. It may be that President Taft's prophecy will not come true and that the canal will not be opened until 1915, but it should be remembered that the latter date is the one set for the opening by Colonel George W. Goethals, the engineer-in-chief. It is probable, however, that he hopes to see the procession of ships, with the old Oregon leading, pass into the great waterway on some day within the next two years.

GATHERED SMILES

BREAKING IT GENTLY.

A lady who had recently moved to the suburbs was very fond of her first brood of chickens. Going out one afternoon, she left the household in charge of her eight-year-old boy. Before her return a thunderstorm came on. The youngster forgot the chicks during the storm, and was dismayed after it passed to find that half of them had been drowned. Though fearing the wrath to come, he thought best to make a clean breast of the calamity, rather than leave it to be discovered.

"Mamma," he said, contritely, when his mother had returned; "mamma, six of the chickens are dead."

"Dead!" cried the mother. "Six! How did they die?"

The boy saw his chance.

"I think—I think they died happy," he said.

Success at Sea.

A youthful Canadian, who is possessed of the romantic idea of "going to sea" is meeting with much parental opposition.

"The sailor never amounts to anything, my boy," urged his prosaic father. "He works hard, has few holidays and never achieves great success."

"That's where you're mistaken," exclaimed young Canada, triumphantly. "Look at King George! He started out as a sailor and now he's got to be the head of the empire."—Kingston Whip.

A Stock Story.

"When I was a barefoot lad," said Dr. Dustin Stax, "I had to spend a good deal of time minding the stock on father's farm. I'll never forget the day when father told me to take a rope and hold a couple of bull calves."

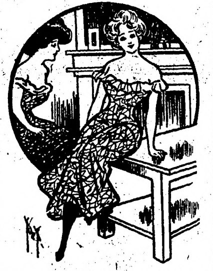
"What did they do?"

"The scorched my hands with the rope and then turned around and stepped on me."

"Unruly disposition?"

"No. Wonderful instinct. They recognized me at a glance as a small stockholder."

REASON ENOUGH.



Philomena—Why do you call him an educated monkey?

Virginia—Because he is a proficient in the higher branches.

A Hard Job.

It is easy to hustle
From morn till night,
But it's hard to do nothing
And do it right.

One Alternative.

"Why do you wish to go on the stage?" inquired the manager.

"I want to get a millionaire husband."

"Well, the stage is overcrowded just now. Be a trained nurse."

An Explanation.

Visitor—How old are you, my poor fellow?

Prisoner—Fifty

Visitor (thoughtfully)—Didn't you say 45 at the trial?

Prisoner—Yes; but the judge gave me five years.—Puck.

The Modern Idea.

"What did your friend say after the study class took up Dante's Inferno?"

"She remarked that it was a pity when Dante made his celebrated visit to the infernal regions that picture post cards had not been invented."

In Disgrace.

Mother—Tommy, why don't you play with Frank any more? I thought you were such good chums?

Tommy—We was, but he's a mollycoddle. He paid ter git inter ther ball grounds.—Suburban Life.

Strange Coincidence.

"Funny thing about that collision with the joy riders."

"What was that?"

"They bumped into the electric trouble wagon."

Strange, Indeed.

Margaret—Isn't it strange?

Katherine—What?

Margaret—That many a woman who has bleached her hair wants to keep it dark.—Life.

Impossible.

"Did I understand you to say she was a woman of talent?"

"Yes. She has done some splendid things."

"I can't see how that may be. She wears her hair in such a becoming way."

One Honest Rough Resort.

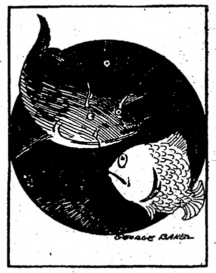
"Don't rough it too much on your summer vacation," said Dr. Phineas L. Raycroft, the hygienic expert of Des Moines. "See that you get plenty of baths and plenty of good food. Otherwise your vacation will be apt to do you harm.

"I once thought of spending my mid-summer holidays in the Tennessee mountains. So I wrote to a mountaineer whose picturesque homestead had been highly recommended to me, and in the course of my letter I asked the man if there was a bath in his house.

"In reply he said:

"'If you want a bath you had better take it before you come.'"

WAS UNWARY.



Mr. Catfish—Have they found out the cause of Willie Trout's mysterious disappearance?

Mr. Sunfish—Yes, using the baseball term, he was caught on a fly.

Hobbled.

"Dost suffer in that irksome dress?
I asked the hobbled maid.
She was a patient girl, I guess;
"I cannot kick," she said.

It's No Use.

He was telling her about a book he had just read.

"The absolute sincerity and directness of the author," he said, "are above all praise. I don't know when I've read a book that seemed so helpful, so uplifting, so purely inspiring."

She had been regarding him with a rapt countenance. Now she spoke.

"George," she said, "I have just thought of a way to trim my winter hat!"

A Critic Disappooinetd.

An orator, having written a speech which he intended to deliver on a certain occasion, gave it to a friend to read and desired his opinion of it. The friend, after some time, told the author he had read it over three times; the first, it appeared very good, the second indifferent, the third quite insipid. "That will do," said the orator, very coolly, "for I have only to repeat it once."—Life.

Appreciation.

"If I were to die I suppose you would marry a young woman?"

"Thanks."

"Why do you thank me?"

"For complimenting me by supposing that I could get a young woman to have me after the wear and tear I've had to suffer."

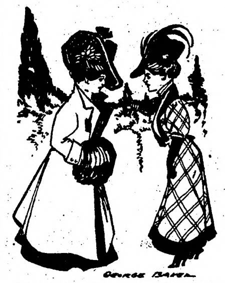
Not Much of a Game.

"I can't for the life of me understand why anybody should wish to play chess."

"It's a great game—perahps the greatest intellectual game there is."

"Yes, but it affords no opportunity whatever for breaking speed records."

THOSE FEMININE CRITICS.



Miss Critic—So she was led to the altar at last.

Miss Spite—Led! Led! I guess you didn't see her. She didn't have to be led. When she started down the aisle you couldn't have headed her off with a regiment of cavalry.

Where She Excels.

She may not be able to hit a cat,
Nor, hammering nails, come nigh,
But she can securely spike on a hat
And the wildest wind defy.

Comforting the Old Man.

Mother (in a very low voice)—Tommy, your grandfather is very sick. Can't you say something to cheer him up a bit?

Tommy (in an earnest voice)—Grandfather, wouldn't you like to have soldiers at your funeral?—Coming Nation.

ADVENTURES of the WORLD'S GREAT DETECTIVES

By George Barton

The Moscow Railroad Mine

An Episode in the life of General Drenteln Chief of the Secret Police of Russia.

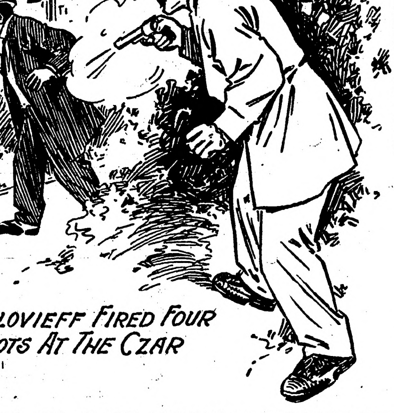
COPYRIGHT 1911 BY W.G. CHAPMAN

ON the first of December, 1879, the railway carriage carrying Alexander II., the czar of Russia, was dynamited at a point near Moscow and several persons were seriously injured. Fortunately, the czar's train preceded instead of following the baggage train, and this miscalculation on the part of the conspirators saved the life of his imperial majesty.

An investigation showed that a mine had been dug beneath the railway. Two secret service men descended into the hole made by the explosion and came to a subterranean passage which led to a little cottage close to the railway on the outskirts of Moscow. The inhabitants had fled, and the police found an untouched meal on the table of the dining room.

The czar was so startled over this dastardly attempt on his life that he determined to use unusual means to discover and punish the perpetrators of the outrage. The ordinary protection, with which he had surrounded himself, had proven insufficient. The police of Moscow were remiss in permitting the digging of the mine under their noses, so to speak. In this crisis he sent for General Drenteln, the chief of the secret police, and charged him with the commission of bringing the would-be assassins to justice.

General Drenteln was well fitted for the task. He was hard, cruel and as remorseless as death itself, and had been the cause of sending many prisoners to Siberia. Once a prisoner tried to escape, and the penalty announced by the general was hanging. His personal bravery was unquestioned; he exposed himself in public places without fear. Six months before the Moscow attempt on the czar's life a Nihilist, named Mirski, had shot at the chief of the secret police and had escaped. Drenteln had taken the thing with characteristic calmness. His wound, which was slight, was bound up, and he at once resumed his official duties.



SOLOVIEFF FIRED FOUR SHOTS AT THE CZAR

This, then, was the man who was to uncover the mystery of the Moscow mine. He went about his work with provoking deliberation. He was confident that the explosion was part of a great general conspiracy and that a large number of persons must be involved. Instructions were sent to every part of the empire to keep a close watch on all known or suspected Nihilists. The magnitude of the task may be appreciated when it is understood that all of Russia was in a turmoil over the attempt to destroy the head of the government. Literally, thousands of persons, for months, were engaged in shadowing thousands of other persons.

General Drenteln realized that three attempts had been made on the emperor's life within the short period of a year, and he endeavored to make some connection between these various plots. He could not help but feel that the same persons must have been interested in each of the conspiracies.

In the autumn of 1878 a mine had been laid at Nikolaieff, on the Black sea, to blow up the emperor, but it had been discovered by the police and the scheme frustrated. The second attempt was made by Anthony Solovieff, a former school teacher. From reading the theories of socialism, he had gradually accepted the doctrines of that order and finally became a Nihilist. The perseverance of the man may be understood when it is known that he learned the trade of blacksmith in order that he might come into close communication with the class of people whose wrongs he sought to right. He journeyed to St. Petersburg in the summer of 1878 for the purpose of killing the emperor, and haunted the palace in order to get the opportunity of carrying out his design. On the second of April, 1879, he was in hiding when Alexander came out to walk up and down the sidewalk in front of the palace. Solovieff fired four shots at the czar. He was seized immediately, tried in the following June and hanged before the month was over.

The third attempt on the life of the emperor has already been detailed in the beginning of this article.

Drenteln's first move was to make a personal investigation of the house from whence the tunnel had been dug under the railroad tracks near Moscow. It was a trifle better than a peasant's cottage. It was sparsely furnished, the floors were bare and the beds and tables and chairs were as plain as it was possible to make them. In the front room he picked up a copy of "The Will of the People," the organ which represented the "Party of Terror," composed of the most extreme Nihilists.

That, in itself, was not a very tangible clew. Copies of that paper, as well as of "Land and Liberty," the organ of the most conservative Nihilists, were constantly being picked up in different parts of the empire. The publication of these papers was treated as treason. Presses were confiscated and men arrested, but as fast as this was done the papers magically appeared in other places. So General Drenteln did not lay very great store by this find. However, a few moments later, he discovered a book which gave gave promise of results. The volume, in itself, was of no consequence, but it contained a book mark on which was printed the business notice of a stationer in St. Petersburg.

Drenteln interviewed the man at once. He was a commonplace tradesman and had nothing to conceal. He answered questions freely.

"Have you ever seen this book?" asked the general.

"Yes," was the response; "it looks like one of a kind that I have on sale."

"Are you sure?" sternly.

"Why, yes. There is nothing wrong about it, I hope. It is not a prohibited book."

"No; not exactly. But it has been found under unusual circumstances. How many of these books have you sold?"

"Two," was the unhesitating reply. "You see," he added, complainingly, "there is not much demand for these dry works on political economy."

"Who bought them?" demanded the inquisitor.

The dealer paused for a moment to consider.

"The first one was sold to a woman—a school teacher, I think."

"Do you know her name?"

"No."

"And the second?"

"That was to a tall, raw-boned man."

"Did you know him?"

"No, I never saw him before."

"Would you know him if you met him?"

"Surely."

A watch was placed on the stationers' store. There was never a minute, day or night, that it was not under the observance of the secret police. One day a tall, gaunt-looking fellow lounged into the place. The stationer, eager to justify himself, pointed to the newcomer.

"There stands the man!"

The stranger was arrested at once and taken to police headquarters. He gave the name of Jules Goldenberg. One of the detectives said that he reminded him strongly of a person who had been seen in the company of Antony Solovieff, who had been executed early in the year for an attempt on the life of the emperor. While he was in custody the secret police were sent to search his house, where they found incriminating evidence, the most important of which was a quantity of dynamite. Goldenberg was terrified, and in order to save himself he turned state's evidence. He gave the authorities his version of the explosion at Moscow, and also furnished the names of scores of persons who were directly and indirectly concerned in the plot. More than a hundred persons were arrested, and many of them were subjected to summary punishment. Others were held to await developments, and Goldenberg was one of those kept on the anxious bench. He hoped for his liberty, but he did not know whether he would be pardoned or punished.

The story illustrates the persistence, no less than the fanaticism, of those who had been pursuing the emperor. About the middle of June of that year the Nihilists held a congress, or rather a secret meeting, in the province of Tomboff, at which many of the leading spirits openly advocated the killing of the czar. As a result of that gathering, it is averred, it was decided to blow up the imperial train during the journey of the emperor from the Crimea to St. Petersburg.

Having decided on this course, the conspirators went about their work with painstaking care. Dynamite, picks, axes and other implements necessary to dig and prepare the underground passage for the explosion were carefully gathered and placed in hiding at various points. The mines for the explosion were laid under the railway lines at three different points. One was near Odessa; another adjoining Alexandrovsk, and the third near Moscow. One of those inexplicable decisions which we call chance caused a slight change in the emperor's itinerary. As a consequence of this the Odessa mine was abandoned. The train passed Alexandrovsk on schedule time, but owing to some defect in the capsule the mine did not explode, although the battery was closed at the right moment. The imperial train passed uninjured over the dreadful precipice, the czar chatting with his companions in blissful ignorance of the awful fate he had been spared.

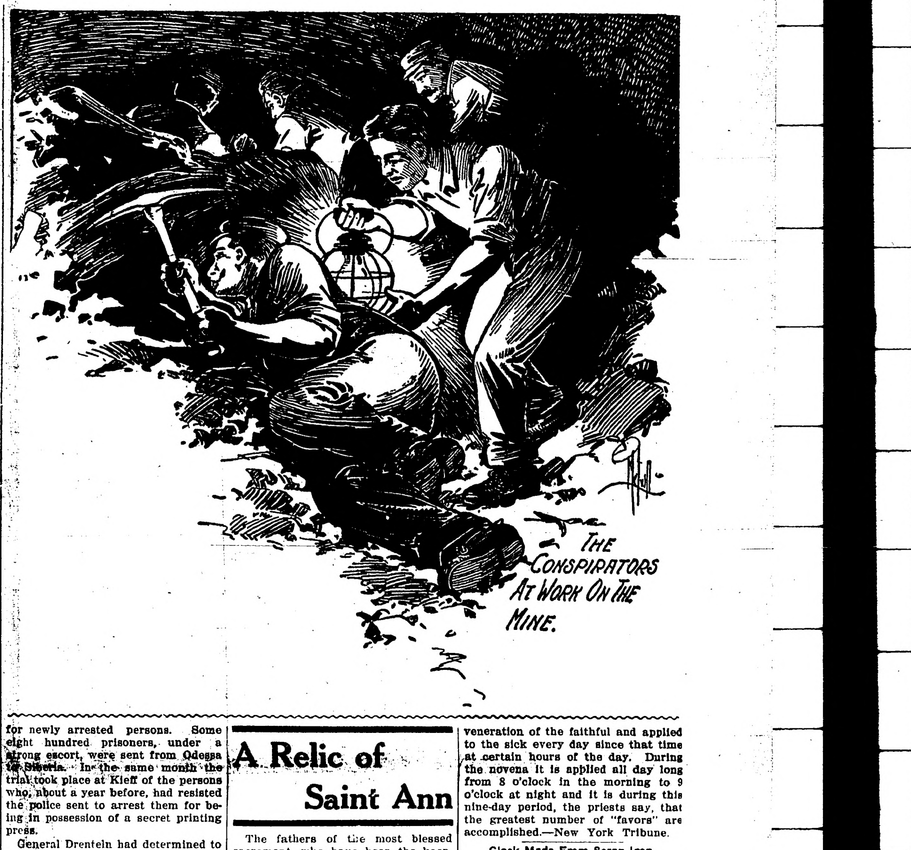
It was at Moscow, however, that the assassins were partially successful. Months before they had purchased a small house near the railway, and the work of excavating a passage began in that humble structure and ended under the tracks of the railway. A large number of persons were concerned in this task. Leo Hartmann, an electrician, superintended the electrical branch of the work. Sofia Perovskaia and numerous others gave the benefit of their advice and assistance. Naturally, the greatest caution was exercised, the work being done quietly and secretly and most of it at night. There was a rainy season at that time of the year, and it is claimed that at times the miners worked in freezing water, standing in it up to their knees.

The train came along according to schedule, and the explosion took place, but the emperor, as already stated, escaped because his train had fortunately preceded instead of following the baggage train.

When these facts became known, and during Goldenberg's imprisonment a virtual reign of terror existed in all parts of Russia. A state of siege was established throughout the Russian empire. In St. Petersburg the precautionary measures were more rigid than anywhere else. A police order was issued requiring each householder to keep a watch day and night at the door of his house to see who went in and out and to see that no placards were affixed. In the months following the Moscow attempt against the emperor, it is said that there were nearly five thousand political prisoners in the Fort Petropovlovski. These, in turn, were removed in a single night to eastern prisons to make room for newly arrested persons. Some eight hundred prisoners, under a strong escort, were sent from Odessa to Siberia. In the same month the trial took place at Kieff of the persons who, about a year before, had resisted the police sent to arrest them for being in possession of a secret printing press.

General Drenteln had determined to impress the entire population with the fact that law and order was to be established and the emperor's safety assured. He succeeded, apparently, because it was many years after that before the hand of Nihilism was raised against anyone in authority in the Russian empire.

In the meantime Goldenberg, after having betrayed hundreds of his associates, was seized with fear and remorse, and one morning ended the whole sombre tragedy by committing suicide.



THE CONSPIRATORS AT WORK ON THE MINE.

A Wiley Witticism.

The night that famous men debated, at the National Press club, in Washington, on whether whiskers or baldness formed the greater handicap to great careers, the speeches were limited to ten minutes each, and Dr. Harvey W. Wiley, the pure-food expert, was timekeeper.

"Only one minute more!" he called out to Representative Nicholas Longworth, who was arguing that a bald head is a fine thing to carry through the world.

"Does that minute include these unsolicited interruptions?" asked Longworth.

"You bet it does," replied Wiley. "So far, the interruptions have been the best part of the speeches."—Popular Magazine.

Living in Japan.

Every item of every-day life is as costly in Japan as in Europe or America, says a Japanese paper. A respectable looking three-story house can be rented in London at £30 a year, while the same money can rent only a wretched cottage in Tokyo. Bread, meat, milk, electricity, gas, perhaps with the exception of eggs, nothing is cheaper in Japan. It costs far more to run a house in Tokyo than in London. Wages and salaries are lower because of misuse of labor and overabundance of laborers. What the Europeans move with the derrick men and women carry on their shoulders; so necessarily a great number of them must be paid for.

Bernhardt Thought She Was Honored.

Mme. Sarah Bernhardt was the triumphant victim of a mistake two or three years ago She had just returned to Paris after one of her London visits, and King George of Greece happened to be at the Gare du Nord waiting for an outgoing train. The great actress was overwhelmed.

"Sire," she said, sweeping a profound bow, "you honor me. I cannot sufficiently thank you for your courtesy in coming here to meet me." The king accepted the dramatic situation.

A Relic of Saint Ann

The fathers of the most blessed sacrament, who have been the keepers of the precious relic of St Ann. since 1900, were tireless in their preparations for the opening of the annual novena of St. Ann when thousands of worshippers will begin the nine days' pilgrimage to the shrine where the relic is kept in the little church of St. Jean Baptiste, in East 76th street. The crippled, the blind and the afflicted in body and soul will come, as in previous years, to seek the "favors" of the saintly relic by pressing it to their lips and having it applied to their ailing members by the priests.

Many miraculous cures are recorded in the annals of the church as a result of the application of the relic. The cures are spoken of by the priests of the order of the blessed sacrament as "favors" obtained from God through the intercession of St. Ann. Two large racks filled with crutches, braces and other implements used by the deformed stand on either side of the shrine of St. Ann, in the basement of the church, as mute testimonials of the efficacy of the powers of the relic. The priests said that they had burned hundreds of these tokens of misshapen humanity, which were left after the pilgrimage of last year.

The novena, or nine days of prayer, is held in preparation for the feast of St. Ann, July 26. The celebration of the novena this year has a peculiarly pleasant significance to the priests of the order of the blessed sacrament at this little church, as it marks a year's progress toward the construction of a large new church of St. Jean Baptiste almost directly across the street from the present small brick edifice. The gifts of money received during this novena will be applied to the fund for the new church.

Starting without funds, but with the profound belief that divine Providence would provide, this little band of devotees fearlessly pledged themselves a year ago to build a great new church, which would be the purest example of the classic Roman style in this city, the total cost of which was estimated at $750,000. They have accomplished much within a year's time. All of the property on the site needed for the new church, at the southeast corner of Lexington avenue and 76th street, has been acquired and the excavating work for the building is nearly completed.

The new church will be a receptacle for the relic of St. Ann.

The relic of St. Ann is a portion of one of the small bones of her wrist, which was brought from France 20 years ago by the French-Canadian priests then in charge of the church here. It has been exposed to the veneration of the faithful and applied to the sick every day since that time at certain hours of the day. During the novena it is applied all day long from 8 o'clock in the morning to 9 o'clock at night and it is during this nine-day period, the priests say, that the greatest number of "favors" are accomplished.—New York Tribune.

Clock Made From Scrap Iron.

A coronation memorial was dedicated at the parish church of Wootton Rivers, near Marlborough, Wiltshire, on Sunday, and the memorial is a remarkable proof of the ingenuity of the villagers. There were not sufficient funds to pay for a public clock such as was desired by the people of the village, but Mr. Spratt, who began life on a farm and who is self-taught, offered to make a clock free of charge if he could get some one to do the heavier work and if the villagers would bring him all the odd iron, lead, steel and brass available in the village with which to make the more delicate parts.

The villagers entered into the spirit of the project with zest, and Mr Spratt's cottage was soon the scene of a collection of heterogeneous articles—parts of agricultural machinery, bicycles, perambulators, bedsteads, fire irons, brass weights and other odds and ends. The two great wheels of the clock were taken from disused separators, while the hammer, which strikes the hours on the largest bell of a peal of five is a governor ball taken from a steam engine. The three dials are made of iron, enameled with a white background and black figures and hands. On one dial is the inscription "Glory be to God," instead of the usual Roman numerals.—London Standard.

Inspected by Pat.

The commanding officer of a corps was much troubled about the persistent untidiness of one of his men. Reprimand and punishment were unavailing. The man was incorrigible. A brilliant idea struck the colonel: "Why not march him up and down the whole line of the regiment, and shame him into decency?" It was done. The untidy warrior was ordered to exhibit himself, and march up and down the entire regiment, and the men told to have a good look at him. The unabashed Pat halted, saluted the colonel, and said in the hearing of the whole corps, with the utmost sang froid: "Dhirtiest regiment I iver inspected, sorr!"

Records Music.

An electrical music recording apparatus, invented a score of years ago by a Swedish engineer, has been lately put into practical form by a Stockholm firm. The "melograph," as it is called, is attached to a piano, organ or other keyed instrument and as the instrument is played in the usual way the attachment registers the tune on a music-ruled, chemically-prepared ribbon, having a wax-like coating. The record may be used for a phonograph-like reproduction, or the impression can be read off and transcribed in ordinary musical notes.

Defective Page

The Northern Light

CHAS. W. LATTA

Editor and Publisher.

Published every Friday at Holt, Marshall County, Minnesota.

Subscription Price: $1.00 per year, strictly in advance.

Entered as second-class matter Sept-22, 1911, at the post office at Holt, Minnesota, under the act of March 3, 1879.

Be a booster—not a knocker.

We're thankful we weren,t a turkey, anyway.

The present week has been the busiest in the history of this print shop, for which we are duly thankful.

Yesterday was Thanksgiving Day. Did you give thanks for blessings you enjoy and forget your grouches for the time being? You have lot to be thankful for if you look at things right,

Henry Clay Beattie, Jr., executed in Virginia a week ago for the murder of his young wife, made a confession of the crime before taking his seat in the electric chair. "I tried to be a sport," he said, and in that remark there is lots of food for thought,

The Plummer Pioneer has "changed hands" again and now it is Ed. Hermanson, of Thief River Falls, one of the best of the younger generation of northern Minnesota printers, that will try and guide it safely on the road to prosperity. We know what you are up against, Ed, but hope you can make it a winner.

The McNamara trial at Los Angeles is developing something startling nearly every day. The latest report is that several parties have been arrested for attempting to bribe some of the few jurymen who have been secured up to date, the bribing being alleged to have been done by agents of the defence. It has taken a matter of three months or so to secure a part of the jury and if those selected are tampered with often enough the chances are that the McNamaras will die in jail of old age before their trial comes off.

James J. Hill claims to foresee a new era for North Dakota and predicts that, with improved methods of farming, land in that state can be made worth $100 per acre. It does not take any sage like Mr. Hill to see the new era that has already set in for northern Minnesota where natural advantages have made the better system of farming an easy change from the old grain system. Jim Hill's predictions and the efforts of the railroads on behalf of the long haul may make North Dakota land sell for $100 per acre before the land in this territory is rated that high on the market, but, when the Dakota lands, the very best of them, are actually worth $100 per acre, land in our own Mud Lake district will be worth $125, no matter what the selling price may be.

Farms Wanted.

I have prospective buyers for a few good improved farms; also for 960 acres of wild land. All must be in eastern Marshall county.

Chas. W. Latta, Holt, Minn.

Scholarship for Sale Cheap

We have for sale, cheap for cash, a scholarship good for three months tuition in Crookston College, and for any subject at any time. It is worth $80 but will be sold for considerably less as we need the cash.

Call or address The Northern Light, Holt, Minn.

Enamelled kitchenware at Kolden's. Triple coated, white lined and the best bargains you ever knew, 10 and 69 cents only, while they last.

We want more subscribers and will take potatoes, chickens, or wood at current market prices on subscription. Of course we prefer the money, but if you haven't the cash bring on the produce. Dont be without your home paper anyway.

M. A. NELSON, M. D.

Physician and Surgeon

Office over Holt Merc. Co's store

HOLT, MINNESOTA.

ALL COURTS MUST BE OPEN

Secret Proceedings of Any Kind Are Contrary to Spirit of Our Law.

When two such eminent lawyers as Hannis Taylor and William E Chandler contend that newspaper men may not properly be excluded from deposition proceedings because such proceedings constitute a court, and all courts must be open. the general public may be assured that the point is well taken. Mr Taylor is one of the greatest living authorities on constitutional law, and Mr. Chandler, his colleague in a cause celebre, is likewise celebrated.

While it was undoubtedly to the interest of their clients that the proceedings should be open to newspaper men and consequently to the public, and while there might be fine-spun and even plausible arguments on the other side, it nevertheless remains true that under our legal system all courts are and must be open courts. Secret proceedings of any sort are contrary to the spirit of our law, which wisely recognizes that publicity is the refuge and the defense of the weak and innocent Any encroachment upon that principle is to be feared and resisted.

MARRIAGE.

Marriage, which has been the bourne of so many narratives, is still a great beginning, as it was to Adam and Eve, who kept their honeymoon in Eden, but had their first little one among the thorns and thistles of the wilderness. It is still the beginning of the home epic—the gradual conquest or irremediable loss of that complete union which makes the advancing years a climax, and age the harvest of sweet memories in common.

Some set out, like Crusaders of old, with a glorious equipment of hope and enthusiasm, and get broken by the way, wanting patience with each other and the world.—George Eliot.

CAMPHOR FOR A COLD.

In its early stages an acute cold may be avoided by use of camphor. If the chest seems "tight" rub it thoroughly with equal parts of sweet oil and camphor, and wear a compress during the night of flannel saturated with the mixture, heated and covered with dry flannel. Three or four drops of camphor in a glass of hot water, taken at night, is excellent. If the throat is a little sore use a gargle of ten drops of camphor to a tablespoonful of water, being careful not to swallow this. Rubbing the nose with sweet oil and camphor and inhaling the fumes of the latter will help matters when the head has a sensation of fullness.

THUS A MISSION EXPANDED.

Ten years ago the Rev. P. N. Tsu, now the rector of the only self-supporting native church of the Protestant Episcopal mission in China—St. Savior's, Shanghai—came to Wusih with two boys and lived on his boat until he could establish a mission. He was soon joined by the Rev. G. F. Mosher. The work has expanded, as it does in all stations where men can be supplied, until there are now two compounds—on one a dispensary and residence, on the other the chapel, a woman's building, a residence for the missionaries, and soon there will be a church and a catechists' school.—From the Spirit of Missions.

THE DYSPEPTIC'S OPPORTUNITY.

Among what may be called deathbed jests that of the Rev. James Guthrie of Stirling, one of the Covenanter martyrs, deserves a high place. Lord Guthrie recalls the story in "From a Northern Window." Mr Guthrie was executed at the cross in High street, Edinburgh. The night before he asked for cheese for supper. His friends wondered, for the physicians had forbidden him to eat cheese. But he said, with a smile, "I am beyond the hazard of all earthly diseases."

PRINCESS A MOTOR "FAN."

Princess Victoria, the only unmarried daughter of the late King Edward and Queen Alexandra, is said to be very much interested in motoring and this summer has been seen every day at Harrogate, starting out for a trip through the country. She has been taking the cure there this summer, which may, however, not mean that she is sick, as it is fashionable to take the "cure" after a winter in society.

MAKING RUGS IN THE ORIENT

Women and Girls Do the Weaving and Methods and Patterns Are Traditional.

For ages reaching back into the mists of antiquity, weaving has been the work of women, though the modern factory of the west has brought about changes in this respect. "In the unchanging east weaving is, with few exceptions, women's work. In the interior of Asiatic Turkey and in Persia the patriarchal system still exists and the sons bring their wives home to live. I have known as many as 35 persons to live in one dwelling," writes Mrs. Eliza Dunn in her new book, "Rugs in Their Native Land." "The mother-in-law is queen of the household and every morning assigns to each woman and girl her task for the day." Methods of working as well as patterns are traditional, according to the same author, and designs are peculiar to special families or tribes and become so familiar that the older workers produce them from memory.

The art of tying in the yarn has to be learned very slowly. The younger children are allowed to tie in only one solid color on the plain background, but when a girl becomes fairly expert she is allowed to make a whole rug, and traces of individuality may be looked for in her weaving. The two classes of rug, Turkish and Persian, are distinguished by the kind of knot in which they are tied, the Ghiordes, or Turkish, the Senna, or Persian, knot.

The number of knots to the square inch is one of the tests of value of a modern rug, and the fact that more can be tied to the square inch in a Persian than in a Turkish rug accounts for the greater fineness and consequently greater costliness of the former.

DOLLY UP-TO-DATE.

Little girls of the present day are said to have no love for dolls. It is, unfortunately true, that whereas once upon a time every small maiden was to be seen hugging a dolly or wheeling several in a perambulator, that sight is now rare.

In toy shops they tell you dolls are not popular.

However, one finds there is a certain kind of doll which wins its way to the heart of the woman in miniature. It is not the baby, but the model manikin who has her trousseau complete like mamma. She has her corsets, her gloves, her large hats, parasols, bags and furs, perfectly a la mode. Her coiffure can be changed; in short she is a lady turned out en regle.

Thus even fashions in dolls are changing with the times.

TRUE AUTHORITY.

Self-government, with tenderness. Here you have the condition of all authority over children. The mother should consider herself as her child's sun, a changeless and ever-radiant world, whither the small, restless creature, quick at tears and laughter, light, fickle, passionate, full of storms, may come for fresh stores of light and warmth, of calm and courage. The mother represents the divinity to childhood. The religion of a child depends on what its mother and father are, not on what they say.

NO FAVORITISM.

"Is your town doing anything in the uplift way?"

"Oh, yes! We have a committee appointed to see all shows suspected of being immoral, and report on them."

"Good!"

"Yes, a committee of one thousand."

"Indeed! Isn't that a—er—rather large committee?"

"Well, you see, we can't afford to create any hard feeling, and so we made it large enough to include about everybody."—Lippincott's.

VICTIMS OF FASHION.

Lady in Hobble—Why, hello, Mary, How are you?

Lady in Hat—Oh, I'm out of sight. How are you?

Hobble—Well, I can't kick.—Scribner's.

WHAT SHE DROVE.

"And what do you drive?" asked the woman who came to the party in an electric runabout.

"Nothing but my husband," answered the other lady.—Detroit Free Press.

V-I-V-O

The Best there is in FLOUR

Our Elevator and Lumber Yard are always prepared to give the most satisfactory service.

Hanson & Barzen Milling Co.,

OSCAR HANSON, Agent, - - HOLT, MINN.

AXEL NELSON

General Blacksmith Work

HOLT, - - MINN.

All work done Right, at Reasonable Prices.

The Evergreen Hotel

P. A. RESBERG, PROP.

Rates, $1.00 per day.

Serves the best Meal in Eastern Marhall Co. for twenty-five cents.

Livery and Feed Barn in connection.

Red Lake Falls Milling Co.

Makers of the Celebrated

Mascot Flour

and bUYERS of all kinds of GRAIN

Our Elevator will give you satisfaction.

NELS ENGEBRETSEN, Agent - - - Holt, Minn.

Bring us your Job Printing orders

Crookston College...

Is the Leading Business School in the Northwest.

OUR TEACHERS Are all College and University Graduates.

FINANCIAL STANDING It is backed by a capital of $50,000 which is a safe guarantee to its students that every promise will be fulfilled.

ACTUAL BUSINESS The only school in Northern Minnesota having an actual business department.

BOARD and ROOM Can be had in private families for $3 per week. Other school towns will charge from $4 to $6.

POSITIONS The demand upon us for office help is greater than we can supply.

Catalogue and further information given free by writing.

J. C. SATHRE, Crookston, Minn.

Your Wife and Children

Are entitled to some Christmas Presents this Year.

In making a selection for your wife or daughter why not come and see our Big Line of ROCKERS and LADIES' DESKS? They make ideal Christmas Gifts and their Prices are Very Reasonable.

We carry a complete line of Musical Instruments and Supplies. Mail orders receive our prompt and careful attention.

TORRISON BROS.

THIEF RIVER FALLS, MINN.

THE DULUTH HERALD

BEATS THE CENSUS THREE TO ONE

During the past ten years the population of Duluth increased 48 per cent., St. Paul 32 per cent., and Minneapolis 49 per cent. In the Same Period the Circulation of The Duluth Herald

INCREASED 150 PER CENT.

This marvelous expansion—so much greater than that of the surrounding territory—is due solely to the merits of The Herald. The Herald has never used any kind of premium, contest, or price reduction to gain subscribers but prints each day the very best NEWSPAPER in the Northwest. Its editorial page is thoroughly independent and its news columns cover every feature of the world's daily history.

Send for sample copy and get The Herald habit.

THREE MONTHS FOR $1.00—Mailed Daily.

ADDRESS HERALD CIRCULATION DEPT., DULUTH, MINN.

Local Items

The Local Market.

(Grain prices furnished by Hanson & Barzen Milling Co. at close of business every Thursday.)

Flax	$1.76
Wheat	.90
Barley d	.92
Oats	.37
Rye	.75

Bring us the news.

When in town call at this office and let's get acquainted.

Arvid and Tony Carlson ate their Thanksgiving dinner with friends in Newfolden.

Special subscription offer from now until January 1st. Call at this office for particulars.

Miss Edna Risberg came up from Thief River Falls to spend Thanksgiving with the folks at home here.

The mask ball at the Woodman hall last was very, largely attended and all present seemed to enjoy the event immensely.

Mrs. G. Gilbertson returned to her home at Hillsboro, N. D., last Saturday after a pleasant two weeks visit with her mother, Mrs. J. A. Sorum.

For a holiday gift why not send this paper for a year to a friend? It would please the friend and help to boost this community. Call and get acquainted with our attractive Special Offer for such subscriptions.

Ed. Horian spent the first days of the week out in the tamarac swamps and visited with F. W. Tabor. He says that Mr. Tabor is doing some business in the trapping line and had two wolves and several mink to his credit already.

J. A. Sorum and Tony Anderson were visiting at the Dahl home east of Mud Lake over Sunday. Tony seems to have some special attraction to that portion of the country and it is probable that he will do considerable towards keeping the roads open for traffic this winter.

Ernest Paulick, who has been working on the big Stevens dredge a few miles east of here, left Wednesday for Middle River for a visit with relatives until he looks up another situation for the winter months. He expects to be back again when the dredge begins work in the spring.

Crookston College has placed all its graduates in positions. The demand for office help has been greater than we could supply. School is in session all year. You can begin at any time of year. Good board and furnished room taken care of in private family, for $3 per week. Send for catalog. Address J. C. Sathre, Crookston, Minn.

Dredges Have Quit Work

Ditching operations in the Mud Lake district have been discontinued for this year, the crews have been disbanded for the winter and other crews are busy hauling out supplies in readiness for the opening next spring. The unusual severity of the weather has caused the dredges to quit one by one during the past two weeks. The big Stevens dredge on the Thief River was the last to give up, but the foreman, John Chapman, released his crew on Wednesday and himself left for his home at Canastota, N. Y., to spend the winter.

This big Stevens dredge alone moved nearly 500.000 cubic yards of earth this season on the river work. One of the small walking dredges constructed over 52 miles of laterals emptying into No. 11, the big main ditch of the Mud Lake system.

Be a booster—not a knocker.

Subscribe for The Northern Light. Only $1.00 per year.

Albin Knauf transacted business at Thief River Falls Tuesday night.

Tony Anderson and Andrew Sorum made a business trip to Thief River Falls on Wednesday.

Ed. Ellingson and son Alvin, were business visitors in town Tuesday from their home near Gatzke.

Miss B. Horian went to Thief River Falls Wednesday on a combined business and pleasure trip.

Triple coated enamelled kitchen ware at only 10 cents per piece is a bargain that you never had before. S. S. Kolden & Co.

Fred Nagel arrived yesterday from Blakely and is hauling out lumber to build on his claim in Section 1, of Agder township.

John F. Naughtin, the Fidelity Life insurance man, was a business visitor here on Wednesday. John is a winner on writing old line life insurance and has one of the most attractive policies on the market.

Christmas Candies—We carry a very complete line of finest candies for the holiday trade. In packages at prices from 5 cents to $10.00. Mail orders given special attention. J. A. Swons, Thief River Falls, Minn.

K. E. Knutson was in from Gatzke Tuesday and bought a new gasoline engine for use on his farm from S. S. Kolden & Co. Mr. Knutson will fix up a mill and saw that will do all his own work and some for the neighbors and will have power enough to saw lumber.

Swan Carlson went to Thief River Falls on Monday to make homestead entry on a nice claim in section 28, of East Valley. The land is a tract that had been filed on years ago and Mr. Carlson contested the original entry successfully. He will make his future home on the premises and has already commenced improvements.

Creamery Statement

Business done at the Holt creamery during October. Number of patrons, 76.

Total cream received	13;030 lbs
Average test	27.84
Butterfat	3,628 lds
Per cent overrun	17.50
Butter made	4,264 lbs
Price paid patrons	33 cts
Balance from last month	$522.05
Received for butter sold	1,294.92
Total	$1,816.97
Paid patrons by check	$1,182.88
Expense fund	29.37
Balance	603.72
Total	$1,816.97

Those receiving $40 and over were:

John Knudson	$57.10
E. L. Nielsen	50.59

John A. Sorum, Secretary.

Purchased Gasoline Engine

Carl Larson on Tuesday bought a new gasoline engine and outfit of S. S. Kolden & Co. and hauled the same out to his fine farm southeast of town where he will start it working as quickly as possible. With the engine Mr. Larson purchased a feed mill, saws for both wood and lumber and a pump jack, so that he is now thoroughly equipped to do his farm work with a minimum labor expense.

Mr. Kolden sold three of these outfits during the week, which is some evidenc of the prosperity of our farmers as well as the popularity of the Kolden store.

The number of deer killed by hunters in this part of the country this year have not been very many and only one has been shipped out of here. Reports from the Mud Lake district are to the effect that the Dahl boys and their party returned Sunday from a trip bringing home with them three big moose.

LOTS OF MOVING.

Angry Landlord—You've either got to pay your back rent right now or get out.

Tenant—All right, I'll get out. By the way, have you seen furniture car No. 999 today?

"Not that I know of. Isn't one furniture mover as good as another?"

"Yes, but I've got a yearly contract with him."—New York Weekly.

HAD BEEN AT THE BEACHES.

She—We women like to be loved

He—Yes; I've observed, though, that you like a whole lot better to be made love to.

NATIONAL AIR FOR CHINA.

The last expiring act of the board of rites was to recommend a change in official music, which the emperor approved by decree of July 15. It appears that the Marquis Tseng evolved a national air when in London as minister thirty years ago, but it has never been officially notified to the army and navy. The western nations, and even Japan, all know each other's airs, which they strike up at banquets and solemn occasions; the make-shift air now semi-officially used by China is far from being suited to her dignity. It is not proposed to abandon entirely the old Chinese principles of music, but the envoys abroad have been directed to send all foreign national airs to the musical department of the board of rites, when competent trained ears will judge how best to combine Chinese notions with foreign and evolve something really good.

TOO MANY BOOKS.

Barnaby Rich, in his preface to "A New Description of Ireland," published in 1600, writes:

"One of the diseases of this age is the multitude of books, that doth so overcharge the world that it is not able to digest the abundance of idle matter that is every day hatched and brought into the world, that are as divers in their forms as their authors are in their faces. It is but a thriftless and thankless occupation this writing of books. A man were better to sit singing in a cobbler's shop, for his pay is certainly a penny a patch! But a book writer, if he gets sometimes a few commendations of the judicious, he shall be sure to reap a thousand reproaches of the malicious!"

A SHINING METAL.

There is a legend among the peasants of Cornwall in England that at night there may be observed a faintly-shining mineral among the rocks brought from the mines. That this is not pure fancy has been proved by Professor Strutt. A specimen of the mineral autunite, which is also found in Wales, was sent to him from Portugal because of its luminosity. He finds that it closely resembles artificially prepared salts of uranium, and that its luminosity is due to spontaneous radio-activity. The light it sheds is stronger than that of nitrate of uranium. Upon parting with its water of crystalization the mineral loses its luminous property.—Scientific American.

PILOT LIKE HIS NAME.

"My, how the car slips and slides! I must discharge this chauffeur."

"But perhaps he'll improve if you give him a chance."

"Impossible. His name is Skidmore."—Life.

D. B. Bakke, Pres. S. S. Kolden, Vice-pres.

HOLT STATE BANK

Incorporated 1910. Resources over $50,000

We have a limited amount of the five and ten Kroner Scandinavian money on hand special for this season of the year. We also issue foreign money orders on all parts of the world.

The past season has, no doubt, been a successful one for you and we cordially invite you to place your hard earned cash on deposit with this bank. By placing the money with us you have the right to draw it out at any time you may need it regardless whether left solely as a time deposit or subject to check; and, in case you have no immediate use for it, we will pay you 4 per cent interest on a time deposit left for a period of six months and 5 per cent for twelve months.

Think it over. Nothing to worry about. Your money earning money for you without any more exertion on your part than to step into the bank and draw your interest at every terminal period, whether six or twelve months.

B. L. BACKE, Cashier.

SPECIAL HOLIDAY SALE

On everything in our Furniture Department. This Sale is now on and will continue until Christmas.

See our Special Offering in

CARPETS

ROCKERS

Beds and Mattresses

We appreciate your patronage and will make an honest effort to give you satisfaction.

Funeral Supplies always in stock.

S. S. KOLDEN & Co.

HOLT, MINNESOTA.

BIG SPECIAL SALE

For one week---From December 4 to December 9, 1911

MEN'S SUITS

Men's Suits, regular $23.00, Special	$16.50
" " " 20.00, only	13.95
" " " 15.00, only	10.95
" " " 7.00, closed out at	4.75

BOY'S SUITS

We have a number of Boys' Suits that have sold for $2.25, 2.50 and 2.75, to be closed out at only $1.89

Ladies' Dress Goods

Ladies' Extra Good Quality $1.25 Dress Goods, Special for this Sale only	98c
Regular 95 cent Dress Goods, only	63c
Regular 85 cent values, Special	59c
Regular 65 cent values at	39c
Regular 45 cent values, Sale Price	35c
We have a stock of Ladies' Waists,, sold at $1.25, 1.50 and 1.75, to be closed out at only	89c

REMEMBER

This Special Cash Sale is for ONE WEEK only so do not miss your opportunity to buy High Grade Goods at Slaughtered Prices.

HOLT MERCANTILE Co.

"The Big New Store"

Defective Page

OFFICIAL INVITATION TO AMERICANS

HOW ROBERT ROGERS, MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR, IN WINNIPEG ADDRESS, ISSUES WELCOME OF AMERICANS TO WESTERN CANADA.

During the course of a reply to an address presented to Hon. Robert Rogers, the newly appointed Minister of the Interior of Canada at a banquet given at Winnipeg in his honor that gentleman spoke on immigration. The tone of his remarks was that he intended to pursue an aggressive and forward policy in the matter of immigration. In part, he said:

"The most important branch perhaps of that department (Interior) is that of immigration.

"If there is anything more than another we want here it is a greater population, and it shall be my duty to present to the people in all parts of the world where desirable emigrants are to be found the advantages and the great possibilities of this country. We have received in the past a reasonably large immigration from south of the international boundary, and in this connection let me say just a word for our American cousins who have found happy homes amongst us, and those whom we hope to welcome in greater numbers in the years to come. There are hundreds of thousands of them in our prairie provinces, happy in the enjoyment of a freedom as great as they ever knew, and all contributing in a material way towards the development of Canada. We are not blind to their value as settlers. They come better equipped with scientific farming knowledge than most of our emigrants, and constitute without doubt the wealthiest class of emigrants any new country has ever known. As head of the immigration department it will be my privilege to offer them a welcome hearty and sincere, and to so contribute to their welfare that under the protecting folds of the Union Jack they will enjoy as great a degree of liberty and happiness as under the Stars and Stripes. The Borden government cherishes nothing but the kindliest feelings for the people of the great republic to the south, and will do all in its power to increase the bonds of kinship and neighborly good feeling that has so long existed. (Hear, hear.)

"While we adopt a vigorous emigration policy in that country, we will also adopt the same vigorous policy in other parts of the world. We will go to England, Ireland and Scotland, and every other country irrespective of race, creed or nationality, where we can find suitable and desirable emigrants for this great country. I think much good work can be done in those countries and especially perhaps at the present time in England, Ireland and Scotland. Now, then, it will be my duty to stir up that policy in the most vigorous manner possible."

How to Use Red Cross Seals.

"How to Use Red Cross Seals" is the title of an interesting publication recently issued by the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis.

Red Cross Seals must be placed only on the back of letters and not on the address side of packages that are going through the mail. They may be placed anywhere on matter going by express. Care should be taken in sending merchandise through the mails not to place seals over the strings with which the package is tied, since this seals the package against inspection and subjects it to first-class postage rates. As many seals may be used on the back of a letter or package as may be desired. Everyone is urged to use them liberally, since every seal is a bullet in the war against tuberculosis.

Red Cross seals are not good for postage, and will not carry mail matter, but any kind of mail matter will carry them. Finally, every letter or parcel sent out, either by mail or in some other way, during the holiday season should bear one or more Red Cross Seals.

Nothing to Write About.

A new reporter on a western paper was assigned to go to a church meeting and get a story of it. He went. When he came back the city editor asked:

"How did you pan out?"

"Oh," said the reporter, as he stuck his foot on the desk and lighted a cigarette, "there was nothing doing. I haven't got anything to write. The meeting broke up in a fist fight between the minister and the deacon, and not a bit of church business was done."—Saturday Evening Post.

Important to Mothers
Examine carefully every bottle of CASTORIA, a safe and sure remedy for infants and children, and see that it
Bears the Signature of Chas. H. Fletcher
In Use For Over 30 Years.
Children Cry for Fletcher's Castoria

In Life's Twilight.

There is an evening twilight of the heart, when its wild passion-waves are lulled to rest.—Halleck.

What has become of the old-fashioned politician who used to imagine he was destiny's only son?—Toledo Blade.

DR. J. H. RINDLAUB (Specialist),
Eye, Ear, Nose and Throat
Fargo, N. D.

Some girls would lose out, even if every year was a leap year.

SERIAL STORY

No Man's Land

A ROMANCE

By Louis Joseph Vance

Illustrations by Ray Walters

(Copyright, 1910, by Louis Joseph Vance.)

SYNOPSIS.

Garrett Coast, a young man of New York City, meets Douglas Blackstock, who invites him to a card party. He accepts, although he dislikes Blackstock, the reason being that both are in love with Katherine Thaxter. Coast fails to convince her that Blackstock is unworthy of her friendship. At the party Coast meets two named Dundas and Van Tuyl. There is a quarrel, and Blackstock shoots Van Tuyl dead. Coast struggles to wrest the weapon from him, thus the police discover them. Coast is arrested for murder. He is convicted, but as he begins his sentence, Dundas names Blackstock as the murderer and kills himself. Coast becomes free, but Blackstock has married Katherine Thaxter and fled. Coast purchases a yacht and while sailing sees a man thrown from a distant boat.

CHAPTER V.

Sunlight and shadow playing in swift alternation upon his face, as the Echo courtesied to the morning breeze, Coast awakened.

For a moment almost thoughtless he lay drowsily enjoying the rise and dip of the boat, as drowsily conscious of a faint thrill of excitement; mostly comparable, perhaps, to the first waking sensations of a fourteen-year-old boy on a Fourth of July morning.

Then without warning the small chronometer on the transverse above his head rapped out smartly two double-chimes—ships' time: four bells: ten o'clock in the forenoon.

Astonished, he sat up quickly, and his still sleepy gaze, passing through the companionway, encountered the amused regard of the soi-disant Melchisedec Appleyard. Promptly Coast found himself in full possession of his faculties. That in obedience to first instincts he nodded with a cordial smile, was significant.

Appleyard returned the salutation with a quick bob of his small head. "Good-morning, hero!" he sang out cheerfully.

He sat in the cockpit, huddled into the folds of a gray blanket, voluminous for his slight figure, a thin but wiry forearm bared to wield the cigarette he was smoking with every indication of enjoyment.

"Good-morning," he returned. "How d'you feel after your adventure?"

"Unclothed but in my right mind," said Appleyard, with a twinkle of anxiety amending: "to the best of my knowledge and belief." He indicated airily the various articles constituting his painfully simple wardrobe. "Waiting for 'em to dry."

Appleyard hopped up, fingered his everyday attire critically, and pronounced it bone-dry; then, bundling it up, he returned to the cabin, seating himself on the opposite transom to dress.

"And the sensations of a hero, refreshed by sound slumbers, are—"

"Hunger," said Coast. He moved forward and began to experiment gingerly with a new and untried alcohol stove. "I can offer you eggs, coffee, biscuit—and nothing else," he added, producing raw materials from a locker. "You see, I hadn't expected to entertain."

"Rotten inconsiderate of you," Appleyard grumbled. "I'll wire you a warning next time it occurs to me to drop in unexpectedly."

Divided between amusement and perplexity, in the course of the meal Coast reviewed a personality singularly enriched by a variety of suggestions consistently negative. The man's age was indeterminable—somewhere between thirty and forty-five. Loosely summarized, he might have been anybody or nobody on a lark or his uppers.

Appleyard looked up quickly, with a shy, humorous smile.

"Well, what d'you make of me?"

"It's hard enough to guess what you've made of yourself."

"Flattery note," observed Appleyard obscurely. "Yet you win my sympathy; sometimes I am moved to wonder—really." He tapped an egg thoughtfully, a crinkle forming between his colorless eyebrows. "It's really not what a man makes of himself; it's what his temperament does to him."

"Temperament!"

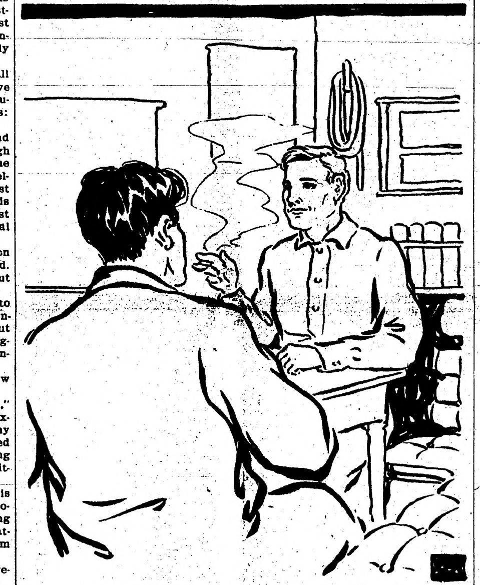
"Yes; you really ought to keep one, too; they're all the rage just now—and such excellent excuses for the indulgence of your pet idiosyncrasies."

"Oh! . . . And you blame yours for what?"

"For making me a—I presume posterity, in the final analysis, will adjudge me a Romantic."

"Literature?" asked Coast, aghast.

"Good Heavens, no! Nothing like that: Life." He sighed profoundly. "Shall I rehearse to you the story of my life? No, I shall not rehearse to you the story of my life. But at all costs I shall talk about myself for a space: I insist upon it: I love to. You don't seriously object?" he added, anxious.



"Thank You," Said Appleyard Gratefully.

"Then compose yourself. . . . Born at an early age—in fact, at as early an age as you can comfortably imagine—I found myself immediately the sport of sardonic fortunes. That name, Melchisedec! One felt that there must be in one's future life some warmth of Romance to compensate for that infamous ignominy. So labelled any reasonable human should logically have looked forward to sure degeneration into the American peasant of the New England magazine-story type, sans brains, bowels, breadth, beauty. A born iconoclast, however, as soon as I wakened to realization of my plight I mutinied and resolved to live down my shame. Thenceforward I set myself to painstaking muckraking in modern life, seeking the compensating Romance without which life were but death in life." He paused and cocked an eye at Coast. "Not bad for a beginning, what?"

"A little prolix," commented Coast dispassionately, falling in with his humor. "But continue. You found your Romance?"

"What is so-called—alas, yes! I found it, as a rule, a nom de guerre for crime. . . . Lured by legend, I have traversed much of the known world, only to come to that conclusion. I have penetrated the fastnesses of the Tennessee mountains, nosing the illicit still: which proved merely sordid. Counterfeiting seemed to promise largely—and discovered itself the most ill-paid calling in the world. Diplomatic intrigue unmasked proved to be merely a popular fallacy shining in the reflected luster of the Six Best Sellers. . . . But I refrain from wearying you with a catalogue of the exploded mines of Romance; a list inordinately lengthy, believe me. High finance, I admit, escaped my probe; but the recent plague of Wall Street plays discouraged me, demonstrating there could be no Romance there. . . . So at length you find me turning in despair to the Seven Seas; afloat, at all events, one must of necessity pursue the glamorous promise of the Unknown that lurks just down the horizon."

Appleyard paused, his mien subdued, his gesture bespeaking resignation.

"All of which means—?" Coast insisted.

"I hardly know. Frankly, I thought that speech rather stupid myself. That's why I chopped it off. . . . One talks. . . . You may have noticed?"

"I have," said Coast drily.

"You would, naturally," returned Appleyard without resentment. "But would it amuse you to learn how I came to be on board that fisherman?"

"You mean how you came to be overboard. . . . Perhaps it would. You're the best judge of that."

"True." Appleyard accepted and lighted a cigarette, frowning soberly. "It was," he began, "due principally to my fatal passion for this Romance thing, sir. I have already acquainted you with my determination to pursue my quest of that shy spirit upon the trackless ocean. Conceive, now, the bitterness of the disappointment which o'erwhelmed my ardent soul when I applied for a berth as a foremast hand, only to be informed I was physically unfit, that, as one brutal mate phrased it, I'd blow away in the first half-a-gale. . . . I give you my word, Mr. Coast, I've been sticking round this waterfront a whole fortnight, vainly seeking nautical employment. Last night, for the first time, for a few brief hours, I was permitted to flatter myself that fortune was on the point of favoring me. For a fugitive moment I sipped the chalice of Romance and rolled its flavor beneath my tongue."

Appleyard half closed his eyes and smacked his lips, his expression one of beatific bliss.

"You've a pretty taste in pleasures," Coast commented.

Appleyard waved the interruption aside. "It came about largely through a whim of Chance," he resumed, "as all true adventure must. Quite by accident I fell in with one of the crew of that fishing smack, he being well under the influence of liquor; in a way of speaking, he'd looked too long upon the wine when it was red-eye and half wood-alcohol. Craftily simulating a like condition, I plied him further and succeeded in learning the name of his vessel and the fact that she was expected to sail with the morning tide—together with other details that intrigued me. Then, leaving the sodden wretch to sleep off his disgusting debauch, I caused myself to be conveyed aboard the lugger—I mean schooner—and stowed away in his bunk, trusting to luck to avert discovery until the morning. Unhappily I, with the rest of the crew, was routed out incontinently by an unmannerly brute with a belaying pin (at all events it felt like a belaying-pin—an instrument with which I am unacquainted save through the literature of the sea) and forced to go on deck to help heave anchor. . . . Or should I say, 'weigh anchor?'"

"I'm not quarrelling with your style," chuckled Coast. "Why not put off polishing your periods until another time?"

"Thank you," said Appleyard gratefully. "To resume: My detection promptly ensued and my presence was dispensed with, a trace unceremoniously, perhaps, but no doubt very properly from the skipper's point of view. With the subsequent phases of this most delectable adventure you are familiar; therefore, I confidently assume your concurrence with my conclusion; which is—here am I. . . . Now," he wound up, inclining his head at an angle, and favoring Coast with a frankly speculative stare, "what are you going to do with me?"

Coast opened his eyes wide, with a lift of his brows. "I don't know that I contemplate doing anything with you, Mr. Appleyard."

"It's not yet too late for the amende courteous," suggested his guest.

"I'll gladly set you ashore—"

"Pardon, but that's precisely what I don't want you to do."

"But—"

"A moment's patience, sir. The Echo lacks a crew: I offer my services unanimously in that capacity."

"But I don't want a crew."

"Oh, don't say that!"

"And I have no need of one."

Appleyard lifted both hands and let them fall with a gesture of despair. "Infatuated man!" he murmured, regarding Coast with commiseration.

"Why infatuated?"

"What do you know of these waters?" the little man counterquestioned sharply.

"Little," Coast was obliged to admit; "or nothing, if you insist."

"And yet you say you don't need a crew!"

"But, my dear man, I do know how to sail a boat; and with a copy of the Coast Pilot, charts, a compass and common-sense—"

"You may possibly escape piling her up the first day out—granted. On the other hand, I happen to be intimate with these waters; I can pilot you safely whither you will; I can afford you infinite assistance with the heavy work—it's no joke, at times, for one man to have all the handling of a craft of this size. I'm exceedingly handy, small and inconspicuous, neat, a fairish cook, and normally quite pleasant to be thrown amongst—never savage save when denied the sweet consolation of continuous conversation. Finally, I'm a great bargain."

"What do you mean by that?"

"I offer my valuable—nay, invaluable services, gratis, without pay."

"But why do you do that?" demanded Coast, blankly.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

See-Saw.

As a rule, the melancholy youth makes frivolous old man, while jolly boy grows serious with age.

WOMAN RUNS A BANK

Sister of Jane Addams Heads Kansas Institution.

Located in Girard Twenty Years Ago and on the Death of Her Husband Became the Bank's President

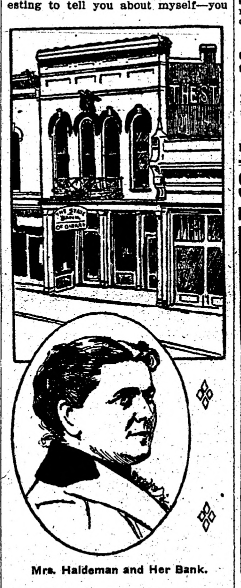
Girard, Kan.—The morning sunlight filtered through the little window in the back office of the State Bank of Girard, and the bars across the window cast a network of shadows on the floor. The woman who sat in the heavy office chair behind the desk was fifty-eight years old, but her face showed scarcely a wrinkle, and the white in her hair glinted now and then by way of proof that it once was gold. The woman was Mrs. S. Alice Haldeman, and she is the bank's president. Mrs. Haldeman has another claim to distinction, for she is the sister of Miss Jane Addams of Hull House, Chicago.

"Well, yes, I'm the president," she admitted to a visitor, "only I don't run the bank myself; we all run it together—the two men and I."

It was 20 years ago that Dr. and Mrs. Haldeman came to Girard. The physician's health was poor, and the move was made on this account from the home of their childhood in Illinois.

"My husband became interested in the banking business shortly after we came here," Mrs. Haldeman said, "and he founded a bank of his own. We are the oldest bank in the county and have weathered three panics.

"Dr. Haldeman died five years ago," she added, "and—and with the last words he ever spoke he asked me not to leave the bank. So I took charge, and I'm very glad that I did, for I love the work. But, pshaw, it's not interesting to tell you about myself—you just ought to know my sister, Jane, or my daughter, Marcet."



THE STATE BANK OF GIRARD

Mrs. Haldeman and Her Bank.

Although her name seldom is written in connection with that of her sister, Mrs. Haldeman has done a great deal of work at Hull House.

"I usually spend about three months of every year there," she said, "just to be with Jane and the girls she is helping through life; I have learned to love them all, and I look upon Hull House as my home. Home, that is, since my daughter has gone."

Mrs. Haldeman's daughter has been on the stage for several years. She won't play in any cast in which work must be done on Sunday, and wherever it is possible she goes to Sunday school and teaches a class.

"Do I find life here in Girard tedious? No, things move fast enough for me, with my club work and bank and letters and reading."

The walls of Mrs. Haldeman's house are lined with shelves and on these are crowded hundreds of books. Above the shelves are pictures, drawings and paintings; of these last there is a life-size oil painting of her sister, Jane. Marble busts are set on pedestals and the grand piano is littered with books of classical music.

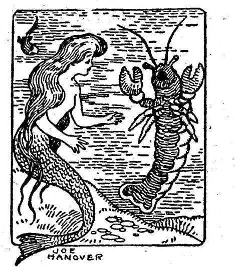
On the center table there was a book of photographs and Mrs. Haldeman leafed through it slowly while she talked. They were old pictures of the old days, most of them showing scenes of the Addams home at Cedarville, Ill.

At one of the pictures Mrs. Haldeman paused.

"That's the old mill at home," she said, and added after a moment, "Jane and I used to play hide-and-go-seek in that musty old place. Jane was the greatest little bunch of enthusiasm you ever saw, and she always was asking people to forgive her for the naughty things she fancied she had done."

And as she turned the pages of the book and saw once more the faces and scenes of the past her eyes became moist.

COMES NATURAL.



Miss Mermaid—They say the mackerel is a terrible drinker.

Mr. Lobster—He can't help it. Those salt fish are always thirsty.

Mule Was a Dead Shot.

A southern farmer was trying to sell a mule to a negro who two wears before had been kicked on the head by the animal, says the Popular Magazine.

"Of course," said the farmer, "this mule kicks, but—"

"I don't want him," objected the colored man, emphatically.

"Just because he kicks?" asked the farmer with an air of contempt.

"Humph!" grunted the negro. "Dat mule don't kick. He shoots."

Diphtheria, Quinsy and Tonsilitis begin with sore throat. How much better to cure a sore throat in a day or two than to be in bed for weeks with Diphtheria. Just keep Hamlins Wizard Oil in the house.

The man in trouble has as much right to believe that God will help him as he has to believe the sun will rise tomorrow.

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets cure constipation. Constipation is the cause of many diseases. Cure the cause and you cure the disease. Easy to take.

If it is safe to trust God in anything it is safe to trust him in everything.

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup for Children teething, softens the gums, reduces inflammation, allays pain, cures wind colic, 25c a bottle.

We show how much of the Bible we believe by the way we trust God.

Splendid Crops
In Saskatchewan (Western Canada)
800 Bushels from 20 acres of wheat was the thresher's return from a Lloydminster farm in the season of 1910. Many fields in that as well as other districts yielded from 25 to 35 bushels of wheat to the acre. Other grains in proportion.
160 ACRE FARMS IN WESTERN CANADA FREE
LARGE PROFITS are thus derived from the FREE HOMESTEAD LANDS of Western Canada.
This excellent showing causes prices to advance. Land values should double in two years' time. Grain growing, mixed farming, cattle raising and dairying are all profitable. Free Homesteads of 160 acres are to be had in the very best districts; 160 acre pre-emptions at $3.00 per acre within certain areas. Schools and churches in every settlement, climate unexcelled, soil the richest; wood, water and building material plentiful. 39
For particulars as to location, low settlers' railway rates and descriptive illustrated pamphlet, "Last Best West," and other information, write to Sup't of Immigration, Ottawa, Canada, or to Canadian Government Agent.
CHAS. PILLING
Clifford Block Grand Forks, N. Dak.
Please write to the agent nearest you

DRUG STORES (snaps) for sale and trade in all states. F.V. KNIEST, Omaha, Neb.

Fargo Directory

KODAKS and KODAK SUPPLIES
Write for catalogues and literature. We do developing and printing. Mail orders given prompt attention.
FARGO DRUG CO., FARGO, N. D.

Dakota Business College
LARGEST and FINEST between CHICAGO AND THE COAST.
FARGO, NORTH DAKOTA

STONE PIANO COMPANY
FARGO, N. D.
New Pianos $128.50 and up. Write for catalogs. Satisfaction guaranteed

We Furnish Positions To Graduates
A Beautiful Catalog Free
Aaker's Business Colleges
Fargo or Grand Forks
H. H. AAKER, Pres.

FARGO TANNERY
Receives hides and skins for tanning to harness leather, robes and coats. Robes lined, hides bought, leather and robes for sale. SEND FOR PRICE LIST.
Andrew Monson, Proprietor, Fargo Tannery
Fargo, North Dakota

SHIP YOUR HIDES, FURS & WOOL to BOLLES & ROGERS, Fargo, N. D.
If we get your goods, you get the money.
HAVE YOUR BANKER LOOK US UP

BUILDERS MATERIAL CO.
FARGO, NORTH DAKOTA
Face Brick, Hollow Block, Hollow Face Tile. Fire Places and Fixtures. Wall Ties, Mortor Color, Metal Lath, Fire Brick, Water Proofings, Prepared Roofings, Ideal Ventilators, Cement Coatings, Asphalt.

A Pint of Unequaled Cough Syrup for 50c

The Quickest, Surest Cough Remedy You Ever Used, or Money Refunded—Stops Even Whooping Cough Quickly.

You may not need the $2 which a 50-cent bottle of Pinex saves you, but you do need the wonderful effectiveness of this famous cough remedy. It will usually stop the most obstinate deep-seated cough inside of 24 hours, and has no equal for whooping cough.

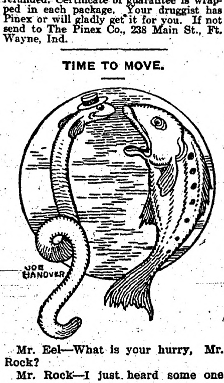
A 50-cent bottle of Pinex, mixed with home-made sugar syrup, gives you a full pint—a family supply of the most pleasant and effective cough remedy you ever used. Easily prepared in five minutes—directions in package.

The way this takes hold of a cough and gives instant relief, will make you regret that you never tried it before. Stimulates the appetite, is slightly laxative and tastes good—children take it willingly. It has a wonderful record in cases of incipient lung trouble and is splendid for croup, asthma, bronchitis, throat trouble, etc.

Pinex is a special and highly concentrated compound of Norway White Pine extract, rich in guaiacol and other natural healing pine elements. Simply mix with sugar syrup or strained honey, in a pint bottle, and it is ready for use. Used in more homes in the U. S. and Canada than any other cough remedy.

Pinex has often been imitated, but never successfully, for nothing else will produce the same results. The genuine is guaranteed to give absolute satisfaction or money refunded. Certificate of guarantee is wrapped in each package. Your druggist has Pinex or will gladly get it for you. If not send to The Pinex Co., 238 Main St., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

TIME TO MOVE.



Mr. Eel—What is your hurry, Mr. Rock?

Mr. Rock—I just heard some one up above say "Get the hook."

BABY'S ECZEMA AND BOILS

"My son was about three weeks old when I noticed a breaking-out on his cheeks, from which a watery substance oozed. A short time after, his arms, shoulders and breast broke out also, and in a few days became a solid scab. I became alarmed, and called our family physician who at once pronounced the disease eczema. The little fellow was under treatment for about three months. By the end of that time, he seemed no better. I became discouraged. I dropped the doctor's treatment, and commenced the use of Cuticura Soap and Ointment, and in a few days noticed a marked change. The eruption on his cheeks was almost healed, and his shoulders, arms and breast were decidedly better. When he was about seven months old, all trace of the eczema was gone.

"During his teething period, his head and face were broken out in boils which I cured with Cuticura Soap and Ointment. Surely he must have been a great sufferer. During the time of teething and from the time I dropped the doctor's treatment, I used the Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment, nothing else, and when two years old he was the picture of health. His complexion was soft and beautiful, and his head a mass of silky curls. I had been afraid that he would never be well, and I feel that I owe a great deal to the Cuticura Remedies." (Signed) Mrs. Mary W. Ramsey, 224 E. Jackson St., Colorado Springs, Col., Sept. 24, 1910. Although Cuticura Soap and Ointment are sold by druggists and dealers everywhere, a sample of each, with 32-page book, will be mailed free on application to "Cuticura," Dept. 5 L, Boston.

Bucolic Music.

Little Willie, being a city boy, had never seen a cow. While on a visit to his grandmother he walked out across the fields with his cousin John. A cow was grazing there, and Willie's curiosity was greatly excited.

"Oh, Cousin John, what is that?" he asked.

"Why, that is only a cow," John replied.

"And what are those things on her head?"

"Horns," answered John.

Before they had gone far the cow mooed long and loud.

Willie was astonished. Looking back, he demanded in a very fever of interest:

"Which horn did she blow?"—Everybody's Magazine.

Wednesday Mislaid.

A Broadway actor got carried away by the spirit of the times and remained carried away for several days. He came to himself in his own room without knowing exactly how he got there. A friend sat beside him.

"Hello," he said, as he opened his eyes, "what day is this?"

"This," said his friend, "is Thursday."

The invalid thought it over a minute.

"What became of Wednesday?" he asked.—Saturday Evening Post.

A minister can't win the poor by courting the rich.

REQUISITES FOR NEAT AND RAPID WORK AT KILLING TIME

Method of Farmer Who Thoroughly Understands the Business—It Is Necessary to Have Good Scraper, Sticking Knife, Hog Hook and Convenient Place to Labor in.

(By W. HANSON, Illinois.)

In order to do neat and rapid work at hog-killing time, it is necessary to have a good scraper, sticking knife, a hog hook and a place that is convenient for working.

For scalding, a barrel is commonly used, and it is all that is needed unless the hogs are very large. If very large hogs are killed, a scalding tub will answer the purpose for scalding much better than a barrel.

I have one which is made of two-inch planks for the sides and ends, and sheet iron for the bottom. It is six feet long and three and one-half feet wide, with a depth of two and one-half feet.

Two hooks are fastened near the top on one side, with a pair of trace chains to run under the hog, to facilitate the turning and withdrawing from the tub.

It is placed over a furnace, which is made by digging a trench in the ground, and when in use I place pieces of wood across the bottom, in order to keep the hog from coming in contact with the iron bottom and getting too hot.

I find that the proper temperature for good scalding is from 180 to 190 degrees, and if a barrel is to be used, the water should be boiling when dipped out of the kettle, as the barrel will cool it some.

If a scalding tub is used, the water should be cooled by adding a bucket of cold water before the hog is put in.

To insure a correct heat of the water, use a thermometer. Small quantities of lye, ashes or lime will have no effect in removing the hair, but will cause the scurf to come loose more readily.

A hog hook is almost indispensable, and if one is to be made it should be made in the form of a hay or bale hook. In fact, I find that a hay hook answers the purpose very well.

In handling the hog, stick the hook in the flesh of the lower jaw, just behind the fork of the jaw bone. However, the hook may be stuck under the tendons of the hind legs.

Keep the hog in constant motion while being scalded, and draw it out to air occasionally. When the hair and scurf slip easily from the body the scalding is completed.

In scraping and cleaning the hog, I clean the feet and head first, then the legs, and, last but not least, the body.

I hang the hog with a rope and pulley, as it is more easily hung in this way than any other. But it may be hung with the ordinary gambrel, a stick which is sharpened at each end and inserted under the tendon strings of the hind legs.

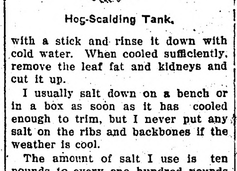
A short singletree will be found to answer for a gambrel-stick. If there is sufficient help at hand, the hog may be hung on a pole put up for the purpose.

After the hog is hung up, rinse it down with scalding water, remove the entrails by running a sharp knife lightly down, marking the belly straight, cutting to the bone between the thighs and in front of the ribs, which bones I split with an ax, being careful not to cut beyond them.

Open the abdomen, and after a little use of the knife one will seldom cut the entrails in removing them.

However, I have a few short strings at hand to use in case any of the entrails are cut.

After removing the entrails, liver and heart, spread the carcass apart with a stick and rinse it down with cold water. When cooled sufficiently, remove the leaf fat and kidneys and cut it up.



Hog-Scalding Tank.

I usually salt down on a bench or in a box as soon as it has cooled enough to trim, but I never put any salt on the ribs and backbones if the weather is cool.

The amount of salt I use is ten pounds to every one hundred pounds of meat. In addition to the salt, I also use two pounds of granulated sugar and two ounces of saltpetre mixed.

Rub the meat once every three days with one-third of the mixture. While it is curing pack it, in a box in a cool room, where it will neither become warm nor freeze.

Two barrels may be used, changing the meat from one to the other each time it is rubbed. After the last rubbing let the meat lie in a box for a week or ten days, then take it out to smoke. When taken out of the box dip each piece in a kettle of boiling water and let it remain half a minute, after which sprinkle a little powdered borax on the meat side, and hang.

Smoke it four or five days with hickory chips or corn cobs, then dip and sprinkle it with borax again, and put it down in clean hay.

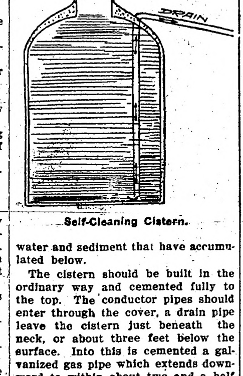
The hot water destroys any fly eggs that may have been deposited, and the borax prevents flies from depositing fresh ones.

Meat treated in this manner may be left hanging all summer and will remain in the best condition.

CISTERN THAT CLEANS ITSELF

Method Is Shown in Illustration That Carries Off Refuse Settling at the Bottom.

Cisterns are usually made of brick and cement mortar in the form of a jug. The water is let in at the top by conductors from the eve troughs of the roof of the house or barn. The soot, dust, leaves and other foreign matter on the roof and in the trough are washed into the cistern, writes Dr. J. A. Kirkland in the Wallace's Farmer. This settles to the bottom, making a heavy deposit of slime and filth, and the water, which is always drawn from the bottom by the pump, comes up dirty and foul smelling. If the cistern is built as the illustration represents, it will be automatic in cleaning, as it will overflow from the bottom, thus carrying out the stale water and sediment that have accumulated below.



Self-Cleaning Cistern.

The cistern should be built in the ordinary way and cemented fully to the top. The conductor pipes should enter through the cover, a drain pipe leave the cistern just beneath the neck, or about three feet below the surface. Into this is cemented a galvanized gas pipe which extends downward to within about two and a half inches of a depression in the bottom of the cistern.

It will readily be seen that as soon as the water rises above the drain, it will begin by force of gravity to flow from the bottom up through the galvanized tube and leave the cistern from the bottom, thus sucking out the foul water and sediment from below and leaving the clean, fresh water at the top. I invented this device and have had one of these cistern in operation for seventeen years. The water has always remained pure and sweet, and without any attention whatever to cleaning. There is no patent and the additional cost of this simple and sanitary device is about two and a half to three dollars.

GUARD AGAINST WASTE IN FEED

Farmer Must Systematize Feeding So That Good Roughage Is Not Refused by Cattle.

Feed has grown to be so high priced that wasting it seems like squandering gold; yet the careless feeder wastes an enormous amount of feed every winter when a little watchfulness and sound judgment would save it.

When stock are fed a tempting grain feed before or at the same time they are given their roughage ration they invariably become somewhat dainty as to what they eat, picking out but the very best of the roughage and rejecting all the rest.

When this habit is once formed stock will often go hungry rather than eat what has been picked over and which really is very good feed. Therefore, one must systematize his feeding in such manner as to guard against the habit being formed.

This should in no wise be constructed as meaning the feeding of foul or musty roughage, but at the same time we do advise one to feed so as to derive the greatest possible profits, consistent with the good health of the herd. For this reason we should feed the roughage before the grain or at a time when we know the stock to be hungry enough to eat all the roughage containing a certain amount of nourishment and we consider that the system saves us a great quantity of food supplies every season.

Best Draught Horse.

An experiment station says that the closer a draught horse is to the ground the better both for service and endurance.

GOOD ENGLISH DISHES

JOHN BULL'S COOKING OFFERS MUCH WORTH TRYING.

Beefsteak Pudding Is Dish That Would Go Well With the Growing Schoolboy or the Athlete—Potato Soup.

While the solid, savory platters beloved of our cousins over the sea combine badly with the dyspepsia-ridden stomachs that accompany American nervous systems, there are others for which our national cuisine would be much the better.

Even the heavier combinations, as of meat and pastry, would be useful at times if prepared as they are in the best English kitchens. The golfer, the baseball player and the growing school boy, for instance, would welcome English beefsteak, pudding and would have no cause to regret the solidity of it afterward.

This pudding requires a rich boiling, pastry made of five or six ounces of suet and half a pint of water or milk; or use one and a half pounds of flour, butter and water. Roll it out about a quarter of an inch thick and have the pudding dish well greased before lining it with the paste. The beefsteak must be good an tender. Cut it into slices about four inches long. Season these, flour them and roll tightly. Fill the pudding dish with them, leaving, however, enough space for the water which is to form the gravy.

Cover the tip with pastry, of course, and be careful to have the edges carefully secured.

It is steamed for four or five hours, and is served in the bowl, folded about with a napkin.

A variant of this dish is beefsteak and kidney pudding, a fine specimen of which requires two pounds of tender steak and two kidneys. Season the meats to your taste, using salt and black pepper.

Cut the steak into pieces about an inch square and cut the kidneys into eighths. Line the dish as above and fill with the meats.

Now pour on the water. Some cooks sprinkle in a little flour to thicken the gravy, but unless it is liked quite thick this is not necessary. Let the water come to within two inches of the rim of the bowl.

Moisten the edges of the crust, cover the top, press two crusts together that the gravy may be imprisoned safely and turn up the overhanging paste.

Wring out a cloth in hot water, flour it and tie up the pudding. Have the water boiling into which it goes, and boil steadily for four hours. If water must be added from time to time, this must be added from a boiling kettle also, as it is of the utmost importance not to reduce the temperature of the pudding.

When the cloth is finally removed cut a round piece in the top of the crust to prevent the pudding bursting, and send it to the table either with a napkin pinned around or in a second more ornamental dish.

Readers and admirers of Mrs. Brown will remember that if there was one dish more than another that "Brown" was "partial to" it was a "weal and 'am pie." Nor is Brown alone in this. His predilection for the said pastry dainty is shared by many Englishmen of hearty appetites.

Here is the rule for making it: A pound and a half of filet of veal cut into squares, a quarter-pound of lean ham also cut into small pieces, with a tablespoon or thereabout of butter. Cover with water in a deep pie dish and stew well. When it is tender add two hard-boiled eggs cut into slices, a small quantity of minced parsley and a suspicion of thyme. Cover the dish with thin pastry and bake.

English potato soup is both economical and savory. For it they boil marrow bones and strain off the stock. To this is added a plate of cut-up vegetables, consisting of the following mixture: Three onions cut fine, some potatoes sliced thin and one large carrot grated. Add seasoning as for any soup and simmer an hour or more. Strain and serve. Some add a stalk of celery and a bit of cooked lean ham to the original stock pot to give additional flavor.

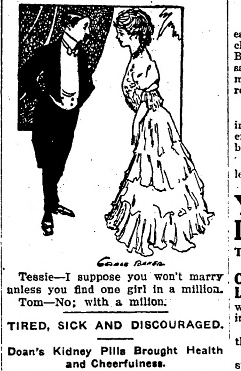
For a breakfast dish a l'Anglaise try breaded sausages. Wipe the saucissons very dry, dip in beaten egg and bread crumbs, put them in the frying basket and plunge into smoking hot fat. They require about ten minutes' cooking, the heat being reduced after the initial plunge. Serve with a garnish of little squares of toast and fresh sprays of watercress.

Veal cake is a good dish for an automobile excursion or a picnic. For this there are needed some slices of cold roast veal, some cold ham, two hard-boiled eggs, two tablespoonfuls of minced parsley, a little pepper, some good gravy or stock. Trim the veal carefully and cut the eggs into slices. Procure a pretty mold. Arrange the veal, ham, pasley and eggs in layers with a little seasoning between each layer. When the mold is full, fill up the shape with strong stock or gravy. Bake for half an hour, and when cold unmold.

Grandma's Doughnuts.

One cupful of sugar, one cupful of warm mashed potatoes, three cupfuls of flour, one-half cupful of milk, one egg, one teaspoonful of butter, one-fourth tespoonful of salt, three teaspoonfuls of baking powder, one-fourth teaspoonful of ginger, one teaspoonful of nutmeg; roll rather thin, cut, fry, then dust with powdered sugar.

A DIFFERENCE.



Tessie—I suppose you won't marry unless you find one girl in a million.

Tom—No; with a milion.

TIRED, SICK AND DISCOURAGED.

Doan's Kidney Pills Brought Health and Cheerfulness.

Mrs. J. P. Pemberton, 854 Lafayette St., Marshall, Mo., says: "For years I suffered with Bright's disease which doctors said was incurable. I grew so weak, I had to take to my bed. Kidney secretions were suppressed, I became terribly bloated, and finally reached the point where I took no interest in life. It was then I began using Doan's Kidney Pills and soon improved. Before long I was without a sign of the trouble that seemed to be carrying me to my grave."

"When Your Back Is Lame, Remember the Name—DOAN'S." 50c, all stores. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, N. Y.

Knowledge That Wasn't Printed.

Rep. McDermott of Chicago, who represents in congress a stock yards district, was discussing how he had been treated by the Democratic organization which appointed men to the various standing committees of the house.

"First," he said, "they wanted to put me on the committee on agriculture and I haven't an acre of cleared ground in my district. Then they tried to shove me into the committee on education, and I never went to school a day in my life."—Popular.

It Goes Off.

Dragging a gun through the fence seems to be almost as effective as rocking the boat.

Catarrh
One of the most common of blood diseases, is much aggravated by the sudden changes of weather at this time of year. Begin treatment at once with Hood's Sarsaparilla, which effects radical and permanent cures. This great medicine has received 40,366 Testimonials
in two years, which prove its wonderful efficacy in purifying and enriching the blood. Best for all blood diseases.
In usual liquid form or chocolated tablets known as Sarsatabs. 100 doses $1.

Your Liver Is Clogged Up
That's Why You're Tired—Out of Sorts—Have No Appetite.
CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS will put you right in a few days.
They do their duty.
Cure Constipation, Biliousness, Indigestion and Sick Headache
SMALL PILL, SMALL DOSE, SMALL PRICE.
Genuine must bear Signature
Brent Good
CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS.

KODAKS
The three following are the most popular and convenient sizes:
1A—Picture size 2½x4¼ Price $11.00 to $15.00
No. 3—Picture size 3¼x4¼ Price $11.50 to $22.50
3A—Picture size 3¼x5½ Price $20.00 to $25.00
"Brownie" Cameras $1 to $12. Excellent workmen in our finishing department insure best pictures from your films. Catalog furnished.
Peck Company 116 S. 5th Street MINNEAPOLIS

PISO'S
Best for COUGHS & COLDS

FOR ALL EYE DISEASES Pettit's Eye Salve

KEYSTONA FOR WALLS AND CEILINGS
GOES ON LIKE PAINT; LOOKS LIKE WALL PAPER; YOU CAN WASH IT
A beautiful illustrated book of 24 colors and Photographs for 2 cents. Send your name and address to the KEYSTONE VARNISH CO., Brooklyn, N.Y.

W. N. U., FARGO, NO. 48-1911.

Aids Nature
The great success of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery in curing weak stomachs, wasted bodies, weak lungs, and obstinate and lingering coughs, is based on the recognition of the fundamental truth that "Golden Medical Discovery" supplies Nature with body-building, tissue-repairing, muscle-making materials, in condensed and concentrated form. With this help Nature supplies the necessary strength to the stomach to digest food, build up the body and thereby throw off lingering obstinate coughs. The "Discovery" re-establishes the digestive and nutritive organs in sound health, purifies and enriches the blood, and nourishes the nerves—in short establishes sound vigorous health.
If your dealer offers something "just as good," it is probably better FOR HIM—it pays better. But you are thinking of the cure not the profit, so there's nothing "just as good" for you. Say so.
Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Adviser, In Plain English; or, Medicine Simplified, 1008 pages, over 700 illustrations, newly revised up-to-date Edition, paper-bound, sent for 21 one-cent stamps, to cover cost of mailing only. Cloth-bound, 31 stamps. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

Rayo Lamps and Lanterns
Scientifically constructed to give most light for the oil they burn.
Easy to light, clean and rewick.
In numerous finishes and styles, each the best of its kind.
Ask your dealer to show you his line of Rayo Lamps and Lanterns, or write for illustrated booklets direct to any agency of the
Standard Oil Company
(Incorporated)

W. L. DOUGLAS
$2.50, $3.00, $3.50 & $4.00 SHOES
All Styles, All Leathers, All Sizes and Widths, for Men and Women
THE STANDARD OF QUALITY
FOR OVER 30 YEARS
The workmanship which has made W. L. Douglas shoes famous the world over is maintained in every pair.
If I could take you into my large factories at Brockton, Mass., and show you how carefully W. L. Douglas shoes are made, you would then realize why I warrant them to hold their shape, fit and look better and wear longer than other makes for the price.
CAUTION The genuine have W. L. Douglas name and price stamped on bottom
Shoes Sent Everywhere—All Charges Prepaid.
How to Order by Mail.—If W. L. Douglas shoes are not sold in your town, send direct to factory. Take measurements of foot as shown in model; state style desired; size and width usually worn; plain or cap toe; heavy, medium or light sole. I do the largest shoe mail order business in the world.
Illustrated Catalog Free.
W. L. DOUGLAS,
145 Spark St., Brockton, Mass.
ONE PAIR of my BOYS' $2, $2.50 or $3.00 SHOES will positively outwear TWO PAIRS of ordinary boys' shoes
Fast Color Eyelets Used Exclusively.

PERFECTION SMOKELESS OIL HEATER
Always ready for use. Safest and most reliable.
The Perfection Smokeless Oil Heater is just like a portable fireplace.
It gives quick, glowing heat wherever, whenever, you want it.
A necessity in fall and spring, when it is not cold enough for the furnace. Invaluable as an auxiliary heater in midwinter.
Drums of blue enamel or plain steel, with nickel trimmings.
Ask your dealer to show you a Perfection Smokeless Oil Heater, or write to any agency of
Standard Oil Company
(Incorporated)

Defective Page

NOTES from MEADOWBROOK FARM

By William Pitt

The colt needs exercise.

Divide the hog pastures.

Have a sharp steel cutter on the plow.

Rich buttermilk means a poor butter yield.

Provide some succulent food for ewes in winter.

Thorough and constant spraying is the price of good fruit.

After pruning clean up and have some bonfires right away.

It has never seemed advisable to sow alfalfa in the fall with rye.

Provide the tomatoes with a support of some kind—trellis or stakes.

A little pig loves sunshine and needs it almost as much as he needs food.

Better sires, better cows, better care and more prosperity is the inevitable result.

The gospel of clean milk is not a strainer gospel, but a gospel of prevention.

Sows are always in better condition to raise fall pigs than they are in the spring.

Wash all parts of separator at end of separation and scald, leaving in the open air to dry.

In keeping cows never be without clover. It is one of the foods essential to good dairying.

In preparing either walnuts or butternuts for planting, the shucks should be left on over winter.

The late hatched chickens should have a grass run to themselves and be given extra feed and care.

A chill brought on by the udder coming in contact with the frosty ground may ruin your best cow.

The individuality of each horse should be studied, and the feeds supplied to meet individual requirements.

Don't let the buck run with the does when the breeding season is over, but confine him in a pen by himself.

Are there any old apple trees in your orchard, bearing desirable fruit? Easy to graft good varieties upon them.

With good fence wire as cheap as it is today it is an easy matter to divide up the hog pasture into convenient lots.

All ewe lambs that are not desirable to raise as breeders should be given extra feed and sent back to the block early.

Systematic training is of value in handling young colts; teach them one thing at a time, have them learn that one thing thoroughly.

Cold, exposed sleeping quarters that compel the sows to pile up in order to keep warm are usually responsible for the dead pigs at this time.

Fruit trees should be planted in regular rows in the orchard, or fruit garden, so thorough culture can be given both ways of the orchard.

Give the ewes the best possible chance to get them in high condition before breeding time. It means more and stronger and thriftier lambs.

Maple and ash posts will last about three or four years; excepting the very best quality of yellow ash, and it is too dear to be used as fence posts.

Mighty easy to feed new corn to the hogs, stalks and all, but you will find that if the corn is first run through the shredder the animals will eat it up clean.

Shocked corn accustoms cattle to the taste of ear corn, but compels them to eat so much roughage in connection that there is very little danger of over-eating.

When a farmer thinks of buying a dairy bull to improve his herd, he should look to the individuality of the bull, also the backing, not the "cheapness of the price."

If a pig is grown right and fed right there is no time in the life of a pig when he will make any more pork than between 8 weeks and 3 months in proportion to feed consumed.

Sell the poor cow.

Ewes need succulent feed.

The fall colt is nearly clear gain.

Fattening cattle should have plenty of salt.

Frost-bitten grass has no food value to speak of.

Both oats and barley are good feeds for young pigs.

See that the coops and henhouse is free from lice and mites.

Well cured ensilage corresponds with the nature of the cow.

The chief characteristics of the roadster are speed and stamina.

Horses that have a light hay diet are soldem affected with heaves.

Cleanliness and fresh air will usually prevent epidemics of any kind.

Testing is the only method by which we can cut out the robbers in the herd.

The brown leghorn or the houdan feather quickly and soon reach maturity.

The colts and unused horses should spend most of each pleasant day in the paddock.

Have no hesitation in disposing of the unprofitable cows. They are a mistake.

Sheep do not drink much water, but what little they drink must be absolutely clean.

Corn fodder that is shredded or split, and ground fine, makes a very satisfactory feed.

Have an orchard book and keep a record of the trees planted and also the variety of fruit.

Free range for hogs does not mean that they should be allowed to run over our neighbor's farm.

The late hatching eggs from some of the small quick-growing breeds can be raised at the least cost.

Do not sell all the best. If anyone is entitled to the best fruit produced on the farm, it is the family.

Pumpkins are a valuable succulence for cows, holding much the same place in the ration as silage and roots.

If you think of setting out an orchard and have had no experience, better hire a good man to show you how.

The practice of turning the cows on rye and winter barley that is sown for early spring feed is not a good practice.

The cream should always be strained into the churn through a fine wire sieve or a dipper, with a perforated tin bottom.

Well-bred heifer calves may often be purchased cheaply of people who live in town and keep but one cow for family use.

Ensilage is not considered good for sheep, and if it is fed at all it should be fed very sparingly and at intervals of two or three days.

Each cow's udder should be thoroughly cleansed before milking and the hands of the milker should be absolutely clean and dry.

Clean sound oats make an excellent ration for the pigs. If this is fed to them regularly during the fattening period the pork will be superior.

Stone fruits, such as peaches, apricots, plums and nectarines, should be planted the latter part of March, before the buds commence to swell.

Farmers who undertake to grow in any section of the country what nature does not intend them to grow soon find it out, and usually by hard experience.

It pays to have the farm fenced hog tight and cross fenced into small fields and to have plenty of yards to keep hogs of different sizes and ages separated.

If a yearling ram is used watch him when first admitted to the flock. Sometimes they are not breeders. It is well to look after the old ones too. They sometimes quit.

The horse population of the world is estimated at more than 111,000,000, of which about 43,000,000 are in Europe, 28,000,000 in North America and 11,000,000 in Asia.

Plow up your old, worn-out orchard this fall and put some manure, compost, ashes and bones in the trenches. You'll be surprised next year at the quick response of your trees.

A daily record should be kept of each cow in the stable. In a year's time a dairyman will then know by practical demonstration what cows are paying him, and those that are not.

Pumpkins will freeze if you don't watch out, and frozen pumpkins are of no good to anything. Good, ripe, sound pumpkins are enjoyed by the cows, and help the milk flow very much.

THE KITCHEN CABINET

FOOLS discover that frailty is not compatible with great men; they wonder and despise; but the discerning find that greatness is not incompatible with frailty, and they admire and indulge.

—Edward Bulwer Lytton.

WAYS OF SERVING POTATOES.

There are several hundred ways of serving the pomme de terre so that we need not fear monotony in serving this common vegetable.

Have ready a quart of cold, cooked potatoes chopped to the size of small beans, a half a cup of tomato sifted and reduced to a thick pulp, one large green pepper freed from seeds and minced fine, one small onion minced, three tablespoonfuls of fat in which the onion and pepper is cooked until soft; then add the potato and tomato with salt and pepper to taste. Cook until dry and serve with fish or cold meat.

Hashed Brown Potatoes.—Chop cold cooked potatoes rather fine, dust with salt and pepper. For each pint of potatoes have two tablespoonfuls of butter melted in a hot frying pan; spread the potatoes evenly and shake them over the fire until brown. Add a half cup of thin cream and let stand without stirring until the cream is absorbed. Roll like omelet and serve on a hot platter, garnish with sprigs of parsley. A soup that is very delicious and nourishing is made from potatoes.

Cream of Potato Soup.—Pare and cook until tender four medium-sized potatoes, mash and add to the following ingredients: To a quart of milk add a slice of onion, a stalk of celery and a sprig of parsley, or only the onion may be used as a flavor. When scalding hot remove the onion and add two tablespoonfuls of butter and two of flour that have been cooked together; strain and add the potato. Serve very hot. For extra occasions a beaten egg added just before serving adds much to the quality of the soup.

Potatoes Baked With Cheese.—Put a layer of cold cooked potatoes in a buttered baking dish, sprinkle with a generous layer of grated cheese; add more potatoes and a cupful of white sauce made with two tablespoonfuls of butter and two of flour cooked until smooth, then add a cup of milk. Cook in a hot oven until the cheese is melted.

NO MAN or woman of the humblest sort can really be strong, gentle, pure and good without the world being better for it, without somebody being helped and comforted by the very existence of that goodness.

—Phillips Brooks.

CHRISTMAS CANDIES.

A most delicious fruit candy that will keep for weeks is called Turkish Sweets.—Take a pound each of dates, figs and walnut meats and put through the meat chopper. Mix well with powdered sugar and a little lemon juice enough to make a paste. Roll out and cut in any desired form or pack in glasses and cover with paraffin paper. This makes a delectable filling for sandwiches or it may be used dipped in fondant or chocolate for choice bon-bons.

Chocolate Caramels.—Put two and a half tablespoonfuls of butter into a kettle and when melted add two cups of molasses, a cup of sugar and a third of a cup of milk. Stir until the sugar is dissolved and when the boiling point is reached add three squares of chocolate, stirring constantly until the chocolate is melted. Boil until when tried in cold water a firm ball is formed. Add a teaspoonful of vanilla just as it is taken from the fire.

Wintergreen and peppermint wafers may be made by flavoring and coloring fondant and melting it over hot water so it may be dropped in small teaspoonfuls on waxed paper.

Chicago Nuggets.—Boil together until the soft ball stage a cup of brown and a cup of white sugar and a half cup of water, stir in a half teaspoon of soda, a teaspoon of vanilla and pour over the well beaten white of an egg. Beat until it holds its shape when dropped on a buttered sheet, add a half cup of nut meats and drop by teaspoonfuls on a buttered sheet.

WE STARVE each other for love's caress;
We take, but we do not give;
It sems so easy some soul to bless,
But we dole the love grudgingly, less and less,
'Till 'tis bitter and hard to live.

—Andrew Lang.

THE WINTER BERRY.

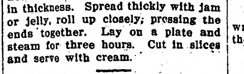
In cooking cranberries it is well to remember that they should never be put into a tin dish. Either agate or porcelain dishes should be used.

Cranberry Conserve.—Extract the juice from an orange, then cover the peeling with cold water and cook slowly until tender. Scrape out the white, bitter part and cut the peel into narrow strips with the scissors. Simmer one and a half cups of raisins until tender; add the orange peel and the juice and a quart of cranberries. If needed, add more water to make a cupful of liquid. Cover and cook for ten minutes or until the berries are done. Then add two cups of sugar and simmer until thick.

Cranberry Trifle.—Cook a quart of berries with one pint of water until the berries pop open; rub through a sieve, return to the fire and add one pound of sugar. Stir until it is dissolved, then let boil two minutes; cool and beat until light with a wire egg beater, then fold in the stiffly beaten whites of two eggs. Pile in a glass dish and serve. Cranberry shortcake and cranberry pie are old favorites for desserts.

Baked Apples With Cranberries.—Select large, perfect, sweet apples, remove the cores and fill the cavities with thick cranberry jelly. Set the apples in a pan of water in the oven, and bake until the apples are done. Put each apple in a glass sauce dish and serve with whipped cream.

Cranberry Roll.—Cream two tablespoonfuls of butter, add a cup of sugar, a half cup of cold water and two cups of flour sifted with a tablespoonful of baking powder and a dash of nutmeg. Beat until perfectly smooth, then add another cup of flour and roll out the dough to an inch in thickness. Spread thickly with jam or jelly, roll up closely, pressing the ends together. Lay on a plate and steam for three hours. Cut in slices and serve with cream.



I PRAY you with all earnestness to prove, and know within your hearts, that all things lovely and righteous are possible for those who believe in their possibility, and who determine that for their part, they will make every day's work contribute to them.

—Ruskin.

SOME COMMON DISHES.

The common vegetables are so often served in the same old ways until we grow tired of the monotony. Let us try:

Cabbage Baked With Cheese.—Chop the cabbage and cook it in boiling salted water for half an hour or until tender; put it in layers in a baking dish, alternating with a white sauce and grated cheese, and bake just long enough to melt the cheese.

Turnip and White Sauce.—Wash and slice the turnips into half-inch slices, pare and cut the slices into cubes; cook in boiling salted water until tender. Make a cup of seasoned white sauce and when the turnips are done pour off the water, turn into a vegetable dish and pour the sauce over them.

Cottage Pie.—Chop cold meat to half fill a baking dish. Over the top of the meat spread mashed potato that has been warmed with a little hot milk. Mix with gravy, season to taste and put into a hot oven to thoroughly heat through.

Sour Milk Gingerbread.—Take a half a cup of molasses, one-half cup of sugar, two teaspoonfuls of shortening, one cup of sour milk, one tablespoonful of ginger, half a teaspoon of salt, one teaspoon of soda, and two cups of flour.

Cream the shortening, add the sugar, molasses, salt and ginger. Dissolve the soda in the milk, which is now added, and lastly the flour. Beat well and bake in a flat loaf thirty to forty minutes.

Carrots in Lemon Butter.—Cut the carrots in long, slender strips and lay in cold water to crisp. Cook in boiling water until tender enough to pierce with a fork. Drain, and to each pint allow a tablespoonful of butter, half a teaspoon of salt, half a teaspoon of sugar, and a dust of cayenne. Simmer until the butter is absorbed, then add two tablespoonfuls of lemon juice and a tablespoon of minced parsley. Boil up and serve at once.

Nellie Maxwell.

The Candy Habit.

Had Dr. Hopewell-Smith his way he would absolutely prohibit the eating of sweets between meals. He went so far in his address before the British Medical association as to say they should be rigidly tabooed by the young.

Admitting that sweets had their use, he emphasized the need of moderation. The abuse of sweets, like that of alcohol, tea, etc., was very widespread. They should be rigidly tabooed by the young and parents should not allow their children to eat any and every kind of confectionery. Sweet factories should be under rigid state control and all confectioners' shops and their wares should be subject to examination by government inspectors. Only absolutely pure sweets should be sold and those under the most hygienic conditions possible.

The average woman isn't satisfied unless her husband quits loving her long enough to make love to her occasionally.

A Vagabond Dreamer

* * *

By DOROTHY DOUGLAS

(Copyright, 1911, by Associated Literary Press.)

"You are trespassing on my property!" came a voice from the moonlight.

Blair scrutinized the clump of bushes. He had supposed the white thing flitting about there to be a slim beam from the moon.

"But the gardeners never come down here and uncle is away, so it is all right." The voice was nearer to Blair than before.

He shaded his eyes and looked more closely. A low ripple of laughter accompanied his search.

"Here I am." She had parted the bushes and still Blair felt that a wedge of moonbeam had squeezed down through the trees. He stared at her with his hand shading his eyes.

"I can't see whether or not I like your eyes," she said half petulantly.

Blair obediently dropped his hand and turned toward the light that came from the small door of his caravan. The dreamer's look was in his eyes and the dreamer's whimsical smile on his lips.

Molly looked at him with grave eyes for a moment. "What are you doing here?" she asked, edging nearer to him.

"Looking for fairies—like you," he said in the tone of one speaking to a child.

"I am eighteen." She resented his tone. "And then what do you do?"

"I weave them into fairy tales."

"I suppose that you mean you are a writer and that your name is in all the big magazines?"

"About that," he smiled.

"Couldn't I just have one peep into your caravan?" she asked. "It looks so cozy."

"It is cozy." He was amused at her quaint curiosity. "I will have to lift you up on the step."

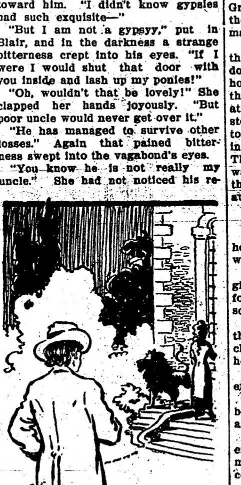
"Isn't it darling!" She turned toward him. "I didn't know gypsies had such exquisite—"

"But I am not a gypsyy," put in Blair, and in the darkness a strange bitterness crept into his eyes. "If I were I would shut that door with you inside and lash up my ponies!"

"Oh, wouldn't that be lovely!" She clapped her hands joyously. "But poor uncle would never get over it."

"He has managed to survive other losses." Again that pained bitterness swept into the vagabond's eyes.

"You know he is not really my uncle." She had not noticed his remark. "I have lived here only five years. I'm adopted and Uncle Gray is going to give me all his money," she confided naively.



Blair Watched Her Go.

"So I understand," Blair said.

"You have heard of me?" Molly's eyes opened wide.

"I have heard of the protege of John Gray—yes. But I had not known she was so—grown up," he finished lamely.

"Well—beautiful then." He looked deep into his eyes.

She returned the look wonderingly.

"Oh, oh—I feel such a funny little thrill inside—here!" She clasped both hands over her breast; and stood gazing at him.

Blair turned swiftly away from the innocent awakening in her eyes.

"Perhaps you had better come down from my caravan." His own voice was a trifle husky. "Or I will be tempted to become a gypsy and run off with you."

"But I don't want to come down. I feel happy—I want to sing—and dance—and—" She broke off abruptly and that wondering look swept Blair's own.

Blair was silent for a moment while he struggled against the tumult in his heart. This witch had breathed on hidden chords; he felt strangely unaccountable for his actions, his words.

"You are tired," he said finally, "and little girls should be in bed at this time of night. Come!"

But Molly Ashwell stood still and looked down at the arms extended to lift her from the step, then her eyes traveled up to the face on which the light shone full.

"Do you know," she stated, "that you look very much like Uncle Gray?"

Blair turned swiftly from the glare of the lamp. "Come!" he said, and his voice held a note of command.

With a little hurt look in her eyes Molly put out her hands. For a breathing spell the universe seemed hung in midair. Molly tore herself free then and fled in the darkness.

Blair watched her go, a moonbeam darting from path to path and finally into the old rose garden and up the great stone steps between the guarding lions and out of his sight through the French windows.

For a long moment he sat staring at the windows through which she had gone. Finally he arose, untethered his horses, hitched them to the caravan and drove off into the night.

"She is too wonderful," his lips repeated. "I could not withstand her long."

Three years came and went before Molly Ashwell and the Vagabond Dreamer met, three years in which her eyes had worn a pecular, brooding look—a look which John Gray had tried in vain to fathom or to lighten.

"You are not so happy looking yourself," she had chided him on one occasion.

He had grown a shade paler.

"I have cause—a terrible cause for being miserable—but I deserve it," was all he had said.

She glanced quickly at him now as they sat in the theater. The curtain went up on a new play. The scene was an interior.

"It is almost exactly like our drawing room!" exclaimed Molly breathlessly and waited for confirmation of her words.

John Gray neither answered nor seemed conscious of her presence.

As the play progressed Molly felt the peculiar tension that held John Gray. After a spasmodic clutch of the hands on the chair arms he remained as one turned to stone.

The play was the old, old story of the son who had frequented the stage doors and had been turned away from home by an irate parent. In this case the son had lived in the theatrical atmosphere merely as a stepping stone. He had run away from home to go on the stage that he might gain intimate knowledge of stagecraft. The strong plot woven in this fabric was neither here nor there except that at the close of the last act the author was called forth.

He came from the wings.

"My son!"

John Gray sprang to his feet and held out a pair of shaking arms toward the man on the stage.

"My Vagabond Dreamer!" came a girl's voice through the hush that followed the meeting of father and son.

Regardless of the excited audience, the two men met and the older man clasped the other in his arms as if he was still a very small boy.

A suspended breath held the audience.

Finally the quiet tones of the vagabond went out to answer that unasked question.

"My father and I have been long estranged—I am too happy to say more, except that I thank you for receiving my play so kindly."

During the thunder of applause that followed a slim little figure slipped quickly out of the theater and into the great limousine that crept up to the curb at her call.

Her heart was beating painfully in dull, miserable beats.

"Nobody loves me," she wept softly into the kindly cushions.

She sat huddled and broken, neither seeing nor hearing the excited crowd that came forth from the theater.

It seemed ages before the two men, arm in arm appeared. Molly dried her eyes hastily and peered out as they approached.

The younger man glanced at the car. Then Molly saw his hand go up to shade his eyes. He made a quick movement.

She was very near him and the limousine had turned into a darkened street when next she heard his voice.

"Mine! All mine," he whispered against her lips.

"Can we go in the caravan?" Molly asked by way of answer to his question of a moment later.

When the Worm Turned.

He was quite evidently from the country, and he was also quite evidently a Yankee, and from behind his bowed spectacles he peered inquisitively at the little Jew who occupied the other half of the car seat with him.

The little Jew looked at him deprecatingly. "Nice day," he began politely.

"You're a Jew, ain't you?" queried the Yankee.

"Yes, sir; I'm a clothing salesman—"

"But you're a Jew?"

"Yes, yes, I'm a Jew," came the answer.

"Well," continued the Yankee, "I'm a Yankee, and in the little village in Maine, where I come from, I'm proud to say there ain't a Jew."

"Dot's wy it's a willage," replied the little Jew quietly.—Detroit Journal.

Certainly Not.

"Her only adjective is 'cute.'"

"Oh, well, even at that, she isn't half as tiresome as the man whose only adjective is 'classy.'"

MINNESOTA HISTORICAL SOCIETY.

THE NORTHERN LIGHT

VOL. I. HOLT, MARSHALL COUNTY, MINNESOTA, FRIDAY, DECEMBER 8, 1911 NO. 18.

M'NAMARAS MAKE FULL CONFESSION

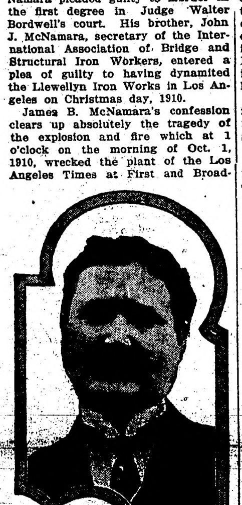
JAMES B. McNAMARA ADMITS CAUSING THE TIMES EXPLOSION THAT KILLED TWENTY-ONE.

LONG TERMS IN PRISON

John J. Confesses Implication in the Blowing Up of the Llewellyn Iron Works, Also in Los Angeles, in Which Outrage No Fatalities Occurred.

Los Angeles, Calif. — James B. McNamara pleaded guilty to murder in the first degree in Judge Walter Bordwell's court. His brother, John J. McNamara, secretary of the International Association of Bridge and Structural Iron Workers, entered a plea of guilty to having dynamited the Llewellyn Iron Works in Los Angeles on Christmas day, 1910.

James B. McNamara's confession clears up absolutely the tragedy of the explosion and fire which at 1 o'clock on the morning of Oct. 1, 1910, wrecked the plant of the Los Angeles Times at First and Broadway and caused the death of 21 persons. For nineteen of these deaths the McNamara brothers were indicted.



J. B. McNamara was on trial specifically for the murder of Charles J. Haggerty, a machinist whose body was found nearer than that of any other to the spot where the dynamite was supposed to have been placed.

To Be Sentenced Dec. 5.

It is expected District Attorney John D. Fredericks will ask for life imprisonment for James B. McNamara, the confessed murderer, and probably fourteen years for his brother. The men's lives are considered saved. The great contention that the Los Angeles Times was not dynamited is dead beyond resurrection or argument.

"He was counselled to confess because that was the best thing he could do, in the opinion of counsel," said Attorney Clarence S. Darrow, chief counsel. "I will say now that there was no other reason or motive in it. I've studied this case for months. It presented a stone wall."

Darrow's statement was made as looking squarely in the faces of the charges that the recent arrest of Burt H. Franklin, an investigator employed by the defense, and two others with him, might have precipitated a situation untenable save by confession of the prisoner.

Darrow also denied that external pressure was exerted from union labor socialist sources as General Harrison Gray Otis charged in a formal statement, or that the municipal election to be held next Tuesday in which Job Harriman, one of the defense's counsel, is candidate for mayor, carried any weight. It was learned that Harriman was not consulted at all in the deliberations.

A brotherly affection bordering on worship, it became known, brought about James McNamara's confession. A desire to save his brother from the necessity of confessing anything at all held back day after day the word that would end the trial.

Courtroom Packed.

At the afternoon session the courtroom was packed, many attaches of Fredericks' office being present.

Two floors above the court room, a few minutes after adjournment, the office of the district attorney was alive with a throng of people—friends of the prosecution, newspaper men and photographers. The district attorney threw wide the doors and they trailed in. Exhibits of all kinds in connection with the case were conspicuous and the very steel beam upon which James B. McNamara was shown to have placed the dynamite bomb that wrecked the Times was exhibited to visitors.

Scene in Courtroom.

Seated with District Attorney Fredericks was his entire staff. Facing him was Clarence S. Darrow and three associate counsel for the defendants.

"The people versus McNamara," remarked the court, and Attorney Le Compte Davis of the defense arose.

"Your honor," he declared, "the defendant is in court. In this case, people vs. McNamara, that is now on trial, may it please the court, after a long consideration of the matter and final consultation between counsel for the defendant, we have concluded to withdraw the plea of not guilty and have the defendant enter in this case a plea of guilty and we intend to pursue the like course with reference to J. L. McNamara in the case of the people against him wherein he is charged with having destroyed the Llewellyn Iron Works or with having placed dynamite at the Llewellyn Iron Works."

Mr. Fredericks—"To this indictment charging you with the crime of murder, do you plead guilty or not guilty?"

The Defendant—"Guilty."

Mr. Fredericks—"J. J. McNamara, you have heretofore been arraigned on indictment No. 6953 in which you are charged with the crime of exploding or attempting to explode dynamite, nitro-glycerine, etc., in the buildings or near the buildings adjacent to the Llewellyn Iron Works. You have been arraigned on that indictment and entered your plea of not guilty. Do you now want to plead guilty or not guilty?"

The Defendant—"Guilty."

Ortie E. McManigal, the confessed dynamiter whose admissions are said to have been a big factor in the McNamaras pleading guilty, will go virtually free, if the plans of the state in his behalf do not go wrong.

Death Penalty Demanded.

St. Joseph, Mo.—At a meeting of the central labor council of St. Joseph, representing nearly all the labor unions of the city, resolutions were adopted unanimously demanding the death penalty for the McNamaras. Indignation is at a high pitch among the union men on account of the affair.

The chief crime charged against the McNamaras and the one which finally led to their undoing was the destruction of the Los Angeles Times building. Organized labor opposed this paper because of its successful fight against the unions. There was much talk of a "gas explosion" at the time, and Socialist and labor union papers discussed the theory seriously, but men on the inside invariably smiled when they attributed the destruction of the Times to gas.

Shortly after the big presses in the basement had commenced rumbling on the morning of October 1, 1910, the Los Angeles Times building, which was one of the landmarks of the southern California metropolis, was destroyed by an explosion which startled the city. Twenty-one lives were lost. The property loss was estimated at $500,000.

Twenty minutes after the explosion which shattered windows and broke glass in houses many blocks away, the seven-story brick and stone building was a mass of ruins, under which the score of victims lay, with the angry flames licking up every bit of inflammable material in sight, including several carloads of print paper stored in the basement. It was believed the explosion together with two other unsuccessful attempts, by which it was sought to destroy the homes of the owner of the Times, General Harrison Gray Otis, and Harry Zechandelaar, secretary of the Merchants' and Manufacturers' association, was the result of a conspiracy of certain union labor leaders who were known to be antagonistic to the Times and the merchants' organization.

For many years General Otis has been waging a relentless warfare against labor unions, commencing with his fight against the International Typographical union. He had enlisted the support of the Merchants and Manufacturers' association, a powerful and influential body of Los Angeles business men, who stood by the Times publisher in its campaign against organized labor.

Feeling Very Bitter.

The feeling between the labor organizations and the Times was extremely bitter. General Otis openly and strongly attacked unionism on every possible occasion, and the unionists were equally bold in denouncing him and his allied forces. On several occasions the newspaper publisher's life has been threatened by men whom he had fought through the columns of his paper.

A disavowal of labor union responsibility was also made by the strike committee of the metal trades unions, which had then been on strike for several months, and which had been attacked in the columns of the Times. Between these organizations and the Times existed a feeling of intense bitterness. The state of California added $10,000 to the reward offered for the capture of the dynamiters, and the Los Angeles city council, at the urgent request of Mayor George Alexander, offered an additional reward of $25,000.

General Otis had long been anticipating this very thing in his warfare with the labor unions, by maintaining a fully equipped auxiliary plant in duplicate in another part of the city, of which few people knew. By this means the Times was enabled to get out its regular editions within 48 hours after the explosion.

The arrests marked the end of one of the most thrilling criminal hunts ever recorded. Many times detectives knew in advance that certain explosions were to take place and dared not prevent them lest they warn the quarry of their presence. For six months, during which more than a dozen bomb outrages were staged by the "wrecking crew," its members are said never to have been out of sight of a detective. All this time the men were being sought by regular police in the cities in which they were operating, but never once, despite the omnipresence of posters describing their appearance accurately, were they molested by the authorities.

A few weeks before the Times building was destroyed an attempt was made to blow up a bridge at Peoria, Ill. This was in the latter part of September, 1910. An error had been made in the adjustment of the machine and it failed to explode. It was found by a watchman and turned over to detectives employed by the Erectors' association—the national body of open-shop contractors, against whom the hand of the "wrecking crew" had been turned.

The contractors who had been forced to stand helpless while a property loss running over $5,000,000 had been inflicted upon them, saw in the infernal machine their first clew, and soon a swarm of detectives went to work in Peoria. Some worked into the confidence of labor men and learned, it is said, that a Chicago man had "done the job."

Comparison of the machine found at Peoria and those picked up at Los Angeles convinced the detectives the dynamitings had been planned by the same person and carried out by his agent or agents. William J. Burns, head of the Burns Agency and the man who exposed the San Francisco graft ring, chanced to be in Los Angeles at the time of the explosion and was called into conference with Mayor Alexander, the chief of police, other city officials and representatives of the Merchants' and Manufacturers' association.

He was offered a reward from the state, city and private interests which now totals $100,000, in the event that he undertook the case and his men ran down the criminals.

Going back to the peoria plot, he traced McManigal to his Chicago home, and then placed a special squad of shadows on McManigal's trail.

A connection was soon established between McManigal and the McNamaras, and their connection with a number of additional dynamite cases established. Events came rapidly to a head, James B. McNamara and McManigal being arrested at Detroit on April 12, 1911, and his brother ten days later at Indianapolis. The latter was taken from an executive meeting of the Iron Workers' union, of which he was international secretary, and a search of the union headquarters revealed a mine of dynamite, bombs, etc., ready for use. The men were taken to Los Angeles, where they have since been in jail.

McManigal's confession and corroborative evidence connected the brothers with a series of over one hundred dynamite outrages, extending from May 31, 1906, until April 5.

GOV. MARSHALL RELIEVED.

Confession Ends Alleged Kidnapping Case.

Indianapolis, Ind. — Gov. Thomas R. Marshall received the confessions of the McNamara brothers as relieving him from charges that he aided in the so-called kidnapping of John J. McNamara. Governor Marshall said: "At all times I have had the consciousness that I did my full duty with respect to McNamara. He has pleaded guilty to the crime charged in the requisition upon which I issued the warrant."

Chicago Wants National Convention.

Chicago, Illinois. — Chicago will be satisfied with one national convention in 1912. A citizens' committee had been after both the Republican and the Democratic national conventions, but decided that the $200,000 necessary to bring here the Republican gathering would be all that could be raised.

Rebels Blow Up Nanking Magazine.

Washington, D. C. — The Chinese rebels captured and blew up the imperial magazine at Nanking, following a battle in which many Manchus were slain, according to the navy department advices.

CONGRESS OPENS

LEADERS PREDICT THAT IT WILL BE BUSY AND INTERESTING.

POLITICS AND LAWS MIX

Proceedings May Make and Unmake Presidential Candidates—Trusts and Tariff Occupy Chief Place.

By GEORGE CLINTON.

Washington, D. C.—Congress has started once more to travel the path of a busy and interesting regular session.

The two words "busy" and "interesting" as a forecast of the proceedings are used on high authority. In the rush of the opening the comment of the leaders was brief.

It will be an interesting session.—Senator La Follette.

It will be a busy session.—Speaker Clark.

The lower house of congress today, for the first time in many years at a regular session, is in control of the Democrats. It may not be necessary to remind the country that the last session was a special one convened by the call of the president, and that its time was given up largely to the discussion of two subjects, the tariff and reciprocity, subjects so nearly akin as to be almost one flesh.

House and senate claimed the presence of nearly full membership when Speaker Clark and Vice-President Sherman gave the authoritative thumps of the gavel, and the authoritative words that consideration of legislation was in order.

This Session Is Critical.

The galleries were filled with sightseers, for an intense interest attaches to what is to be done at this session. It may be that presidential candidates will be made or unmade by the proceedings. A slip of the tongue of some party leader may do damage beyond repair to the party's prospects. Every man in house and senate will be on guard over his tongue, and every bit of proposed legislation will be studied thoroughly by the leaders of the party of the member proposing it, to decide not only on its probable effect on the country, but its effect on politics.

As for the Democratic leaders, they seem to be determined that if the tariff board's report on wool is in accordance with the information gained by members of the ways and means committee, which, of course, is dominated by the Democrats, legislation based on the board's report must be passed. The party leaders, however, seem to be determined that if the tariff board's report has in it a suspicion of leaning toward the side of duties which are too high, a bill cutting those duties shall be passed and sent over to the Republican senate for commendation or condemnation.

Trust Problem to the Fore.

No sooner had congress opened than the trust matter again put its interrogation to the lawmakers. Several bills have been drawn already which represent the varying views of what ought to be done to the Sherman law. This matter will be thrashed out thoroughly before June comes, and with the tariff it will occupy the chief place of interest and debate.

House and senate at the last session sanctioned a measure looking to the popular election of senators. There is a difference between the house and senate as to the exact form which the resolution on the subject should take and it was left in conference when the special session adjourned. The conference committee will meet at once and attempt to adjust the difficulty and to make it possible for the states to decide quickly whether or not the change in the form of election of the members of the upper house shall be made.

House Leaders Are Primed.

Representative Underwood, Democrat, of Alabama, the leader of the house Democracy and chairman of the committee on ways and means, is ready to combat on the tariff and the trust questions, and other questions for that matter. James R. Mann, the floor leader of the Republican minority. It will be Mr. Underwood's duty and perhaps delight to try to make capital for his party in the coming presidential campaign, and a like duty and delight will attach to Mr. Mann, who will employ his usual resourcefulness to do what he can to brighten the presidential prospects of his own party.

In the senate within a day or two the controversy will start anew over the election of a president pro tem. Senator Frye, of Maine, who held the office for many years, resigned it at a late day in the extraordinary session. Mr. Frye has since died.

News of Minnesota

Interesting Items Gathered Throughout the Gopher State.

STEENERSON TO AID BEMIDJI.

Congressman to Do Utmost Toward Landing Federal Building.

Bemidji.—The Bemidji Commercial club will give hearty co-operation to Congressman Halvor Steenerson in an effort to secure for Bemidji at the coming session of congress an appropriation of $100,000 for a new federal building for this city, the matter being discussed at a meeting of the Commercial club, at which Congressman Steenerson was a guest, and which had been called at the suggestion of Mr. Steenerson.

"As I leave for Crookston on Thanksgiving day," said Mr. Steenerson, "I thought it would be well to consult with the citizens of Bemidji regarding any special or regular legislation that might be taken up at the coming session of congress. As congress convenes the first Monday in December, I would have no other opportunity before I go.

"The one proposition I feel certain that is to come before this session is the appropriation bill introduced by me at the last session providing for an appropriation of $100,000 for a new federal building for Bemidji."

NORMAL TO GRADUATE 19.

Closing Exercises of Fall Term Held At St. Cloud.

St. Cloud.—Nineteen students were graduated from the St. Cloud normal. President W. A. Shoemaker presented the diplomas. The following is the list:

Advanced English Course — Eliza Dwyer, Monticello; rank W. Marshik, Pierz.

Advanced Latin Course — Richard Boehm, Pierz.

Advanced Graduate Course — Inga Dahl, St. Cloud; Mary Vivian Dyer, Monticello; Myrtle Mae Johnson, Cass Lake; Olive I. Stephenson, Long Prairie.

Elementary Graduate Course — Bertha V. Bertleson, Litchfield; Alta R. Bull, St. Cloud; Hazel Catherine Crouley, Litchfield; Marie C. Gleeson, Beardsley; Katherine T. Goff, Litchfield, Minnie E. Moffett, Minneapolis.

Elementary Course — Herman J. Berg, Forest City; Margaret E. Ferris, Becker; Caroline Gaumnitz, Minneapolis; Ninnie A. Hagberg, St. Cloud; Valdina M. Skjevelanr, Hanley Falls; Gertrude Mae Storey, Ada.

COURT CLERK DIES SUDDENLY.

Minneapolis Man's Trial At Fergus Falls Delayed As Result.

Fergus Falls.—The district court which is trying the case against Richard M. Hayes, the Minneapolis attorney charged with forgery in connection with the Prinzel will, adjourned on account of the sudden death of Clerk of Court Jason T. Kidder. Kidder stopped to talk to a friend while coming down town at noon, and suddenly lurched forward against the man, dying almost instantly.

YOUTH KILLS SELF; WIFE DYING.

Double Tragedy Ends Attempt to Be Reconciled After Separation.

Minneapolis — Christ Goehringer, 20 years old, killed himself and probably mortally wounded his wife, Minnie Goehringer, 22, in the Allen hotel, after they had spent the evening together at a theater and later taken a room at the hotel in the vain attempt to be reconciled after a separation of two years in a married life of three years.

SUPERVISES NEW BUILDINGS.

Winona Seminary Wards In Charge of Bishop Heffron's Brother.

Winona.—Martin Heffron, a contractor of Rochester, brother of Bishop P. R. Heffron of this city, is to supervise the erection of the educational buildings now in the course of construction here. Mr. Heffron has come to Winona to look over the plans for the $400,000 boys' college and the $200,000 addition to the Winona seminary.

Senator Nelson Appointed.

Washington, D. C.—Several important committee chairmanships in the senate will be announced at the outset of the coming session of congress. This is the slate agreed upon: Committee on commerce, Nelson of Minnesota; committee on public lands, Smoot of Utah; committee on printing, Page of Vermont. All these changes grow out of the recent death of Senator Frye of Maine, who was head of the commerce committee. Nelson will succeed Frye, Smoot succeed Nelson, and Page succeeds Senator Smoot.

GEORGE WELSH IS DEAD.

Was Commissioner of Minnesota Immigration Board.

St. Paul. — Hon. George Welsh, state immigration commissioner, died at his residence here. His death was not unexpected, as he had been suffering with typhoid fever for two weeks and had not shown signs of improvement.

Mr. Welsh was appointed state immigration commissioner by the state immigration board in 1907, when the department was first organized. He has held the office ever since.

Born in Markham, Ont., July 6, 1862, Mr. Welsh taught school in Canada when he was a young man and later went to Boston, Mass. In 1880 he came west to appraise lands for a Boston land company. His eyesight failed him and after he had consulted specialists, resigned his position with the company and went to Morton, Minn. In Morton he managed the station restaurant of the Minneapolis & St. Louis railway. He was president of the Morton village council for some years, and was chairman of the republican county committee.

Mr. Welsh is survived by his wife, two small children, a sister, Mrs. George Harrison, of Minneapolis, and a brother, Thomas Welsh, of Sunderland, Ont.

GERALDS' TRIAL POSTPONED.

A. H. Brandt Claims To Have Been Present at Black Duck Arson Plot.

Duluth. — The hearing of Edwards Geralds of Bemidji, in that city on a charge of attempted arson, has been adjourned to Dec. 15. A. H. Brandt, who is an employe of the fire marshal's department is known as [illegible] as Duluth. He claims to have been present when Geralds paid to "Boston Blackie O'Neil," $50 to destroy a building owned by the Geralds at Black Duck. Brandt admits having been a criminal in the past and says that he was actuated to give "Blackie" away because the latter had done him dirt. Brandt formerly resided in Duluth and at one time was employed by the Bethel association here.

He has served a couple of terms for forgery, one in Waupun and the other in Stillwater. The hearing was begun before Municipal Judge Simons. Brandt was the state's chief witness, and gave the name of Fisher. On cross-examination he admitted that his right name is Brandt and that he had been twice sentenced for forgery.

TO BE SHIPBUILDING CENTER.

Duluth May Lead Lake Ports Because of Proximity of Steel Plant.

Duluth. — The Duluth-Superior harbor in the not distant future will be the greatest shipbuilding center on the Great Lakes because of its nearness to the new $10,000,000 steel plant now under construction, in the opinion of L. Williams, superintendent of a local shipbuilding company. With the mammoth steel mills, the cost of raw products used in the construction of the huge steel lake freighters must necessarily be less than at any other point on the lakes, according to Mr. Williams. He also points out Duluth's nearness to the iron producing country, as another factor which enters into the cost of the material used in shipbuilding. With present conditions, ships, he says, can be built cheaper at Detroit, Cleveland or Toledo, where there is a shorter haul on iron products.

According to the same authority, two dry docks are now in sight for the local harbor.

$50,000 FOR THE STATE.

Appraisal of McCahill and Pattison Estates Reveals Inheritance Tax.

St. Paul.—Appraisal of the estates of James McCahill, Duluth, and William H. Pattison, Superior, Wis., a property owner in Duluth, will net the state approximately $50,000 in inheritance taxes, according to a dispatch from Duluth, where C. Louis Weeks, assistant attorney general, has been investigating the estate. The McCahill estate was appraised at $1,100,000. The Pattison estate was valued at approximately $650,000. In connection with the appraisal of the McCahill estate, the romantic history of this pioneer was recalled. Early in the nineties he traded a piece of Duluth real estate, valued at $1,500, for 160 acres on the Mesabi range, which later turned out to be the Shenango mine.

The Peril of Magellan Strait

NARRATIVE OF CAPTAIN ADAMS

"Detective-Diplomat"

By H. M. EGBERT

(Copyright, by W. G. Chapman.)

I HAD left the foreign office in deep dejection after an unhappy hour spent in the company of the secretary for foreign affairs. In vain I had pleaded, in extenuation, that I had only obeyed the orders which another had issued. A diplomatic scapegoat had to be obtained in order to save England from humiliation at the hands of a powerful neighbor—and I had been chosen. Upon the threshold of my career, the diplomatic service seemed to be forever closed to me.

"I'm sorry for you, Adams," said the foreign secretary, Sir Edward Grey, to me, "heartily sorry. But the element of luck has evidently deserted you. If you are really anxious to continue to serve your country, however, I might be able to make use of you at some time in the secret service, which constantly requires the air of gentlemen having a certain social status, with training in the legitimate branch. And, to facilitate matters—since you are in favor with his majesty in spite of your misfortune—I will ask him to appoint you as one of his couriers-at-large."

Who has not heard of the king's couriers—that small band of private gentlemen who carry his majesty's private dispatches among crowned heads and statesmen? A king's courier often bears the peace of Europe in the little black leather wallet which, whether he sleeps or wakes, must never leave his person until its contents have been delivered in safety to their destination. He is the unofficial, as the ambassador is the official, representative of his sovereign; deeds of the most hazardous nature often fall to him to perform; and never, by any chance, whether he fail or succeed, does he receive public acknowledgment.

A few days afterward I received notice of my enrolment. The salary was small, but sufficient to enable me to continue to keep on my bachelor apartments in Half Moon street, Piccadilly, where I resided with Talbot, my ex-soldier servant, who had attended on my wants when I held a captaincy in the Fourth Lancers, and now refused to be separated from me. Six years in exile in the far east as a legation attache had made me practically a stranger in London; the friends whom I had had formerly had married or moved elsewhere or forgotten me. So I remained week after week, held to the capital by the terms of my engagement, which required my constant attendance upon his majesty's pleasure, yet confident that I had long since been cast, along with other failures, into oblivion.

And then one afternoon I received an official document requiring my presence at the foreign office immediately. I jumped into a hansom and lost no time in presenting myself. Sir Edward Grey himself came out of his private office to receive me, led me in and motioned me to a chair.

"Captain Adams," he began abruptly, "you are, I believe, the hero of a certain desperate adventure in Afghanistan, for which you received the Victoria Cross?"

I murmured something. Of course those things come by luck. I am sure all our officers are equally brave.

"His majesty's government is in need of a man with dauntless courage and inexhaustible resources of will and ingenuity, in order to carry out a difficult and momentous duty," Sir Edward continued. "His majesty has been pleased to indicate yourself. How soon can you be prepared to start for Tierra del Fuego, via New York?"

I thought. "In four hours," I answered.

"Good," replied Sir Edward. "Then I will recount, as briefly as possible, the situation." He sat down at my side, handed me a cigar and lit one himself, which he consumed in his rapid, nervous way.

"As you know," he began, "ever since Lord Pauncefote died, England has been unfortunate in the matter of her American representatives. In some subtle way they have not seemed to hit it off right, either with the president or with the American people. Now, my dear Adams, you are aware that to preserve the best possible relationship with America is the cornerstone of both British and German policy, and, since the rivalry between us and our neighbors across the North sea is intense, the alliance of America with either would be a fatal blow to the other.

"What has sorely strained amicable relations between England and America has been the Anglo-Japanese alliance. That it is directed against American interests seems to be the opinion in Washington. This ill feeling has been increased by the bellicose Japanese attitude toward America over the schools questions, which has culminated in the dispatch of the American fleet round South America through the straits of Magellan, to the Pacific ocean. Somehow or other, Mr. Roosevelt has got the notion that England is privy to the attitude of Japan. In short, we are face to face with a three-cornered quarrel.

"Now I come to the climax. There exists a certain group of international financiers, mainly of German origin, who would have everything to gain by the outbreak of hostilities between Japan and America—in which England would be compelled to join, as Japan's ally, by the terms of the treaty. The influence of this group, though powerful, is not sufficient to bring about a war. They intend, therefore, that the voyage of the fleet shall be attended by such incidents as shall kindle the anger of America to the explosion point and bring about the results that they desire. Remembering how the destruction of the Maine precipitated the war with Spain, it is their intention that the flagship of Admiral Evans shall be destroyed by Japanese treachery during the passage of the fleet through the straits of Magellan. More than one vessel they will not injure, lest their loss leave America too weak to fight Japan. This act will force America to declare war, and England will be compelled to take up arms against her. Hence it is of the utmost urgency that this murderous scheme be foiled."

"But how is it to be accomplished?" I inquired.

Sir Edward Grey threw away his cigar and continued in hurried, agitated tones.

"We received information this morning. An order, to which the name of the mikado has been forged, has been placed in the hands of a Japanese military attache at Rio Janeiro, by name Kitachi. It states that he will consider himself responsible only to his emperor; that he will proceed immediately to Punta Arenas, the little Chilean town upon the straits of Magellan, and the center of the sheep-farming industry. Thence he will proceed to a tiny harbor, known only to the Japanese survey, that lies like a cleft among the frowning cliffs which rise sheer from the waters. There he will set up his camp and make his preparations, and, at the precise moment of its passage, he will destroy the flagship of the American admiral by means of the new secret Japanese torpedo, which can be controlled and guided during its flight by means of wireless telegraphy. There will occur one moment of panic; then the great ship will rear herself and plunge to her grave, through the almost fathomless waters, carrying all her crew to destruction. Captain Adams, the future of England lies in your hands." With these concluding words he dismissed me.

The American fleet was preparing to set sail from Hampton Roads that very afternoon. On the following morning I could reach a Cunard steamship which would land me in New York on the sixth day. Thence a fast passenger ship would carry me to Rio close at the heels of the squadron. Every day she spent in that port would be a clear day's gain thereafter. I hoped to reach Punta Arenas a full week ahead of the fleet, allowing for delays and coaling; and this I actually succeeded in accomplishing. It was about one month later when Talbot and I, standing side by side upon the deck of the little sheepboat which brought us southward from Rio, perceived, through a drenching rain, the fearful heights that bordered either side of the straits of Magellan, and the little town looming up white against a background of barren hills, bordered with dripping forests.

"Begging your pardon, sir, might I arsk whether our stay in this burg is liable to prove a long one, sir?" asked Talbot.

I could not but smile at the faithful fellow's misery. After the long sea voyage our terminus certainly did not appear very attractive—and Talbot was a cockney of cockneys. But the thought of the work on hand quickly reduced me to a condition of seriousness.

"Talbot," I said, "you and I are going into a hard game." I saw his eyes brighten. Talbot was with me in Afghanistan, when for three days we two and a wounded lancer kept 50 Afghans at bay. "Henceforward," I continued, "until the danger is over, you will kindly address me as an equal."

"All right, old man," said Talbot easily, instantly falling into the spirit of his instructions. It was, in fact, an ancient understanding between us. So soon as we passed beyond the boundaries of the conventional, in which fortune had made us master and servant, Talbot would show himself the fine comrade that he is, by my request.

"Hidden somewhere among those cliffs," I said, "is a little bay. There's a man there, playing with dangerous toys. We've got to get him and break his toys. Savvee?"

Talbot grinned. "What ho!" he answered, in his inimitable cockney dialect.

It was arranged that I should pass as a sheep purchaser, or as a wealthy Englishman who desired to look over the sheep runs with a view to making an investment. Talbot was a gold prospector whom I had met on the voyage. In this way we calculated that we could best make our investigations of the surrounding country. Upon our arrival good news cheered us. The fleet had just sailed from Rio, where it had been delayed overtime. It would not enter the straits for several days. This allowed us additional time to make our plans.

A visit to the English consulate gave scanty information. To my question whether there were many Japanese around Punta Arenas the consul answered that it was impossible to answer.

"The territories are quite unorganized," he answered. "There may be ten, there may be fifty, scattered all the way between the mainland and the Horn. The land is most imperfectly known, and inhabited by tribes of hostile savages who make periodical raids upon the sheep-runs. There's sheepmen and prospectors scattered over 20,000 square miles of forest and bog. And, talking of bogs, let me warn you not to stray off the beaten paths, or you'll be trapped sure."

Then he unexpectedly added something which made my heart leap.

"There's a little Chink or Jap fellow passed through alone last week. Said he was going gold-washing along the straits, but he had a curious outfit—some kind of patent machinery, he claimed."

And this information was worth a gold mine to me. For, now that I knew the direction in which Kitachi had gone, it was obvious that, by following the general contour of the land, I must come upon the secret cove.

So far neither Talbot nor I had noticed any signs of espionage. This seemed strange. Sir Edward Grey had informed me that the syndicate which was backing Kitachi in his murderous plot was of vast wealth and ramifications. It seemed incredible that they had permitted us to get thus far in safety; that they had not suspected an attempt was being made to frustrate their scheme. Or had they merely tolerated our approach thus far in order to make the more sure of our destruction?

The question was soon to be answered. Talbot and I had engaged a single, large room at the top of the little mining hotel that looks out over the waters. We retired to rest that night early, having taken the precaution to close the window and bolt it. Under my pillow I had placed my loaded Colt automatic pistol. Fatigued by the day's work, I fell quickly asleep, and dreamed that I encountered Kitachi under all sorts of impossible conditions, but principally engaged with him in wrestling matches upon the summit of those fearful cliffs, while the American squadron hove into view, miles down beneath us. I remember Kitachi got his arm under my neck and was about to throw me over the brink—when suddenly I awakened with a start to find one part of the dream real. An arm was certainly coiling under my neck, but ever so softly, the fingers worming their way down deep beneath the pillow. The habits of ten campaigns had taught me one essential of the adventurer's life—to wake noiselessly. I opened my eyes the least possible amount—enough to see that dawn was breaking in the customary eternal fog and rain. And at my side I saw a tawny figure that squatted there, while the fingers worked toward the pistol which was but two inches further on. I measured the distance, and suddenly shot out my arm from under the bedclothes. The guess was accurate. My fist caught the intruder beneath the ear and bowled him over. Instantly I whipped out my pistol, which he had so nearly obtained; but not before the figure, pulling itself together, vanished with a bound through the window, from which the glass had been carefully dissected. I discharged the magazine into the darkness, but without effect, except to rouse the other occupants of rooms in the hotel.

"One of those thieving Ona Indians," was the general comment. Such events, it appeared, were far from uncommon in Punta Arenas. The natives were expert "second-story men." I listened skeptically, being more concerned in attempting to soothe Talbot, who was reproaching himself bitterly for having been sunk in "stinkin' slumber," as he described his sleep, while my life was endangered.

On the next day we were to start upon the trail—Talbot ostensibly to prospect for gold, I to consider a choice location for a sheep-run. We busied ourselves the remainder of that day securing four stout little Shetland ponies, which we loaded down with our impedimenta, intending to adopt the customary method of the country and to walk beside them, since riding over the yielding bogs is almost impracticable for man and beast. It had been our intention to go alone, trusting to our campaigning experience. Now, however, we determined to engage an escort. Three ex-miners, who had flung away their hard-earned gains in a week of debauchery at Punta Arenas, were easily persuaded for money to accompany us as a protection against anything we might encounter. We started off on the next afternoon through dripping undergrowth, following, so far as was practicable, the line of the shore. At nightfall we camped upon the borders of a stretch of open land, and arose after a period of sleeplessness and general dampness to find the pale sun struggling through the fog drifts and the eternal line of the cliffs still firm and unbroken. Now ensued a dreary tramp across a spongy bog, in which horses and men sank to their fetlocks and ankles. A little way ahead of us was a clump of trees, the scattering opening of the forest.

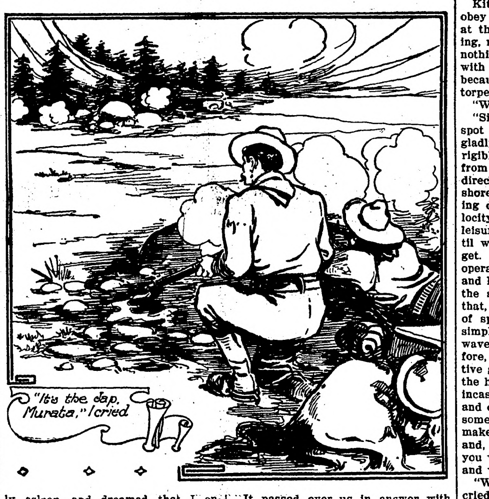
Suddenly a naked, bronzed figure ran out from the trees, lifted a bow at us, and began fitting an arrow to the string. He drew the string. The distant twang floated across the still air, and an arrow buried itself in the ground 100 yards in front. The Indian, having missed his mark, began to run aimlessly in the direction of the wood.

"Catch that fellow!" I shouted, leaping upon my pony. The others followed suit, and, spurring the beasts, we galloped in pursuit. All at once my pony tripped and fell under me, throwing me heavily. I was stunned for the moment; when I recovered my senses I found that his leg was broken. I attempted to rise, but my feet sank into the bog.

All were in the same plight. Knee-deep, they labored painfully toward each other from where their horses stood, mired to the thighs. With infinite difficulty Talbot made his way to my side; the rest were 50 yards away—they might as well have been three miles.

"Well, old chap, they've copped us good," said Talbot.

Wh-ee-ee-ew!



"It's the Jap, Murata," I cried

It passed over us in answer with a whistle and a scream, and the detonation of the rifle followed it. Talbot and I had heard that sound many times before. We flung ourselves upon our faces and began to adjust the sights of our rifles.

Spit! Spit! Whiz! The air was alive with bullets. They plunged overhead, they shrieked and screamed. We began firing back at our unseen enemies in a desultory way, to save our cartridges.

"How many rounds, old man?" asked Talbot presently.

"Twelve more!" I groaned, piling them in a little heap in front of me. Meanwhile the firing continued unabated.

"Adams," said Talbot presently, when we had both ceased, "'ave you noticed anything strange about them beggars, old boy?"

"They're damned bad shots," I answered.

"They ain't trying to hit us, Adams," Talbot retorted. "All their shots 'ave gone 'igh. Noticed anything more?"

"It's no rifle I've ever heard fired," I answered.

"You're right, old man. It's a rifle of tiny caliber. It might be our Lee-Metford, if it was a little shriller, and it might be the Yankee Krag, if it had more of a tang to the whine. But it's something well under .300."

"It's the Jap Murata," I cried; and suddenly a sick feeling came over me. For, on the morrow, if all went well—or ill, rather—the battleships would enter the Magellan straits. And somewhere near was the devilish engine of Kitachi. And I, upon whom rested the fate of two nations, had blundered into this position, blundered helplessly and hopelessly, into this trap. Suddenly I saw a look of fury pass over Talbot's face. He half raised himself.

"Gawd, Adams, they've killed 'em all!" he muttered.

I turned. Fifty yards away lay the bodies of the three prospectors, beside the dead horses. Evidently the aim of the hidden marksmen had been deadly true, for they had fallen without a groan, riddled at the first volley. Talbot and I were left alone.

"Well, Talbot," I said cheerfully, "there's only one thing to be done. Your shirt's older than mine—give me a piece."

"Not while I can fire another shot, Adams," replied Talbot sulkily. "Surrender? What for?"

"Because our position's hopeless," I retorted. "We can't get away, and if we could they'd catch us again. Talbot, they'll release you. It's me they want. Make a flag out of your shirt."

"You be damned," retorted Talbot sulkily. "Say that again and I'll bash yer blarsted fyce in."

"Silence!" I shouted. "I'm commanding officer here, my man. I order you as your officer to hoist that flag."

"O, orl right," said Talbot sullenly. I heard the z-z-z of linen in the tearing. And then, slowly, Talbot hoisted the white flag on his rifle barrel.

A moment later a little squint-eyed Japanese tripped out of the wood and beckoned to us.

"This way, gentlemen!" he shouted, pointing to a line of coarse tussock grass that grew near and, as I now perceived, formed an excellent pathway through the morass. "Fling down your rifles!" he added. "Now your pistols! So!"

At a signal from him three Indians stepped forward from among the trees and bound us, after which we were led along a narrow trail that seemed to disappear right over the face of the cliffs. In places the path was so narrow that we literally clung to the side of the precipice. Presently it widened out; we were descending a wooded chine that led to the little cove, on which already we could hear the booming of the sea-rollers. A turn disclosed it to us. A neat little military house, the encampment of the Indians, and a large shed, surmounted by a high pole for wireless transmission, stood just at the boundary of the high tide, fringed with coarse seaweed and almost washed by the spray. At the encampment we were halted.

"What are you going to do with us?" I asked Kitachi.

The little man turned round and looked at me quizzically.

"Do you know why I spared your lives?" he asked.

"And murdered our companions," I retorted bitterly.

Kitachi shrugged his shoulders. "I obey my emperor," he said, saluting at the word. "Their lives are nothing, my life is nothing, and yours are nothing, to be weighed in the balance with his command. I spared yours because, gentlemen—you are to be the torpedoes!"

"What?" I cried.

"Since you will never leave this spot alive, I will explain the matter gladly. The principle of the new dirigible torpedo is different entirely from that of any other. It is not only directed, but is set in action from the shore; in other words, instead of being discharged at a high rate of velocity, it proceeds at a constant and leisurely speed through the waves, until within aiming distance of its target. Then, and then only, does the operator on shore detonate the charge and hurl the missile into the vitals of the ship. Now you will readily see that, proceeding at such a low rate of speed, a torpedo of metal would simply sink below the surface of the waves. We must make use, therefore, of something of the same relative gravity as water—in other words, the human body. Now, when you are incased in a hollow shell of aluminum, and discharged at a constant speed of some ten miles per hour, you will make your course half submerged, and, when the charge is detonated, you will hit the flagship betwixt wind and water—exactly on the water line."

"What, make a torpedo out of me?" cried Talbot, advancing upon the Japanese with whirling fists. I pulled him back with difficulty from the Japanese's revolver.

"While there's life there's hope, Talbot," I whispered. Kitachi heard.

"You have until tomorrow morning at ten, gentlemen," he answered briefly. "At that hour the flagship will be passing abreast of our station. They are now nearing the entrance; you see, I am picking up their position by means of wireless."

He smiled dispassionately. He seemed inhuman, discarnate, a living intelligence not subordinate to the human emotions of man, but dedicated wholly to his duty.

"Will you be paroled until tomorrow, or will you be tied?" he asked. We gave our parole. Apparently Kitachi had entire confidence in it, for he merely indicated a tent in which we were to sleep and went into his house.

I shall never forget the horrors of that night. At ten in the morning we were to die, to fulfil the forged communication to Kitachi. And, this being so, and escape impossible, he had placed us upon our honor as soldiers and servants of our king, knowing that he held us thus more securely than if ropes bound us. All night we heard the thunder roaring in the sky, and saw the lightning flashes, and heard the heavy downpour of the rain. It seemed eternity before the darkness yielded to the diffused grayness of dawn and an Indian brought us our breakfast of the Japanese army ration of rice and fish. We swallowed it with an effort.

"Might as well eat something before we kick the bucket; what, old boy?" said Talbot.

At nine Kitachi came for us and announced that our parole was ended. At a signal, we were seized by Indians and, before we understood what was occurring, our arms were bound to our sides and ropes were fastened round our knees. A futile struggle, and we stood trussed and helpless. Kitachi entered the shed and threw open the wooden wall on the shore side, disclosing a complicated arrangement of batteries and, prominent among the machinery, two huge, coffin-like oval structures of aluminum, each about the length of a man.

When I come to die my last memory will be of standing there, beside Talbot, bound, on the beach, listening to the waves, and straining my eyes for the thin wisp of smoke that would indicate the approach of Admiral Evans' flagship and announce our imminent death.

Ten o'clock tinkled from a clock in the Japanese officer's house. We looked hard out to sea. The mists lifted; now we could see the frowning cliffs opposite and, in the distance, the white houses of Punta Arenas. But no ship came. The clock tinkled 11 and then 12. A wild hope throbbed in my heart. Suddenly the electric instrument began to click. Kitachi turned impassively to the machine. It was not Morse, but the secret Japanese method of communication, and neither of us understood, though we concluded it was the signal for the ships to enter the strait.

As Kitachi stood reading I saw his body stiffen gradually, until he seemed to be a figure of wood. When the last click ceased he came up to us and stood watching us with a peculiar smile.

"You're very lucky!" he said, and turned aside to mutter to the chief Indian. Immediately the ropes were taken off our limbs, and we remained looking at Kitachi in amazement, free, yet hardly daring to hope.

"These Indians will escort you as far as the sheep trail where they met you yesterday," he added. "Go—you are free."

"Free?" I stammered.

"Yes, gentlemen," said Kitachi wearily. "The vessels of the American fleet passed through the straits last night. The magnetic storm, unusual for this time of the year, was caused by an event which only occurs once in long periods—and last night it happened and luck overthrew all my plans. There was a shifting of the south magnetic pole, due to some unknown combination of heavenly bodies, which caused my instruments to pick up the fleet in a wrong region of the compass. But my emperor does not permit chance to overcome his will. I have failed; all is over." He threw up his hands and walked slowly into his house.

I whispered to Talbot to wait and ran after him. My heart was touched with pity. After all, he was merely obeying what he fancied were his emperor's commands; and he had treated us as an officer and a gentleman should do. Now, perhaps, he would believe me if I told him the truth about the conspiracy.

I knocked at the door twice; then, as no answer came, I opened it and entered. Kitachi was sitting, Japanese fashion, upon the floor, wrapped in a rug, his shoulders curiously bowed. He looked up at me patiently as I entered, but made no sign.

Gradually, however, as I unfolded the story, an expression of horror came over his features. He groaned; he tried to rise. As he did so the rug fell from him and I saw that its under side was stained with blood and that a short sword lay between his knees, hilt down, point upward. Even as I looked Kitachi's features composed themselves, his eyes closed, and he fell forward, transfixed upon the weapon with which, in the old feudal style, he had performed the sacred rite.

Sick with pity, I ran out, to find Talbot at the door.

"All right, old boy?" he asked. Then, seeing the answer in my eyes, he saluted me, soldier fashion.

"Begging your pardon, sir," he said; "I think we ought to be moving."

Vanity of a Lion.

The intricacies of a great man's character are often simplicities to his wife. Once when the present poet laureate had paid a visit to Tennyson, his immediate predecessor, Tennyson walked with him as far as the gate which led to the highway. There, says Alfred Austin in his recent "Autobiography," while the elder poet stood leaning on the gate a party of wide-eyed sight-seers appeared.

"What a vulgar people the English are!" Tennyson exclaimed. "They come here to watch for me, and when they see me they say quite loudly: 'There's Tennyson!'"

Mr. Austin afterward repeated this to Mrs. Tennyson, who smiled tenderly but archly.

"My husband would be much more annoyed if the people didn't come," she said.—Youth's Companion.

He Came Down for Hensel.

Former Attorney General William U. Hensel, the Lancaster lawyer who was the guest of the Terrapin club at a dinner in the Bellevue Stratford, is one of the best-known attorneys of the state. He is a brilliant orator and is in demand for his speech-making abilities.

It is told of him that a prisoner in the Lancaster court was about to be tried, when the man asked who was counsel for the prosecution.

"Mr. Hensel," was the reply.

"That settles it; it's all off. I plead guilty; no use being tried."—Philadelphia Record.

Good Idea.

Posterity will not have to depend upon what it can read between the covers of books for its knowledge of the present age if the plans of the newly-organized Modern Historic Records association are carried out. The association proposes to use the phonograph and the moving picture machine to preserve for posterity the words and acts of the nation's great men. One set of all pictures and records will be stored away for at least 100 years in the vaults of the association.

SERIAL STORY

No Man's Land

A ROMANCE

By Louis Joseph Vance

Illustrations by Ray Walters

(Copyright, 1910, by Louis Joseph Vance.)

SYNOPSIS.

Garrett Coast, a young man of New York City, meets Douglas Blackstock, who invites him to a card party. He accepts, although he dislikes Blackstock, the reason being that both are in love with Katherine Thaxter. Coast fails to convince her that Blackstock is unworthy of her friendship. At the party Coast meets two named Dundas and Van Tuyl. There is a quarrel, and Blackstock shoots Van Tuyl dead. Coast struggles to wrest the weapon from him, thus the police discover them. Coast is arrested for murder. He is convicted, but as he begins his sentence, Dundas names Blackstock as the murderer and kills himself. Coast becomes free, but Blackstock has married Katherine Thaxter and fled. Coast purchases a yacht and while sailing sees a man thrown from a distant boat. He rescues the fellow who is named Appleyard.

CHAPTER V.—(Continued.)

Appleyard executed an ample gesture. "Romance," he replied, sententious.

"Who are you, anyway?" pursued Coast incautiously.

"I might put the same question to you, sir."

"To your prospective employer?"

The faded eyes twinkled. "As nearly won over as that, Mr. Coast? Decidedly my talents should have been devoted to spellbinding, as you so delicately suggest. . . . But squarely, sir,"—he grew momentarily grave and earnest—"I've been painfully truthful: my monaker is actually Melchisedec Appleyard, incredible as it may sound. I give you my word I'm an honest man; the law has no knowledge of or concern with me."

For all his banter he betrayed not a little eagerness as he bent forward, scanning Coast's face.

His verdict was something deferred; Coast was actually and seriously considering the preposterous suggestion. The little man promised a diverting companion, who had proven such up to that moment; and there were dark hours when Coast needed diversion poignantly. Beyond question it would be convenient to have somebody at one's beck and call, to stand a trick at the wheel or advise concerning dangerous waters. And, furthermore, Coast thought to detect in Mr. Appleyard's manner a something which lent more than a mite of confirmation to his hint that he needed food and shelter—if only temporarily.

In the end Coast nodded slowly. "I'll go you," he said, holding the other's eyes; "I'll take you at your word."

Relief shone radiant on the withered face. "Right you are, Mr. Coast!" cried Appleyard, extending a hand. "I promise you won't regret this. Word of honor, sir!"

"That's understood." Coast pressed the hand and released it. "And now let's get under way. I'm for bold water—Nantucket Sound to begin with. Can we make Vineyard Haven by nightfall, do you think?"

"With this wind, via Quick's Hole?" Coast nodded and Appleyard considered sagely. "Of course we can," he proclaimed.

CHAPTER VI.

"All ready?"

Coast, at the wheel, nodded to Appleyard, who was crouching in the bows. "Ready," he said.

There followed a splash as Appleyard dropped the hook of the mooring at which the Echo had been riding overnight.

In a long and graceful sweep the Echo swung round and slipped briskly down the harbor to the urge of the following wind.

Early in the afternoon the wind began to fail, its volume diminishing by fits and starts; heavy puffs alternated with spells of steady breezing successively more faint.

Over the bows the entrance to Quick's Hole, the passage between Pasque and Nashawena Islands, became plainly visible.

Appleyard remarked the signs of change with a wrinkle of disquiet between his brows.

"Going to have a shift of wind, you think?" Coast asked.

The little man nodded anxiously. "It's a cinch," he asserted. "And when it does swing the chances are ten to one it'll come in from the sou'west. That's the prevailing wind round here at this season, you know."

"Well? Even so, it'll favor us up the Sound, won't it? Besides, we've got the motor. . . ."

"That'll help a heap in case that fog comes down on us, won't it?" Appleyard snorted in disgust, nodding toward the bank of tawny haze that discolored the horizon beyond the low profiles of Nashawena and Cuttyhunk, over the starboard counter.

"Hadn't thought of that—"

"And yet you had the nerve to resent my suggestion that you needed a keeper!"

"Well, then, it's up to us to make that passage as soon as we can—what? Hadn't I better get the motor going? Here, take the wheel, while I—"

"Never mind," Appleyard returned. "That's my job. You stay put. That is, unless you prefer—"

"No; I'm not crazy about it. Go ahead and break your back turning up a cold engine, if you want to."

"Don't let that fret you any, Cap'n." Appleyard grunted, setting the binnacle aside and lifting the engine-pit hatch. "Me, I was born and brought up with marine motors; they used to fill my nursing bottle with a mixture of gasoline and Vacuum A. Pipe your uncle."

He dropped lightly into the pit, threw in both the main and shut-off switches, opened the globe-valve in the feed pipe, made a slight adjustment of the carbureter, and slowly turned up the fly-wheel. An angry buzzing broke out in the spark-coil.

"You see," he said with elaborate nonchalance. "They're all alike—any one of 'em will feed right out of my hand."

He rocked the fly-wheel to and fro half a dozen times, then gave it a smart upward pull. Instantly there was a dull explosion in the cylinder, and the wheel began to spin steadily to the muffled drumming of the exhaust.

Gathering way, the boat moved at a more lively pace, with her sail flapping empty and listless and idly swinging boom.

By the time Coast, instructed by his highly efficient crew, had piloted the Echo safely through to the Sound, a dead calm held.

aged, to the cockpit. "I don't like this," he asserted glumly. "There's something gone wrong. We ought to 've made the Bight over an hour ago. I've been expecting we'd run aground every minute of the last thirty. . . . Sure you've got the course right?"

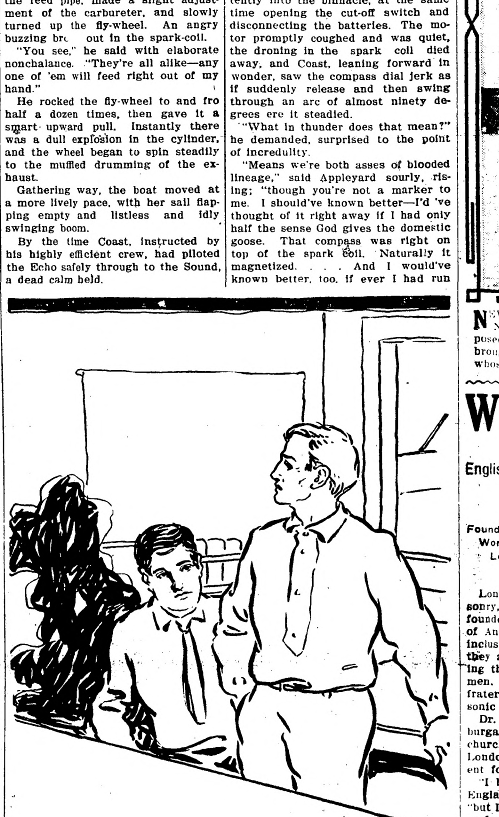
"Absolutely," returned Coast with conviction.

"Then what the divvle's the matter" grumbled the little man. "Martha's Vineyard hasn't moved, I'll go bail; and we certainly couldn't hold that course as long as we have without striking land somewhere." He wagged a perturbed head, growling inarticulate dissatisfaction. "Let me think. . . . Something wrong . . . What . . . ? Wait!" he cried abruptly. "Maybe . . . Hold that wheel steady for a bit, will you."

Dropping to his knees he peered intently into the binnacle, at the same time opening the cut-off switch and disconnecting the batteries. The motor promptly coughed and was quiet, the droning in the spark coil died away, and Coast, leaning forward in wonder, saw the compass dial jerk as if suddenly release and then swing through an arc of almost ninety degrees ere it steadied.

"What in thunder does that mean?" he demanded, surprised to the point of incredulity.

"Means we're both asses of blooded lineage," said Appleyard sourly, rising; "though you're not a marker to me. I should've known better—I'd 've thought of it right away if I had only half the sense God gives the domestic goose. That compass was right on top of the spark coil. Naturally it magnetized. . . . And I would've known better, too, if ever I had run



"We're Perfectly Safe Unless We're in Ship Channel."

A little later a chill breath of air fanned Coast's cheek, the first whiff out of the southwest. The water flawed and darkened with the flying catspaws.

The fog swept in swiftly Far across the breadth of wind-dulled water Coast could see it moving onward like a wall, momentarily gaining in bulk. Already it was hovering threateningly over Gay Head, and while he looked a thin, gray, spectral arm stole across the low land at Menemsha Bight and began to grope its blind way up the Sound.

Coast steered with his gaze fixed upon the compass on the engine-pit hatch, now his sole guide. Insensibly the fog grew more dense, so that in time the mast was more or less indistinct and only a yard or so of pallid water was visible on either hand.

"Vineyard Haven tonight, by any chance?" he asked suddenly.

Appleyard shook his head decidedly. "Not unless we get a breeze stiff enough to blow this off."

"Then we'd better find an anchorage for the night?"

"Only thing to do. I'm willing to risk my valuable rep as a weather prophet, that this won't lift before morning."

"Tarpaulin Cove?"

Appleyard pursed his thin lips and rubbed his nose, considering. "Good enough anchorage," he admitted; "but for mub, I ain't strong for it. Menemsha Bight would do us more comfortably—across the Sound, you know, a bit east of Gay Head."

"Why Menemsha Bight?"

"Because there's an able-bodied and energetic fog bell at Tarpaulin. Take my advice. There'll be nothing but dead silence at the Bight, and it isn't much of a run over there."

"You know best. How shall I hold her?"

"Sou'east."

"So." Coast put the wheel over and brought the Echo round to that course, as indicated by the compass.

Monotonously the chronometer in the cabin knelled the half-hours. About two bells (five o'clock) Appleyard began to fidget uneasily. He knocked out his pipe and, jumping up, trotted forward to the bows, where, an arm embracing the mast, he remained for many minutes stubbornly peering ahead into dreary blankness.

After a while he returned, discouraged, an engine with the coil on the cylinder before! Oh—piffle!"

"Then I've been holding the wrong course for several hours."

"Prezactly."

"And you haven't any idea where we are?"

"Not a glimmer."

Thoroughly disheartened, Coast left the wheel. "Nice mess," he observed quietly.

Appleyard sighed profoundly. "The worst of it is, I'm a sawed-off little runt, too small for you to kick as I ought to be kicked . . . ."

"Yes," said Coast.

They dined simply and solemnly on cold things, after which Appleyard, at his own suggestion, took the first watch. "You need rest," he argued, "and I don't—rarely sleep over three hours a night. You turn in now and when your time's up I'll call you. There's nothing to worry about."

Coast was really very tired and little loath to be persuaded. He dropped off instantly into dreamless sleep.

At some time during the night he was disturbed by a heavy splashing under the bows. He roused just enough to appreciate where he was, and lay staring drowsily at the cabin lamp until (he seemed to have dozed off again and again awakened) he was aware of Appleyard's presence in the cabin.

"Hello," he yawned, staring at the little man's head and shoulders as he sat on the other transom, beyond the center-board trunk, busying himself over something invisible in his hands "What's up?"

"Sorry I waked you," returned Appleyard. His eyes flickered keenly over Coast's face for an instant "We drifted aground a few minutes ago," he explained in a perfunctory tone; "I pushed off with the sweep and anchored with a short cable."

"Whereabout d'you think we are?" Coast pursued sleepily.

"How should I know? Menemsha Bight for choice, but it might be anywhere along the Vineyard Coast—possibly Pasque—or No Man's Land."

"What's that?"

"No Man's Land? Oh, a little island south of Gay Head, 'bout as big's a handkerchief. Practically uninhabited."

Appleyard rose

"What you doing?" Coast yawned extravagantly.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

EMBALMING A SIX-TON ELEPHANT ACTRESS

NEW YORK.—"Basil the Great," better known as "Carrie," one of the elephants taking part in the show at the New York Hippodrome, died recently from pneumonia, at the age of 150 years. Her bones have been disposed of to the Museum of Natural History, and the body has been embalmed. "Carrie" was the first elephant brought to America to perform in a circus, sixty years ago. She was a contemporary of the great "Jumbo," whose skeleton is also in the museum.

WOMEN IN MASONRY

English Parson Forms Fraternity for Fair Sex.

Founder of Society Is Ridiculed by World for Admitting Females to Lodge—Masons Do Little but Eat Dinners.

London.—There is nothing in Masonry, according to Rev. Dr. Cobb, founder of the Honorable Fraternity of Ancient Masonry, that forbids the inclusion of women, and he adds that they are quite as capable of preserving the secrets of the society as the men. So women are admitted to his fraternity—and the rest of the Masonic world is laughing.

Dr. Cobb is the vicar of St. Ethelburga's, a tiny, picturesque, ancient church in the heart of the old city of London, and it was here a correspondent found him.

"I belonged to the Grand Lodge of England for many years," he said, "but I saw that few people took it seriously. Though, of course, they keep up a large number of charitable institutions, they do little else but eat dinners. Originally Masonry was a religious movement, which insisted that spiritual life was the most important. In the process of time, the spiritual side of Masonry has been lost to sight, and it has become too materialistic.

"Some years ago I was attracted to a form of Masonry practiced by Annie Besant, and, becoming interested in it, I joined. But I found her too autocratic altogether. All members were bound in obedience to her, and this seemed inconsistent with the spirit of Masonry, as I understood it. So I left her society, and some time after a few friends and I—we were five in all—decided to found a lodge of our own. Now we have 150.

"The aim of our fraternity and the aim of the church are identical. I take it that aim is to deepen the spiritual life. This being so, there is no argument that can be brought forward to uphold the exclusion of women. The term 'brotherhood' is a contradiction if it does not include them.

"There are a large number of unattached Masons, who, like myself, take no part in lodge activities, owing to the failure of English Masonry to satisfy their spiritual needs. Our order should meet their requirements, and in addition it enables the Mason to bring his wife and daughter into his Masonic life."

"What does the Grand Lodge of England say to your innovation?"

"Of course, they have called us to book severely about it. But I maintain that I have done nothing to violate the ancient traditions of Masonry. According to the rules, I took an oath to reveal the secrets of Masonry to none but Masons, and this I have kept. The members are initiated and all the proper ceremonies are carried out reverently.

"The objection raised by the Grand Lodge of England that no one is at liberty to establish a lodge without its consent is an old one. It is the plea that whatever is is right and that all attempt at reform is wrong. Such objections have been raised through all ages, dating from the time when the Pharisees objected to the preaching of Christ in Palestine.

"Furthermore, the feminist movement cannot be ignored. Looking back on the events of the last few years it can be seen how disastrous has been the absence of a policy as regards this movement, and the result has been a course of events of which no nation can be proud. Such a position is not one that Masonry can afford to risk. To exclude woman as a sex is to court early disaster, so let us be beforehand and welcome her gladly."

"And you find that women keep the great secret perfectly?"

"Perfectly," replied Dr. Cobb. "The secrets of Masonry cannot be told."

No Thorns on Blackberry

Luther Burbank Exhibits at Santa Rosa Result of Experiments Extending Over Ten Years.

San Francisco.—The thornless blackberry bush has arrived

Luther Burbank, after ten years of experimenting, has been able to produce a blackberry bush that is destitute of thorns. Yesterday afternoon, while Burbank was showing a party of Australian boys about his gardens at Santa Rosa, he said:

"Now I will show you something about which nothing has been said as yet. It is the thornless blackberry. It has not been distributed yet, and possibly will not be for some time. You see, I have to be careful about stating anything until it is a reality."

Burbank broke off some of the branches from the bush, and they were carefully examined by the visitors. There were no thorns visible, the surface of the branches being smooth as silk. The fruit is said to be of exquisite taste and quality.

Japan Wants Airship.

Paris.—The Japanese government is negotiating with French firms for the purchase of a gigantic airship of nearly 200 yards in length.

The particular airship the Japanese have in view is one that can fly at a rate of over 60 miles an hour in calm weather and carry 20 passengers and a supply of bombs and hand grenades.

Kansas Town Has Vanished

Slabtown Was Once Popular Village in Vicinity of Leavenworth, but Has Long Been Extinct.

Leavenworth, Kan.—Within a circle of ten miles of Leavenworth are the sites of half a dozen towns that were started with high hopes of their becoming future cities, flourished for awhile and then died. Were the history of these towns to be written, it would be a story of great interest, and would make a very large book.

Recently E. W. Snyder has purchased the site of one of these towns, originally East Leavenworth, but which in later years degenerated into "Slabtown." This land Mr. Snyder purchased from W. H. Burt of Rogers, Tex. Mr. Snyder already owned a large tract of land adjoining Slabtown and wanted this tract to square up the land he already owned.

The site of the town is nearly opposite the Ryan ice plant, and it is there that the old ferry landed passengers before the terminal bridge was built. In looking over the abstract, Mr. Snyder found that the town was platted in 1869, and that it was laid out by Hervey L. Bickford, formerly a prominent citizen here and now dead.

Slabtown was an ambitious town in those days and had its numbered streets in one direction and its Chestnut street, its Broadway and others. Its lots were but 25 feet wide, showing that the land was valuable over there.

Here was located the station of the Missouri River railroad, afterward the Kansas City and St Louis railroad. There were two stores, five or six saloons, a post office and about 150 people in the town at one time.

In plowing the land for wheat a short time ago Mr. Snyder's tenant uncovered a large brick cistern in a good state of preservation, the foundations of two store buildings and any number of broken bottles, showing where the saloons were located. All of these were covered from sight until the plow passed over them. Had they remained undisturbed for a few centuries some antiquarian, digging them up, would have thought he had discovered the remains of an ancient civilization—and he would have missed it.

The abstract also shows that around the townsite were located several subdivisions and small tracts, showing that there was probably, at some time, a big real estate boom in Slabtown. What hopes, what aspirations, what disappointments centered in this little town during its existence!

But Slabtown passed away long ago. The station has been moved twice, each time being taken over nearer the bluffs, and the houses of the original town tumbled down or were moved, the last one disappearing several years ago.

Joy At End of Her Voyage

Gloucester Man Greets His Bride-Elect as Big Steamer Docks—Couple Soon Made Man and Wife.

Philadelphia.—For a week Arthur Owens, an iron worker employed at the plant of the New York Shipbuilding company in Camden, has carried about with him a marriage license while about every hour he was looking up steamship arrivals. The steamer Haverford warped into her dock at Washington street and Owens got his reward for all his patient waiting, when a pair of pretty eyes caught sight of him from the deck and their fair owner waved a happy salute.

In a jiffy, or as soon as the red tape of the steamer landing could be unwound, Owens and Miss Theresa Maher, who had come from England for the very purpose, were in each other's arms. As fast as boat and carriage could carry them they were in Gloucester, at Owens' home, at 216 Warren street, and there they were made one. The lovers' troth had been kept. Miss Catherine Connolly was bridesmaid, and Joseph Connolly the best man. Mr. Owens is chief ranger of Court Washington, Foresters of America, of Gloucester.

Big Fish Show in Paris.

Paris.—Many countries are represented in the international fisheries exhibition which opened in Paris the other day. The exhibition is under the control of the French government. It will continue open until the end of the year.

Defective Page

The Northern Light

CHAS. W. LATTA

Editor and Publisher.

Published every Friday at Holt, Marshall County, Minnesota.

Subscription Price: $1.00 per year, strictly in advance.

Entered as second-class matter Sept. 22, 1911, at the post office at Holt, Minnesota, under the act of March 3, 1879.

Be a booster—not a knocker.

Congress is in session again and the people may look for a long and scrappy session on account of the struggle between the parties for political prestige. The approach of a presidential election will make them all play to the grand stand, with the president leading the play.

The Northern Minnesota Development Association is having its fifth meeting today at St. Cloud. It may or may not ask for an extra session of the legislature, but we believe it will make a noise that will leave no doubt in the governor's mind as to what the people of northern Minnesota want, and are going to have if it costs the political lives of a whole lot of the presont office holders.

The McNamara brothers sprung a grand sensational climax by entering pleas of guilty to the Los Angeles dynamiting outrages. One has been given a life sentence and the other a 15-year term in the penitentiary. Their arrest last summer caused a furore in the ranks of organized labor and the socialist party. When arrested they claimed to be innocent, and, having a high standing in labor circles, their word was accepted by unions and socialists everywhere. Immense sums of money were raised for their defense and the methods of the detectives and public prosecutors were bitterly assailed as outrages against human rights and liberty, perpetrated only because the accused men were union labor officals and enemies to alleged corrupt governmental system. They were held up as martyrs to political persecution, and in many places socialists rode into office because of the cry that the McNamaras were being railroaded to the gallows. Their pleas of guilty have changed all this and voters deserted the socialist ranks by thousands in Los Angeles. The case, as it has developed, will be a severe blow to socialism and nnionism all over the country; not because of the faith shown in the McNamaras, but because of the readiness to preach to the uninformed as facts the doctrine tnat the McNamaras were persecuted innocents, and that their persecution was for the purpose of destroying the work of the unions to better the conditions of the laboring classes. The pleas of guilty have opened the eyes of thousands who will hesitate before again accepting some of the socialistic utterances as straight facts.

Farms Wanted.

I have prospective buyers for a few good improved farms; also for 960 acres of wild land. All must be in eastern Marshall county.

CHAS. W. LATTA, Holt, Minn.

Scholarship for Sale Cheap

We have for sale, cheap for cash, a scholarship good for three months tuition in Crookston College, and for any subject at any time. It is worth $30 but will be sold for considerably less as we need the cash.

Call or address The Northern Light, Holt, Minn.

Enamelled kitchenware at Kolden's. Triple coated, white lined and the best bargains you ever knew, 10 and 69 cents only, while they last.

For a holiday gift why not send this paper for a year to a friend? It would please the friend and help to boost this community. Call and get acquainted with our attractive Special Offer for such subscriptions.

We want more subscribers and will take potatoes, chickens, or wood at current market prices on subscription. Of course we prefer the money, but if you haven't the cash bring on the produce. Dont be without your home paper anyway.

M. A. NELSON, M. D.

PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON

Office over Holt Merc. Co's store

HOLT, MINNESOTA.

Your Wife and Children

Are entitled to some Christmas Presents this Year.

In making a selection for your wife or daughter why not come and see our Big Line of ROCKERS and LADIES' DESKS? They make ideal Christmas Gifts and thoir Prices are Very Reasonable.

We carry a complete line of Musical Instruments and Supplies. Mail orders receive our prompt and careful attention.

TORRISON BROS.

THIEF RIVER FALLS, MINN.

THE DULUTH HERALD

BEATS THE CENSUS THREE TO ONE

During the past ten years the population of Duluth increased 48 per cent., St. Paul 32 per cent., and Minneapolis 49 per cent. In the Same Period the Circulation of The Duluth Herald

INCREASED 150 PER CENT.

This marvelous expansion—so much greater than that of the surrounding territory—is due solely to the merits of The Herald. The Herald has never used any kind of premium, contest, or price reduction to gain subscribers but prints each day the very best NEWSPAPER in the Northwest. Its editorial page is thoroughly independent and its news columns cover every feature of the world's daily history.

Send for sample copy and get The Herald habit.

THREE MONTHS FOR $1.00—Mailed Daily.

ADDRESS HERALD CIRCULATION DEPT., DULUTH, MINN.

Plenty Railroads Coming

The air is full of railroad rumors and, if they are all true, the people out in the Mud Lake region will soon be kept busy dodging the cars.

The St. Paul Pioneer Press last week published a story to the effect that the Minneapolis & St. Louis railway had just completed a preliminary survey for a new line from the twin cities to Winnipeg. The route was mentioned as running through eastern Polk, Pennington, Marshall and Roseau counties in a pretty direct line from Bagley to Winnipeg. Commenting on this the Thief River Press says: "The exact meaning of this may be a matter of conjecture but it is certain that the country east of here will have two railroads instead of one before next year at this time."

And the Warroad Pioneer says: "There is a well defined rumor to the effect that the Great Northern is figuring on building a new line direct line from Thief River Falls to Warroad, passing through the big drainage district in eastern Marshall county, east of Thief Lake, and crossing the head waters of the Roseau river. This, it is said, would be to head off the Minneapolis & St. Louis from occupying that territory. As the country through which the new line passes is considerably better than the country along the present line of the G. N. up this way, especially the southern part of it, it is possible that there may be some foundation to the rumor. The Great Northern is usually pretty slow in surrendering any of its territory to a competitor—at least it seldom does so without a fight. A direct line would cut down the distance between this city and Thief River Falls by about twenty-five miles."

"TIGER" WAS HARMLESS.

The rumor that a huge tiger was stalking the Chiltern district of Victoria, Aus., caused considerable panic there recently. Mothers were afraid to let their children out of their sight, and for a few days the schools were unattended. The other day matters reached a climax when a forest-worker returned to the Chiltern village badly scared, and declaring that he had sighted the tiger. A hunting party was organized, who followed the animal's tracks. Suddenly to the horror of the party, just when they had entered the grounds of a private estate, the "wanted" beast suddenly bounded toward them. But fortunately before shots were fired, it was discovered that the supposed "tiger" was only an innocent large mastiff, whose coat bore stripes very like those of the real jungle animal.

LIGHT AS BARRIER TO EELS.

The Danish government has begun an interesting effort to aid the fishermen of the Baltic by preventing the migration of eels from that sea into the ocean. The means employed is a "barrier of light," formed by placing fifty electric lamps along a submerged cable between the island of Fano and the coast of Funen. The effectiveness of such a barrier depends upon the fact that the eels migrate only during the dark hours. Accordingly, as soon as darkness begins, in the season of migration, the lamps are illuminated, and thus a wall of light is interposed from which the eels recoil. A similar principle is said to have been employed from time immemorial by fishermen on certain parts of the coast of Italy

BLUEBERRIES AND CLAMS.

It is a far cry from clams to blueberries, but nevertheless they are pretty closely related to each other just at present. The clam supply is not over abundant now, and all because the blueberries are ripening. There are many places down the bay where blueberries are to be secured. The men who ordinarily dig clams are picking the berries and making a good penny, so they do not give their attention to the bivalves.—Portland Press.

VICTIMS OF FASHION.

Lady in Hobble—Why, hello Mary. How are you?

Lady in Hat—Oh, I'm out of sight. How are you?

Hobble—Well, I can't kick.—Scribner's.

HE WAS ON HIS WAY BACK

Story of the Man Just Out of the Penitentiary and the Loquacious Barber.

This story is blamed on Scamp Montgomery at the Friar's club. Mr. Montgomery alleges that the story, as he relates it, actually happened. Mr. Montgomery's statement is offered without prejudice.

"A man had just been released from the penitentiary," said Mr. Montgomery, "and the first place he headed for was a barber shop. He wanted to get the traces of his prison-made haircut rubbed down smooth. The barber spotted him in a minute.

"'Just out, hey?' said the barber.

"'Yes,' said the customer. 'And I'm in a hurry. Give me a haircut and a shave, and do it quick.'

"'How long have you been in?'

"'Four years,' said the ex-prisoner. Hurry.'

"'How did you like it?'

"'Pretty good. Hurry.'

"'Have to work hard?'

"'Never mind. Hurry.'

"'Four years,' said the barber, pausing to look romantically out of the window. 'And me at liberty every blame minute, goin' hither an' you, as you might say, and stayin' up all night if I wanted to, and runnin' down town to take in a show. Gee! Four years. That's sure tough luck. What was you in for?'

"'For killing a jackass of a barber,' howled the customer. 'And I'm on my way back.'"—Cincinnati Times-Star.

CAREER OF HEROISM CLOSES

Passing of Mrs. Janet Helen King, Who Was Angel of Mercy on Many Battlefields.

A career of heroism on the battlefields of Europe and Africa has closed by the death of Mrs. Janet Helen King of Purley, Middlesex, England. When only about nineteen years old she was one of a party sent out to assist in nursing the troops engaged in the war between Russia and Turkey. After the party lost its way, and the night was passed in open carts, bitter cold and the howling of wolves effectually preventing sleep. To Sister Janet's care were allotted some 200 patients who lay in huts scattered amongst the hills. Daily as she trudged through the snow from hut to hut on her mission of mercy, she was exposed to attacks from the wild dogs that infested Bulgaria. More than once these brutes had her down, but her stick and dagger protected her until her cries brought assistance. At the close of the war she received the Imperial Order of the Red Cross of Russia. She went out, too, to the Zulu war, and at Utrecht 3,200 sick and wounded passed through her hands.

CHILD SAVED SISTER.

Little five-year-old Mauguerite Mainguage, whose father is a farmer at Larouchevres, in Auvergne, France, is a real heroine. She was playing with her young sister Genevieve recently, when the child fell into a deep part of a brook. Genevieve picked herself up, but the water was up to her face as she stood. She cried out for help. Marguerite held her, and at last succeeded in pulling her out of the brook. When their mother and some neighbors arrived and heard the whole exciting story they were amazed at the marvelous presence of mind and energy displayed by this child of five. Her brave conduct is to be rewarded by the authorities with a medal for saving life.

MIGHT INCRIMINATE HIM?

"Any of you at church last Sunday evening?" queried the bald-headed boarder.

It appeared that nobody present had been there.

"Well, the preacher, as it seemed to me, took advantage of my being in the audience to say this: 'Will all persons in this congregation who feel that they are saved please rise?'".

"Well, did you rise?" queried the inquisitive boarder.

"I refuse to answer."

WHAT SHE DROVE.

"And what do you drive?" asked the woman who came to the party in an electric runabout.

"Nothing but my husband," answered the other lady.—Detroit Free Press.

V-I-V-O

The Best there is in Flour.

Our Elevator and Lumber Yard are always prepared to give the most satisfactory service.

Hanson & Barzen Milling Co.,

OSCAR HANSON, Agent, - - HOLT, MINN.

AXEL NELSON

General Blacksmith Work

HOLT, - - MINN.

All work done Right, at Reasonable Prices.

The Evergreen Hotel

P. A. RESBERG, PROP.

Rates, $1.00 per day.

Serves the best Meal in Eastern Marshall Co. for twenty-five cents.

Livery and Feed Barn in connection.

Red Lake Falls Milling Co.

Makers of the Celebrated

Mascot Fl0ur

and bUYERS of all kinds of GRAIN.

Our Elevator will give you Satisfaction.

NELS ENGEBRETSEN, Agent - - - Holt, Minn.

Bring us your Job Printing orders

Crookston College...

Is the Leading Business School in the Northwest.

OUR TEACHERS Are all College and University Graduates.

FINANCIAL STANDING It is back d by a capital of $50,000 which is a safe guarantee to its students that every promise will be fulfilled.

ACTUAL BUSINESS The only school in Northern Minnesota having an actual business department:

BOARD and ROOM Can be had in private families for $3 per week. Other school towns will charge from $4 to $6.

POSITIONS The demand upon us for office help is greater than we can supply.

Catalogue and further information given free by writing.

J. C. SATHRE, Crookston, Minn.

Local Items

The Local Market.

(Grain prices furnished by Hanson & Barzen Milling Co. at close of business every Thursday.)

Flax	$1.83
Wheat	.88
Barley d	.91
Oats	.38
Rye	.75

Bring us the news.

When in town call at this office and let's get acquainted.

Willie Werner transacted business at Thief River Falls on Monday.

Mrs Isaac Garfe transacte business at Thief River Falls last Wednesday.

The Misses Clara and Bella Solum went to Thief River Fall yesterday for a short visit.

There will be a special meeting of the children in the Holt church next Sunday to prepare for Christmas.

Miss Larson, who is teaching a term of school at Randen, was the guest of friends here over Sunday.

Miss Emma Backe was up from Thief River Falls between trains Saturday visiting with her relatives here.

S. Svenkeson and John Stensrud went to Thier River Falls Wednesday on a combined business and pleasure trip.

The Young Peoples Society will have a basket party at the Dovre schoolhouse at 7:30 this evening. Everybody invited.

Fred Johnson returned yesterday from Winnipeg where he spent the past couple of weeks visiting and attending to some business matters.

Attend the big basket party and dance at the Woodman hall in Holt next Saturday evening, the 16 inst. There will be a good time for sure.

Julius Olson is here from Strathcona for a visit with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Mat Olson. He expects to return next week and spend the winter logging.

Services with Communion will be held in the Holt church on Sunday the 17th inst at 10:30 A. M. On the same day children's meeting will be held at 2 P. M.

Miss Cora Gustison, representing the Mutual Life Insurance Co. of New York, was a business visitor here yesterday from Fargo. She got some of the young men interested ans may come again soon.

The next item in the entertainment line will be a big basket party and dance to be given at the Woodman hall in Holt on Saturday evening, the 16th inst. There will be a big crowd and a jolly good time. Ladies bring in the baskets and the boys will come of their own accord.

Be a booster—not a knocker.

Subscribe for The Northern Light. Only $1.00 per year.

Miss Clara Bakke was an over Snnday visitor at the Backe home.

Miss Esther Erickson was an over Sunday visitor at the Sam Mickelson home.

Miss Mabel Simonson was here from Excel and spent Sunday with friends.

Special subscription offer from now until January 1st. Call at this office for particulars.

Carl Surmo went to Thief River Falls last Wednesday to attend to some important business.

S. O. Anderson came over from Warren on Tuesday and went to his claim in section 1 of Agder township.

Miss Tena Kendly, of Thief River Falls, came up Saturday and went out to visit with her sister, Mrs. Christ Evenson.

The members of Nazareth congregation will hold an important meeting at the church next Monday, All members are urged to attend.

The Ladies Aid of the Mud Lake region will meet with Mrs. Christ Norbeck next Tuerday afternoon. Rev Ordahl will hold services at the same time and place.

E. T. Eide has finished up his season's work in the hay baling and shipping line here and has gone to Spooner to give his personal attetion to his feed store there.

Tomorrow evening at Woodman hall Ludvig Monson and Gilbert Thompson will wrestle for the Mud Lake region championship. The match promises to be a good oue and should draw a full house.

Christmas Candies—We carry a very complete line of finest candies for the holiday trade. In packages at prices from 5 cents to $10.00. Mail orders given speciat attention. J. A. SWORE, Thief River Falls, Minn.

John Stensrud, is here from Maddock, N. D., visiting with his brother, Hans Stensrud, of Mud Lake, for a few days. He was formerly a resident of this vicinity and is pleased to note the great progress of the community recently. He expects to return to his Dakota home the first of next week.

Haakon Hanson, for nearly thirty years town clerk of Holt township, died last week at his home of consumption. His funeral was held on Friday last and was very iargely attended. T. B. Folden, formerly town treasurer, has been appointed clerk, and Nels Engebretsen takes the treasurership.

Mr. and Mrs. A. S. Bornstein and children came in from their Mud Lake homestead yesterday and Mrs. Bornstein and the youngest son left for Carpenter, Ia., on the sad mission of attending her mother's funeral. A message was received Wednesday telling of the death and stating that the funeral would be held Friday but giving no further particulars.

Special Christmas Announcement Next Week

It will pay you to Watch for it

HOLT MERCANTILE Co.,

"The Big New Store"

Rode Bull Moose to Death

When it comes to exciting experiences in hunting big game we believe that Svenke Svenkeson can lay claim to the prize thriller for northern Minnesota this year.

Svenke was out after big game and was accompanied by Hans and John Stensrud. They had wandered quite a distance into Beltrami county before they met up with the big chief of the moose tribe. Svenke made up his mind that he wanted the moose's head but the moose was in no hurry to part with it. The moose stamped at Svenske and whistled, and Svenke and his companions dodged behind convenient trees and proceeded to fill the bull's hide with lead. That kind of treatment was sickening to ahe moose and he ambled off to a quiet spot and lay down to sleep. But he had not correctly estimated Svenkeson's bloodthirsty nature nor the longing his beautiful horns had inspired. Svenke crept upon him as be lay and, jumping on his neck, attempted to cut his throat. No self-respecting moose could be expected to tamely submit to such an insult and assault. This one was plain scared and ran for his life. Svenke was scared too, but the moose didn't know it. He had straddled the animal's neck and went into the air and through it at an awful pace with his left arm entwined in the antlers he coveted. He doesnt say whether he held on so tight because he was afraid to let go or not. He owns up to having said what fragments of his prayers he could remember and then calling the moose pet names in nine different languages. A little later the Stensrud boys came upon a big moose lyinf dead with Svenke looking vainly for the knife which a gaping wound in the bull's throat showed had caused his death. They proceeded to sever the head and found that Svenke had landed an uppercut with his knife through the bull's neck ahd right into his spine a little back of rhe ears. They took the head to Thief River Falls to have it mounted Saturday.

Svenke may now be considered scare proof. He is very proud of his moose head, but does not deny that he took a mean advantage of the moose.

Triple coated enamelled kitchen ware at only 10 cents per piece is a bargain that you never had before. S. S. Kolden & Co.

Wm Steinhauer and Albert Westphal returned Saturday from a very successful hunting trip over in Beltrami county. Each got a big moose and a deer, which is all the law permits.

Ferdinand Heinze, formerly a well known resident here, was visiting his brothers in this township for several days and went to Straehcona on Tuesday to join his wife and little daughter.

Crookston College has placed all its graduates in positions. The demand for office help has been greater than we could supply. School is in session all year. You can begin at any time of year. Good board and furnished room, taken care of in private family, for $3 per week. Send for catalog. Address J. C. Sathre, Crookston, Minn.

Casper Smith, of Brookville, Ind., arrived here on Tuesday and remained until Thursday looking after matters on his land about six miles northeast of Holt. He comes here once or twice every year and says he is surprised at the wonderful develpement of this territory. He bought his land some time ago at a low figure and says it is not for sale just at present as he believes it will soon double its present value.

CORK VARNISH FOR SHIPS.

In order to protect the interior of ships from the humidity caused by condensation upon the metallic walls during sudden changes of temperature, the Italian marine has experimented with a kind of hygroscopic varnish or coating the essential compound of which is ground cork, which is consolidated by pressure with copal and litharge and applied to the walls. It has been found that the cork varnish absorbs the watery vapor of the atmosphere to the extent of eight or nine grammes for every square meter of surface exposed.—Scientific American.

MUSIC OF EERIE MADNESS

Hearer Was Enthusiastic But Violinist Was Only Putting on a New E String.

Walter Damrosch, at a dinner in Chicago, praised the music of Debussy.

"I see with gratification," he said, "that Debussy has had a great success in his score for the Martyrdom of Saint Sebastian, the mystery play that he and Gabriele d'Annunzio have just produced together in Paris.

"I am glad that Debussy's music is succeeding. It is such beautiful, simple music, music a child can understand. It isn't like most of our modern music, which puzzles people to death."

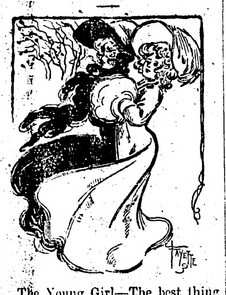
Mr. Damrosch smiled.

"A lady at a musical at Long Branch," he said, "approached a celebrated violinist and exclaimed enthusiastically:

"'I so admired that last piece you played! It had a kind of wild, free beauty—an eerie madness that thrilled me to the heart. Was it, may I ask, your own composition?'

"'Madam,' the other answered coldly, 'I was putting a new E string on my violin.'"—Washington Star.

RIGHT



The Young Girl—The best thing to seal a proposal is a kiss, is it not?

The Widow—No; a witness.

D. B. Bakke, Pres. S. S. Kolden, Vice-pres.

HOLT STATE BANK

Incorporated 1910. Resources over $50,000

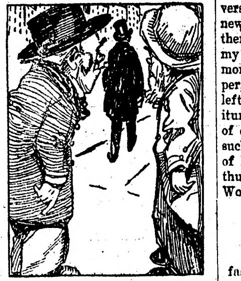
We have a limited amount of the five and ten Kroner Scandinavian money on hand special for this season of the year. We also issue foreign money orders on all parts of the world.

The past season has, no doubt, been a successful one for you and we cordially invite you to place your hard earned cash on deposit with this bank. By placing the money with us you have the right to draw it out at any time you may need it regardless whether left solely as a time deposit or subject to check; and, in case you have no immediate use for it, we will pay you 4 per cent interest on a time deposit left for a period of six months and 5 per cent for twelve months.

Think it over. Nothing to worry about. Your money earning money for you without any more exertion on your part than to step into the bank and draw your interest at every terminal period, whether six or twelve months.

B. L. BACKE, Cashier.

A NEW NAME FOR IT



O'Brien—An' phwat sart av a doc thor is Docthor Dunn?

O'Toole—Sure they till me he's one av them homely Pathricks.

WHERE COLLEGE MEN LIVE HIGH.

"When I was in the Imperial university here in Tokyo," a Japanese newspaper man said to me, "my father gave me $3 a month. I paid for my room, light and food $1.20 a month; for tuition, 50 cents; for paper, books, etc., 30 cents; and this left me $1 for pocket money expenditures, including the occasional treat of eating potatoes with sugar!" In such Spartan simplicity the victors of Mukden, Liaoyang and Port Arthur were bred.—Clarence Poe, in World's Work.

RETORT COURTEOUS.

He—Women are such slaves to fashions. Look what tight skirts they get!

She—And men are such slaves to passions. Look how tight they get themselves!

BIG REMOVAL SALE

We have been notified to vacate the building we occupy with our Hardware Stock and before we move we will have a

Two-weeks' Sale on Hardware and Furniture

Commencing Monday, Dec. 11, Ending Saturday, December 23.

Sweeping Reductions in Prices will be made on everything in the lines named. It will be a great Cash Sale and you Can't Afford to let it pass.

S. S. KOLDEN & Co.

HOLT, - - MINNESOTA

Defective Page

W. L. DOUGLAS' TRUST PLA

Manufacturer Thinks Government Should Obtain Publicity by a License System.

Large business organizations have come to stay. We cannot go back to old conditions. We must meet world competition. Large concerns can produce goods at lower cost than small ones. Germany favors large corporations. The method of the present national administration is to dissolve the great organizations and make them smaller, which is a backward step. There should be no limit to a corporation doing a large and legitimate business, such as would be possible under the licensing plan which I favor, writes W. L. Douglas, former governor of Massachusetts, in the Boston Herald.

Prejudices against corporations merely because they are big, perhaps, must be done away with. They give labor better returns. They cheapen product and thus benefit the consumer. They give opportunities to small investors who get returns otherwise unattainable. They employ able young men who have no capital at all, but who receive handsome salaries for their ability and service.

In place of the Sherman law it is my opinion there should be a department at Washington to grant licenses to all manufacturers and corporations in this country who do an interstate commerce business.

The law should be made so clear, plain and definite that it could not be misunderstood. It should require all capital to be paid in full. Semi-yearly statements should be given to the public and certified by a public accountaint. There should be a board of examiners in each state to look after these corporations just as our national banks are watched by the national government. They should have the right to enter the offices and examine the records of all the directorates of these companies.

No Insomnia Here.

Mrs. Eastside—Now that you've got so rich I should think you'd be afraid of burglars.

Mrs. McSwimm—Sure, I'm not afeared at all, at all. I've 15 alram clocks set so that one will go off every halfhour during th' night. Whin a burglar hears one o' them he niver sthops to take anything wid him.

Mrs. Eastside—But don't they keep you awake?

Mrs. McSwimm—No, indade. Its not us would be waked up by a little thing like that. Before John got th' pipe contract I used to be a kitchen leddy, and John was a policeman in Philadelphia.—New York Weekly.

A USEFUL XMAS GIFT
for man, woman or child is a good fountain pen. Waterman's Ideal is the best pen made and the one that is most imitated, therefore insist on the genuine. Sold by all good dealers.

A Flat.

"Did the singer succeed in getting what suited her in an apartment?"

"Oh, yes. She told me she had a suite thing in A flat."

Stiff neck! Doesn't amount to much, but mighty disagreeable. You will be surprised to see how quickly Hamlins Wizard Oil will drive that stiffness out. One night, that's all.

A woman may not be able to reform the man she marries, but she is reasonably sure to inform him.

Somehow or other the fellow who knows it all is never the one who wins the bets.

Constipation causes many serious diseases. It is thoroughly cured by Doctor Pierce's Pleasant Pellets. One a laxative, three for cathartic.

No man is ever quite as helpless as a woman without a pin.

Fargo Directory

KODAKS and KODAK SUPPLIES
Write for catalogues and literature. We do developing and printing. Mail orders given prompt attention.
FARGO DRUG CO., FARGO, N. D.

Dakota Business College
LARGEST and FINEST between CHICAGO AND THE COAST.
FARGO, NORTH DAKOTA

HIGHEST CASH PRICES
PAID FOR SWEET AND SOUR CREAM
Prompt payment, honest test, guaranteed return of cans. FARGO ICE CREAM & CIDER COMPANY. Largest creamery in the northwest.

WE MAKE RUGS
FROM YOUR OLD CARPETS
Write for information. Solicitors wanted.
FARGO CARPET & RUG CO., 103 8th St. So., Fargo

Shotwell Floral Co.
Growers and shippers of cut flowers, plants, etc. Write for catalog. Funeral designs on short notice. Phone day or night. Fargo, N. D.

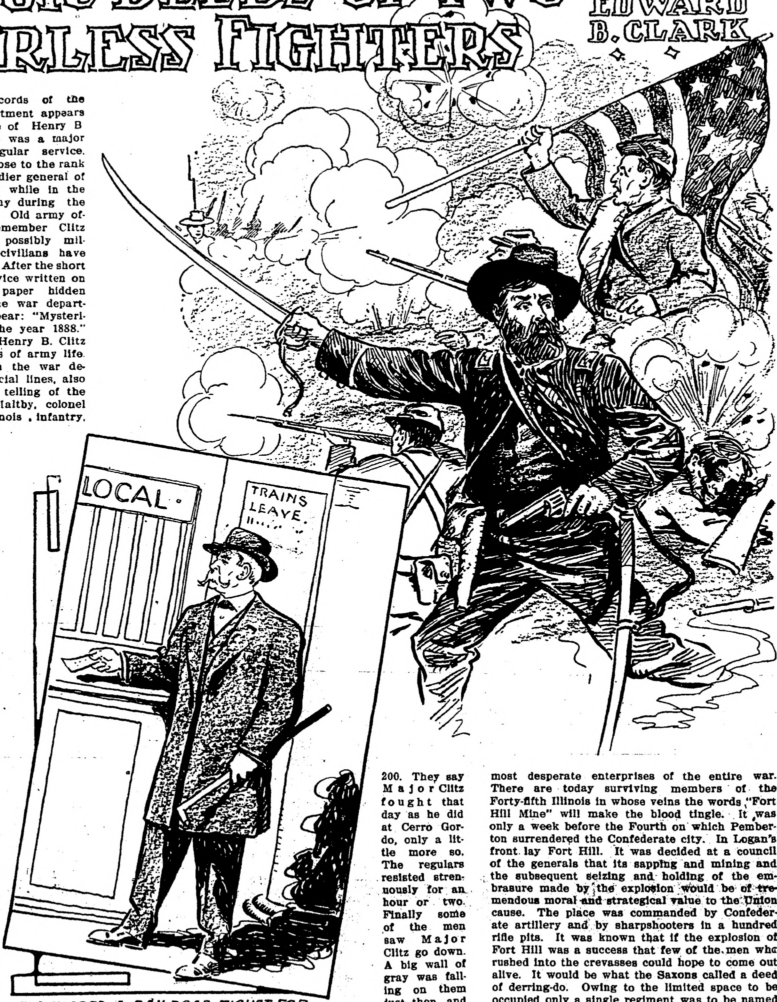
FARGO TANNERY
Receives hides and skins for tanning to harness leather, robes and coats. Robes lined, hides bought, leather and robes for sale. SEND FOR PRICE LIST.
Andrew Monson, Proprietor, Fargo Tannery
Fargo, North Dakota

MONUMENTS
500 to stock. Write for Catalog.
FARGO MARBLE & GRANITE WORKS, N. P. Ave., Fargo, N. D.

THE NELSON NATUROPATHIC INSTITUTE
NO. 1 NORTH BROADWAY, FARGO, N. D.
A strictly drugless institution, with the very best modern appliances for treating chronic disease, including paralysis and tuberculosis in early stages. Consultation free. Write for particulars.

HEROIC DEEDS OF TWO FEARLESS FIGHTERS

by EDWARD B. CLARK



PURCHASED A RAILROAD TICKET FOR A LAKE CITY

IN the records of the war department appears the name of Henry B Clitz, who was a major in the regular service, and who rose to the rank of a brigadier general of volunteers while in the Union army during the Civil war. Old army officers remember Clitz well, but possibly millions of civilians have well nigh forgotten him. After the short official story of his service written on the now time-stained paper hidden away in a vault of the war department, these words appear: "Mysteriously disappeared in the year 1888." The disappearance of Henry B. Clitz is one of the mysteries of army life.

On other records in the war department are brief official lines, also on time-stained paper, telling of the career of Jasper A. Maltby, colonel of the Forty-fifth Illinois infantry, more familiarly known in the darker days of the country's history as the "Washburn's Lead Mine Regiment." Maltby's name was brought back not long ago sharply to memory by the death of his widow in St. Luke's hospital, Chicago. She was a little snow-haired woman who had borne life's burdens for just the time allotted by the Psalmist. During the days that this woman lay ill at the hospital of the Beloved Physician, if her eyes wandered about the walls of her room, it is probable that for the first time in many years when within any room chosen by her as an abiding place, they failed to rest upon the folds of an American flag.

The stories of Generals Clitz and Maltby were stories of sterling patriotism, of action and of wounds received in the discharge of duty. Mystery has added its interest to the life's story of Major Clitz, perhaps one should say to his death's story, though there is always a possibility that at a great age the major somewhere in some condition still has left in him a spark of the spirit of life which moved him to soldier deeds.

Recently a brigadier general of the regular service, many years retired, came to Washington. In the lobby of a hotel he met a veteran as grizzled and wrinkled as he, but still of an upright physical bearing. The general looked at the man a moment actually aghast and then with words that came out in the disorder of a "route step" gasped:

"John I heard you were dead. I would as soon have thought of meeting Clitz."

The two had been subalterns in Clitz's regiment during the Civil war and after, and had loved him. It was perhaps the flashing thought of an anniversary of a disappearance at hand that sent the returned soldier's thought to Major Clitz when in the lobby of a Washington hotel he met the former comrade, who he had heard was dead. The army archives bear no stranger records than that of this case of General Henry B. Clitz—he was only a major, however, when he won distinction by his gallantry. It is twenty-three years ago now that Major Clitz was lost. Twenty-three years, but a man may be found after twenty-three years.

Major Henry B. Clitz, Twelfth infantry, U. S. A., was once dead and buried and was alive again, was lost, and—the other word that should naturally fit here is either yet to be supplied, or forever is to remain unwritten. There are scores of soldiers today, old soldiers—but once a soldier always a soldier—who, in the memory of what happened after Gaines Mills, think that one day they may again clasp this side of the grave the hand of Comrade Clitz.

Henry B. Clitz of Michigan entered West Point in the year 1841, graduating four years after. He was a schoolmate of Grant, McClellan, Sheridan and Burnside. Clitz went into the Mexican war and won praise on the field and a brevet rank afterward for conspicuous gallantry at Cerro Gordo. Clitz was a fighter. He proved this fact every time he had a chance, and during his forty-five years of service he had chances in plenty.

When the Civil war had been on for a time Clitz found himself major of the Twelfth regulars. He was transferred to that outfit from the Third, another fighting regiment. It came along toward the time of Mechanicsville and Gaines Mills. The Twelfth and the Fourteenth were lying pretty close together. When the Gaines Mills battle was on and war's hurricane was at its height the Twelfth and the Fourteenth were given a position to hold. The two regiments were attacked by overwhelming numbers, but the numbers weren't overwhelming for a long time. There wasn't any retreat in the make-up of those two regiments of regular infantry. The wave of battle simply had to come down on them and engulf them. Afterward when General Sykes wrote a report about the Twelfth and Fourteenth and the fight that they put up he said the ranks of the Twelfth were "decimated." General Sykes had probably never studied "English Lessons for English People." Unless things have changed, decimated means the cutting out of one in ten. This is the way the Twelfth was "decimated." It went into the fight with 470 men; came out with 200. They say Major Clitz fought that day as he did at Cerro Gordo, only a little more so. The regulars resisted strenuously for an hour or two. Finally some of the men saw Major Clitz go down. A big wall of gray was falling on them just then, and many others went down too. When the fight was over, and afterward, when some order came out of the chaotic hell, this report was turned in by General Sykes: "The Twelfth and Fourteenth were attacked by overwhelming numbers. The ranks were decimated, and Major Clitz was severely if not fatally injured. Around his fate, still shrouded in mystery, hangs the painful apprehension that a career so noble, so soldierly, so brave, has terminated on that field whose honor he so gallantly upheld."

Major Clitz went on the list of the dead and what was left of his regiment mourned him as few soldiers are mourned.

Suitable orders were issued lamenting the death of this hero of Cerro Gordo and Gaines Mills, but before the period of the real mourning was over, though the official kind had been over for months, the dead came to life again. Major Clitz had been shot through both legs and in one or two other places, but on his showing a few signs of life the Confederates made a prisoner of him and sent him to Libby.

Major Clitz was paroled. When he went back into the service again and when the war was over he put in twenty years campaigning on the plains. In 1885 he retired after nearly half a century of service, and went to live in Detroit, Mich. Two years later his old command, with which he had stood in the bullet storm at Gaines Mills, passed through Detroit on its way to take station at the posts of the great lakes. There were not many then in the Twelfth who were in it in the old days, but it was the same outfit with the same old tattered regimental banners.

Major (then General) Clitz met the command and old memories stirred him to tears. The Twelfth cheered its old officer and then Detroit was left behind.

Was it the stirring of old memories or what was it? His old comrades in arms had been gone but a little while when Major Clitz went to the railroad station from which the train bearing the soldiers pulled out, and there purchased a railroad ticket for a lake city which held a garrison of United States troops. From the hour of the purchase of that ticket no one has been found, soldier or civilian, to say that he has ever seen Major Henry B. Clitz. The army records give in detail the story of his gallantry in battle, and at the end of the shining record are these words, "Mysteriously disappeared in the year 1888."

There was no mystery of disappearance in the case of Brigadier General Jasper A. Maltby. He died as the result of wounds received in action. His widow who survived him many years and who died at St. Luke's hospital in Chicago held the American flag and her husband's memory as the most cherished things in life. Neither was ever long absent from her mind.

How many men are there today, bar a few old soldiers, to whom the name Jasper A. Maltby would mean anything unless it were coupled, as is the above, with some specific information? Yet this man Jasper A. Maltby was chosen by General Grant, on the advice of McPherson and Logan, to lead, with his single regiment, the most desperate enterprise in the siege of Vicksburg, and, as some historians have it, one of the three most desperate enterprises of the entire war. There are today surviving members of the Forty-fifth Illinois in whose veins the words "Fort Hill Mine" will make the blood tingle. It was only a week before the Fourth on which Pemberton surrendered the Confederate city. In Logan's front lay Fort Hill. It was decided at a council of the generals that its sapping and mining and the subsequent seizing and holding of the embrasure made by the explosion would be of tremendous moral and strategical value to the Union cause. The place was commanded by Confederate artillery and by sharpshooters in a hundred rifle pits. It was known that if the explosion of Fort Hill was a success that few of the men who rushed into the crevasses could hope to come out alive. It would be what the Saxons called a deed of derring-do. Owing to the limited space to be occupied only a single regiment was to be named to jump into the great yawning hole after the explosion and to hold it against the hell fire of the enemy until adequate protective works could be thrown up.

There was as many volunteers for the enterprise as there were colonels of regiments in Grant's army. The choice fell on Jasper A. Maltby and his following of Illinois boys.

The time came for the explosion. The Forty-fifth lay grimly awaiting the charge into death's pit. The signal was given; there came a heavy roar and a mighty upheaval. Silence had barely fallen before there rose one great reverberating yell, and the Lead Mine Regiment, led by its colonel, Jasper A. Maltby, with his lieutenant colonel, Malancthon Smith, at his elbow, hurled itself into the smoking crater. The lieutenant colonel was shot through the head and mortally wounded before his feet had fairly touched the pit's bottom. The colonel was shot twice, but paid little heed to his wounds. A battery of Confederate artillery belched shrapnel into the ranks and sharpshooters seemed fairly to be firing by volleys. The question became one of getting some sort of protection thrown up before the entire regiment should be annihilated. Certain men in the pit were tolled off to answer the sharpshooter's fire and to make it hot for the cannonaders in the Confederate battery. They did what they could, but it availed little to save their comrades, who were toiling to throw up the redoubt. Men fell on every side.

Beams were passed into the pit, and these were put into position as a protection by the surviving soldiers. The joists were placed lengthwise and dirt was quickly piled about them. Colonel Maltby helped the men to lodge the beams. He went to one side of the crater where there was no elevation. There he stood fully exposed, a shining mark. He put his shoulder under a great piece of timber, and, weak with wounds though he was, he pushed it up and forward into place. The bullets chipped the woodwork and spat in the sand all about him. One Confederate gunner of artillery trained his great piece directly at the devoted leader. A solid shot struck the beam, from which Colonel Maltby had just removed his shoulder, and split it into kindling. Great sharp pieces of the wood were driven into the colonel's side, and he was hurled to the bottom of the black pit.

The action was over shortly, for the gallant Forty-fifth succeeded in making that death's hole tenable. Then they picked up their colonel. He was still alive, though the surgeon shortly afterward said that it would be hard work to count his wounds. They took him to the field hospital, and before he had been there an hour there was clicking over the wires to Washington a message carrying the recommendation that Colonel Jasper A. Maltby of the Lead Mine Regiment be made a brigadier general of volunteers for conspicuous personal gallantry in the face of the enemy.

A week later Grant's victorious forces marched into Vicksburg.

Colonel Jasper A. Maltby or General Jasper A. Maltby as it soon became, lived until the end of the war, but no system could long withstand the shock and pain of those gaping wounds. He died in the very city which he had helped to conquer. Afterward a flag and a precious memory were passed down from the life which finally flickered out when the white-haired little widow died at St. Luke's hospital, Chicago.

CALUMET BAKING POWDER
NOT MADE BY THE TRUST
CALUMET BAKING POWDER CHICAGO

YOURS

Yours for uniformity.
Yours for greatest leavening power.
Yours for never failing results.
Yours for purity.
Yours for economy.
Yours for everything that goes to make up a strictly high grade, ever-dependable baking powder.
That is Calumet. Try it once and note the improvement in your baking. See how much more economical over the high-priced trust brands, how much better than the cheap and big-can kinds.
Calumet is highest in quality—moderate in cost.
Received Highest Award—World's Pure Food Exposition.

The Best Farm and Home Locations
are in the Southeast United States along the lines of the Southern Railway, Mobile & Ohio R. R., and Georgia Southern & Florida Ry.
LAND $10 AN ACRE and up can be obtained in numerous desirable localities, supporting good churches, schools, stores, and improved highways.
ALFALFA GROWS abundantly in nearly all parts of the Southeast. Many acres are producing 4 to 6 tons per season, the crop selling locally at from $14 to $22 per ton.
LIVE STOCK AND DAIRYING pay big returns, and either is conducted at smaller cost than in any other section of the country. Luxuriant pasturage and forage crops the whole year 'round are the reasons for this. Beef and pork are produced at 3 to 4 cents per pound.
APPLES, VEGETABLES, FRUIT, AND COTTON are today some of the best paying crops of the South. The Virginia, Carolinas, Tennessee, and Georgia apples are fast coming into universal demand, and bringing prices that net growers large profits. All of these results are obtained on land costing less per acre than the returns of one six year old apple tree.
CLIMATE UNSURPASSED—Everyday in the year one can work in his fields. These long seasons allow raising two and three crops from the same soil each year.
HOMESEEKERS EXCURSIONS Twice a month. Write for rates and full particulars today.
SPECIAL LITERATURE regarding agricultural, mineral, and geographical conditions, including free subscription to the Southern Field, will be sent you. Address,
CHAS. S. CHASE, Western Agt., Room 208 Chemical Bld., St. Louis, Mo.

The Wretchedness of Constipation
Can quickly be overcome by CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS.
Purely vegetable—act surely and gently on the liver. Cure Biliousness, Headache, Dizziness, and Indigestion. They do their duty.
CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS.
SMALL PILL, SMALL DOSE, SMALL PRICE.
Genuine must bear Signature
Brent Good

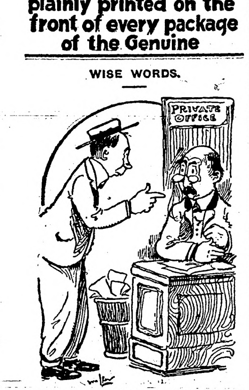
Furs
TRAPPER'S GUIDE FREE
100 Ways and Means of Trapping.
WRITE AT ONCE FOR THIS BOOK, WHICH CONTAINS MUCH VALUABLE INFORMATION. IT IS FREE.
THE LARGEST RECEIVERS OF FURS IN THE WEST
T. J. BROWN FUR CO. 19-17-19-21-23-25 WEST 33 STREET KANSAS CITY, MO.
Wool

DEFIANCE Cold Water Starch
makes laundry work a pleasure. 16 oz. pkg. 10c.

PISO'S the name to remember when you need a remedy for COUGHS and COLDS

SYRUP OF FIGS AND ELIXIR OF SENNA
Cleanses the System effectually; Dispels colds and Headaches, due to constipation. Best for men, women and children; young and old.
To get its Beneficial effects, always note the name of the Company, CALIFORNIA FIG SYRUP CO. plainly printed on the front of every package of the Genuine

WISE WORDS.



The Agent—Do you believe in advertising?

The Merchant—Yes, sir. It's better to be a live man in a dead town than a dead man in a live town.

Naive Optimists.

"Six months ago there was another outburst of optimism as naive as though the world were still living in the sentimental era of glass exhibitions. Since then there has opened another era of political earthquakes and conflagrations, and the era of disturbance continues to extend. Before the Tripoli problem has been safely liquidated or the peace of the Balkans is assured, we have the outburst in China of an insurrection which may change the face of the far east and give an incalculable increase of force to all the impulses set moving by the triumph of Japan. All we can be certain of in the region of world politics is that nothing is certain. Do we need further lessons to convince us that the peace of civilization is founded upon the crust of a volcano?" asks the London Observer.

Sickened the Owl.

"I love you, darling, more than you love me," sighed the swain.

"Ah, that is impossible, precious," she whispered back, "for I love you better than you do me!"

"You cannot!"

"But I do!"

"You do not!" he argued.

"When I say a thing I stick to it!" she snapped.

An owl shifted uneasily above them.

"Pardon me, Gwendoline!"

"Pardon me, Eustice!"

"Miss Brown!"

"Mr. Jones!"

The owl hooted dismally and sought another bower.

WORKS WITHOUT FAITH
Faith Came After the Works Had Laid the Foundation.

A Bay State belle talks thus about coffee:

"While a coffee drinker I was a sufferer from indigestion and intensely painful nervous headaches, from childhood.

"Seven years ago my health gave out entirely. I grew so weak that the exertion of walking, if only a few feet, made it necessary for me to lie down. My friends thought I was marked for consumption—weak, thin and pale.

"I realized the danger I was in and tried faithfully to get relief from medicines, till, at last, after having employed all kinds of drugs, the doctor acknowledged that he did not believe it was in his power to cure me.

"While in this condition a friend induced me to quit coffee and try Postum, and I did so without the least hope that it would do me any good. I did not like it at first, but when it was properly made I found it was a most delicious and refreshing beverage. I am especially fond of it served at dinner ice-cold, with cream.

"In a month's time I began to improve, and in a few weeks my indigestion ceased to trouble me, and my headache stopped entirely. I am so perfectly well now that I do not look like the same person, and I have so gained in flesh that I am 15 pounds heavier than ever before.

"This is what Postum has done for me. I still use it and shall always do so." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

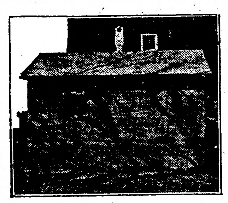
"There's a reason," and it is explained in the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

CONCRETE MAKES EXCELLENT MATERIAL FOR IMPROVEMENTS

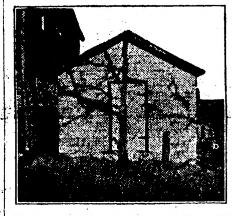
Nothing Better for Sanitary and Permanent Farm Buildings Such as Barns, Dairy Houses, Troughs, Walks and Even Dwelling Places—Floors Do Not Harbor Germs.

A few years ago farmers used nothing but lumber for their farm work. Though it rotted out in a few years, it was good enough for small structures could be built quickly and cheaply. The farmer could cut timber from his own land and have it sawed near-by, so that his own trees were converted into his troughs, dairy houses, walks and even into his house and barn. But today farmers are trying to make improvements that will last. They are better off financially and their crops are selling for prices that were unheard of ten years ago. In fact, the farmers as a class are the most prosperous in the country. This has resulted in their wanting more sanitary buildings, that will need no renewals, and that will make their farms look prosperous and neat. The farmer of today does not plan to rebuild even in fifty years. He is building out of concrete and letting his remaining timber stand. Already the damage due to cutting timber from our farm lands, as well as from our forested areas, has caused untold damage and now that there is a material so readily used and so widely understood as concrete, there is little excuse for the destruction of our remaining timber.



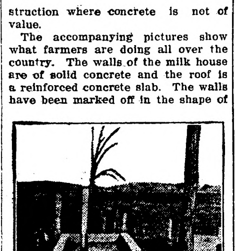
Solid Concrete Milk House.

There is no branch of farm construction where concrete is not of value.

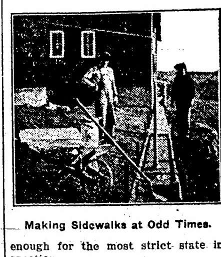


Plain Concrete Surface, Marked Off Into Blocks.

The accompanying pictures show what farmers are doing all over the country. The walls of the milk house are of solid concrete and the roof is a reinforced concrete slab. The walls have been marked off in the shape of blocks, but they are merely surface lines. The building is the most sanitary that it is possible to build for such a purpose. Inside are tanks for the cooling water and a stove for heating the building in winter. Its concrete floors and walls cannot harbor germs. If necessary, the entire structure can be flushed out with water and kept clean and sanitary enough for the most strict state inspection.



Concrete Trough and Heater.



Making Sidewalks at Odd Times.

On the same farm there are many small sidewalks. They are narrow and require little material and very little work. The picture shows the forms that are needed and all the tools required for the making of such work. When spring-time with its heavy rains comes, these walks pay for themselves many times over. There is no reason why the farm should not be equipped with as good sidewalks as is the average city house, when a little outlay for cement and odd times may be utilized for making permanent walks like this.

Many different kinds of tanks can be used on the farm.

PROFIT MADE IN SUNFLOWERS

Seed Is Used Mainly for Poultry Feed—Plant May be Grown on Any Corn Land.

Sunflower seed is used mainly for birds and poultry as feed. It is a native of Kansas and the far western country.

Sunflowers can be grown in any good corn land, but it takes the nitrogen out of the soil in great quantities and therefore the crop should not be repeated on the same soil.

Plant with a drill or corn planter as you would corn in rows about 3½ feet apart. The seeds should be three or four inches apart in drills and thinned later on to about 18 inches.

It requires from six to 12 pounds of seed per acre and it should be planted a little shallower than corn. The cultivation must be very shallow so as not to disturb the roots. After the plants are in bloom pinch off all but three or four heads. Harvest before the seeds are fully ripe as they begin to shatter early and it is also difficult to protect them from the birds which fall upon them in great flocks.

It is not easy to harvest the sunflower as they shatter so easily.

Sometimes they are threshed by running them through an ordinary separator while some farmers construct a wooden wheel hanging on supports like a grind-stone. On the sides of the wheel nails are driven quite thickly and as the wheel turns round the heads of the sunflowers are held against them and the seeds are thus removed.

The seeds must be thoroughly dry before being stored. They can be saved in sacks or small bins and must be kept perfectly dry or they will quickly spoil.

An acre of good land will produce about 1,000 to 1,200 pounds of seed. If ground and mixed with other grains it adds to the palatability and flavor of other stock foods.

The large seeded variety is best for poultry and stock while the small seeded varieties are used more for the oil. This oil is sometimes used for the table and also for candle making.

Manufacturers of poultry and stock feeds are the buyers.

INSECTS PROVE MOST INJURIOUS

Losses by Bugs Not Taken Into Consideration by Farmer Unless They Prove of Large Magnitude.

(By F. M. WEBSTER.)

There are insects whose methods of attack are so obscure and covert that they are not usually discovered at all by the ordinary farmer, who simply knows at the end of the year that his crops have not done well and the year has been an unprofitable one for him.

Perhaps some of the wheat straw worms have attacked his wheat and the result has only shown in the shriveled condition and light weights of the kernels, with no apparent connection between the two.

His corn has not grown well, the ears are small and not well filled out at the tips, precisely as if his land was lacking in fertility or a drought had prevailed, and he may lay the loss to either the weather or his land, whereas it was the corn root worm that ruined his crop, a pest that he might easily have avoided.

His timothy meadow has died out, and he does not know why it should have done so, when had he looked carefully about the roots he would have found the short winged form of the chinch bug present there in myriads.

Such losses as these are not considered at all and do not enter into consideration, either by the farmer or statistician, unless they are of such magnitude as to devastate large areas of country.

Here we have a financial loss, falling upon a single industry nearly three times as great as that caused by fire, and to ask if such a factor should be reckoned upon and carefully considered by those engaged in that industry appears almost ridiculous.

It would seem to go without saying that such elements should not only receive most careful consideration, but every effort should be made by farmers to familiarize themselves with the minutest details in order to by every possible means protect themselves against loss.

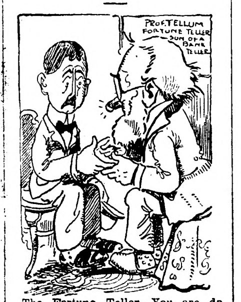
IT WEARS YOU OUT.

Kidney Troubles Lower the Vitality of the Whole Body.

Don't wait for serious illness; begin using Doan's Kidney Pills when you first feel backache or notice urinary disorders. John L. Perry, Columbus, Texas, says: "I was taken sick about a year ago. My limbs and feet began to swell and my doctor said I had Bright's disease. I then consulted a doctor who said I had dropsy and could not live. Doan's Kidney Pills relieved me promptly and I owe my life to them."

"When Your Back Is Lame, Remember the Name—DOAN'S." 50c, all stores. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, N. Y.

HARD LUCK.



The Fortune Teller—You are destined to marry great wealth.

I. M. P. Cunious—Fine.

The Fortune Teller—Unfortunately, death will claim you two days after the event.

CUTICURA OINTMENT HEALED BAD SORE ON LIMB

"Some time ago I was coming up some steps when the board crushed under me like an egg shell, and my right limb went through to the knee, and scraped the flesh off the bone just inside and below the knee. I neglected it for a day or two, then it began to hurt me pretty badly. I put balsam fir on to draw out the poison, but when I had used it a week, it hurt so badly that I changed to ——— ointment. That made it smart and burn so badly that I couldn't use it any more, and that was the fourth week after I was hurt.

"Then I began to use Cuticura Ointment for the sore. It stopped hurting immediately and began healing right away. It was a bad-looking sore before Cuticura Ointment healed it, and I suffered so I couldn't sleep from two days after I fell until I began using Cuticura Ointment.

"Cuticura Soap is the best soap I ever saw. I have used all kinds of soap for washing my face, and always it would leave my face smarting. I had to keep a lotion to stop the smart, no matter how expensive a soap I used. I find at last in Cuticura Soap a soap that will clean my face and leave no smarting, and I do not have to use any lotion or anything else to ease it. I believe Cuticura Soap is the best soap made." (Signed) Mrs. M. E. Fairchild, 805 Lafayette St., Wichita, Kan., May 8, 1911. Although Cuticura Soap and Ointment are sold by druggists and dealers everywhere, a sample of each, with 32-page book, will be mailed free on application to "Cuticura," Dept. 22 K, Boston.

Bush Leaguers.

Professor—You know that the lowest type of human beings is found in Australia. What are those natives called, Mr Fanning?

Student (captain of the ball team) Bush leaguers.—Puck.

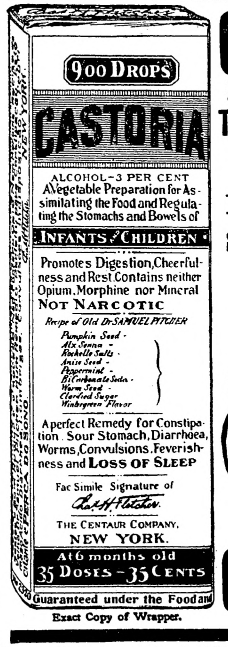
DR. J. H. RINDLAUB (Specialist), Eye, Ear, Nose and Throat Fargo, N. D.

Many a man could lose his reputation and never miss it.

Better the man who raises a laugh than one who leaves a sigh.

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup for Children teething, softens the gums, reduces inflammation, allays pain, cures wind colic, 25c a bottle.

Many a small bottle has developed into a family jar



900 DROPS
CASTORIA
ALCOHOL—3 PER CENT
A Vegetable Preparation for Assimilating the Food and Regulating the Stomachs and Bowels of INFANTS & CHILDREN
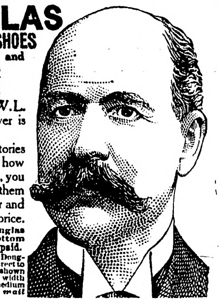
Promotes Digestion, Cheerfulness and Rest. Contains neither Opium, Morphine nor Mineral
NOT NARCOTIC
Recipe of Old Dr SAMUEL PITCHER
Pumpkin Seed
Alx. Senna
Rochelle Salts
Anise Seed
Peppermint
Bi Carbonate Soda
Worm Seed
Clarified Sugar
Wintergreen Flavor
A perfect Remedy for Constipation, Sour Stomach, Diarrhoea, Worms, Convulsions, Feverishness and LOSS OF SLEEP
Fac Simile Signature of
Chas. H. Fletcher.
THE CENTAUR COMPANY, NEW YORK.
At 6 months old
35 DOSES—35 CENTS
Guaranteed under the Food and

Exact Copy of Wrapper.

CASTORIA
For Infants and Children.
The Kind You Have Always Bought
Bears the Signature of Chas. H. Fletcher.
In Use For Over Thirty Years
CASTORIA
THE CENTAUR COMPANY, NEW YORK CITY.

Rayo Lamps and Lanterns
The strong, steady light.
Rayo lamps and lanterns give most light for the oil they burn.
Do not flicker. Will not blow or jar out.
Simple, reliable and durable—and sold at a price that will surprise you.
Ask your dealer to show you his line of Rayo lamps and lanterns, or write to any agency of
Standard Oil Company
(Incorporated)



W. L. DOUGLAS
$2.50, $3.00, $3.50 & $4.00 SHOES
All Styles, All Leathers, All Sizes and Widths, for Men and Women
THE STANDARD OF QUALITY
FOR OVER 30 YEARS
The workmanship which has made W. L. Douglas shoes famous the world over is maintained in every pair.
If I could take you into my large factories at Brockton, Mass., and show you how carefully W. L. Douglas shoes are made, you would then realize why I warrant them to hold their shape, fit and look better and wear longer than other makes for the price.
CAUTION The genuine have W. L. Douglas name and price stamped on bottom
Shoes Sent Everywhere — All Charges Prepaid.
How to Order by Mail.—If W. L. Douglas shoes are not sold in your town, send direct to factory. Take measurements of foot as shown in model; state style desired; size and width usually worn; plain or cap toe; heavy, medium or light sole. I do the largest shoe mail order business in the world.
Illustrated Catalog Free.
W. L. DOUGLAS, 145 Spark St., Brockton, Mass.
ONE PAIR of my BOYS' $2, $2.50 or $3.00 SHOES will positively outwear TWO PAIRS of ordinary boys' shoes
Fast Color Eyelets Used Exclusively.

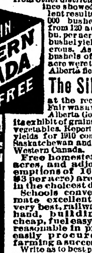
PERFECTION SMOKELESS OIL HEATER
In every cold weather emergency you need a Perfection Smokeless Oil Heater. Is your bedroom cold when you dress or undress? Do your water pipes freeze in the cellar? Is it chilly when the wind whistles around the exposed corners of your house?
A Perfection Smokeless Oil Heater brings complete comfort. Can be carried anywhere. Always ready for use—glowing heat from the minute it is lighted.
Ask your dealer to show you a Perfection Smokeless Oil Heater; or write for descriptive circular to any agency of
Standard Oil Company
(Incorporated)

Pettit's Eye Salve RELIEVES TIRED EYES

PARKER'S HAIR BALSAM
Cleanses and beautifies the hair. Promotes a luxuriant growth. Never Fails to Restore Gray Hair to its Youthful Color. Cures scalp diseases & hair falling. 50c, and $1.00 at Druggists

The International Secret Service Correspondence School Peoples Gas Building 122 Michigan Boulevard Chicago U.S.A
PROSPECTUS and other information in regard to Detective service work will be sent upon application and receipt of 2c stamp for postage.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription
Is the best of all medicines for the cure of diseases, disorders and weaknesses peculiar to women. It is the only preparation of its kind devised by a regularly graduated physician—an experienced and skilled specialist in the diseases of women.
It is a safe medicine in any condition of the system.
THE ONE REMEDY which contains no alcohol and no injurious habit-forming drugs and which creates no craving for such stimulants.
THE ONE REMEDY so good that its makers are not afraid to print its every ingredient on each outside bottle-wrapper and attest to the truthfulness of the same under oath.
It is sold by medicine dealers everywhere, and any dealer who hasn't it can get it. Don't take a substitute of unknown composition for this medicine of KNOWN COMPOSITION. No counterfeit is as good as the genuine and the druggist who says something else is "just as good as Dr. Pierce's" is either mistaken or is trying to deceive you for his own selfish benefit. Such a man is not to be trusted. He is trifling with your most priceless possession—your health—may be your life itself. See that you get what you ask for.



100 ACRE FARMS IN WESTERN CANADA FREE

44 Bu. to the Acre
is a heavy yield, but that's what John Kennedy of Edmonton, Alberta, Western Canada, got from 40 acres of Spring Wheat in 1910. Reports from other districts in that province showed other excellent results—such as 4,000 bushels of wheat from 120 acres, or 33 1-3 bu. per acre. 25, 30 and 40 bushel yields were numerous. As high as 183 bushels of oats to the acre were threshed from Alberta fields in 1910.
The Silver Cup at the recent Spokane Fair was awarded to the Alberta Government for its exhibit of grains, grasses and vegetables. Reports of excellent yields for 1910 come also from Saskatchewan and Manitoba in Western Canada.
Free homesteads of 160 acres, and adjoining pre-emptions of 160 acres (at $3 per acre) are to be had in the choicest districts.
Schools convenient, climate excellent, soil the very best, railways close at hand, building lumber cheap, fuel easy to get and reasonable in price, water easily procured, mixed farming a success.
Write as to best place for settlement, settlers' low railway rates, descriptive illustrated "Last Best West" (sent free on application) and other information, to Sup't of Immigration, Ottawa, Can., or to the Canadian Government Agent. (86)
CHAS. PILLING
Clifford Block Grand Forks, N. Dak.
Please write to the agent nearest you

PATENTS Watson E. Coleman, Washington, D.C. Books free. Highest references. Best results.

If afflicted with sore eyes, use Thompson's Eye Water

PUTNAM FADELESS DYES
Color more goods brighter and faster colors than any other dye. One 10c package colors all fibers. They dye in cold water better than any other dye. You can dye any garment without ripping apart. Write for free booklet—How to Dye, Bleach and Mix Colors. MONROE DRUG COMPANY, Quincy, Ill.

TAFT IS FOR TRUST LAW

Annual Message Deals With One Subject.

DEFENDS DECISIONS OF COURT

In Cases of Standard Oil and Tobacco Companies.

THINKS AMENDMENTS NEEDED

Believes Present Statutes Good as Far as They Go but Suggests Supplemental Legislation—For Federal Corporation Law.

Washington, Dec. 5.—President Taft's annual message, which was read in both houses of congress today, deals exclusively with the anti-trust statute. The full text of the message is as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives: This message is the first of several which I shall send to congress during the interval between the opening of its regular session and its adjournment for the Christmas holidays. The amount of information to be communicated as to the operations of the government, the number of important subjects calling for comment by the executive, and the transmission to congress of exhaustive reports by special commissions, make it impossible to include in one message of a reasonable length a discussion of the topics that ought to be brought to the attention of the national legislature at its first regular session.

The Anti-Trust Law—The Supreme Court Decisions.

In May last the Supreme court handed down decisions in the suits in equity brought by the United States to enjoin the further maintenance of the Standard Oil trust and of the American Tobacco trust, and to secure their dissolution. The decisions are epoch-making and serve to advise the business world authoritatively of the scope and operation of the anti-trust act of 1890. The decisions do not depart in any substantial way from the previous decisions of the court in construing and applying this important statute, but they clarify those important decisions by further defining the already admitted exceptions to the literal construction of the act. By the decrees, they furnish a useful precedent as to the proper method of dealing with the capital and property of illegal trusts. These decisions suggest the need and wisdom of additional or supplemental legislation to make it easier for the entire business community to square with the rule of action and legality thus finally established and to preserve the benefit, freedom and spur of reasonable competition without loss of real efficiency or progress.

No Change in the Rule of Decision—Merely in Its Form of Expression.

The statute in its first section declares to be illegal "every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states or with foreign nations," and in the second, declares guilty of a misdemeanor every person who shall monopolize or attempt to monopolize or combine or conspire with any other person to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce of the several states or with foreign nations."

In two early cases, where the statute was invoked to enjoin a transportation agreement between interstate railroad companies, it was held that it was no defense to show that the agreement as to rates complained of was reasonal at common law, because it was said that the statute was directed against all contracts and combinations in restraint of trade whether reasonal at common law or not. It was plain from the record, however, that the contracts complained of in those cases would not have been deemed reasonable at common law. In subsequent cases the court said that the statute should be given a reasonal construction and refused to include within its inhibition certain contractual restraints of trade which it dominated as incidental or as indirect.

These cases of restraint of trade that the court excepted from the operation of the statute were instances which, at common law, would have been called reasonable. In the Standard Oil and Tobacco cases, therefore, the court merely adopted the tests of the common law, and in defining exceptions to the literal application of the statute, only substituted for the test of being incidental or indirect, that of being reasonable and this, without varying in the slightest the actual scope and effect of the statute. In other words, all the cases under the statute which have now been decided would have been decided the same way if the court had originally accepted in its construction the rule at common law.

It has been said that the court, by introducing into the construction of the statute common-law distinctions, has emasculated it. This is obviously untrue. By its judgment every contract and combination in restraint of interstate trade made with the purpose or necessary effect of controlling prices by stifling competition, or of establishing in whole or in part a monopoly of such trade, is condemned by the statute. The most extreme critics cannot instance a case that ought to be condemned under the statute which is not brought within its terms as thus construed.

The suggestion is also made that the Supreme court by its decision in the last two cases has committed to the court the undefined and unlimited discretion to determine whether a case of restraint of trade is within the terms of the statute. This is wholly untrue. A reasonable restraint of trade at common law is well understood and is clearly defined. It does not rest in the discretion of the court. It must be limited to accomplish the purpose of a lawful main contract to which, in order that it shall be enforceable at all, it must be incidental. If it exceeds the needs of that contract it is void.

The test of reasonableness was never applied by the court at common-law to contracts or combinations or conspiracies in restraint of trade whose purpose was or whose necessary effect would be to stifle competition, to control prices, or establish monopolies. The courts never assumed power to say that such contracts or combinations or conspiracies might be lawful if the parties to them were only moderate in the use of the power thus secured and did not exact from the public too great and exorbitant prices. It is true that many theorists, and others engaged in business violating the statue, have hoped that some such line could be drawn by courts; but no court of authority has ever attempted it. Certainly there is nothing in the decisions of the latest two cases which should be a dangerous theory of judicial discretion in enforcing this statue can derive the slightest sanction.

Force and Effectiveness of Statute a Matter of Growth.

We have been twenty-one years making this statue effective for the purposes for which it was enacted. The Knight case was discouraging and seemed to remit to the states the whole available power to attack and suppress the evils of the trusts. Slowly, however, the errors of that judgment was corrected, and only in the last three or four years has the heavy hand of the law been laid upon the great illegal combinations that have exercised such an absolute dominion over many of our industries. Criminal prosecutions have been brought and a number are pending, but juries have felt averse to convicting for jail sentences, and judges have been most reluctant to impose such sentences on men of respectable standing in society whose offense has been regarded as merely statutory. Still, as the offense becomes better understood and the committing of it partakes more of studied and deliberate defiance of the law, we can be confident that juries will convict individuals and that jail sentences will be imposed.

The Remedy in Equity by Dissolution.

In the Standard Oil case the Supreme and circuit courts found the combination to be a monopoly of the interstate business of refining, transporting, and marketing petroleum and its products, effected and maintained through thirty-seven different corporations, the stock of which was held by a New Jersey company. It in effect commanded the dissolution of this combination, directed the transfer and pro-rata distribution by the New Jersey company of the stock held by it in the thirty-seven corporations to and among its stockholders, and the corporations and individual defendants were enjoined from conspiring or combining to restore such monopoly; and all agreements between the subsidiary corporations tending to produce or bring about further violations of the act were enjoined.

In the Tobacco case, the court found that the individual defendants, twenty-nine in number, had been engaged in a successful effort to acquire complete dominion over the manufacture, sale, and distribution of tobacco in this country and abroad, and that this had been done by combinations made with a purpose and effect to stifle competition, control prices, and establish a monopoly, not only in the manufacture of tobacco, but also of tin-foil and licorice used in its manufacture and of its products of cigars, cigarettes, and snuffs. The tobacco suit presented a far more complicated and difficult case than the Standard Oil suit for a decree which would effectuate the will of the court and end the violation of the statute. There was here no single holding company as in the case of the Standard Oil trust. The main company was the American Tobacco company, a manufacturing, selling, and holding company. The plan adopted to destroy the combination and restore competition involved the redivision of the capital and plants of the whole trust between some of the companies constituting the trust and new companies organized for the purposes of the decree and made parties to it, and numbering, new and old, fourteen.

Situation After Readjustment.

The American Tobacco company (old) radjusted capital, $92,000,000; the Liggett and Meyers Tobacco company (new) capital, $67,000,000; the P. Lorillard company (new) capital, $47,000,000, and the R. J. Reynolds Tobacco company (old) capital, $7,525,000, are chiefly engaged in the manufacture and sale of chewing and smoking tobacco and cigars. The former one tin-foil company is divided into two, one of $825,000 capital and the other of $400,000. The one snuff company is divided into three companies, one with a capital of $15,000,000; another with a capital of $8,000,000; and a third with a capital of $8,000,000. The licorice companies are two, one with a capital of $5,758,000 and another with a capital of $2,000,000. There is, also, the British-American Tobacco company, a British corporation, doing business abroad with a capital of $26,000,000, the Porto Rican Tobacco company with a capital of $1,800,000, and the corporation of United Cigar Stores, with a capital of $9,000,000. Under this arrangement each of the different kinds of business will be distributed between two or more companies, with a division of the prominent brands in the same tobacco products, so as to make competition not only possible but necessary. Thus the smoking tobacco business of the country is divided so that the present independent companies have 21.39 per cent., while the American Tobacco company will have 33.08 per cent., the Liggett and Meyers 20.05 per cent., the Lorillard company 22.82 per cent., and the Reynolds company 2.66 per cent. The stock of the other thirteen companies, both preferred and common, has been taken from the defendant American Tobacco company and has been distributed among its stockholders. All covenants restricting competition have been declared null and further performance of them has been enjoined. The preferred stock of the different companies has now been given voting power which was denied it under the old organization. The ratio of the preferred stock to the common was as 78 to 40. This constitutes a very decided change in the character of the ownership and control of each company.

In the original suit there were twenty-nine defendants who were charged with being the conspirators through whom the illegal combination acquired and exercised its unlawful dominion. Under the decree these defendants will hold amounts of stock in the various distributee companies ranging from 41 per cent. as a maximum to 28½ per cent. as a minimum, except in the case of one small company, the Porto Rican Tobacco company, in which they will hold 45 per cent. The twenty-nine individual defendants are enjoined for three years from buying any stock except from each other, and the group is thus prevented from extending its control during that period. All parties to the suit, and the new companies who are made parties, are enjoined perpetually from in any way effecting any combination between any of the companies in violation of the statute by way of resumption of the old trust. Each of the fourteen companies is enjoined from acquiring stock in any of the others. All these companies are enjoined from having common directors or officers, or common buying or selling agents, or common offices, or lending money to each other.

Size of New Companies.

Objection was made by certain independent tobacco companies that this settlement was unjust because it left companies with very large capital in active business, and that the settlement that would be effective to put all on an equality would be a division of the capital and plant of the trust into small factions in amount more nearly equal to that of each of the independent companies. This contention results from a misunderstanding of the anti-trust law and its purpose. It is not intended thereby to prevent the accumulation of large capital in business enterprises in which such a combination can secure reduced cost of production, sale and distribution. It is directed against such an aggregation of capital only when its purpose is that of stifling competition, enhancing or controlling prices and establishing a monopoly. If we shall have by the decree defeated these purposes and restored competition between the large units into which the capital and plant have been divided, we shall have accomplished the useful purpose of the statute.

Confiscation Not the Purpose of the Statute.

It is not the purpose of the statute to confiscate the property and capital of the offending trusts. Methods of punishment by fine or imprisonment of the individual offenders, by fine of the corporation, or by forfeiture of its goods in transportation, are provided, but the proceeding in equity is a specific remedy to stop the operation of the trust by injunction and prevent the future use of the plant and capital in violation of the statute.

Effectiveness of Decree.

I venture to say that not in the history of American law has a decree more effective for such a purpose been entered by a court than that against the Tobacco trust. As Circuit Judge Noyes said in his judgment approving the decree:

"The extent to which it has been necessary to tear apart this combination and force it into new forms with the attendant burdens ought to demonstrate that the federal anti-trust statute is a drastic statute which accomplishes effective results; which so long as it stands on the statute books must be obeyed, and which cannot be disobeyed without incurring far-reaching penalties. And, on the other hand, the successful reconstruction of this organization should teach that the effect of enforcing this statute is not to destroy, but to reconstruct; not to demolish but to re-create in accordance with the conditions which the congress has declared shall exist among the people of the United States."

Common-Stock Ownership.

It has been assumed that the present pro-rata and common ownership in all these companies by former stockholders of the trust would insure a continuance of the same old single control of all the companies into which the trust has by decree been disintegrated. This is erroneous and is based upon the assumed inefficacy and innocuousness of judicial injunctions. The companies are enjoined from co-operation or combination; they have different managers, directors, purchasing and sales agents. If all or any of the numerous stockholders, reaching into the thousands, attempt to secure concerted action of the companies with a view to the control of the market, their number is so large that such an attempt could not well be concealed and its prime movers and all its participants would be at once subject to contempt proceedings and imprisonment of a summary character. The immediate result of the present situation will necessarily be activity by all the companies under different managers, and then competition must follow, or there will be activity by one company and stagnation by another. Only a short time will inevitably lead to a change in ownership of the stock, as all opportunity for continued co-operation must disappear. Those critics who speak of this disintegration in the trust as a mere change of garments have not given consideration to the inevitable working of the decree and understand little the personal danger of attempting to evade or set at naught the solemn injunction of a court whose object is made plain by the decree and whose inhibitions are set forth with a detail and comprehensiveness unexampled in the history of equity jurisprudence.

The effect of these two decisions has led to decrees dissolving the combination of manufacturers of electric lamps, a southern wholesale grocers' association, an interlocutory decree against the powder trust with directions by the circuit court compelling dissolution, and other combinations of a similar history are now negotiating with the department of justice looking to a disintegration by decree and reorganization in accordance with law. It seems possible to bring about these reorganizations without general business disturbance.

Movement for Repeal of the Anti-Trust Law.

But now that the anti-trust act is seen to be effective for the accomplishment of the purpose of its enactment, we are met by a cry from many different quarters for its repeal. It is said to be obstructive of business progress, to be an attempt to restore old-fashioned methods of destructive competition between small units, and to make impossible those useful combinations of capital and the reduction of the cost of production that are essential to continued prosperity and normal growth.

In the recent decisions the Supreme court makes clear that there is nothing in the statute which condemns combinations of capital or mere bigness of plant organized to secure economy in production and a reduction of its cost. It is only when the purpose or necessary effect of the organization and maintenance of the combination or the aggregation of immense size are the stifling of competition, actual and potential, and the enhancing of prices and establishing a monopoly, that the statute is violated. Mere size is no sin against the law. The merging of two or more business plants necessarily eliminates competition between the units thus combined, but this elimination is in contravention of the statute only when the combination is made for purpose of ending this particular competition in order to secure control of, and enhance, prices and create a monopoly.

Lack of Definiteness in the Statute.

The complaint is made of the statute that it is not sufficiently definite in its description of that which is forbidden, to enable business men to avoid its violation. The suggestion is, that we may have a combination of two corporations, which may run on for years, and that subsequently the attorney general may conclude that it was a violation of the statute, and that which was supposed by the combiners to be innocent then turns out to be a combination in violation of the statute. The answer to this hypothetical case is that when men attempt to amass stupendous capital as will enable them to suppress competition, control prices and establish a monopoly they know the purpose of their acts. Men do not do such a thing without having it clearly in mind. If what they do is merely for the purpose of reducing the cost of production, without the thought of suppressing competition by use of the bigness of the plant they are creating, then they cannot be convicted at the time the union is made, nor can they be convicted later, unless it happens that later on they conclude to suppress competition and take the usual methods for doing so, and thus establish for themselves a monopoly. They can, in such a case, hardly complain if the motive which subsequently is disclosed is attributed by the court to the original combination.

New Remedies Suggested.

Much is said of the repeal of this statute and of constructive legislation intended to accomplish the purpose and blaze a clear path for honest merchants and business men to follow. It may be that such a plan will be evolved, but I submit that the discussions which have been brought out in recent days by the fear of the continued execution of the anti-trust law have produced nothing but glittering generalities and have offered no line of distinction or rule of action as definite and as clear as that which the Supreme court itself lays down in enforcing the statute.

Supplemental Legislation Needed—Not Repeal or Amendment.

I see no objection—and indeed I can see decided advantages—in the enactment of a law which shall describe and denounce methods of competition, which are unfair and are badges of the unlawful purpose denounced in the anti-trust law. The attempt and purpose to suppress a competitor by underselling him at a price so unprofitable as to drive him out of business, or the making of exclusive contracts with customers under which they are required to give up association with other manufacturers, and numerous kindred methods for stifling competition and effecting monopoly, should be described with sufficient accuracy in a criminal statute on the one hand to enable the government to shorten its task by prosecuting single misdemeanors instead of an entire conspiracy, and, on the other hand, to serve the purpose of pointing out more in detail to the business community what must be avoided.

Federal Incorporation Recommended.

In a special message to congress on January 7, 1910, I ventured to point out the disturbance to business that would probably attend the dissolution of these offending trusts. I said:

"But such an investigation and possible prosecution of corporations whose prosperity or destruction affects the comfort not only of stockholders but of millions of wage earners, employes, and associated tradesmen must necessarily tend to disturb the confidence of the business community, to dry up the now flowing sources of capital from its places of hoarding, and produce a halt in our present prosperity that will cause suffering and strained circumstances among the innocence many for the faults of the guilty few. The question which I wish in this message to bring clearly to the consideration and discussion of congress is whether, in order to avoid such a possible business danger, something cannot be done by which these business combinations may be offered a means, without great financial disturbance, of changing the character, organization, and extent of their business into one within the lines of the law under federal control and supervision, securing compliance with the anti-trust statute.

"Generally, in the industrial combinations called 'Trusts,' the principal business is the sale of goods in many states and in foreign markets; in other words, the interstate and foreign business far exceeds the business done in any one state. This fact will justify the federal government in granting a federal charter to such a combination to make and sell in interstate and foreign commerce the products of useful manufacture under such limitations as will secure a compliance with the anti-trust law. It is possible so to frame a statute that while it offers protection to a federal company against harmful, vexatious, and unnecessary invasion by the states, it shall subject it to reasonable taxation and control by the states with respect to its purely local business.

"Corporations organized under this act should be prohibited from acquiring and holding stock in other corporations (except for special reasons, upon approval by the proper federal authority), thus avoiding the creation under national auspices of the holding company with subordinate corporations in different states, which has been such an effective agency in the creation of the great trusts and monopolies.

"If the prohibition of the anti-trust act against combinations in restraint of trade is to be effectively enforced, it is essential that the national government shall provide for the creation of national corporations to carry on a legitimate business throughout the United States. The conflicting laws of the different states of the Union with respect to foreign corporations makes it difficult, if not impossible, for one corporation to comply with their requirements so as to carry on business in a number of different states."

I renew the recommendation of the enactment of a general law providing for the voluntary formation of corporations to engage in trade and commerce among the states and with foreign nations. Every argument which was then advanced for such a law, and every explanation which was at that time offered to possible objections, have been confirmed by our experience since the enforcement of the anti-trust statute has resulted in the actual dissolution of active commercial organizations.

It is even more manifest now than it was then that the denunciation of conspiracies in restraint of trade should not and does not mean the denial of organizations large enough to be intrusted with our interstate and foreign trade. It has been made more clear now than it was then that a purely negative statute like the anti-trust law may well be supplemented by specific provisions for the building up and regulation of legitimate national and foreign commerce.

Government Administrative Experts Needed to Aid Courts in Trust Dissolutions.

The drafting of the decrees in the dissolution of the present trusts, with a view to their reorganization into legitimate corporations, has made it especially apparent that the courts are not provided with the administrative machinery to make the necessary inquiries preparatory to reorganization, or to pursue such inquiries, and they should be empowered to invoke the aid of the bureau of corporations in determining the suitable reorganization of the disintegrating parts. The circuit court and the attorney general were greatly aided in framing the decree in the tobacco trust dissolution by an expert from the bureau of corporations.

Federal Corporation Commission Proposed.

I do not set forth in detail the terms and sections of a statute which might supply the constructive legislation permitting and aiding the formation of combinations of capital into federal corporations. They should be subject to rigid rules as to their organization and procedure, including effective publicity, and to the closest supervision as to the issue of stock and bonds by an executive bureau or commission in the department of commerce and labor, to which in times of doubt they might well submit their proposed plans for future business. It must be distinctly understood that incorporation under a federal law could not exempt the company thus formed and its incorporators and managers from prosecution under the anti-trust law for subsequent illegal conduct, but the publicity of its procedure and the opportunity for frequent consultation with the bureau or commission in charge of the incorporation as to the legitimate purpose of its transactions would offer it as great security against successful prosecutions for violations of the law as would be practical or wise.

Such a bureau or commission might well be invested also with the duty already referred to, of aiding courts in the dissolution and recreation of trusts within the law. It should be an executive tribunal of the dignity and power of the comptroller of the currency or of the interstate commerce commission, which now exercise supervisory power over important classes of corporations under federal regulation.

The drafting of such a federal incorporation law would offer ample opportunity to prevent many manifest evils in corporate management today, including irresponsibility of control in the hands of the few who are not the real owners.

Incorporation Voluntary.

I recommend that the federal charters thus to be granted shall be voluntary, at least until experience justifies mandatory provisions. The benefit to be derived from the operation of great businesses under the protection of such a charter would attract all who are anxious to keep within the lines of the law. Other large combinations that fail to take advantage of the federal incorporation will not have a right to complain if their failure is ascribed to unwillingness to submit their transactions to the careful scrutiny, competent supervision and publicity attendant upon the enjoyment of such a charter.

Supplemental Legislation Needed.

The opportunity thus suggested for federal incorporation, it seems to me, is suitable constructive legislation needed to facilitate the squaring of great industrial enterprises to the rule of action laid down by the anti-trust law. This statute is construed by the Supreme court must continue to be the line of distinction for legitimate business. It must be enforced, unless we are to banish individualism from all business and reduce it to one common system of regulation or control of prices like that which now prevails with respect to public utilities, and which when applied to all business would be a long step toward state socialism.

Importance of the Anti-Trust Act.

The anti-trust act is the expression of the effort of a freedom-loving people to preserve equality of opportunity. It is the result of the confident determination of such a people to maintain their future growth by preserving uncontrolled and unrestricted the enterprise of the individual, his ingenuity, his intelligence and his independent courage.

For twenty years or more this statute has been upon the statute book. All knew of its general purpose and approved. Many of its violators were cynical over its assumed impotence.

It seemed impossible of enforcement. Slowly the mills of the courts ground, and only gradually did the majesty of the law assert itself. Many of its statesmen-authors died before it became a living force, and they and others saw the evil grow which they had hoped to destroy. Now, its efficacy is seen; now its power is heavy; now its object is near achievement. Now we hear the call for its repeal on the plea that it interferes with business prosperity, and we are advised in most general terms how, by some other statute and in some other way, the evil we are just stamping out can be cured, if we only abandon this work of twenty years and try another experiment for another term of years.

It is said that the act has not done good. Can this be said in the face of the effect of the Northern Securities decree?

That decree was in no way so drastic or inhibitive in detail as either the Standard Oil decree or the tobacco decree; but did it not stop for all time the then powerful movement toward the control of all the railroads of the country in a single hand?

Such a one-man power could not have been a healthful instance in the republic, even though exercised under the general supervision of an interstate commission.

Do we desire to make such ruthless combinations and monopolies lawful? When all energies are directed, not toward the reduction of the cost of production for the public benefit by a healthful competition, but toward new ways and means for making permanent in a few hands the absolute control of the conditions and prices prevailing in the whole field of industry, then individual enterprise and effort will be paralyzed and the spirit of commercial freedom will be dead.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE NORTHERN LIGHT

VOL. I. HOLT, MARSHALL COUNTY, MINNESOTA, FRIDAY, DECEMBER 15, 1911 NO. 20.

MINNESOTA HISTORICAL SOCIETY.

FROM THE OUTSIDE

ANNOUNCEMENT IS MADE BY BOARD THAT HAS BEEN EXAMINING WRECK.

OF THE BATTLESHIP MAINE

Mystery of Who Planted the Mine That Caused Wreck Only Deepened—Report Not to Be Published.

Washington, D. C.—The United States battleship Maine, sunk in Havana harbor, February, 1898, by an explosion, was blown up from the outside. This was announced by the naval board which has been examining the wreck. The finding confirms the report of the original investigators who made a superficial examination shortly after the disaster.

The statement given out by the navy department is brief. Secretary Meyer does not believe it necessary to issue any extended explanation of the board's conclusions beyond the flat statement that an exterior explosion was responsible for the loss of the warship and the lives of many men. The statement follows:

"The injuries to the bottom of the Maine was caused by the explosion of a charge of a low form of explosive exterior to the ship between frames 28 and 31, strake 8, port side. This resulted in igniting and exploding the contents of the six-inch reserve magazine, A-14-M, said contents including a large quantity of black powder. The more or less complete explosion of the contents of the remaining forward magazine followed. The magazine explosions resulted in the destruction of the vessel."

Secretary Meyer announced that there might be a further statement on the report of the board after it had been considered by the president. He did not believe the report would ever be published in full, but would be kept in the confidential archives of the department. The declaration that a "low explosive" was used in the outside explosion indicates a belief that a mine and not a dirigible torpedo was the instrument of destruction.

This only deepens the mystery of the destruction of the Maine. A mine charged with sufficient gunpowder to blow in the bottom of the ship must have weighed several hundred pounds. To plant such a mine and lay the electric connections necessary for its discharge would have required the services of a number of men.

"Tar Party" Man Begins Term.

Lincoln Center, Kansas. — Watson Scranton has begun serving his sentence of one year in jail for his part in the tarring of Miss Mary Chamberlain. Scranton, together with E. G. Clark and Jay Titzwater, pleaded guilty to a charge of assault and battery, and each was sentenced to one year in jail. Clark and Fitzwater appealed.

School Girls Must Learn to Swim.

New York, N. Y.—Beginning with next year, every girl pupil in the New York public schools will end the school year with a certificate that she can swim. A course of lessons in various natatoriums throughout the city will qualify students for certificates.

Mrs. Pankhurst Is Fined for Speeding.

Providence, R. I. — Mrs. Emmeline Pankhurst, the English militant suffragist, was held up for over-speeding as she was coming into this city from Sherbourne, Mass., to address a meeting of woman emancipators. She was fined $15 and costs.

Wind Storm Sweeps Los Angeles.

Los Angeles, Calif. — One man was killed, the lives of many others menaced, and much damage was done to property in a windstorm. C. B. Jackson, a lineman, was blown from the top of a 60-foot pole and killed.

Prohibitionists Choose Atlantic City.

Chicago, Ill. — Atlantic City was chosen as the place for the national convention of the Prohibition party. The date was not named.

Importing Potatoes.

New York, N. Y.—Importations of potatoes from abroad are beginning to arrive in this port, the main bulk of them coming from Ireland. Up to date this fall about 25,000 sacks have arrived.

O'Connell Marks Birthday.

Rome, Italy.—The fifty-second anniversary of the founding of the American college and Cardinal O'Connell's fifty-second birthday were jointly celebrated here. Many Americans were present.

Noted Painter Dead.

Paris, France.—Tony Robert Fluery, the painter, died. He was president of the Society of French Artists.

AMERICANS DIE IN CHINA

MUCH LOOTING AND BURNING IS REPORTED.

Letters From Sian-Fu State Missionaries Suffered and 8,000 Manchus Were Slain.

Pekin, China.—The first direct and uncensored news received from Sian Fu since the recent outbreak there was brought here by messenger. It consists of letters to the British and American legations and the director of posts. The letters say that 8,000 Manchus were slain by Chinese and that there was much looting.

Several mission houses in the province were destroyed and eight foreigners, some of them children, were killed. Four of the dead were Americans.

According to the letters, foreigners in the province of Shen Si, of which Sian Fu is the capital, numbered 75, including 17 Americans. A majority of these are now in Sian Fu, but others fled to the province of Kan Su, where trouble is expected.

"We apparently are safe now," says one of the letters, "but the lawless are in the majority. We had hoped to escape down the Han river, but the road is dangerous. The Kan Su missionaries may have a hard time. Twenty-two of them, including children, are Americans. Money cannot be sent them, as all the mails have been stopped and the banks here robbed and burned."

This letter is signed by V. J. Plymire of the Christian and Missionary alliance at Taochow, province of Kan Su. It is dated Nov. 26.

Imperial Victory Reported.

Shanghai. — A telegram received here from Hankin says that General Chang Hau, commander of the imperial troops, who, with a force escaped from the city when the revolutionists captured it, annihilated a band of revolutionists who attempted to bar his retreat 100 miles up the Tien Tsin-Pu-Kow railway.

Further northward from the scene of this fight the revolutionists are reported to be blowing up bridges with dynamite.

32,213,000 ACRES IN WHEAT.

Condition of Crop 86.6 Per Cent on Dec. 1, Says Report.

Washington, D. C. — The December crop report of the department of agriculture shows 32,213,000 acres sown to winter wheat this fall, compared with the newly revised estimates, based on the census bureau's 1909 statement of acreage of 32,648,000 acres for the crop of 1911, and 31,656,000 acres for the crop of 1910.

The condition of winter wheat on Dec. 1 was 86.6 per cent of a normal, compared with 82.5 in 1910, 95.8 in 1909, and 89.9, the ten-year average.

The area sown this fall to rye is estimated at 2,436,000 acres, compared with the revised estimated area of 2,415,000 acres for the crop of 1911, and 2,413,000 acres for the crop of 1910.

The condition of rye on Dec. 1 was 93.3 per cent of a normal, compared with 92.6 in 1910, 94.1 in 1909, and 92.8 the ten-year average.

BRIDGE FALLS; 200 DEAD.

Workmen Drown in Accident on Russian Railway.

St. Petersburg, Russia.—It is believed that between 150 and 200 lives have been lost by the collapse of a railroad bridge over the Volga river, near Kazan. The bridge was in course of construction and was filled with workmen when, without warning, the supports gave way and the men were precipitated into the icy waters. Only half a dozen bodies have been recovered, but the authorities express the hope that some of the men have been able to save themselves by grasping cakes of floating ice.

Building Falls; Seven Killed.

Indianapolis, Ind. — Under the glare of search lights police and firemen searched for the bodies of the persons caught in the wreckage of a three-story concrete building which collapsed killing seven workmen and injuring 22. The building was being erected for the Prest-O-Lite company. The contractor believes that owing to the recent cold weather, the concrete had not set properly. The dead are: Fred Asher, Henry Barnes, M. F. Headley, W. R. McConnell, David Rose, John Straughder and James Everd.

No Typhoid in Oysters.

New York, N. Y. — The oyster has at last been exonerated from causing typhoid. A report from Commissioner Lederle of New York city gives the succulent bivalve a clean bill of health.

Ethen Allen Dies.

New York, N. Y. — Ethan Allen, lawyer, author and collateral descendant of his namesake of revolutionary fame, is dead at his home here. He was 80 years old and wealthy.

DEMOCRATS VS. TARIFF BOARD

BELIEVING IT CREATION OF THE PRESIDENT, THEY'LL VOTE ITS DISCONTINUANCE.

A STANDPATTERS' CLOAK

Sherwood Pension Bill Develops Bitter Fight on Floor of House.—Northwest Representatives Going to Panama.

Washington, D. C.—Without waiting for the first report of the tariff board the Democratic leaders in the house have agreed to vote to withhold appropriations for continuing the board in its tariff work. Taking this fact in connection with the solid opposition of the Democrats in both houses of congress to anything like a tariff commission, and it will at once be seen that the movement encouraged by the insurgent tariff reduction advocates and the friends of a permanent tariff commission will receive no aid at the hands of the Democratic opponents of a Republican tariff policy.

It is stated upon the authority of Representative Dixon of Indiana, a member of the ways and means committee, that at a secret meeting of the Democratic members of the committee it has been decided to recommend to the committee on appropriations that no further provision be made for the tariff board.

The grounds upon which the Democratic leaders have decided to proceed are that the tariff board is the creature of President Taft, that it will merely collect facts and figures and not make recommendations to congress, and that it forms a screen behind which the president and the Republican members of congress hide to resist the efforts for tariff revision.

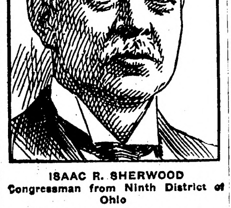
A great many of the conservative Republicans in the house were opposed to the creation of a tariff board when provision was made for it in the Payne-Aldrich tariff law two years ago. Speaker Cannon, Representative Dalzell and others of that faction opposed the plan for a tariff commission and only accepted the tariff board scheme upon the understanding that the board was to confine its work to the collection of facts and statistics regarding the cost of production, and to make no recommendations to congress. The board has no status by law and its existence depends solely upon the appropriations made from year to year by congress. If these appropriations are cut off, the tariff board goes out of existence.

The first provision for the tariff board was an appropriation of $75,000 which passed congress on the same day that the Payne-Aldrich law was signed. The following year congress appropriated $250,000 and the unexpended balance of the $75,000. For the current fiscal year the appropriation was 225,000, together with the unexpended balance.

Pension Bill Develops Bitter Fight.

Advocates of increased pensions for veterans of the Civil War battled on the floor of the house in the final stages of the fight to pass the Sherwood "dollar a day" pension bill.

There were few opponents of the increased pension. The contest lay between those who favored the Sherwood bill which establishes a pension based on length of service; and the advocates of the Sulloway age-pension bill, which was passed by the house last spring, but failed in the senate.



ISAAC R. SHERWOOD
Congressman from Ninth District of Ohio

The Sherwood bill would grant $15 a month to those who served more than 90 days, but less than six months; $20 a month for a service up to nine months; $25 a month for a service up to one year; and $30 for a service more than one year. No pension is to be allowed veterans who have incomes exceeding $1,000 a year. The Sulloway bill, which probably will be offered as a substitute or amendment to the Sherwood bill before the vote is finally taken provides a maximum pension of $36 per month at the age of 75.

Strenuous objection was made to the provision that an income of $1,000 should make a veteran ineligible for pension. Those opposed to it declared it would "penalize thrift." General Sherwood declared it was designed not as an added honor to ex-soldiers, but to relieve real distress.

Representative Fuller of Illinois advocated the principles of the Sulloway bill and Representative Sulloway spoke of his bill as the only one giving strict equality of treatment to veterans. Representative Russell of Missouri advocated the Sherwood bill.

Representatives Stevens and Miller, of Minnesota, and Representative Burke, of South Dakota, will go to Panama in company with the house committee on interstate and foreign commerce which is going there to make a study of the canal situation as it will affect commerce when it is open to traffic. The committee will give particular attention to the question of tolls, with regard to the present demand for free use of the canal by American vessels. The party will be gone until Jan. 3, spending the entire holiday season either on the ocean or in one of the canal cities.

Washington, D. C. — The Republican minority of the ways and means committee of the house is preparing to frame and introduce a tariff bill along the lines of the recommendations to be made by President Taft, based as such recommendations doubtless will be, upon the report made by the tariff board. This will be the opening part of the work to be done during the session on the tariff, and will represent the Republican program, independent of what the Democratic majority in the house may do.

It is not yet known what course the Democrats will take. Some of them are in favor of preparing a bill along the lines of the tariff board report, when that shall be made public, while others are convinced that the report of the board will not begin to represent anything like the "tariff for revenue only" idea of the Democratic party, and must be opposed on that account.

It was a field day for the Republicans at the White House and President Taft had opportunity to enjoy the fact that practically all the Republican callers when they talked politics at all with him encouraged him with statements of the better outlook for his renomination and of the growing belief among the faithful that he will be re-elected.

Senator Gamble, whose colleague, Senator Crawford, is hard at work for La Follette for the Republican nomination, made the assertion that the president will win every delegate in the South Dakota primaries and then carry the state in the November following. Representative Kahn of California said he was confident that in the preferential primaries, that will be provided by the California legislature, President Taft will have a sweeping victory.

"There is no opposition to and no fight against President Taft in Michigan," said Representative Young of that state. "He will have the solid delegation and then run away with the state in the November election."

John D. Rockefeller and Rev. Fred Gates, manager of Mr. Rockefeller's charities, were invited by Chairman Stanley of the house steel trust investigating committee to appear before the committee, if they care to do so, to reply to charges by the Merritt brothers of Minnesota concerning the $20,000,000 Mesabe ore properties in Minnesota.

Representative Francis of Ohio introduced a resolution directing the steel investigation committee to continue its inquiry in spite of any suits pending in the state or federal courts and to enforce the criminal sections of the Sherman anti-trust law.

Physical valuation of all railroad property in the United States is proposed in a bill presented in the house by Representative Esch of Wisconsin. The bill would direct the interstate commerce commission to begin the investigation Jan. 1, 1912.

Gladstone Dowie Deserted Zionism.

Chicago, Illinois. — John Alexander Gladstone Dowie, only son of Alexander Dowie, founder of Zion City and of the religious cult, has deserted his father's creed and is studying for the Episcopalian ministry.

Several Hurt in Wreck.

Wheeling, West Virginia.—A fast freight and a passenger train collided head-on on the Short Line railroad, running between New Martinsville and Clarksburg, W. Va. The fireman was killed and several passengers injured.

$60,000 Fire Loss In Canada.

Winnipeg, Man. — The flour mill of the Union Supply company, with a capacity of 300 barrels, and the Imperial bank at Rosthern, Sask., were destroyed by fire. The total loss was $60,000.

WHAT IS AN INDIAN?

GOVERNMENT MUST PROVE THE ALLOTTEE'S LINEAGE.

Testimony Shows the Noble Red Man Has No Idea of the Value of Money.

Fergus Falls.—The United States court, which is trying the Beaulieu conspiracy case here, took temporary adjournment on account of the illness of Henry Rasicot, juror from Little Falls. Should his illness prove serious, the trial would have to be recommenced.

One of the remarkable things that is coming to light in the case is the indifferent manner in which the Indians, whether mixed or full blood, sold their lands and timber. Witness after witness has gone on the stand and testified that he sold his allotment without ever seeing it or finding out what it was worth.

It does not appear that the lumber companies paid them less than the claims were worth, but it was no fault of the allottees if they were not defrauded. It was also apparent that a large percentage of them, while extremely eager to get money, knew nothing of its value after they got it.

Equay-we-shish was a principal witness. She had had an allotment and had sold it for $4,500, and when shown deeds and other papers she denied having ever signed them.

The whole case hinges on the ability of the government to prove that the allottees who sold through the defendants are fullbloods, and this is a difficult matter, as nearly all of them admit relationship to mixed bloods. Their hazy idea of relationship was illustrated when Mr. O'Brien for the defense asked the witness who was testifying if he was a full blood and if he was not a cousin of certain mixed bloods whom he named.

"Yes" was the reply. To break the effect of the admission Gordan Cain for the government asked if the Indians did not sometimes speak of their friends as cousins, and the witness replied that they did. "Do they not also speak of the bears as their cousins," said O'Brien. "Yes," was the answer.

VIRGINIA SHOWS PROSPERITY.

Population Estimated at 17,000; $1,000,000 Spent for Improvements.

Virginia.—According to estimates based upon the increase in the enrollment of the public schools, the present population of Virginia is about 13,000. Those just outside the corporate limits and really within the city are fully 4,000 more. During the year fully $1,000,000 was expended in Virginia for improvements and already several hundred thousand dollars in public and private improvements have been planned for next year. These include $150,000 for streets and parks, $10,000 for a public market, $100,000 by the Canadian Northern for a passenger station and terminal facilities, $50,000 for a public library building, $70,000 for a new school building, $25,000 for an Elks building, beside a new street railway and headquarters for the company.

PREDICTS ORE RATE CUT.

Convinced Interstate Commerce Commission Will Order Reductions.

Duluth.—P. H. Nelson, independent iron ore operator who has just returned from Washington, where he was a witness before the Stanley committee, said:

"I am of the opinion that the interstate commerce commission will further reduce the iron ore rates in Minnesota and am convinced that the reduction will be to about 40 cents a ton. The cost of operation on the Missabe road is about 35 per cent of the gross earnings. If the independent iron mining men of Minnesota are to be put in position to meet Michigan competition at Lake Erie receiving ports there should be a further reduction of the Minnesota ore rates to about 40 cents a ton."

VETERAN ENGINEER IS CALLED.

William Huxley, Dean of Northwestern Drivers, Dies of Old Age.

Winona.—William Huxley, aged 81, the dean of the locomotive engineers in this section, and widely known by railroad men in Winona and on the Minnesota division of the Northwestern road, is dead at the home of his son, at Faribault. Death was due to old age.

The veteran railroader came to this section in 1865, when the railroad system was in its infancy. He grew up with the Northwestern on the Minnesota division. The funeral will take place tomorrow afternoon at Faribault. A large delegation of Winona Northwestern employes and many from along the line west of here, will attend the services.

AGAIN AFTER PARDON.

Father of Lifer Says Dutch Henry Was Seen Alive in Montana.

Echoes of the Marshall county murder case for which Alex McKenzie was sentenced to life imprisonment March 14, 1906, for killing John Stewart were heard again when his father, Daniel McKenzie, St. Paul, appeared in the Governor's office with the statement he had information that Dutch Henry, as Stewart was known, has been seen recently in Montana.

The convict's father wanted copies of affidavits submitted to the State Board of Pardons on different occasions, seeking the boy's release, and said he was going to Warren, Marshall county, near where the crime was committed, to obtain further evidence supporting his son's assertions of innocence. He also said the members of the jury that convicted him are now willing to sign a petition asking for his release.

Reports that Dutch Henry is still alive, and that the man identified as Stewart in the McKenzie trial was some one else, have been current at different times since McKenzie's imprisonment. The pardon board has always refused to act on McKenzie's application.

The crime of which he was convicted occurred on a lonely road outside of Warren. McKenzie and Stewart were shown to have left the village together, and the next morning the dead body of a man identified as Stewart was found along the road. Later, horses and other property known to have belonged to Stewart were found in McKenzie's possession. This the latter explained by saying Dutch Henry, wanted for some crime, had had to make a quick "getaway," and had left the property with him.

McKenzie is 29 years old.

$50,000 ASKED FOR DEATH.

Minnesota to Have a Test of New Federal Liability Law.

Minneapolis, Minn. — The first personal injury damage suit in Minnesota under the federal employers' liability act passed by congress April 10, 1910, was filed in Hennepin county district court. Mrs. Margaret Carroll asks $50,000 damages for the death of her husband, Eugene Carroll, railroad engineer on the Milwaukee road, who was killed May 11 when an engine boiler exploded at Frontenac, Wis. The liability limit in case of death under the state law is $7,500.

Under the federal law, which applies only to defendants doing an interstate business, it is declared that the state and the federal courts have concurrent jurisdiction. No limit of damages is fixed and the defendant may be liable even though there was contributory negligence on the part of the injured employee. Under the new act the case cannot be taken from the state courts even though both defendant and plaintiff are nonresidents.

It is admitted in the complaint that Carroll knew the engine was defective.

WORKS BUYS MORE LAND.

State Senator Interested in $100,000 Deal in Polk County.

Fosston.—The largest single real estate transfer of record for eastern Polk county has been closed. Senator S. D. Works of Mankato, who was already extensively interested in other portions of northern Minnesota, acquired the tract of rich farming lands in the township of Sletten, southwest of Fosston, amounting to about 4,000 acres and formerly owned by George M. Forman & Co., of Chicago.

Under the management of K. O. Balstad, this land has been improved by systematic drainage, making it especially adapted to stock raising or dairy farming, and the senator intimates that still further improvements will be made and the land then be placed upon the market. He expects to put stock upon the land the coming summer. The deal involves approximately $100,000.

WANTS STATE FAIR LATER.

Northern Counties' Boosters Will Urge Change at St. Cloud Meeting.

Brainerd. The Cass County Agricultural society has requested the assistance of the Brainerd Commercial club in an endeavor to have the date of the state fair changed, making it at least two weeks later than it is usually held.

A resolution was adopted and the delegates to the Northern Minnesota Development association meeting were requested to use their influences along that line.

The reason this is asked is because vegetables in Northern Minnesota are not as fully matured on September 1 as they are in Southern Minnesota, and the comparison in some cases is unfair and not just to Northern Minnesota.

Defective Page

Sacrifice of the Christmas Trees

DEFACING NATURE FOR A NIGHTS PLEASURE

A SAMPLE OF THE DESTRUCTION

WHAT MAN WILL DO FOR TWO CENTS

WILL the children in 1925 have Christmas trees? This question is being asked by thousands of people throughout the United States. Indications point to the supposition that within the next 15 years the supply of the evergreen trees with which we deck our living rooms annually at the feast of St. Nicholas will be so small that folk in the ordinary walks of life will not be able to afford a tree.

Year after year the forests have been denuded. New England, a generation ago, was thought to have an almost inexhaustible supply. Today her hills are bare. Nearly all her immense forests of spruce and fir have been sacrificed to the sentiment of Yuletide.

The middle states have been ransacked for their treasures. The farmer, although he receives but two cents apiece for the trees, is afraid to look the future in the face and wait until the tree is full grown. Neither does he show any discretion in cutting, but every year he rushes to the woods and cuts everything that he can lay his hands on in order that some one may have a night's pleasure by defacing nature's work with cheap tinsel and candles. After that, what would have been the forest of the future is discarded forever, beyond the power of man to restore and the work of nature for years to replace.

The bulk of the trees now come from Canada. More than 300,000 are used annually in Philadelphia alone. New York, Chicago, Baltimore and a hundred towns between them use three times that number every year.

In the wild hills of the Canadian provinces the trees are still plentiful. But it is only a question of a few years' time, with the increased demand for them, when their price will soar. No attempt is made, apparently, to rejuvenate the forests.

In a few scattered places throughout the country, it is true, one or two men have started nurseries in Christmas trees. Intelligent planting and cutting within three generations may make them useful patches from which to glean hardy trees.

But elsewhere, in spite of the talk of conservation which we hear so much about nowadays, the trees are stripped ruthlessly from the hills and valleys and no attempt is made by the greedy marketer to replace them.

This has resulted in the present dearth of the much-desired spruce trees. Vermont already charges an additional stumpage of five cents, upon trees which are shipped out of the state.

Let us consider the Christmas tree situation in Philadelphia. Each year more than 1,000 flat freight cars, loaded with the trees, which are piled in double tiers, reach the city. The capacity of the flat car averages 300 trees.

Therefore, approximately 300,000 trees are used in Philadelphia annually. Sentimentality apart, this is an enormous waste of material, when it is recalled that the trees serve no economic purpose, and the majority of them furnish fuel for bonfires on vacant lots two weeks after the holiday.

It is an expensive proposition considered in any light. First comes the cost of sending men into regions where the trees grow. They are experts. They are able to size up the marketable value of a patch of woods after a day's tramp through them. Then comes the cost of cutting, stumpage, hauling and shipping to destination. After that, it is mainly a matter for the retail dealers, who buy trees either as they stand in the forests, or at the freight yards in the cities to which they are consigned.

The small dealer must make his profit. He tacks on an extra price which the consumer must pay. Then comes the expense of decorating the greenwood with tinsel and glistening ornaments. This costs a little fortune in itself. Finally, it is usual to pay the ashman to cart the tree away, after the holidays are over.

It has been estimated that from first to last, from the time that the seedling is planted in the soft, friable soil, to the moment it returns to its primal element, the dust, as a handful of embers on the city lot, a Christmas tree represents a money valuation of $25.

This is a total expenditure of $7,500,000 annually. Of course, this figure is purely imaginary. The trees do not actually cause that amount of money to change hands in a simple buying and selling transaction. But there is actually that much loss to the regions which supply trees.

If all the trees in an average loaded flat car were to be stood upon their butts, in the natural way in which they would grow, they would cover a ten-acre lot. Multiply this by 1,000 and the amount of timber stripped annually from the hills will become apparent at once.

Just at this time of the year the Christmas tree industry is in its most flourishing condition. All of the trees for this year's market have been cut. Many of them are in transit, but some of them are even now standing in the freight yards of the railroads, waiting for the retail dealers to purchase them.

Dealers are gradually awakening to the fact that it is better to ship their trees early, sell them all at a low price, and save the trouble and expense of remaining a long time in the city bartering their wares.

The dealers in Christmas trees are types. They are all queer characters. You cannot pick out one that has not some peculiarity. As in all trades, there are tricks to the business of buying and selling Christmas trees.

You would think that the disposal of a car load of railroad ties, with a layer of trees piled on top, to an unwary customer, would bar the dealers from coming again to the spot where they had practiced such deception.

Yet it never does. Year after year they practice the most dishonest tricks upon their patrons. One man last year got a high price for 20 of the finest trees ever seen in Philadelphia. He told the buyer that the rest of the car on which the 20 were loaded was just like them, but when they were unloaded and placed for sale, they proved to be small and scrubby, many of them being utterly unfit for use. Dealers such as these are rare, it is true; the majority of them are honest.

To the dealers, whom the railroads designate as the consignees, come the little fellows, the traders. These also represent almost every phase of human character. Many save up a few hundred dollars and visit the freight yards with their teams, buying the trees in less than carload lots. In this way they can see just what they are getting. Most of them are shrewd fellows, and drive a hard bargain. Your upcountryman is ofttimes as shrewd, however, as the "piker" dealer, and many amusing hours may be spent frequenting the freight yards in the railroads where the trees are stacked or exhibited for sale.

Each year there are many new additions to the company of dealers. The lure of the adventure, the chance to realize money upon an investment that is practically certain to bring a 50 per cent. return, attracts many to the business. Trees can be purchased in half carload lots, or even in hundred lots for about 60 cents apiece. If they can be sold for a dollar, or perhaps more, the chance to make money quickly is irresistible to many investors.

Not always does the investor succeed. His fingers are sometimes pretty badly burned. The market may be glutted, he may have a rival on the next corner, or perhaps his trees are not sufficiently attractive to cause the public to patronize him. Perhaps he has held off, waiting for better prices, till the last moment, and finds himself with half a hundred spruce on his hands, which he must dispose of as best he may.

Usually, however, the business is lucrative. The wise dealer buys trees in hundred lots, peddles them out quickly, and comes back for more. He does not wait for high prices, but sells his trees for what he can get.

As you pass some windy corner one of these blustery nights before Christmas Eve and see the long rows of evergreens laid against the wall, or ignobly lying prone upon the ground, bethink you of the place in which they first saw the light. The kindly hills, snow-covered engirdling valleys fragrant with spicy odor; picture them bare, littered with the waste of cuttings, and the unsightly stumps of trees.

Picture the brooding of those trees as they grew. It took them 20 years to reach an age and size where they might prove marketable. No more will the wind moan and sough through their branches. The hills are bare. The snow will melt in the spring, and the soil will not absorb it. Water will run into the streams and the streams become floods, and the floods breed calamities.

The trees, noble fellows all of them, will have their tops hacked off to accommodate them to the stuffiness of our little box-like homes. As the heat of our rooms dries up their sap, their lives will go out, slowly, day by day. They will end on the bonfire.

Yes, buy a tree. Buy one and take it home to your children. When it is bravely decked out in all its gala finery, gather your family about its spreading branches, which are exhaling their last breaths for you, and tell them the story of the life and death of the tree.

Christmas in Old Time

Heap on more wood!—the wind is chill.
But let it whistle as it will,
We'll keep our Christmas merry still.

Each age has deem'd the newborn year
The fittest time for festal cheer;
And well our Christian sires of old
Loved when the year its course had roll'd
And brought blithe Christmas back again,
With all his hospitable train.
Domestic and religious rite
Gave honor to the holy night;
On Christmas eve the bells were rung;
On Christmas eve the mass was sung:
That only night in all the year
Saw the stoled priest the chalice rear.
The damsel donn'd her kirtle sheen,
The hall was dress'd with holly green;
Forth to the wood did merry men go
To gather in the mistletoe.
Then open'd wide the baron's hall
To vassal, tenant, serf and all;
Power laid his rod of rule aside
And Ceremony doff'd his pride.
The heir, with roses in his shoes
That night might village partner choose;
The lord, underogating, share
The vulgar game of "post and pair."
All hail'd, with uncontroll'd delight
And general voice, the happy night,
That to the cottage as the crown
Brought tidings of salvation down.
The fire, with well-dried logs supplied,
Went roaring up the chimney wide;
The huge hall table's oaken face,
Scrubb'd till it shone, the day to grace,
Bore then upon its massive board
No mark to part the squire and lord.
Then was brought in the lusty brawn
By old blue-coated serving man;
Then the grim boar's head grown'd on high,
Crested with bays and rosemary
Well can the green-garb'd ranger tell
How, when and where the monster fell,
What dogs before his death he tore
And all the baiting of the boar.
The wassail round, in good brown bowls
Garnish'd with ribbons, blitherly trowls.
There the huge sirloin reek'd; hard by
Plum porridge stood and Christmas pie;
Nor fail'd old Scotland to produce
At such high tide her savory goose.
Then came the merry maskers in
And carols roar'd with blithesome din;
If unmelodious was the song,
It was a hearty note and strong.
Who lists may in their mumming see
Traces of ancient mystery.
White shirts supplied the masquerade
And smutted cheeks the visors made;
But, O! what maskers, richly dight,
Can boast of bosoms half so light!
England was merry England, when Old Christmas brought his sports again.
'Twas Christmas broach'd the mightiest ale;
'Twas Christmas told the merriest tale;
A Christmas gambol oft could cheer
The poor man's heart through half the year.

—Sir Walter Scott.

THE SPIRIT OF THE DAY.

Have you time for a little sermon? It will take but a few minutes, and today, if ever, our thoughts should be turned toward inward to the heart of things. To you, whose hands rock the cradles of humanity and indirectly rule the world, let us ask a question: Are you forgetting the real spirit of the day? Gift giving on this anniversary of the Nativity is in danger of losing its loving purpose. It has degenerated in many cases to a mercenary exchange—a gift for a gift. The spirit is frequently absent.

This should not be. Women represent the greater number of giftgivers. Let us then revert to the underlying love and reverence that prompted the Wise Men to lay their offerings at the feet of the Holy Baby. Let us give a little of our hearts with each present, and if we cannot give a tangible expression of our love, let us give a heart's wish instead.

In your hands lies great power for good or for evil. A woman influences thought and action. It is your duty, then, to discountenance the heartless offer and to smile your approval of the spirit of the day.

Then, indeed, Christmas will mean all that he would approve. The guiding star of love and good will that shone so clearly in the blue night long ago should never be lost in our minds, and the love to which it pointed should epitomize our efforts to honor this great day.

A SURPRISE BOX.

Something which would delight any little invalid is a "surprise box." This may be planned to last a week or any length of time one wishes and should contain a package for each day, with the date on which it is to be opened written plainly on each one. Dolls, toys, books and many other things dear to the childish heart may be put in these packages and the little one will surely rejoice to have his "Merry Christmas" last so many days.

A LUTHERAN PIONEER

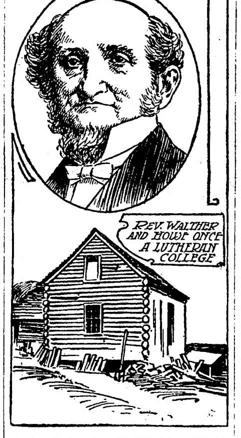
Centenary of Rev. Walther's Birth Is Observed.

Conspicuous Figure in the Church's History Who Came to America to Enjoy Full Liberty of Conscience.

St. Louis, Mo.—There is a large church body known as The Lutheran Synod of Missouri, Ohio and other states, the main founder, leader and advocate of which was Carl Ferdinand Wilhelm Walther, D. D., whose 100th birthday has recently observed for days by special services in thousands of churches of the Lutheran faith in the United States and Canada and all parts of the world.

Prof. Walther, the most conspicuous figure in the history of American Lutheranism, was born October 25, 1811, in Saxony, Germany. In the gymnasium of Schneeberg he received a thorough classical education and then pursued the studies of theology of Leipzig. After graduating from that institution with high honors he ministered for a brief period to a state church in his native land. However, his strict adherence to "God's word and Luther's doctrine pure" and his outspoken frankness soon brought him in conflict with the powers that were and he resolved to seek in free America that full liberty of conscience which was denied him in the land of his birth. He landed on our shores in the year 1838, in company with several brother ministers and a small band of emigrants who, like the Pilgrim Fathers, sought a haven of refuge and liberty on America's free soil.

After a short stay in Perry county, Mo., where the first college, a small log cabin, was erected, he removed to St. Louis, where he passed his long and useful life. As first pastor of four large and influential congregations in St. Louis, as president and professor at the Theological Seminary here, as editor of several church papers, as author of several church of valuable theological works, as president of the Lutheran Missouri Synod, he labored uncessingly and his name and fame became world wide.



REV. WALTHER AND HOUSE ONCE A LUTHERAN COLLEGE

And he lived to see in part the fruits of his labors. In place of the first little college in Perry county there was erected and dedicated 44 years later in St. Louis the handsome seminary in which today over 300 young men are being prepared for the Lutheran ministry. To this we must add another theological seminary at Springfield, Ill., one teachers' seminary at Chicago, Ill., and one at Seward, Neb., and a dozen of colleges (preparatory institutions for the ministry) in this country and foreign lands.

The Lutheran Synod of Missouri, founded, mainly through the influence of Dr. Walther, in 1847 in Chicago by 12 ministers and 12 congregations, today numbers over 2,200 ministers, 3,000 congregations, 600,000 communicant members and 2,100 parish schools in which 2,400 teachers instruct 94,000 pupils. The synod also has a large publishing house at St. Louis, which nets annually at least $100,000. And her missionaries are sent out into all parts of the world to preach the Gospel in 20 or 30 different languages. Thus the little mustard seed planted by Dr. Walther has grown and today stands as a large tree whose branches are spreading out over land and sea. But for all this Dr Walther to his end remained an humble servant of the Lord, holding to his chosen motto: "Soli Deo Gloria—All glory and honor to God alone." He died at St. Louis May 7, 1887.

Pistol Toters to Rock Pile.

Macon, Ga.—Persons convicted of carrying concealed weapons in this city need not expect leniency. Judge Hodges has declared that the recent prevalency of pistol cases makes it necessary for him to stringently enforce the law, and offenders in his court will receive straight chain-gang sentences, this being, it is believed, the most effective means of breaking up the practice.

WESTERN CANADA FARMER SECURES WORLD'S PRIZE FOR WHEAT

A ROSTHERN, SASK., FARMER THE LUCKY WINNER.

Sir Thomas Shaughnessy of the Canadian Pacific Railway offered $1,000 in gold as a prize for the best 100 lbs. of wheat, grown on the American continent, to be competed for at the recent Land Show in New York. In making the competition open, the donor of this handsome prize showed his belief in the superiority of Canadian wheat lands, by throwing the contest open to farmers of all America, both United States and Canada. The United States railways were by no means anxious to have the Canadian railways represented at the show and a New York paper commenting on the results of the competitions says that they were not to be blamed, as the Canadians captured the most important prize of the show.

The winner of this big wheat prize was Mr. Seager Wheeler of Rosthern, Saskatchewan, and its winning has brought a great deal of credit on the district. The winning wheat was the Marquis variety, and received no more attention from Mr. Wheeler than his other grain, but he is a very particular farmer. His farm is one of the cleanest and best kept in the Rosthern district, and this year he won first prize in a good farm competition which included every feature of farming and every part of the farm. Last winter Wheeler was a prize winner at the provincial seed fair in Regina.

Wheeler is a firm believer in sowing clean seed of the best quality procurable, consequently his grain is much sought after by the best farmers for seed purposes.

Wheeler is an Englishman. He is a pioneer of Rosthern, coming here fifteen years ago. In the last six years he has done much experimenting, particularly in wheat varieties. His farm resembles an experimental farm. A long driveway, lined on both sides with trees, leads to a modest house, the home of Wheeler, a modest, unassuming man with the appearance of a student rather than a man engaged in commercial pursuits.

There are now no free homesteads to be had in this district, and farm lands are worth from $20 to $40 per acre, which a few years ago were secured by their present owners, either as a free gift or purchased at from $5 to $8 per acre.

It is not many miles from Rosthern, where the farmer lives, who secured the first prize for wheat last year at the National Corn Exposition at Columbus and West of Rosthern, about 150 miles, lives Messrs. Hill and Son, who won the Colorado Silver Trophy, valued at $1,500, for the best peck of oats, also awarded at the National Corn Show at Columbus in 1910.

Not contented with the high honors obtained in its wheat, Canada again stepped forward into the show ring, and carried off the Stillwell trophy and $1,000 for the best potatoes on the continent. This time the winner was a British Columbia man, Mr. Asahel Smith, the "Potato King," of that province. The exhibit consisted of one hundred and one varieties drawn from all parts of the province aggregating in weight one and a half tons.

At the recent Dry Farming Congress, held at Colorado Springs, and at which time it was decided to hold the next Congress at Lethbridge, in 1912, the Province of Alberta made a wonderful showing of grains, grasses and vegetables.

"At the Congress, Alberta got more prizes and trophies, ten to one, than any state of the Union," said Mr. Hotchkiss to the Edmonton Bulletin. "We brought back all but the building with us, and they offered us that, saying we might as well take all that was going. We would have brought it along, too, if we had had a flat car to put it on. Alberta captured nearly 50 first prizes, 20 seconds, 3 thirds, 9 cups, 40 medals, 50 ribbons and 2 sweepstakes. The grand sweepstake prize, for the best exhibit by state or province, a magnificent silver cup, was presented to us with much ceremony at a reception to the Canadians in the Empress hotel. The presentation was made by Prof. Olin, chairman of the judging committee, and the cup was received on behalf of the province by the Hon. Duncan Marshall.

Fellows in Distress.

An efficient woman principal of a New York grammar school, though devoid of good looks and bearing the marks of long service in her profession, still retains the charm of a delightful frankness. One day while watching the pupils pass out of her building two by two, as usual, she noticed one boy marching alone, with his arm to his eyes, sobbing tumultuously. In answer to her solicitous inquiry as she drew him from the line, the little fellow wailed: "I—I haven't g-got no pardner!"

The principal extended a prompt and sympathetic hand. "Shake, dear boy, shake!" she invited. "I haven't, either."

When you hear two men talking so loudly that they can be heard in the next block, they are talking about something they know nothing about.

Dr. Pierce's Pellets, small, sugar-coated, easy to take as candy, regulate and invigorate stomach, liver and bowels and cure constipation.

And a kiss in the dark is one kind of an electric spark.

The Kaiser's Hairdresser

NARRATIVE OF CAPTAIN ADAMS

"Detective-Diplomat"

By H. M. EGBERT

(Copyright, by W. G. Chapman.)

I HAD not seen his majesty since he had appointed me to be one of his couriers. I had been given to understand, however, by the foreign secretary, Lord Lansdowne, that the king was highly pleased with the successful result of my mission to South America, which had saved the flagship of the American squadron from destruction. I had the self-depreciation to acknowledge that this event was purely the result of chance, and not due to any ability of mine; but Lord Lansdowne waved aside my explanations.

"My dear Adams," he said, "please remember from now on that a king's courier is judged by the success or failure of his mission—not by his deserts. Results are all that are desired, and it makes no particle of difference how you obtain them."

I had begun to think that my position was to be more or less a sinecure, when one morning my servant Talbot ushered a little page boy, a youthful scion of one of our noblest families, into my lodgings at Half Moon street, Piccadilly.

"Are you Captain Adamth, thir?" he lisped, with the blase insolence of 12 or 13 summers.

"At your service," I replied, bowing.

"Hith majethty dethireth your prethenth immediately at Tht. Jameth palath," said the page, clicking his heels and retiring with a military salute.

I wasted no time, but hurriedly changing into my frock coat, I ran down the stairs, polishing my silk hat upon my sleeve as I went. I reached the front door in time to see the page riding off in his automobile. I hailed a taxicab and drove to the palace. My arrival was expected, and I was immediately shown into a small room, where I saw an elderly gentleman, dressed in the conventional attire of a London clubman, bending over a file of newspapers. It was his majesty.

He turned round the moment that I entered, came up, and shook hands with me cordially, at the same time motioning to me to be seated. Then, drawing up his own chair close to mine, he began speaking with evident anxiety.

"Captain Adams," he said, "I was the first to regret the unfortunate termination of your career in the diplomatic service, and was also the first to suggest to Lord Lansdowne that your abilities should be employed in the less legitimate but unquestionably more useful field. I have not forgotten your deeds of courage in the Afghan campaign of 1897, and, with your diplomatic training, you should be one of my most useful aides. But now to come to the point.

"As you know, the kaiser has just returned to Germany after a trip to Morocco, and after making a bellicose speech there which has astonished Europe. All the nations are ranged up for a diplomatic conflict, namely, whether or not the kaiser shall be compelled to submit his claims against France to an international tribunal.

"Unfortunately, I have information that the kaiser considers that, with Russia weak and exhausted after her war with Japan, and unable to help France effectively, the moment has arrived to crush his old enemy, humble the republic so that she will never rise again, exact a tremendous indemnity, and annex the northern provinces. I need hardly tell you that Great Britain cannot see France conquered by Germany, for this would mean that the kaiser would be the dominant figure in the world's politics.

"I have positive information that it is his intention to make a public and theatrical declaration of war against France from the balcony of his palace at Potsdam, within three or four days. Arraying himself in the uniform of Frederick the Great, brandishing his sword and wearing the eagle helmet, he will, by this theatrical appeal, sweep the whole nation with him. At all costs this must be prevented.

"You will proceed to Potsdam, then, without delay, and demand an immediate interview with the kaiser. In my name you will insist that he abandon this project. But, if he refuse, as he probably will, then you will hand him this private communication which I now place in your hands, stating that any such action against the French will result in immediate war with England."

His majesty rose, indicating that the interview was at an end, and with a few appreciative words, and instructions that I should not delay, dismissed me. I went out of the palace a victim of conflicting emotions. Pride was dominant, pride at having been selected for so important a duty—one no less than that of preserving the peace of Europe. But with it was mingled, almost as strongly, the fear of responsibility, the dread that I had been given a task harder than I could perform. For my success virtually hung upon the kaiser's whim. And two years at the Berlin embassy had taught me that this was the X factor in German diplomacy.

That evening I caught the Hamburg boat, and, traveling all the following day, I reached Potsdam with the kaiser's momentous speech still in the future. It was evident, however, that rumors of impending war had gone abroad, for there was a curious tenseness in the atmosphere, an attitude of waiting and expecting, to be discovered everywhere, and not only among the officials. More than that, since morning, a crowd had gathered in front of the palace, and this had gradually increased, without the police making any effort to break it up, until all the nearby streets and avenues were thronged with people. Inside the palace the kaiser was supposed to be receiving a levee of his own subjects and a few distinguished foreigners, who were being presented by their ambassadors. I had the right of entree, as having been formerly attached to the Berlin embassy. Immediately after having secured lodgings I donned my court suit and hastened to the palace doors in a hack. My card was taken in to the master of ceremonies, and, two minutes later, that functionary, all spangled with decorations, came hurrying out to me.

"My dear Adams," he exclaimed heartily, "what a pleasure to see you again! Is it business brings you to his majesty's levee?"

"Business of an urgent character," I replied. "I must have word with the kaiser immediately."

The master of ceremonies threw up his hands in consternation.

"Impossible," he muttered. "He will see nobody until after tomorrow morning. He is not even at his own levee. His brother, Prince Henry, represents him. The kaiser absolutely refused to see a legate from the pope this morning."

"Why not until after tomorrow morning?" I queried.

The master of ceremonies turned as red as a beet.

"Did I say that?" he murmured. "Why, the fact is—people are saying that he has an important document—"

"That he is drafting his speech against the French republic," I interpolated. "That tomorrow he will put on the panoply of Frederick the Great, and, standing on the palace balcony, the incarnation of his imperial ancestor, he will say words which will launch all Germany over her western boundaries."

"Well, yes," said the master of ceremonies. "That is no secret in the diplomatic world, and I believe that France is already concentrating her legions upon her eastern borders. But why do you come here to tell me this?"

"Because it must be stopped," I rejoined curtly. "The moment that the first German company crosses the border, an English squadron will sail for Hamburg."

He fell back, looking at me in astonishment.

"I have spoken plainly with you," I said, "because it is imperative that at least the kaiser understand the position. Now, will you take me to him?"

"I dare not," he answered. "Will you see the chancellor, Prince Buelow?"

I signified my willingness. It was evident that my declaration had created an intense effect in the bosom of the worthy court functionary, who, like most of his class, was more acquainted with the kaiser's intentions than many of the heads of state departments. A couple of minutes later Prince Buelow came along the corridor, resplendent with orders, and taking me by the arm with great cordiality, led me into an anteroom, where we found the master of ceremonies pacing the floor in agitation.

"I dare not go and tell him," he muttered. "And yet—if he should not be told, we should be traitors to Germany—"

"Let me see the kaiser," I interpolated.

"Impossible," said Prince Buelow. "I would do a good deal for you, Captain Adams, for I always found you an honorable antagonist and a firm friend in the old days—but that . . . no. His majesty has one of his nervous headaches, and he tramps his bedroom, cursing the barber for not arriving to massage his face."

"The barber?" I queried. "Not our old friend M. Perruquet?"

"Yes," said the prince, laughing grimly. "M. Perruquet, who used to shave the members of the diplomatic corps, came to the notice of the kaiser and got himself installed as chief barber. The fellow developed a power of soothing his majesty's aching facial nerves by massage, and his majesty swears that nobody but he can give him the relief he seeks."

"It is, then, impossible to see him?" I queried.

"Absolutely. But if you will transmit your message to me, I—"

Suddenly the door was flung open heavily and, with a quick, nervous tread, the kaiser Wilhelm himself appeared upon the threshold.

"Buelow! Buelow! Where the devil is that barber?" he bellowed angrily. "I sent for him an hour ago!" He paused and seemed to notice me for the first time. "Ha! An old acquaintance; an old face in a new setting, I think?" he continued, evidently alluding to my non-military uniform.

I bowed. "Captain Adams, your majesty, formerly second attache of the British legation," I said. "I have a message to deliver to your majesty of the most vital—"

"The devil take your messages," the kaiser cried, slapping his face violently. "I'll have that M. Perruquet bastinadoed—or at least I would if I were the Grand Turk."

"If your majesty would deign to grant me five minutes' speech with you—" I began.

"No, no, wait till tomorrow afternoon," said the kaiser peevishly, turning aside. "My good Buelow, are you sure that orderly did not fall asleep on the way to M. Perruquet's shop?"

"Then, your majesty, I am commissioned by his Britannic majesty, to deliver this paper to you," I said, pulling the letter from my pocket-wallet.

"Give it to Buelow," said the kaiser. "Read it, Buelow, but as you value your post, do not speak of it to me until tomorrow." And, cursing the dilatory barber, his majesty stamped violently out of the room, and we could hear him pacing the corridor.

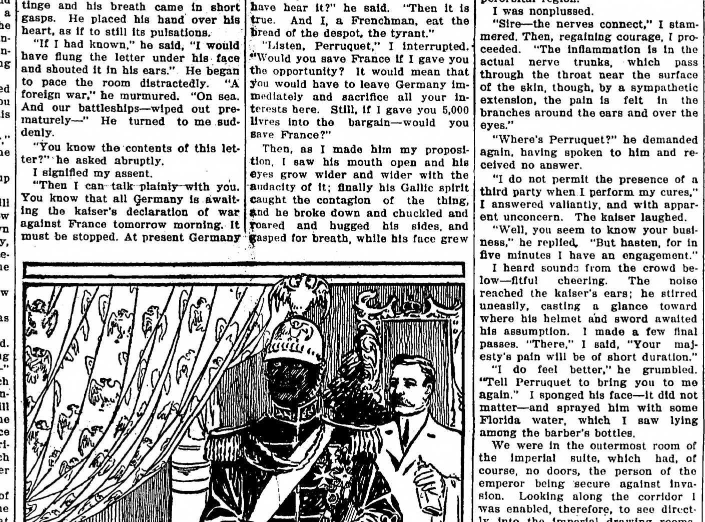
Prince Buelow, in the meantime, had opened the letter and read its contents. My attention had been distracted by the sound of the kaiser's movements. I thought I heard him groan as he passed out of the door. He was evidently in great pain. When I turned round I was amazed at the change in the chancellor's expression. His face had taken on a greenish tinge and his breath came in short gasps. He placed his hand over his heart, as if to still its pulsations.

"If I had known," he said, "I would have flung the letter under his face and shouted it in his ears." He began to pace the room distractedly. "A foreign war," he murmured. "On sea. And our battleships—wiped out prematurely—" He turned to me suddenly.

"You know the contents of this letter?" he asked abruptly.

I signified my assent.

"Then I can talk plainly with you. You know that all Germany is awaiting the kaiser's declaration of war against France tomorrow morning. It must be stopped. At present Germany cannot afford to go to war with France and England in alliance."



He felt himself to be Frederick the Great reincarnated

"Why not go to the kaiser and insist upon an audience?" I demanded. The master of ceremonies smiled.

"You do not know the kaiser," he returned.

"Moreover," said Prince Buelow, "even if I were able to do this thing the kaiser's obstinacy would be aroused. His pride and obstinacy are his dominant characteristics. No, frankly, I see little hope that this can be accomplished. Nothing can turn him from his purpose."

"Perhaps I might," I hazarded, "without an audience. Gentlemen, since neither England nor Germany desires this war, shall we allow one man to plunge two nations into misery?"

They looked at one another aghast; plain speaking of that nature was the exception at the kaiser's court.

"Tell me," I continued, "when will his majesty make his speech from the balcony?"

"At ten tomorrow—if the court tailor has finished his uniform," said the master of ceremonies with a slight sneer.

"And you will be present?" I asked turning to the chancellor.

"I shall enter his presence in his private room, after the barber has got through with him, at quarter before ten. At ten o'clock he will precede me to the drawing room, where the royal family and several of his generals will be waiting on him. They will follow him to the balcony, where he will solemnly fling his defiance into the face of France."

"At a quarter before ten tomorrow the danger will have been averted," I said to the prince. "Have no fear; the kaiser's speech will not be delivered."

"You are not planning to assassinate him?" cried Buelow in tones that were only half jocular.

"Nothing but his pride," I responded. Thereupon, refusing to satisfy their curiosity further, I withdrew and returned to my lodgings. Yet, although I had hopes that my scheme could be made effective, I was assailed by doubts of the most hideous character. What would the result of failure be? But I did not allow myself to dwell upon these thoughts for long. After all, I could only do my best; and, fail or succeed, I must not despair until all was ended. After a hasty meal I hurried round to the shop of M. Perruquet, the barber, which was situated in a narrow street not far from the palace. He recognized me at once and gave me a volatile French greeting.

"Ha, M. Adams," he cried, "is it that you have come back to be secretary of the embassy once more?"

"Hardly, Perruquet," I responded dryly. "I am here on a short visit. I hear they have made you court barber now. How do you like the kaiser?"

"Mon Dieu!" he cried, shrugging his shoulders, "I have just come from there. Today I massage his face and he curse all the time like one frantic with pain. Tomorrow at nine I must be there to shave and massage him again. He tell me my touch, it no longer cure the pain. But wait! Let me get only another 5,000 livres and I return to my dear France, to live in obscurity and shake the dust off my shoes in the face of Germany."

"I hear your dear France is in danger of a German conquest," I said.

Perruquet's face blanched. "You have hear it?" he said. "Then it is true. And I, a Frenchman, eat the bread of the despot, the tyrant."

"Listen, Perruquet," I interrupted. "Would you save France if I gave you the opportunity? It would mean that you would have to leave Germany immediately and sacrifice all your interests here. Still, if I gave you 5,000 livres into the bargain—would you save France?"

Then, as I made him my proposition, I saw his mouth open and his eyes grow wider and wider with the audacity of it; finally his Gallic spirit caught the contagion of the thing, and he broke down and chuckled and roared and hugged his sides, and gasped for breath, while his face grew red until I was afraid that he would choke himself to death. But finally he recovered and the details were arranged.

Shortly before nine o'clock on the following morning M. Perruquet was to bring me into the presence of the kaiser, explaining that, since his own touch had failed to alleviate the neuralgic pains, he desired his majesty to try the services of a noted masseur, who had just entered his employment and was reputed to possess the power of healing. Thereupon, the kaiser having been shaved by the Frenchman, I was to massage his face thoroughly for half an hour, while M. Perruquet would slip out by a side entrance and proceed directly to the railway station, from which a train would convey him over the border. I myself would await whatever fate came to me; I knew that, an unofficial but still accredited envoy of his Britannic majesty, I would not be likely to be molested.

I gave Perruquet a draft for 5,000 livres, which he accepted readily, my former official position vouching for its genuineness in his eyes. Then, with a few parting instructions, I left him.

Next morning, soon after eight, when I passed through the streets, I saw the square in front of the palace densely packed with a surging throng. The word had gone forth that the kaiser's declaration was to be made that morning, and all Potsdam was agog with patriotic enthusiasm. I found Perruquet waiting for me, and we hurried to the palace. I was admitted, in the barber's company, without question, and we were led to the royal apartment, where we discovered the sovereign of Germany lying in a darkened room, strikingly clad in the famous uniform of his ancestor, his sword beside him, and his helmet with the eagle brooding over it, upon a chair.

"I am in agony, Perruquet," he muttered. Then he saw me. "Who is this?" he demanded.

"An assistant of mine, sire," returned the barber, bending low. "He possesses extraordinary skill as a masseur, and will, I am confident, be able to relieve your majesty."

"Well, come, shave me quickly," said Wilhelm, crossing the room and taking his seat in a barber's chair in front of a mirror. But it was not to my purpose that he should watch my manipulations. I busied myself with my own preparations, while Perruquet was shaving the emperor, and, when it came to my turn to massage him, finding no more suitable excuse, I boldly wheeled the chair, containing its imperial occupant, into another part of the room, from which he could not watch my movements.

I think the audacity of this action saved me. For an instant the kaiser sat up, the blood flaming in his cheeks, then, apparently concluding that one who would be so daring must possess unusual qualifications, he resigned himself to my manipulations, lying back, as I directed him, with closed eyes.

You may be sure that I massaged him very thoroughly. From the juncture of the hair with the forehead down to the chin, and to the throat, there was no place on which I did not leave the imprint of my fingers.

"Why are you massaging my throat?" asked the kaiser, once. "The pain is here!"—indicating the superorbital region.

I was nonplussed.

"Sire—the nerves connect," I stammered. Then, regaining courage, I proceeded. "The inflammation is in the actual nerve trunks, which pass through the throat near the surface of the skin, though, by a sympathetic extension, the pain is felt in the branches around the ears and over the eyes."

"Where's Perruquet?" he demanded again, having spoken to him and received no answer.

"I do not permit the presence of a third party when I perform my cures," I answered valiantly, and with apparent unconcern. The kaiser laughed.

"Well, you seem to know your business," he replied. "But hasten, for in five minutes I have an engagement."

I heard sounds from the crowd below—fitful cheering. The noise reached the kaiser's ears; he stirred uneasily, casting a glance toward where his helmet and sword awaited his assumption. I made a few final passes. "There," I said, "Your majesty's pain will be of short duration."

"I do feel better," he grumbled. "Tell Perruquet to bring you to me again." I sponged his face—it did not matter—and sprayed him with some Florida water, which I saw lying among the barber's bottles.

We were in the outermost room of the imperial suite, which had, of course, no doors, the person of the emperor being secure against invasion. Looking along the corridor I was enabled, therefore, to see directly into the imperial drawing rooms, at the far end, in which a notable gathering of ladies and officers in brilliant uniforms, was in progress. Every instant their numbers seemed to be augmented. The crowd outside had discovered them, too, and had moved round to that portion of the palace, thus still further augmenting the numbers of those collected in the great square, but leaving that part of the grounds beneath our windows comparatively deserted.

"Please bring me my helmet," said the kaiser, rising and assuming an intensely dramatic air. "Stop! Do not dare to lay your hand upon the sword. None but my ancestors and I may set our hands upon that honorable blade."

It was evident that he was keying up his whole nature to the attunement of that heroic part which he had planned for himself. I am convinced that at that instant he felt himself to be Frederick the Great, reincarnated. He set the helmet fiercely upon his head and buckled on his belt, thrusting the sword into the scabbard. He stood in an attitude of command, twirling his mustaches upward.

I saw Prince Buelow appear at the end of the corridor and come slowly toward us, tottering like an old man. I guessed his agony.

"Enough, you may leave me," said the kaiser, dismissing me with a wave of the hand. He cast a hasty glance into the mirror, but, as I have said, the room was in semi-obscurity, and he saw nothing but the dim outline of his reflection. Then he stalked, hand on sword hilt, down the corridor to meet the prince. As his footstep was heard outside I saw the pages at the doors of the drawing rooms stiffen themselves, and the officers within instinctively assume their military bearing.

A cry rang through the corridor. It came from Buelow's lips. I saw him stagger back and collapse against the door of the drawing room.

"Sire—sire—" he stammered.

And the kaiser, with solemn paces, entered into the assemblage of all that was most brilliant in modern Germany, walking toward the balcony without, to make his declaration. I saw his shoulders go back in military fashion. The spirit of the masquerade held him fast in its bonds. He was the nation's hero, he was going to his public acclamation.

I saw the assemblage sift before him. I saw women fall back, faint and amazed; the officers forgot their bearing and clutched at one another's sleeves.

Between the great French windows was a mirror. Something was advan[illegible] it to meet the kaiser. He saw the eagle upon the helmet, the uniform of his great ancestor, the hand upon the sword, the fiercely uplifted mustaches. But the face—the face that looked out at him was black as a negro minstrel's.

And, indeed, he seemed like nothing so much as a negro comedian at that moment. The incongruity was ludicrous; and the sparkling orders and brilliant colors of the uniform looked like a clown's spangles.

For a moment the kaiser stopped, sick with horror. Then, as he tottered backward, old General Von Weyde ran toward him and caught him in his arms and led him from the drawing room.

I gasped hysterically. I had seen it all, waiting there in the outermost apartment. I knew now that war was averted; that the extract of walnut which I had rubbed into the pores of his face and throat had brought his scheme to nothing. For how could the hero of Germany appear before the mob in negro guise? And, before the kaiser could face the crowds again, Buelow would have brought him to his senses.

Hastily I seized a pen and, scribbled upon a piece of paper these words:

"It will wear off in a week!"

Then I dashed for the private entrance and gained it just as the old general entered, leading the weeping emperor by the arm.

WHAT CAUSED HER INTEREST

Not the Point Made, but the Resonant Tones, Aroused Admiration of Listener.

The woman who had come to New York as a delegate to the Association of Collegiate Alumnae from a middle western university had been making a speech at one of the meetings. When she took her seat in the audience, after leaving the platform, a woman visitor seated in front of her turned toward her, handed her a paper and a lead pencil and asked the alumna if she would please write her name and address, as the visitor had been so greatly pleased with the address. Alert to respond when there seemed an opportunity to promulgate further her special views—which were none too popular with all the sorority—the alumna asked which points had especially interested the visitor.

"Oh," said the guest joyously and frankly, "I was so glad just to be able to hear what you were saying that it really did not make so much difference what it was. You are the only woman who has spoken today whom I have been able to hear and understand. You are the smallest woman who has spoken, so it shows that size has nothing to do with voice. I am glad to know you, for it seems to me as unintelligent a thing as anybody can do to make a speech that cannot be heard. If women really think their views are worth promulgating they ought to be willing to make whatever effort is necessary to have them heard—not invite people here to listen to a lot of tiresome mumbling."—New York Press.

Moorish Wedding Banquet.

A wedding at Tetuan has united the two most powerful families in the town. The son of the celebrated Moor Lebady, lately the Basha of Tetuan, has been joined in matrimony with the daughter of the Moor Alcayna. Nearly all the Christian residents of Tetuan attended the ceremony, as well as others who journeyed from Cueta.

The Moors who were invited to the feasting and revelry, which lasted two days, had such enormous appetites that for the purposes of different banquets they slaughtered 2,000 hens, 2,000 chickens, 500 sheep, 40 oxen and 500 pigeons. Honey and cheese were consumed by the hundredweight, and bottles of lemonade disappeared by the thousand. For coffee and tea 5,000 pounds of sugar were required and Lebady spent £125 on biscuits, pastry and confectionery.—London Telegraph.

To Reduce Living Expenses

Was it the high cost of living that induced Germany to begin negotiations with Great Britain for a reduction in naval armaments? The tax to support army and navy is the greatest that any of the civilized powers has, and this is especially true of Germany, with her highly organized army and splendid navy. Great Britain heads the list with an annual expenditure on army and navy of $332,000,000, followed by Germany with $305,000,000, Russia with $296,000,000 and France with $221,000,000. The total cost of militarism for one year is $1,773,000,000, nearly four times the value of the world's annual production of gold and silver, and this does not include South and Central America.—Leslie's Weekly.

An American Guess

Gordon castle, where the king made a call upon the duke of Richmond, was once taken for a public house. Somebody had begged the duke to sample the burgundies of California, and he wrote out for a few cases, subscribing himself of course, "Richmond and Gordon." The cases duly arrived addressed to "Messrs. Richmond and Gordon, Gordon Castle Hotel."—London Opinion.

Alone in the Business

"Phwat ahr ye doin' in here?" said the policeman to the old woman peddling apples in the corridors of the state capitol. "Don't ye know peddlers ahr not allowed in here?"

"Plaze, sor, an' I'm only tryin' t' make an honest livin'."

"Well, if that's th' case, go ahead. Sure, an' ye won't have anny competition."—Lippincott's.

The Northern Light

CHAS. W. LATTA

Editor and Publisher.

Published every Friday at Holt, Marshall County, Minnesota.

Subscription Price: $1.00 per year, strictly in advance.

Entered as second-class matter Sept. 22, 1911, at the post office at Holt, Minnesota, under the act of March 3, 1879.

Be a booster—not a knocker.

The governor has at last made it plain that there will be no extra session of the legislature if he can prevent it. Fortunately Minnesota does not have to repeat when electing her public officials.

The eastern press announces that Taft's nomination for the presidency next year is a certainty. The general public can hardly prevent his nomination, but that doesn't necessarily mean that they can't prevent his election.

Lieutenant Governor Sam Y. Gordon threw the old republican ring at the capital into a spasm on Tuesday by announcing that in the absence of the governor he was willing to assume all responsibility and call the legislature in extra session. The attorney general headed off the move by announcing that Governor Eberhart could cancel the call when he returned—and nobody could deny that he would cancel it. Eberhart says there is no occasion for an extra session, while Gordon and thousands of others think there is. This political game is certainly strenuous.

Farms Wanted.

I have prospective buyers for a few good improved farms; also for 960 acres of wild land. All must be in eastern Marshall county.

Chas. W. Latta, Holt, Minn.

M. A. NELSON, M. D.

Physician and Surgeon

Office over Holt Merc. Co's store

HOLT, MINNESOTA.

Bank Statement.

Statement of the condition of the Holt State Bank, Holt, Minn., at close of business on Dec. 5, 1911.

Date of call by Supt. Dec. 9, 1911.

Date of Report by Bank, Dec. 12, 1911.

RESOURCES
Loans and discounts			$29,303 91
Overdrafts			655 92
Banking house, furniture and fixtures			2,078 94
Due from banks		18,818 15
Checks and cash items		410 70
Cash on hand (items below)		2,142 42
Currency	1,657
Gold	15
Silver	449 45
Other	20 97
Total cash assets			21,371 27
Total			53,410 04
LIABILITIES
Capital Stock			$10,000 00
Undivided profits, net			200 55
Bills payable (including certificates for money borrowed)			5,500 00
Deposits subject to check	24,382 51
Cashier's checks	166 07
Total immediate liabilities	24,548 58
Time certificates	13,160 91
Total Deposits	37,709 49
Total			53,410 04

State of Minnesota }
County of Marshall } ss

We, D. B. Bakke, President and B. L. Backe Cashier of the above named Bank, do solemnly swear that the above statement is true to the best of our knowledge and belief.

D. B. BAKKE, President,
B. L. BACKE, Cashier.

Correct Attest: H. LOKEN,
(Two Directors. D. B. BAKKE.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 12th day of December, 1911.

(Seal) NILS ENGEBRETSEN, Notary Public.
My commission expires June 15, 1912.

Scholarship for Sale Cheap

We have for sale, cheap for cash, a scholarship good for three months tuition in Crookston College, and for any subject at any time. It is worth $30 but will be sold for considerably less as we need the cash.

Call or address The Northern Light, Holt, Minn.

Subscribe for The Northern Light. Only $1.00 per year.

Enamelled kitchenware at Kolden's. Triple coated, white lined and the best bargains you ever knew, 10 and 60 cents only, while they last.

For a holiday gift why not send this paper for a year to a friend? It would please the friend and help to boost this community. Call and get acquainted with our attractive Special Offer for such subscriptions.

We want more subscribers and will take potatoes, chickens, or wood at current market prices on subscription. Of course we prefer the money, but if you haven't the cash bring on the produce. Don't be without your home paper anyway.

Notice of Contest.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
United States Land Office.
Crookston, Minnesota. December 6, 1911.

To Brodie Watson, of Grygla, Minnesota, Contestee:

You are hereby notified that Tidman L. Bjella, who gives Bemidji, Minnesota, as his post-office address, did on November 22, 1911, file in this office his duly corroborated application to contest and secure the cancellation of your Homestead, Entry No. serial No. 05149, made March 22, 1910, for W½ SW¼, S½ NW¼, Section 5, Township 155 N., Range 39 W., 5th Prin. Meridian, and as grounds for his contest he alleges that said Brodie Watson has wholly abandoned said land for more than six months next prior to this contest and that he has never improved said land in any respect and never cultivated the same as required by law.

You are, therefore, further notified that the said allegations will be taken by this office as having been confessed by you, and your said entry will be cancelled thereunder without your further right to be heard therein, either before this office or on appeal, if you fail to file in this office within twenty days after the FOURTH publication of this notice, as shown below, your answer, under oath, specifically meeting and responding to these allegations of contest, or if you fail within that time to file in this office due proof that you have served a copy of your answer on the said contestant either in person or by registered mail. If this service is made by the delivery of a copy of your answer to the contestant in person, proof of such service must be either the contestant's written acknowledgement of his receipt of the copy, showing the date of its receipt, or the affidavit of the person by whom the delivery was made stating when and where the copy was delivered; if made by registered mail, proof of such service must consist of the affidavit of the person by whom the copy was mailed stating when and the postoffice to which it was mailed, and this affidavit must be accompanied by the postmaster's receipt for the letter.

You should state in your answer the name of the post office to which you desire future notices to be sent to you.

JOHN PETTERSON, Receiver.

VAULE & MURPHY
Attorneys for Contestant.

Date of first publication, December 15, 1911.
Date of second publication, December 22, 1911.
Date of third publication, December 29, 1911.
Date of fourth publication, January 5, 1912.

WHERE THACKERAY STUDIED

The lover of Thackeray who makes a pilgrimage to the temple must not confine his attention to Brick court, for that was only one of the novelist's temple homes. In 1831, when Thackeray became a member of the temple, he commenced his studies at 1 Hare court by reading with William Taprell, and in 1848, when he was finally called to the bar, he took chambers in Crown Office row, sharing them, it is said, with Tom Taylor of Punch. His Crown Office row chambers have disappeared, but Hare court, in which a disastrous fire was once extinguished with beer because the Thames water was frozen, still stands.—London Chronicle.

HE SHOULDN'T HAVE DONE IT

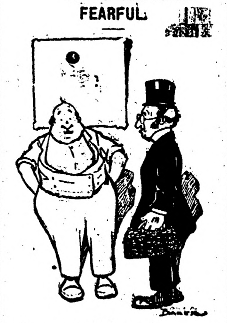
Carrie—You seem to think a lot of Clarence.

Cholly—Yes, he once saved me life, the deah fellah.

Carrie—Indeed! How?

Cholly—Gave me a cigarette when I was ten miles from town.

FEARFUL.



Doctor—I hardly think you will live over one year.

Patient—That's a hot outlook.

FEMININE FINANCE.

Gramercy—What! You paid $60 a dozen for stockings?

Mrs. Gramercy—Don't be angry dear. I wasn't extravagant. I bought only half a dozen.—Puck.

SPOONER STILL A BACHELOR

Extravagant Praise of Miss Dora Proved the Undoing of the Ardent Wooer.

"Do you really mean it, Mr Spooner, when you say I am the best girl in the world?" asked a young lady of an ardent admirer.

"Indeed I do, Dora," responded the young man. "I say it again—you are the best girl in the world."

"And the loveliest, I think you said?"

"The loveliest without doubt."

"And I think you said something about my accomplishments, too?"

"I did. I said they excelled those of any other girl."

"I believe you called me sweet?"

"A sweeter woman never lived."

"You used the word 'perfect,' too, did you not?"

"I did. I look upon you as the pink of my heart, the peerless one among the beauteous creatures among your sex, a maiden adorable and worthy of the best man on earth. Say the word that will make me the happiest man on earth."

"Before I give you an answer, Mr Spooner, I should like to ask you one question."

"A dozen if you like, Miss Dora."

"One will be enough. Don't you think you have a great deal of assurance to expect a woman with all those excellent qualities to marry such an ordinary man as you?"

Mr. Spooner is still a bachelor.

OLD WAYS OF WHITSUNTIDE

Some Quaint Customs in the Observance of the Day Prevail in England.

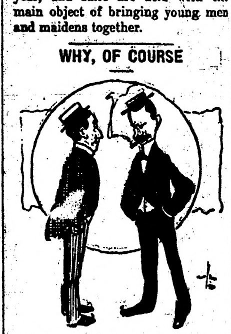
In various parts of the country curious old customs associated with Whitsuntide still have their proper observance, says Answers, London. At Birdip, near Cheltenham, for instance, a good sized cheese is sent rolling down an extremely steep hill while an excited crowd of would-be captors follow. Usually a fair number of pursuers have adopted the same method of progression as the cheese before the prize has been secured.

Every twentieth Whitmonday the villagers of Corby, Northamptonshire, stop up all the roads and footpaths in the parish, and strangers are forced to pay toll. The practice dates back to the days of Queen Bess, and commemorates a charter absolving the people of Corby from certain jury services.

In certain parts of the country it is still believed that any child born on Whitsunday is doomed to be killed or kill, and to ward off this evil the unfortunate babe has to go through a make-believe form of burial.

Many districts of rural England however, hold Whitsuntide as the great match-making festival of the year, and fairs are held with the main object of bringing young men and maidens together.

WHY, OF COURSE



Hoax—I can't see any similarity between becoming a congressman and baking good bread.

Joax—Isn't success largely a matter of dough in both instances?

RELIGIOUS DENOMINATIONS.

Of the English-speaking religious communities of the world there are 29,200,000 Episcopalians, 18,650,000 Methodists of all descriptions, 15,500,000 Roman Catholics, 12,250,000 Presbyterians of all descriptions, 9,230,000 Baptists of all descriptions, 6,150,000 Congregationalists of all descriptions, 5,250,000 Free Thinkers, 2,800,000 Lutherans, 2,600,000 Unitarians, 5,500,000 belonging to minor sects and 17,000,000 or no particular religion.

AN EXCEPTION.

"I hat that expression, 'Drop me a line.'"

"Still, it's permisible if you happen to be drowning."

Your Wife and Children

Are entitled to some Christmas Presents this Year.

In making a selection for your wife or daughter why not come and see our Big Line of ROCKERS and LADIES' DESKS? They make ideal Christmas Gifts and their Prices are Very Reasonable.

We carry a complete line of Musical Instruments and Supplies. Mail orders receive our prompt and careful attention.

TORRISON BROS.
THIEF RIVER FALLS, MINN.

THE DULUTH HERALD
BEATS THE CENSUS THREE TO ONE

During the past ten years the population of Duluth increased 48 per cent., St. Paul 32 per cent., and Minneapolis 49 per cent. In the Same Period the Circulation of The Duluth Herald

INCREASED 150 PER CENT.

This marvelous expansion—so much greater than that of the surrounding territory—is due solely to the merits of The Herald. The Herald has never used any kind of premium, contest, or price reduction to gain subscribers but prints each day the very best NEWSPAPER in the Northwest. Its editorial page is thoroughly independent and its news columns cover every feature of the world's daily history.

Send for sample copy and get The Herald habit.

THREE MONTHS FOR $1.00—Mailed Daily.

ADDRESS HERALD CIRCULATION DEPT., DULUTH, MINN.

V-I-V-O

The Best there is in Flour.

Our Elevator and Lumber Yard are always prepared to give the most satisfactory service.

Hanson & Barzen Milling Co.,

OSCAR HANSON, Agent, - - HOLT, MINN.

AXEL NELSON

General Blacksmith Work

HOLT, - - MINN.

All work done Right, at Reasonable Prices.

The Evergreen Hotel

P. A. RESBERG, PROP.

Rates, $1.00 per day.

Serves the best Meal in Eastern Marhall Co. for twenty-five cents.

Livery and Feed Barn in connection.

Red Lake Falls Milling Co.

Makers of the Celebrated

Mascot Flour

and bUYERS of all kinds of GRAIN.

Our Elevator will give you satisfaction.

OLE MATSON, Agent . . . Holt, Minn.

Bring us your Job Printing orders

Crookston College...

Is the Leading Business School in the Northwest.

OUR TEACHERS Are all College and University Graduates.

FINANCIAL STANDING It is backed by a capital of $50,000 which is a safe guarantee to its students that every promise will be fulfilled.

ACTUAL BUSINESS The only school in Northern Minnesota having an actual business department.

BOARD and ROOM Can be had in private families for $3 per week. Other school towns will charge from $4 to $6.

POSITIONS The demand upon us for office help is greater than we can supply.

Catalogue and further information given free by writing.

J. C. SATHRE, Crookston, Minn.

Local Items

The Local Market.

(Grain prices furnished by Hanson & Barzen Milling Co. at close of business every Thursday.)

Flax	$1.92
Wheat	.61
Barley d	.95
Oats	.38
Rye	.75

Bring us the news.

When in town call at this office and let's get acquainted.

George Philipson is here from Thief River Falls for a short visit with friends.

Willis Waring was in from Excel Saturday evening to attend the wrestling match.

John Batten spent Monday night at Thief River Falls attending to some important business matters.

Chas. W. Latta moved his family onto his claim in section 36, of East Valley township, where they intend making their future home.

Services with Communion will be held in the Holt church on Sunday the 17th inst at 10:30 A. M. On the same day children's meeting will be held at 2 P. M.

During the past few days a crew of men have been busy putting a new steel ceiling in the Holt State Bank. The improvement adds considerably to both the appearance and comfort of the building.

Christmas Candies—We carry a very complete line of finest candies for the holiday trade. In packages at prices from 5 cents to $10.00. Mail orders given special attention. J. A. Sworr, Thief River Falls, Minn.

Tony Carlson donated a few hours of his time yesterday to helping the editor set the type for this issue. A sore hand, sustained in moving, put the editor to some extent out of commission and we deeply appreciate Mr. Carlson's kindness.

The next item in the entertainment line will be a big basket party and dance to be given at the Woodman hall in Holt on Saturday evening, the 16th inst. There will be a big crowd and a jolly good time. Ladies bring in the baskets and the boys will come of their own accord.

Be a booster—not a knocker.

Mattie Borsheim made a business trip to Thief River Falls Monday.

George Smith transacted some business in Thief River Falls last Friday.

Special subscription offer from now until January 1st. Call at this office for particulars.

Ernest Bessler, of Thief River Falls was an over Sunday visitor at the Steinhauer home.

Miss Ida Erickson returned Saturday from an extended visit with friends at Crookston.

Miss Ida Heinze arrived home Saturday from Stephen where she has been visiting for some time.

Miss Clara Ringham returned home to Thief River Falls Tuesday after a pleasant visit with friends here.

The Misses Lydia Bjerk and Betsey Borsheim accompanied by Martin Matson and Ole Larson drove to Thief River Falls Sunday.

Mrs. A. Bergum came in from her home east of Mud Lake yesterday and went to Thief River Falls on a combined business and pleasure trip.

Mrs. Knutson and daughter Mary who have been visiting with relatives and friends at Thief River Falls returned to their home near here on Monday.

Quite a bunch of the young folks went out from here to attend the basket party at the Dovre schoolhouse on Friday evening last and report having had a most enjoyable time.

Don't forget that this is the week to buy your Christmas presents and Holiday Goods. Holt Mercantile Co.'s store is the place where you can get the cheapest and best goods on the market.

Peter L. Anderson, buttermaker, returned Saturday morning from St. Paul where he has been taking a short course at the state school at St. Anthony Park. He reports having had both a pleasant and profitable time.

Crookston College has placed all its graduates in positions. The demand for office help has been greater than we could supply. School is in session all year. You can begin at any time of year. Good board and furnished room, taken care of in private family, for $3 per week. Send for catalog. Address J. C. Sathre, Crookston, Minn.

School Reports

Report of district No. 20 for the month ending December 8:

Number of pupils enrolled, 22.

Total number of days attendance by all. 395 1-2.

Average daily attendance, 18.

Those present every day are: Elizabeth Kisch, Paulins Schwartz, Willie Sauter, John Sauter, Theresa Wendt, Emelia Johnson, Oscar Hoffman and Arthur Hoffman.

Those absent one day are: Robert Sauter, Paul Kisch, Minnie Johnson, Ragna Larson, Sina Johnson and Emil Johnson.

Olga C. Larson, Teacher.

Report of district No. 35 for the month ending December 8:

Number of pupils enrolled, 42.

Total number of days attendance by all pupils, 638 1-2.

Average number of days of attendance by each pupil, 16.

Average daily attendance, 32.

Those who have attended every day are: Arthur Davidson, Rosie Heinze, Harry Heinze, Frank Heinze, Emma Jacobson, Peter Kolden, Thorwald Kolden, Christine Saastad.

Martha Mortenson, Teacher.

Henry Wendt returned on Tuesday from Middle River where he has been working for some time.

Triple coated enamelled kitchen ware at only 10 cents per piece is a bargain that you never had before. S. S. Kolden & Co.

Ole Matson, chief operator at the Red Lake Falls Milling Co's elevator here, made an over Sunday visit with his relatives and friends at Crookston.

The wrestling match between Ludwig Monson and Gilbert Thompson at the Woodman hall last Saturday evening drew a good sized crowd. Monson proved to be the better general and won the match in straight falls. A boxing bout by Harry Warner and Arno Bornstein furnished a good preliminary. The match was refereed by Tony Carlson whose decisions were entirely satisfactory to both the contestants and the audience.

Honey Bread.

In Europe, where the food value of honey seems to be much better understood than in the United States, enormous quantities are used. Of late years we seem to be waking to a realization of the value of honey as a wholesome and delicious article of food and also as to its preservative qualities. Cakes and sweet breads made with sugar soon become dry and crumbly and to get the good of them must be eaten when fresh. But where they are made up with honey they seem to retain their moist freshness indefinitely. In France honey bread a year or eighteen months old is preferred to that just made. They say, "It has ripened." It is the preservative or, rather, the unchanging quality of honey that makes it so popular with the best confectioners.—Christian Herald.

Dances In Sardinia.

Sardinian dancing is unlike any other. It is a kind of shuffling with the feet as the dancers, holding hands, move to and fro, the women on one side of the dancing ground and the men on the other, till they have worked round to the opposite sides, while the las launeddas is played by a man who walks up and down between the dancers. As a rule, the men and women do not mix, whether dancing or not, but keep each to their own side. The dances take place on Sundays or feast days in some plaza of the village, but hardly ever in the big town.

China's Haunted Spots.

In China there is a strong belief that spots in rivers, creeks and ponds where people have been drowned are haunted by specters who spring out upon the unwary and drown them. Should the hauntings become very frequent the spot is exorcised. This ceremony consists in the decapitation of a white horse by a specially selected executioner on the site of the hauntings. The head of the slaughtered animal is placed in an earthenware jar and buried in the exact spot where it was killed, which spot is carefully marked by the erection of a stone tablet.

Birdskin Garments.

Eskimo women wear the most curious kind of underclothing, its peculiarity being that it is made of the skins of birds. These skins before being sewed together are chewed well by the women in order to make them soft. About a hundred skins are required to make a shirt, and the labor of chewing the skins which form their garments is quite enough to account for the massive, well developed jaws of Eskimo women.

Averting a Defeat.

A certain political boss always controlled his delegations to the conventions, and the delegates voted the way he told them to—and not until he did tell him.

At one convention a delegate presented a resolution that the boss favored, but had not heard about soon enough to post his delegates as to how they should vote on it.

The chairman of the convention put the question, "All in favor of this resolution say aye."

There were a few ayes, and the boss' delegates looked at him inquiringly. Seeing that he would not have time to pass the word and wanting the resolution passed, he dashed down the aisle toward the chairman, waving his hands and shouting:

"Don't put the negative! Don't put the negative! I did that once and got in a —— of a fix."—Saturday Evening Post.

An Expensive Slip.

A well dressed man was hurrying along the Rue de Passy, Paris, when he slipped and, falling forward, dashed his elbow through the window of a wine shop. The proprietor rushed out to claim the price of his window, and a large crowd gathered to see fair play. The man who had broken the window protested that he had no money. "Search him!" shouted some one in the crowd. There were no policemen about, so the wine shop keeper and a few friends took the law into their own hands, searched the man's pockets and found a 500 franc note. The crowd advised the wine shop keeper to pay himself well for his broken window. He took 50 francs to pay for his broken glass, and the unpopular man who had broken it went away with a torn coat and 450 francs change. The 500 franc note was a forgery.

Followed the Example of Cato.

In the first year of the last century London affected great admiration for Cato's suicide, the feeling being aroused by Addison's play. A gentleman named Budgell, after witnessing its performance, threw himself into the Thames on his way home. His body was recovered, and on it was found a scrap of paper with these words: "What Cato did and Addison approved must needs be right."

Everybody Has Trouble.

"I can't get a new hat because the children need shoes."

"I'm in the same boat."

"Why, you have no children."

"True, but I can't get a new dress because the auto needs tires."—Pittsburgh Post.

D. B. Bakke, Pres. S. S. Kolden, Vice-pres.

HOLT STATE BANK

Incorporated 1910. Resources over $50,000

We have a limited amount of the five and ten Kroner Scandinavian money on hand special for this season of the year. We also issue foreign money orders on all parts of the world.

The past season has, no doubt, been a successful one for you and we cordially invite you to place your hard earned cash on deposit with this bank. By placing the money with us you have the right to draw it out at any time you may need it regardless whether left solely as a time deposit or subject to check; and, in case you have no immediate use for it, we will pay you 4 per cent interest on a time deposit left for a period of six months and 5 per cent for twelve months.

Think it over. Nothing to worry about. Your money earning money for you without any more exertion on your part than to step into the bank and draw your interest at every terminal period, whether six or twelve months.

B. L. BACKE, Cashier.

Genius at Table.

It would appear that the man of genius usually requires a large supply of substantial food. Intellectual work demands full nutrition to repair the waste of brain tissue. Scott was wont to attribute his extraordinary capacity for continuous work to his good digestion and the wholesome restraints of his appetite in his youth. "I have as keen an appetite now as any man," he said, "but I know when to stop."

Mirabeau is stated to have been an enormous feeder, eating as much at a meal as would suffice three ordinary men. Talleyrand was also a noted eater. Goethe and Napoleon ate large quantities of food, but cared little for the quality. Bismarck was noted for his appetite, which was insatiable, but his food was of the simplest.

Many stories are told of the gross delight in eating evinced by the two Dumases, father and son, one of which is that the younger, being overtaken by a storm, took refuge in a hotel near Paris. Twenty-four turkeys were hanging upon the spit.

"And all for a single traveler," exclaimed the host.

"C'est mon pere!" exclaimed Alexandre. He was right.

Friendly Warning.

Rural Justice—I'll have to fine ye $25 for exceedin' th' speed limit. Motorist (wildly) — What! It's a condemned outrage! Why, I'll swear I wasn't going more than eight miles an hour. Rural Justice (solemnly)—You do an' it'll cost ye $50 more fer perjury, b'gosh, right now—Puck.

It Really Does.

"The rain falls alike on the just and the unjust."

"A good arrangement."

"Why so?"

"Seems to afford considerable satisfaction to both classes." — Chicago Journal.

Appropriate.

"When I was a tiny boy with ringlets," said the man with little hair, "they used to call me Archie."

"I suppose now they call you Archibald."

Love.

At twenty love is a rosy dream, at thirty it is a thrilling reality, at forty it is a calm contentment, and at fifty it is a reminiscence.

HOLIDAY ...GOODS

We have on hand a Big Supply of Holiday Goods for both young and old and invite everybody to come and see our line first before buying elsewhere because our Prices are RIGHT.

SPECIAL!

We have a lot of 10-cent articles that we are going to close out at only

3 cents each

Not more than 5 to a customer. Come and take your choice before they are all gone.

HOLT MERCANTILE Co.,
"The Big New Store"

BIG REMOVAL SALE

We have been notified to vacate the building we occupy with our Hardware Stock and before we move we will have a

Two-weeks' Sale on Hardware and Furniture

Commencing Monday, Dec. 11,
Ending Saturday, December 23.

Sweeping Reductions in Prices will be made on everything in the lines named. It will be a great Cash Sale and you Can't Afford to let it pass.

S. S. KOLDEN & Co.
HOLT, - - MINNESOTA

Defective Page

The Quickest Cough Cure—Cheap, But Unequaled

A Whole Pint of It for 50c—Saves You $2—Does the Work Quickly or Money Refunded.

For quick and positive results, the pint of cough syrup that you make with a 50-cent bottle of Pinex, cannot be equalled. It takes hold instantly and will usually stop the most obstinate deep-seated cough inside of 24 hours. Even croup and whooping cough yield to it quickly.

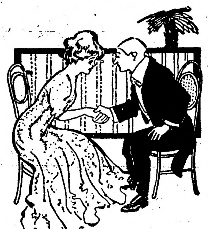
The user of Pinex mixes it with home-made sugar syrup. This gives you a full pint—a family supply—of better cough remedy than you could buy ready mixed for $2.50. Easily prepared in 5 minutes—full directions in package.

Pinex soothes and heals the inflamed membranes with remarkable rapidity. It stimulates the appetite, is slightly laxative, and tastes good—children like it. Excellent for hoarseness, asthma, bronchitis, and other throat troubles, and has a wonderful record in cases of incipient lung trouble.

Pinex is a special and highly concentrated compound of Norway White Pine extract, rich in guaiacol and other natural healing pine elements. Simply mix with sugar syrup or strained honey, in a pint bottle, and it is ready for use. Used in more homes in the U. S. and Canada than any other cough remedy.

Pinex has often been imitated, but never successfully, for nothing else will produce the same results. The genuine is guaranteed to give absolute satisfaction or money refunded. Certificate of guarantee is wrapped in each package. Your druggist has Pinex or will gladly get it for you. If not, send to The Pinex Co., 238 Main St., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

BOTANICAL BADINAGE.



She—Ah, dearest one, when you are gone I shall pine away.

He—Tut! tut! Spruce up.

Question for Question.

"I shall discharge our butler," said Mr. Cumrox.

"What's the trouble?"

"He doesn't show me proper deference. When I am paying a man liberally, I consider it his duty to laugh at my jokes."

"And won't he?"

"I don't think he can. He's an English butler. When in a spirit of gentle and condescending badinage I said to him, "Hawkins, can you tell me which came first, the chicken or the egg?' he said, 'Which did you order first, sir?'"

Precise.

The proofreader on a small middle-western daily was a woman of great precision and extreme propriety. One day a reporter succeeded in getting into type an item about "Willie Brown, the boy who was burned in the West end by a live wire."

On the following day the reporter found on his desk a frigid note asking, "Which is the west end of a boy?"

It took only an instant to reply—"The end the son sets on, of course."—Ladies' Home Journal.

Resigned.

The sick man had called his lawyer. "I wish to explain again to you," said he weakly, "about willing my property."

The attorney held up his hand reassuringly. "There, there," said he, "leave that all to me."

The sick man sighed resignedly. "I suppose I might as well," said he, turning upon his pillow. "You'll get it, anyway."

THE LITTLE WIDOW

A Mighty Good Sort of Neighbor to Have.

"A little widow, a neighbor of mine, persuaded me to try Grape-Nuts when my stomach was so weak that it would not retain food of any other kind," writes a grateful woman, from San Bernardino Co., Cal.

"I had been ill and confined to my bed with fever and nervous prostration for three long months after the birth of my second boy. We were in despair until the little widow's advice brought relief.

"I liked Grape-Nuts food from the beginning, and in an incredibly short time it gave me such strength that I was able to leave my bed and enjoy my three good meals a day. In 2 months my weight increased from 95 to 113 pounds, my nerves had steadied down and I felt ready for anything. My neighbors were amazed to see me gain so rapidly, and still more so when they heard that Grape-Nuts alone had brought the change.

"My 4-year-old boy had eczema very bad last spring and lost his appetite entirely, which made him cross and peevish. I put him on a diet of Grape-Nuts, which he relished at once. He improved from the beginning, the eczema disappeared and now he is fat and rosy, with a delightfully soft, clear skin. The Grape-Nuts diet did it. I will willingly answer all inquiries. Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a reason."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

THE AMERICAN HOME

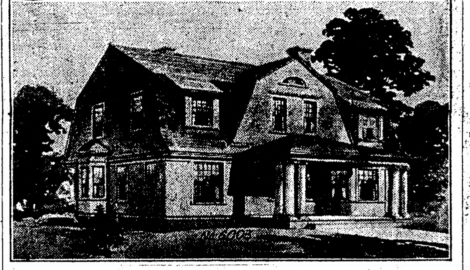
Wm. A. RADFORD
EDITOR

Mr. William A. Radford will answer questions and give advice FREE OF COST on all subjects pertaining to the subject of building, for the readers of this paper. On account of his wide experience as Editor, Author and Manufacturer, he is, without doubt, the highest authority on all these subjects. Address all inquiries to William A. Radford, No. 178 West Jackson boulevard, Chicago, Ill., and only enclose two-cent stamp for reply.

A great many people have the idea—and it is a very praiseworthy one—that when it comes to building a home they owe something to the community in which they live. It is not always necessary, either, to spend a great amount of money in building a residence that will have a distinctive appearance and one that is dignified and impressive. Sometimes a very satisfactory result can be obtained by selecting a style of house somewhat different from the ordinary, yet one of conservative lines that have been tested and found satisfactory.

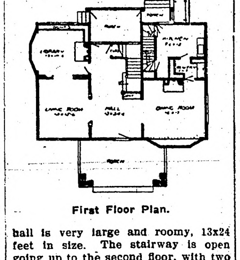
A gambrel roof house is always striking in appearance when properly constructed and designed. There is no style more attractive. At the same time, a gambrel roof is economical to build, containing a surprising volume of space for the amount of side walls.

The accompanying design is an illustration of what can be done with a large-sized, gambrel-roof house. This house would attract favorable notice in any community and would be considered a desirable addition on any street. It is a building 45 feet 9 inches by 32 feet 6 inches, faced the broad way to the street, and having a gambrel dormer in the center over the entrance. This entrance porch adds distinction to the design, with its six large Ionic columns, grouped at each of the two front corners to support the roof. These columns are to be built up with wood framing, covered with expanded metal lath and dressed with white cement, marble dust plaster coating. The columns then resemble very closely smooth, pure white, monolithic marble columns.



The first story of the house is also finished with cement plaster on wooden lath, a very light colored cement being used, and the plaster left its natural color. The gambrel roof, extending down to the tops of the first story windows, is shingled and stained brown with creosote. One beauty of a gambrel roof house is that it brings the eaves down closer to the ground than any other style. In this way a cozy, home-like effect is produced. The house has the appearance of being very roomy and hospitable. It is a dignified and substantial member in the community.

The floor plans show the interior of this house to be fully as large, roomy and hospitable as the exterior would indicate. It is just the house for a large family, for the old home place, or for the haven of many guests. Entering the wide, central hall, we find the entire left of the house given up to living room and library, with sliding doors between them. On the right of the hall, in front, is a large square dining room, and back of it a kitchen with pantry. The reception hall is very large and roomy, 13x24 feet in size. The stairway is open going up to the second floor, with two landings.

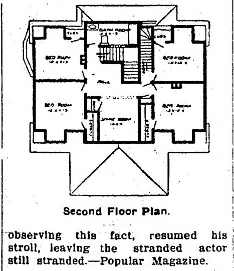


First Floor Plan.

On the second floor we find four large bedrooms, besides a large sewing room, or upstairs den. There are also six clothes closets and bathroom on this floor. A back stairway connects the kitchen with the second floor.

The most fitting style of interior finish for this house is strict colonial. This may be carried out in birch, with white enamel and mahogany finish. Especially for the second floor this mahogany and white is to be recommended. For the first floor, a darker more hardy finish might be preferred by some, in which case plain sawed white oak with mission or cathedral oak finish would be very effective.

The cost of this house, using the best materials and very thorough construction, is estimated at $5,500.



Second Floor Plan.

FAILED WHEN PUT TO TEST

Stranded Actor's Duplicity Cost Him Aid, of Which He Stood Very Much in Need.

James Thornton, the monologist, was walking down Broadway one evening when he saw, leaning against a lamp post, an individual who was evidently an actor just off the road. Equally apparent was the fact that the man needed a job or money.

"How do you do, my friend?" greeted Thornton.

The stranded actor, recognizing Thornton, spoke to him a trifle sadly.

"Need a job?" asked Thornton.

"I do—badly," answered the actor.

"What have you done?"

"A lot of work," explained the other, his face brightening at the prospect of Thornton's taking an interest in him. "I've done all sorts of roles in stock companies."

"Ever play the part of a Mexican?"

"Oh, yes."

"Pretty good at it, weren't you?"

"Well, if I do say it myself, Mr. Thornton, I think I played the Mexican in fine shape."

"That being the case," responded Thornton, handing him tobacco and a cigarette paper, "roll me a cigarette."

The man who had made such a hit as a Mexican made a miserable failure of the cigarette. And Thornton, observing this fact, resumed his stroll, leaving the stranded actor still stranded.—Popular Magazine.

Real Boys Wanted.

A thoughtful Bible student, who thought that he might possibly be of some assistance in a mission Sunday school, undertook to teach a class of a dozen lads, last week, and started off to inculcate the idea of total depravity—thinking to meet with responses that would enable him to make his point plain.

"Now, boys," he said, "if I were to draw a chalk line right across here and say, 'Don't any of you step over this mark,' what would you do?"

"We'd stay on this side," was the unanimous response.

"Suppose," he continued, smiling at the ready answer, but thinking to drive the point further home—"suppose I'd put you all in an orchard where there were both apples and pears, and suppose I should tell you that you might have the apples but mustn't touch the pears—then what?"

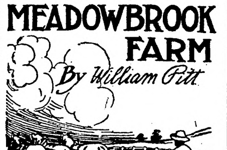
"We wouldn't touch the pears."

"Superintendent," called the new teacher, "send me some bad boys—these are no good."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Sees Good in "Race Suicide."

Lady Stout of New Zealand when told that the birth rate in her country is declining, said to her informant that in England, where she is visiting, that she considered it a good sign "The birth rate of a country," she said, "always tends to decline as the intelligence and education of the people advance, until the conditions of life have become so much improved that thoughtful parents feel assured of the future of their children."

NOTES from MEADOWBROOK FARM



By William Pitt

Use care with separator.

The farmer must have a horse.

Soft corn makes an excellent late fall feed.

Never allow the ewes to get wet during the winter.

Cold milk will not separate as completely as warm milk.

A suffering, frozen hog or pig cannot be making profitable growth.

Fall is the best season for planting all deciduous trees and bushes.

For best results separate the milk as soon after milking as possible.

Locate the separator on a solid foundation in a place free from dust.

The soy bean has been grown very little north of the latitude of southern Iowa.

Having secured a tester and learned how to use it, weigh the milk and test it.

Cows afflicted with the disease of abortion convey this disease to their offspring.

The mare with the fall colt should be kept most of the time in a roomy, warm box stall.

Concrete vats in the milk houses are reasonably cheap, eternally durable and highly sanitary.

Early autumn is a very trying time on the ewes on the account of the shortage of pasture.

If the farm as a whole doesn't pay, make some part of it a garden spot, for gardens always pay.

Never breed a nervous, high-strung sow that is always ready to jump and run at the drop of the hat.

Besides the white grub, there are several other pests which trouble the roots of strawberry plants.

All breeds of hogs look good when taken care of, all of them will yield good money if rightly handled.

Owing to the scarcity of hay and the high price of all kinds of grain, farmers having plenty of straw are fortunate.

Drafts under the floors should be prevented by placing boards over the openings and then banking with straw or chaff.

The germinating power of the middle kernels of an ear of corn is much stronger than that of the tip and butt kernels.

No matter whether the corn is bought or saved from your own farm it should be stored in a dry, well-ventilated place.

A good ration for rams during the breeding season is oats, bran and linseed-meal, with such fodders as rape, the vetches and alfalfa.

Prepare the soil for your bedding plants which are to be planted next spring. You cannot take too much pains in preparing the soil.

No man that is inexperienced should undertake the business of raising hogs unless he expects to make a study of it, and to profit by his mistakes.

Better run a dairy without a dog than have one that is irritable to the cows. Many kicking cows are caused by the dogs nipping at their heels.

Sheep that are well kept and fed during the fall season so that they enter the winter quarters in thrifty and vigorous condition will keep easily over winter.

If you are a beginner with sheep go slow until you have mastered the industry. As in poultrying or any other like business, experience is the safe, sure teacher.

One of the most general methods adopted for cooling milk is to place the cans in a vat containing water which reaches a point slightly above surface of milk.

This year's sprouts may be pulled from the peach trees with the hands if it is done this fall, when it should be, which will save considerable work next spring.

Cleanliness in handling, in straining, and in separating the milk is a thing that cannot be too religiously adhered to, for prevention is the key word to quality in all dairy work.

Kill the vicious hog.

Frost bitten grass has no value.

The hog is not naturally a dirty animal.

By all means give the hogs pure water to drink.

Sawdust can be used in the absence of other materials.

The best way to handle manure is to spread it at once.

Mares bred in November drop their colts the following October.

The mare with the fall colt must have a good milk-making ration.

Cows giving 8,000 to 9,000 pounds of milk in a year are worth keeping.

Look out for ticks. Ticks make poor sheep, poor lambs and spoil the fleece.

Make two sowings of peas of an early wrinkled variety for a late crop.

Many lambs are far from being as good individuals as either of their parents.

Cool the cream after it has been separated and feed the milk while it is warm.

Bushes and small trees, too large for the plow to root out, should be cut with the ax.

Wheat bran has just the elements in it that sheep and lambs need to make good growth.

Clover and grass seed will nearly always do best when they can be started to early growth.

Don't expect the flock to drink from a dirty trough. They won't do it, and will suffer in consequence.

The fleece of the ram should be dense, even in quality, and of a strong, clear white fiber throughout.

Large, fat, plump poultry of all varieties is always in good demand and brings more than scrawny stock.

It is a good sign that the pure-bred sheep are increasing rapidly and are, therefore, improving all of the flocks.

By intelligent breeding, selection, feeding and care, most dairy herds can be brought up to double their production.

In buying a ram get a young one. He can be disposed of more advantageously when one is through with him.

The vicious hog that is forever breaking out and causing trouble for one's neighbors cannot be killed too quickly.

Dried beet pulp, wheat bran, dried distillers' grains and alfalfa meal may be had at first hands free from any adulteration.

While growing colts should be allowed to run out as long as the weather will permit them to be exposed to the storm.

Goats will breed at six months of age, but this early breeding destroys vitality. Eighteen months is about the right age for breeding.

Salt is good for chickens in very small quantities, rather less if anything than we would use for our own food, yet brine is often poisonous.

No man that is inexperienced should undertake the business of raising hogs unless he expects to make a study of it and to profit by his mistakes.

The good dairy cow has a capacity for a tremendous amount of feed and this feed must be furnished her if she is going to yield the best returns.

The future of the mutton crop depends upon the attention given the young lambs, and the degree to which they are kept growing from the start.

Fruit trees should never be planted on the lawn, as, unless the trees are given careful culture throughout the growing season, they will not make healthy growth.

At this season, with the coming of late fall rains, provide shelter for the sheep. Sheep will endure cold weather without injury, but they must be kept dry.

The good cow is the one having persistent milking qualities, that is, one that will, on fairly good feed and care, give a regular quantity of milk for 10 to 11 months in the year.

About the proper mixture of ashes and salt for the lot is four quarts of salt to a bushel of ashes. Keep it in a trough or self-feeder, so it will not be trampled into the ground.

The more a cow is compelled to tramp over pasture for feed, the less milk in proportion will she give Moral: Have smaller but better pastures—bluegrass and clover "knee-deep."

Why not set out those trees for fence posts this fall when you aren't very busy? Try a block of some forest trees on some land that you can spare. The yellow locust is more handy than the catalpa.

GOT THE LETTERS MIXED

Clergyman's Mistake Resulted in Giving Decided Surprise to Dignified Archbishop.

One of the most amusing stories which the Hon. Lionel A. Tollemache tells in "Nuts and Chestnuts," is that entitled, "The Wrong Envelope." Mr. M——, a missionary, shortly before leaving England, received two letters—one from Archbishop Tait asking him to dine, and the other from the secretary of a religious society, a very old friend, asking him to preach. He accepted the archbishop's invitation, and at the same time wrote to the secretary, but put the letters into the wrong envelopes.

After the dinner at Lambeth the archbishop said to him: "Mr. M——, do you always answer your dinner invitations in the same way?"

"I do not understand, your grace."

The letter, which was then shown to the missionary, ran thus: "You old rascal! Why did you not ask me before? You know perfectly well that I shall be on the high seas on the date you name."—London Tit-Bits.

VERY NATURALLY.

She—I wonder who originated the saying, "There is always room at the top?"

He—Some hotel clerk, I guess.

IT IS CRIMINAL TO NEGLECT THE SKIN AND HAIR

Think of the suffering entailed by neglected skin troubles—mental because of disfiguration, physical because of pain. Think of the pleasure of a clear skin, soft, white hands, and good hair. These blessings, so essential to happiness and even success in life, are often only a matter of a little thoughtful care in the selection of effective remedial agents. Cuticura Soap and Ointment do so much for poor complexions, red, rough hands, and dry, thin and falling hair, and cost so little, that it is almost criminal not to use them. Although Cuticura Soap and Ointment are sold everywhere, a postal to "Cuticura," Dept. 21 L, Boston, will secure a liberal sample of each, with 32-page booklet on skin and scalp treatment.

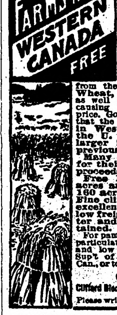
By Way of Excuse.

"Youngleigh has some singular ideas."

"What, for instance?"

"Well, he says it is mean to profit by other people's experience after they've been at all the trouble and expense of collecting it."

The Farmer's Son's Great Opportunity



Why wait for the old farm to become your inheritance? Begin now to prepare for your future prosperity and independence. A great opportunity awaits you in Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta, where you can secure a Free Homestead or buy land at reasonable prices.

Now's the Time—not a year from now, when land will be higher. The profits secured from the abundant crops of Wheat, Oats and Barley, as well as cattle raising, are causing a steady advance in price. Government returns show that the number of settlers in Western Canada from the U. S. was 60 per cent larger in 1910 than the previous year.

Many farmers have paid for their land out of the proceeds of one crop. Free Homesteads of 160 acres and pre-emptions of 160 acres at $3.00 an acre. Fine climate, good schools, excellent railway facilities, low freight rates; wood, water and lumber easily obtained.

For pamphlet "Last Best West," particulars as to suitable location and low settlers' rate, apply to Sup't of Immigration, Ottawa, Can., or to Canadian Gov't Agent.

CHAS. PILLING
Clifford Block Grand Forks, N. Dak.

Please write to the agent nearest you

The Army of Constipation

Is Growing Smaller Every Day.

CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS.

CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS are responsible—they not only give relief—they permanently cure Constipation. Millions use them for Biliousness, Indigestion, Sick Headache, Sallow Skin.

SMALL PILL, SMALL DOSE, SMALL PRICE.

Genuine must bear Signature

Brent Good

The International Secret Service Correspondence School Peoples Gas Building, 122 Michigan Boulevard, Chicago, U. S. A.

PROSPECTUS and other information in regard to Detective service work will be sent upon application and receipt of 2c stamp for postage.

PISO'S
THE BEST MEDICINE
for COUGHS & COLDS

It Means Health For the Child

The careful mother, who watches closely the physical peculiarities of her children, will soon discover that the most important thing in connection with a child's constant good health is to keep the bowels regularly open. Sluggish bowels will be followed by loss of appetite, restlessness during sleep, irritability and a dozen and one similar evidences of physical disorder.

At the first sign of such disorder give the child a teaspoonful of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin at night on retiring and repeat the dose the following night if necessary—more than that will scarcely be needed. You will find that the child will recover its accustomed good spirits at once and will eat and sleep normally.

This remedy is a vast improvement over salts, cathartics, laxative waters and similar things, which are altogether too powerful for a child. The homes of Mrs. Evelyn Matson, 516 Milwaukee St., Milwaukee, Wis., and Mrs. Kate Hawley, Waukesha, Wis., are always supplied with Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, and with them, as with thousands of others, there is no substitute for this grand laxative. It is really more than a laxative, for it contains superior tonic properties which help to tone and strengthen the stomach, liver and bowels so that after a brief use of it all laxatives can be dispensed with and nature will do its own work.

Anyone wishing to make a trial of this remedy before buying it in the regular way of a druggist at fifty cents or one dollar a large bottle (family size) can have a sample bottle sent to the home free of charge by simply addressing Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 201 Washington St., Monticello, Ill. Your name and address on a postal card will do.

HIS VOCATION.

"I suppose you'll be an agriculturist when you grow up?"

"No'm. I'm jest goin' to work on this farm, that's all."

Public Spirit Run Riot.

"Our little town o' Blueberryville is right up to date an' about as progressive an' public-speerited as any town in the state," said Zedekiah Brush, as he drove over the hills with the summer boarder.

"Fact is, some of us think the selec'men use the tax money a little too freely keepin' pace with the speerit of progress that seems to be in the air nowadays. Here, in the last year, the town hall has had a new roof, an' a new hoss shed has been built around the church, an' a new handle put in the town pump, an' a bridge costin' crick. The town clock has been put in repair at a cost of $12.60, an' they've put three dozen new books in the town liberry, an' now they are most $200 has been built over Plum talkin' of offerin' a firm a bonus o' $200 to start a pickle factory in the town. Once a lot o' selec'men git the progressive fever, an' the tax money flies. Public speerit is all right, but us taxpayers has to foot the bills when it runs riot the way it does here in our town."—Judge.

Decidedly Novel.

Ella—It was a novel proposal.

Stella—What did he say?

Ella—That he begged the proud privilege of getting up mornings to build the fire for me.

We are apt to speak of a man as being lucky when he has succeeded where we have failed.

For Instance
Post Toasties

The Memory Lingers
~Grocer says because they are GOOD

SERIAL STORY

No Man's Land

A ROMANCE

By Louis Joseph Vance

Illustrations by Ray Walters

(Copyright, 1910, by Louis Joseph Vance.)

SYNOPSIS.

Garrett Coast, a young man of New York City, meets Douglas Blackstock, who invites him to a card party. He accepts, although he dislikes Blackstock, the reason being that both are in love with Katherine Thaxter. Coast fails to convince her that Blackstock is unworthy of her friendship. At the party Coast meets two named Dundas and Van Tuyl. There is a quarrel, and Blackstock shoots Van Tuyl dead. Coast struggles to wrest the weapon from him, thus the police discover them. Coast is arrested for murder. He is convicted, but as he begins his sentence, Dundas names Blackstock as the murderer and kills himself. Coast becomes free, but Blackstock has married Katherine Thaxter and fled. Coast purchases a yacht and while sailing sees a man thrown from a distant boat. He rescues the fellow who is named Appleyard.

CHAPTER V.—(Continued.)

Appleyard executed an ample gesture. "Romance," he replied, sententious.

"Who are you, anyway?" pursued Coast incautiously.

"I might put the same question to you, sir."

"To your prospective employer?"

The faded eyes twinkled. "As nearly won over as that, Mr. Coast? Decidedly my talents should have been devoted to spellbinding, as you so delicately suggest. . . . But squarely, sir,"—he grew momentarily grave and earnest—"I've been painfully truthful: my monaker is actually Melchisedec Appleyard, incredible as it may sound. I give you my word I'm an honest man; the law has no knowledge of or concern with me."

For all his banter he betrayed not a little eagerness as he bent forward, scanning Coast's face.

His verdict was something deferred; Coast was actually and seriously considering the preposterous suggestion. The little man promised a diverting companion, who had proven such up to that moment; and there were dark hours when Coast needed diversion poignantly. Beyond question it would be convenient to have somebody at one's beck and call, to stand a trick at the wheel or advise concerning dangerous waters. And, furthermore, Coast thought to detect in Mr. Appleyard's manner a something which lent more than a mite of confirmation to his hint that he needed food and shelter—if only temporarily.

In the end Coast nodded slowly. "I'll go you," he said, holding the other's eyes; "I'll take you at your word."

Relief shone radiant on the withered face. "Right you are, Mr. Coast!" cried Appleyard, extending a hand. "I promise you won't regret this. Word of honor, sir!"

"That's understood." Coast pressed the hand and released it. "And now let's get under way. I'm for bold water—Nantucket Sound to begin with. Can we make Vineyard Haven by nightfall, do you think?"

"With this wind, via Quick's Hole?" Coast nodded and Appleyard considered sagely. "Of course we can," he proclaimed.

CHAPTER VI.

"All ready?"

Coast, at the wheel, nodded to Appleyard, who was crouching in the bows. "Ready," he said.

There followed a splash as Appleyard dropped the hook of the mooring at which the Echo had been riding overnight.

In a long and graceful sweep the Echo swung round and slipped briskly down the harbor to the urge of the following wind.

Early in the afternoon the wind began to fail, its volume diminishing by fits and starts; heavy puffs alternated with spells of steady breezing successively more faint.

Over the bows the entrance to Quick's Hole, the passage between Pasque and Nashawena Islands, became plainly visible.

Appleyard remarked the signs of change with a wrinkle of disquiet between his brows.

"Going to have a shift of wind, you think?" Coast asked.

The little man nodded anxiously. "It's a cinch," he asserted. "And when it does swing the chances are ten to one it'll come in from the sou'west. That's the prevailing wind round here at this season, you know."

"Well? Even so, it'll favor us up the Sound, won't it? Besides, we've got the motor. . . ."

"That'll help a heap in case that fog comes down on us, won't it?" Appleyard snorted in disgust, nodding toward the bank of tawny haze that discolored the horizon beyond the low profiles of Nashawena and Cuttyhunk, over the starboard counter.

"Hadn't thought of that—"

"And yet you had the nerve to resent my suggestion that you needed a keeper!"

"Well, then, it's up to us to make that passage as soon as we can—what? Hadn't I better get the motor going? Here, take the wheel, while I—"

"Never mind," Appleyard returned. "That's my job. You stay put. That is, unless you prefer—"

"No; I'm not crazy about it. Go ahead and break your back turning up a cold engine, if you want to."

"Don't let that fret you any, Cap'n." Appleyard grunted, setting the binnacle aside and lifting the engine-pit hatch. "Me, I was born and brought up with marine motors; they used to fill my nursing bottle with a mixture of gasoline and Vacuum A. Pipe your uncle."

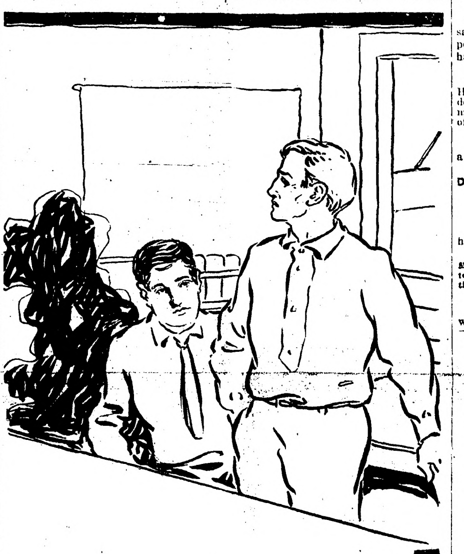
He dropped lightly into the pit, threw in both the main and shut-off switches, opened the globe-valve in the feed pipe, made a slight adjustment of the carbureter, and slowly turned up the fly-wheel. An angry buzzing broke out in the spark-coil.

"You see," he said with elaborate nonchalance. "They're all alike—any one of 'em will feed right out of my hand."

He rocked the fly-wheel to and fro half a dozen times, then gave it a smart upward pull. Instantly there was a dull explosion in the cylinder, and the wheel began to spin steadily to the muffled drumming of the exhaust.

Gathering way, the boat moved at a more lively pace, with her sail flapping empty and listless and idly swinging boom.

By the time Coast, instructed by his highly efficient crew, had piloted the Echo safely through to the Sound, a dead calm held.



"We're Perfectly Safe Unless We're in Ship Channel."

A little later a chill breath of air fanned Coast's cheek, the first whiff out of the southwest. The water flawed and darkened with the flying catspaws.

The fog swept in swiftly. Far across the breadth of wind-dulled water Coast could see it moving onward like a wall, momentarily gaining in bulk. Already it was hovering threateningly over Gay Head, and while he looked a thin, gray, spectral arm stole across the low land at Menemsha Bight and began to grope its blind way up the Sound.

Coast steered with his gaze fixed upon the compass on the engine-pit hatch, now his sole guide. Insensibly the fog grew more dense, so that in time the mast was more or less indistinct and only a yard or so of pallid water was visible on either hand.

"Vineyard Haven tonight, by any chance?" he asked suddenly.

Appleyard shook his head decidedly. "Not unless we get a breeze stiff enough to blow this off."

"Then we'd better find an anchorage for the night?"

"Only thing to do. I'm willing to risk my valuable rep. as a weather prophet, that this won't lift before morning."

"Tarpaulin Cove?"

Appleyard pursed his thin lips and rubbed his nose, considering. "Good enough anchorage," he admitted; "but for muh, I ain't strong for it. Menemsha Bight would do us more comfortably—across the Sound, you know, a bit east of Gay Head."

"Why Menemsha Bight?"

"Because there's an able-bodied and energetic fog bell at Tarpaulin. Take my advice. There'll be nothing but dead silence at the Bight, and it isn't much of a run over there."

"You know best. How shall I hold her?"

"Sou'east."

"So." Coast put the wheel over and brought the Echo round to that course, as indicated by the compass.

Monotonously the chronometer in the cabin knelled the half-hours. About two bells (five o'clock) Appleyard began to fidget uneasily. He knocked out his pipe and, jumping up, trotted forward to the bows, where, an arm embracing the mast, he remained for many minutes stubbornly peering ahead into dreary blankness.

After a while he returned, discouraged, to the cockpit. "I don't like this," he asserted glumly. "There's something gone wrong. We ought to 've made the Bight over an hour ago. I've been expecting we'd run aground every minute of the last thirty. . . . Sure you've got the course right?"

"Absolutely," returned Coast with conviction.

"Then what the divvle's the matter" grumbled the little man. "Martha's Vineyard hasn't moved, I'll go bail; and we certainly couldn't hold that course as long as we have without striking land somewhere." He wagged a perturbed head, growling inarticulate dissatisfaction. "Let me think. . . . Something wrong . . . What . . . ? Wait!" he cried abruptly. "Maybe . . . Hold that wheel steady for a bit, will you."

Dropping to his knees he peered intently into the binnacle, at the same time opening the cut-off switch and disconnecting the batteries. The motor promptly coughed and was quiet, the droning in the spark coil died away, and Coast, leaning forward in wonder, saw the compass dial jerk as if suddenly release and then swing through an arc of almost ninety degrees ere it steadied.

"What in thunder does that mean?" he demanded, surprised to the point of incredulity.

"Means we're both asses of blooded lineage," said Appleyard sourly, rising; "though you're not a marker to me. I should've known better—I'd 've thought of it right away if I had only half the sense God gives the domestic goose. That compass was right on top of the spark coil. Naturally it magnetized. . . . And I would've known better, too, if ever I had run an engine with the coil on the cylinder before! Oh—piffle!"

"Then I've been holding the wrong course for several hours."

"Prezactly."

"And you haven't any idea where we are?"

"Not a glimmer."

Thoroughly disheartened, Coast left the wheel. "Nice mess," he observed quietly.

Appleyard sighed profoundly. "The worst of it is, I'm a sawed-off little runt, too small for you to kick as I ought to be kicked . . . ."

"Yes," said Coast.

They dined simply and solemnly on cold things, after which Appleyard, at his own suggestion, took the first watch. "You need rest," he argued, "and I don't—rarely sleep over three hours a night. You turn in now and when your time's up I'll call you. There's nothing to worry about."

Coast was really very tired and little loath to be persuaded. He dropped off instantly into dreamless sleep.

At some time during the night he was disturbed by a heavy splashing under the bows. He roused just enough to appreciate where he was, and lay staring drowsily at the cabin lamp until (he seemed to have dozed off again and again awakened) he was aware of Appleyard's presence in the cabin.

"Hello," he yawned, staring at the little man's head and shoulders as he sat on the other transom, beyond the center-board trunk, busying himself over something invisible in his hands. "What's up?"

"Sorry I waked you," returned Appleyard. His eyes flickered keenly over Coast's face for an instant. "We drifted aground a few minutes ago," he explained in a perfunctory tone; "I pushed off with the sweep and anchored with a short cable."

"Whereabout d'you think we are?" Coast pursued sleepily.

"How should I know? Menemsha Bight for choice, but it might be anywhere along the Vineyard Coast—possibly Pasque—or No Man's Land."

"What's that?"

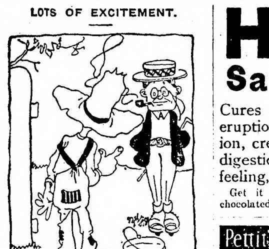
"No Man's Land? Oh a little island south of Gay Head, 'bout as big's a handkerchief. Practically uninhabited."

Appleyard rose.

"What you doing?" Coast yawned extravagantly.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

LOTS OF EXCITEMENT.



Stranger—But isn't this town pretty slow?

Native—Slow? Say, nearly every evenin' there's the gol dingest most excitin' checker game at the store you ever seen!

Important to Mothers

Examine carefully every bottle of CASTORIA, a safe and sure remedy for infants and children, and see that it

Bears the Signature of Chas. H. Fletcher.

In Use For Over 30 Years.

Children Cry for Fletcher's Castoria

The Paradox.

"My doctor is a paradoxical one."

"How so?"

"The more he reduced the swelling the higher the bills grew."

Even though they are all cast in the same mold, the size of a dollar depends on how many of them you have.

Many people have receding gums. Rub Hamlins Wizard Oil on gums and stop the decay; chase the disease germs with a mouth wash of a few drops to a spoonful of water.

Too many "eye openers" will close a man's eyes.

DR. J. H. RINDLAUB (Specialist),
Eye, Ear, Nose and Throat
Fargo, N. D.

The only female in the world who has no kick coming is the mermaid.

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup for Children teething, softens the gums, reduces inflammation, allays pain, cures wind colic, 25c a bottle.

There isn't much home for the man who has no self-respect.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Cures all blood humors, all eruptions, clears the complexion, creates an appetite, aids digestion, relieves that tired feeling, gives vigor and vim.

Get it today in usual liquid form or chocolated tablets called Sarsatabs.

Pettit's Eye Salve FOR ALL SORE EYES

W. N. U., FARGO, NO. 50-1011.

Fargo Directory

KODAKS and KODAK SUPPLIES
Write for catalogues and literature.
We do developing and printing.
Mail orders given prompt attention.
FARGO DRUG CO., FARGO, N. D.

Dakota Business College
LARGEST and FINEST between CHICAGO AND THE COAST.
FARGO, NORTH DAKOTA

FARGO TANNERY
Receives hides and skins for tanning to harness leather, robes and coats. Robes lined, hides bought, leather and robes for sale. SEND FOR PRICE LIST.
Andrew Monson, Proprietor, Fargo Tannery
Fargo, North Dakota

H. H. AAKER, Prop.

We Furnish Positions To Graduates
A Beautiful Catalog Free
Aaker's Business Colleges
Fargo or Grand Forks

Ship Your Hides, Furs and Pelts
To BOLLES & ROGERS FARGO, N. D.

BUILDERS MATERIAL CO.
FARGO, NORTH DAKOTA
Face Brick, Hollow Block, Hollow Face Tile. Fire Places and Fixtures. Wall Ties, Mortor Color, Metal Lath, Fire Brick, Water Proofings, Prepared Roofings, Ideal Ventilators, Cement Coatings, Asphalt.

The Human Heart

The heart is a wonderful double pump, through the action of which the blood stream is kept sweeping round and round through the body at the rate of seven miles an hour. "Remember this, that our bodies will not stand the strain of over-work without good, pure blood any more than the engine can run smoothly without oil." After many years of study in the active practice of medicine, Dr. R. V. Pierce found that when the stomach was out of order, the blood impure and there were symptoms of general breakdown, a tonic made of the glyceric extract of certain roots was the best corrective. This he called

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery

Being made without alcohol, this "Medical Discovery" helps the stomach to assimilate the food, thereby curing dyspepsia. It is especially adapted to diseases attended with excessive tissue waste, notably in convalescence from various fevers, for thin-blooded people and those who are always "catching cold."

Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Adviser is sent on receipt of 31 one-cent stamps for the French cloth-bound book of 1008 pages. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, No. 663 Main Street, Buffalo, N. Y.

PERFECTION SMOKELESS OIL HEATER

Smokeless Odorless Clean Convenient

The Perfection Smokeless Oil Heater warms up a room in next to no time. Always ready for use. Can be carried easily to any room where extra warmth is needed.

A special automatic device makes it impossible to turn the wick too high or too low. Safe in the hands of a child.

The Perfection burns nine hours on one filling—glowing heat from the minute it is lighted. Handsomely finished; drums of blue enamel or plain steel, with nickel trimmings.

Ask your dealer or write for descriptive circular to any agency of

Standard Oil Company
(Incorporated)

W. L. DOUGLAS

$2.50, $3.00, $3.50 & $4.00 SHOES

All Styles, All Leathers, All Sizes and Widths, for Men and Women

THE STANDARD OF QUALITY FOR OVER 30 YEARS

The workmanship which has made W. L. Douglas shoes famous the world over is maintained in every pair.

If I could take you into my large factories at Brockton, Mass., and show you how carefully W. L. Douglas shoes are made, you would then realize why I warrant them to hold their shape, fit and look better and wear longer than other makes for the price.

CAUTION The genuine have W. L. Douglas name and price stamped on bottom

Shoes Sent Everywhere — All Charges Prepaid.

How to Order by Mail.—If W. L. Douglas shoes are not sold in your town, send direct to factory. Take measurements of foot as shown in model; state style desired; size and width usually worn; plain or cap toe; heavy, medium or light sole. I do the largest shoe mail order business in the world.

Illustrated Catalog Free.
W. L. DOUGLAS,
145 Spark St., Brockton, Mass.

ONE PAIR of my BOYS' $2, $2.50 or $3.00 SHOES will positively outwear TWO PAIRS of ordinary boys' shoes

Fast Color Eyelets Used Exclusively.

The Famous Rayo Lamps and Lanterns

Rayo lamps and lanterns give most light for the oil used.

The light is strong and steady. A Rayo never flickers. Materials and workmanship are the best. Rayo lamps and lanterns last.

Ask your dealer to show you his line of Rayo lamps and lanterns, or write for illustrated booklets direct to any agency of

Standard Oil Company
(Incorporated)

ARBITRATION TAKES PLACE OF CONFLICT

Powers Won Over to Ways of Peace.

TAFT SEES GREAT PROGRESS

Special Message Discusses Year's Intercourse With Other Countries.

REVIEWS MEXICAN CIVIL WAR

Mobilization of American Troops on Southern Border Explained—Foreign Trade Relations—Need For American Merchant Marine.

Washington, Dec. 7.—President Taft today sent to congress a special message on foreign relations. The message follows:

The relations of the United States with other countries have continued during the past twelve months upon a basis of the usual good will and friendly intercourse.

Arbitration.

The year just passed marks an important general movement on the part of the powers for broader arbitration. In the recognition of the manifold benefits to makind in the extension of the policy of the settlement of international disputes by arbitration rather than by war, and in response to a widespread demand for an advance in that direction on the part of the people of the United States and of Great Britain and of France, new arbitration treaties were negotiated last spring with Great Britain and France, the terms of which were designed, as expressed in the preamble of these treaties, to extend the scope and obligations of the policy of arbitration adopted in our present treaties with those governments. To pave the way for this treaty with the United States, Great Britain negotiated an important modification in its alliance with Japan, and the French government also expedited the negotiations with signal good will. The new treaties have been submitted to the senate and are awaiting its advice and consent to their ratification. All the essentials of these important treaties have long been known, and it is my earnest hope that they will receive prompt and favorable action.

Claim of Alsop & Co. Settled.

I am glad to report that on July 5 last the American claim of Alsop & Co. against the government of Chile was finally disposed of by the decision of his Britannic majesty George V., to whom, as amiable compositeur, the matter had been referred for determination. His majesty made an award of nearly $1,000,000 to the claimants, which was promptly paid by Chile. The settlement of this controversy has happily eliminated from the relations betwen the republic of Chile and the United States the only question which for two decades had given the two foreign offices any serious concern and makes possible the unobstructed development of the relations of friendship which it has been the aim of this government in every possible way to further and cultivate.

Arbitrations.

In further illustration of the practical and beneficent application of the principle of arbitration and the underlying broad spirit of conciliation, I am happy to advert to the part of the United States in facilitating amicable settlement of disputes which menaced the peace between Panama and Costa Rica and between Haiti and the Dominican republic.

Since the date of their independence, Colombia and Costa Rica had been seeking a solution of a boundary dispute, which came as a heritage from Colombia to the new republic of Panama, upon its beginning life as an independent nation. Although the disputants had submitted this question for decision to the president of France under the terms of an arbitration treaty, the exact interpretation of the provisions of the award rendered had been a matter of serious disagreement between the two countries, both contending for widely different lines even under the terms of the decision. Subsequently and since 1903 this boundary question had been the subject of fruitless diplomatic negotiations between the parties. In January, 1910, at the request of both governments the agents representing them met in conference at the department of state and subsequently concluded a protocol submitting this long-pending controversy to the arbitral judgment of the chief justice of the United States, who consented to act in this capacity. A boundary commission, according to the international agreement, has now been appointed, and it is expected that the arguments will shortly proceed and that this long-standing dispute will be honorably and satisfactorily terminated.

Again, a few months ago it appeared that the Dominican republic and Haiti were about to enter upon hostilities because of complications growing out of an acrimonious boundary dispute which the efforts of many years had failed to solve. The government of the United States, by a friendly interposition of good offices, succeeded in prevailing uopn the parties to place their reliance upon some form of pacific settlement. Accordingly, on the friendly suggestion of this government, the two governments empowered commissioners to meet at Washington in conference at the state department in order to arrange the terms of submission to arbitration of the boundary controversy.

Chamizal Arbitration Not Satisfactory.

Our arbitration of the Chamizal boundary question with Mexico was unfortunately abortive, but with the earnest efforts on the part of both governments which its importance commands, it is felt that an early practical adjustment should prove possible.

Mexico.

The recent political events in Mexico received attention from this government because of the exceedingly delicate and difficult situation created along our southern border and the necessity for taking measures properly to safeguard American interests. The government of the United States, in its desire to secure a proper observance and enforcement of the so-called neutrality statutes of the federal government, issued directions to the appropriate officers to exercise a diligent and vigilant regard for the requirements of such rules and laws. Although a condition of actual armed conflict existed, there was no official recognition of belligerency involving the technical neutrality obligations of international law.

On the 6th of March last, in the absence of the secretary of state, I had a personal interview with Mr. Wilson, the ambassador of the United States to Mexico, in which he reported to me that the conditions in Mexico were much more critical than the press dispatches disclosed; that President Diaz was on a volcano of popular uprising; that the small outbreaks which had occurred were only symptomatic of the whole condition; that a very large per cent. of the people were in sympathy with the insurrection; that a general explosion was probable at any time, in which case he feared that the 440,000 or more American residents in Mexico might be assailed, and that the very large American investments might be injured or destroyed.

After a conference with the secretary of war and the secretary of the navy, I thought it wise to assemble an army division of full strength at San Antonio, Tex., a brigade of three regiments at Galveston, a brigade of infantry in the Los Angeles district of Southern California, together with a squadron of battleships and cruisers and transports at Galveston, and a small squadron of ships at San Diego. At the same time, through our representative at the City of Mexico, I expressed to President Diaz the hope that no apprehensions might result from unfounded conjectures as to these military maneuvers, and assured him that they had no significance which should cause concern to his government.

The mobilization was effected with great promptness, and on the 15th of March, through the secretary of war and the secretary of the navy, in a letter addressed to the chief of staff, I issued the following instructions:

"It seems my duty as commander in chief to place troops in sufficient number where, if Congress shall direct that they enter Mexico to save American lives and property, an effective movement may be promptly made. Meantime, the movement of the troops to Texas and elsewhere near the boundary, accompanied with sincere assurances of the utmost goodwill toward the present Mexican government and with larger and more frequent patrols along the border to prevent insurrectionary expeditions from American soil, will hold up the hands of the existing government and will have a healthy moral effect to prevent attacks upon Americans and their property in any subsequent general internecine strife. Again, the sudden mobilization of a division of troops has been a great test of our army and full of useful instruction, while the maneuvers that are thus made possible can occupy the troops and their officers to great advantage.

"The assumption by the press that I contemplate intervention on Mexican soil to protect American lives or property is of course gratuitous, because I seriously doubt whether I have such authority under any circumstances, and if I had I would not exercise it without express congressional approval. My determined purpose, however, is to be in a position so that when danger to American lives and property in Mexico threatens and the existing government is rendered helpless by the insurrection, I can promptly execute congressional orders to protect them, with effect.

"Meantime, I send you this letter, through the secretary, to call your attention to some things in connection with the presence of the division in the southwest which have doubtless occurred to you, but which I wish to emphasize.

"In the first place, I want to make the mobilization a first-class training for the army, and I wish you would give your time and that of the war college to advising and carrying out maneuvers of a useful character, and plan to continue to do this during the next three months. By that time we may expect that either Ambassador Wilson's fears will have been realized and chaos and its consequences have ensued, or that the present government of Mexico will have so readjusted matters as to secure tranquillity—a result devoutly to be wished. The troops can then be returned to their posts.

"Second, Texas is a state ordinarily peaceful, but you can not put 20,000 troops into it without running some risk of a collision between the people of the state, and especially the Mexicans who live in Texas near the border and who sympathize with the insurrectos, and the federal soldiers. For that reason I beg you to be as careful as you can to prevent friction of any kind.

"Third. One of the great troubles in the concentration of troops is the danger of disease, and I suppose that you have adopted the most modern methods for the preventing and, if necessary, for stamping out epidemics. That is so much a part of a campaign that it hardly seems necessary for me to call attention to it.

"Finally, I wish you to examine the question of the patrol of the border and put as many troops on that work as is practicable, and more than are now engaged in it, in order to prevent the use of our borderland for the carrying on of the insurrection. I have given assurances to the Mexican ambassador on this point.

"I sincerely hope that this experience will always be remembered by the army and navy as a useful means of education, and I should be greatly disappointed if it resulted in any injury or disaster to our forces from any cause. I have taken a good deal of responsibility in ordering this mobilization, but I am ready to answer for it if only you and those under you use the utmost care to avoid the difficulties which I have pointed out."

I am more than happy to here record the fact that all apprehensions as to the effect of the presence of so large a military force in Texas proved groundless; no disturbances occurred.

From time to time communications were received from Ambassador Wilson, who had returned to Mexico, confirming the view that the massing of American troops in the neighborhood had had good effect.

The insurrection continued and resulted in engagements between the regular Mexican troops and the insurgents, and this along the border, so that in several instances bullets from the contending forces struck American citizens engaged in their lawful occupations on American soil.

Proper protests were made against these invasions of American rights to the Mexican authorities.

The presence of a large military and naval force available for prompt action, near the Mexican border, proved to be most fortunate under the somewhat trying conditions presented by this invasion of American rights. Had no movement theretofore taken place, and because of these events it had been necessary then to bring about the mobilization, it must have had sinister significance. On the other hand, the presence of the troops before and at the time of the unfortunate killing and wounding of American citizens at Douglas, made clear that the restraint exercised by our government in regard to this occurrence was not due to a lack of force or power to deal with it promptly and aggressively, but was due to a real desire to use every means possible to avoid direct intervention in the affairs of our neighbor, whose friendship we valued and were most anxious to retain.

The policy and action of this government were based upon an earnest friendliness for the Mexican people as a whole, and it is a matter of gratification to note that this attitude of strict impartiality as to all factions in Mexico and of sincere friendship for the neighboring nation, without regard for party allegiance, has been generally recognized and has resulted in an even closer and more sympathetic understanding between the two republics and a warmer regard one for the other. Action to suppress violence and restore tranquility throughout the Mexican republic was of peculiar interest to this government, in that it concerned the safeguarding of American life and property in that country. On May 25, 1911, President Diaz resigned, Senor de la Barra was chosen provisional president. Elections for president and vice-president were thereafter held throughout the republic, and Senor Francisco I. Madero was formally declared elected on October 15 to the chief magistracy. On November 6 President Madero entered upon the duties of his office.

Honduras and Nicaragua Treaties Proposed.

As to the situation in Central America, I have taken occasion in the past to emphasize most strongly the importance that should be attributed to the consummation of the conventions between the Republics of Nicaragua and of Honduras and this country, and I again earnestly recommend that the necessary advice and consent of the senate be accorded to these treaties, which will make it possible for these Central American republics to enter upon an era of genuine economic national development.

Our relations with the Republic of Panama, peculiarly important, due to mutual obligations and the vast interests created by the canal, have continued in the usual friendly manner, and we have been glad to make appropriate expression of our attitude of sympathetic interest in the endeavors of our neighbor in undertaking the development of the rich resources of the country.

The Chinese Loans.

The past year has been marked in our relations with China by the conclusion of two important international loans, one for the construction of the Hukuang railways, the other for the carrying out of the currency reform to which China was pledged by treaties with the United States, Great Britain, and Japan, of which mention was made in my last annual message.

Knowing the interest of the United States in the reform of Chinese currency, the Chinese government, in the autumn of 1910, sought the assistance of the American government to procure funds with which to accomplish that all-important reform. In the course of the subsequent negotiations there was combined with the proposed currency loan one for certain industrial developments in Manchuria, the two loans aggregating the sum of $50,000,000. While this was originally to be solely an American enterprise, the American government, consistently with its desire to secure a sympathetic and practical co-operation of the great powers toward maintaining the principle of equality of opportunity and the administrative integrity of China, urged the Chinese government to admit to participation in the currency loan the associates of the American group in the Hukuang loan. While of immense importance in itself, the reform contemplated in making this loan is but preliminary to other and more comprehensive fiscal reforms which will be of incalculable benefit to China and foreign interests alike, since they will strengthen the Chinese empire and promote the rapid development of international trade.

When these negotiations were begun, it was understood that a financial adviser was to be employed by China in connection with the reform, and in order that absolute equality in all respects among the lending nations might be scrupulously observed, the American government proposed the nomination of a neutral adviser, which was agreed to by China and the other governments concerned. On September 28, 1911, Doctor Vissering, president of the Dutch Java bank and a financier of wide experience in the Orient, was recommended to the Chinese government for the post of monetary adviser.

Especially important at the present, when the ancient Chinese empire is shaken by civil war incidental to its awakening to the many influences and activity of modernization, are the cooperative policy of good understanding which has been fostered by the international projects referred to above and the general sympathy of view among all the powers interested in the far east.

New Japanese Treaty.

The treaty of commerce and navigation between the United States and Japan, signed in 1894, would by a strict interpretation of its provisions have terminated on July 17, 1912. Japan's general treaties with the other powers, however, terminated in 1911, and the Japanese government expressed an earnest desire to conduct the negotiations for a new treaty with the United States simultaneously with its negotiations with the other powers. There were a number of important questions involved in the treaty, including the immigration of laborers, revision of the customs tariff and the right of Americans to hold real estate in Japan. The United States consented to waive all technicalities and to enter at once upon negotiations for a new treaty on the understanding that there should be a continuance throughout the life of the treaty of the same effective measures for the restriction of immigration of laborers to American territory which had been in operation with entire satisfaction to both governments since 1908. The Japanese government accepted this basis of negotiation, and a new treaty was quickly concluded, resulting in a highly satisfactory settlement of the other questions referred to.

A satisfactory adjustment has also been effected of the question growing out of the annexation of Korea by Japan.

Europe and the Near East.

In Europe and the near east, during the past twelve-month, there has been at times considerable political unrest. The Moroccan question, which for some months was the cause of great anxiety, happily appears to have reached a stage at which it need no longer be regarded with concern. The Ottoman empire was occupied for a period by strife in Albania and is now at war with Italy. In Greece and the Balkan countries the disquieting potentialities of this situation have been more or less felt. Persia has been the scene of a long internal struggle. These conditions have been the cause of uneasiness in European diplomacy, but thus far without direct political concern to the United States.

In the war which unhappily exists between Italy and Turkey this government has no direct political interest, and I took occasion at the suitable time to issue a proclamation of neutrality in that conflict. At the same time all necessary steps have been taken to safeguard the personal interests of American citizens and organizations in so far as affected by the war.

In spite of the attendant economic uncertainties and detriments to commerce, the United States has gained markedly in its commercial standing with certain of the nations of the near east. Turkey, especially, is beginning to come into closer relations with the United States through the new interest of American manufacturers and exporters in the possibilities of those regions, and it is hoped that foundations are being laid for a large and mutually beneficial exchange of commodities between the two countries.

International Conventions and Conferences.

The supplementary protocol to The Hague convention for the establishment of an international prize court, mentioned in my last annual message, embodying stipulations providing for an alternative procedure which would remove the constitutional objection to that part of The Hague convention which provides that there may be an appeal to the proposed court from the decisions of national courts, has received the signature of the governments parties to the original convention and has been ratified by the government of the United States, together with the prize court convention.

The deposit of the ratifications with the government of the Netherlands awaits action by the powers on the declaration, signed at London on February 26, 1909, of the rules of international law to be recognized within the meaning of article seven of The Hague convention for the establishment of an international prize court.

Fur-Seal Treaty.

The fur-seal controversy, which for nearly twenty-five years has been the source of serious friction between the United States and the powers bordering upon the north Pacific ocean, whose subjects have been permitted to engage in pelagic sealing against the fur-seal herds having their breeding grounds within the jurisdiction of the United States, has at last been satisfactorily adjusted by the conclusion of the North Pacific sealing convention entered into between the United States, Great Britain, Japan and Russia on the seventh of July last. This convention is a conservation measure of very great importance, and if it is carried out in the spirit of reciprocal concession and advantage upon which it is based, there is every reason to believe that not only will it result in preserving the fur-seal herds of the north Pacific ocean and restoring them to their former value for the purposes of commerce, but also that it will afford a permanently satisfactory settlement of a question the only other solution of which seemed to be the total destruction of the fur seals. In another aspect, also, this convention is of importance in that it furnishes an illustration of the feasibility of securing a general international game law for the protection of other mammals of the sea, the preservation of which is of importance to all the nations of the world.

The attention of congress is especially called to the necessity for legislation on the part of the United States for the purpose of fulfilling the obligations assumed under this convention, to which the senate gave its advice and consent on the twenty-fourth day of July last.

International Opium Commission.

In a special message transmitted to the congress on the seventh of January, 1911, in which I concurred in the recommendations made by the secretary of state in regard to certain needful legislation for the control of our interstate and foreign traffic in opium and other menacing drugs, I quoted from my annual message of December 7, 1909, in which I announced that the results of the International Opium commission held at Shanghai in February, 1909, at the invitation of the United States, had been laid before this government; that the report of that commission showed that China was making remarkable progress and admirable efforts toward the eradication of the opium evil; that the interested governments had not permitted their commercial interests to prevent their co-operation in this reform; and, as a result of collateral investigations of the opium question in this country, I recommended that the manufacture, sale and use of opium in the United States should be more rigorously controlled by legislation.

Prior to that time and in continuation of the policy of this government to secure the co-operation of the interested nations, the United States proposed an international opium conference with full powers for the purpose of clothing with the force of international law the resolutions adopted by the above-mentioned commission, together with their essential corollaries. The other powers concerned cordially responded to the proposal of this government, and, I am glad to be able to announce, representatives of all the powers assembled in conference at The Hague on the first of this month.

Since the passage of the opium-exclusion act, more than twenty states have been animated to modify their pharmacy laws and bring them in accord with the spirit of that act, thus stamping out, to a measure, the intrastate traffic in opium and other habit-forming drugs. But, although I have urged on the congress the passage of certain measures for federal control of the interstate and foreign traffic in these drugs, no action has yet been taken. In view of the fact that there is now sitting at The Hague so important a conference, which has under review the municipal laws of the different nations for the mitigation of their opium and other allied evils, a conference which will certainly deal with the international aspects of these evils, it seems to me most essential that the congress should take immediate action on the anti-narcotic legislation to which I have already called attention by a special message.

Foreign Trade Relations of the United States.

In my last annual message I referred to the tariff negotiations of the department of state with foreign countries in connection with the application, by a series of proclamations, of the minimum tariff of the United States to importations from the several countries, and I stated that, in its general operation, section 2 of the new tariff law had proved a guaranty of continued commercial peace, although there were, unfortunately, instances where foreign governments dealt arbitrarily with American interests within their jurisdiction in a manner injurious and inequitable. During the past year some instances of discriminatory treatment have been removed, but I regret to say that there remain a few cases of differential treatment adverse to the commerce of the United States. While none of these instances now appears to amount to undue discrimination in the sense of section 2 of the tariff law of August 5, 1909, they are all exceptions to that complete degree of equality of tariff treatment that the department of state has consistently sought to obtain for American commerce abroad.

While the double tariff feature of the tariff law of 1909 has been amply justified by the results achieved in removing former and preventing new, undue discriminations against American commerce, it is believed that the time has come for the amendment of this feature of the law in such way as to provide a graduated means of meeting varying degrees of discriminatory treatment of American commerce in foreign countries as well as to protect the financial interests abroad of American citizens against arbitrary and injurious treatment on the part of foreign governments through either legislative or administrative measures.

It would also seem desirable that the maximum tariff of the United States should embrace within its purview the free list, which is not the case at the present time, in order that it might have reasonable significance to the governments of those countries from which the importations into the United States are confined virtually to articles on the free list.

The fiscal year ended June 30, 1911, shows great progress in the development of American trade. It was noteworthy as marking the highest record of exports of American products to foreign countries, the valuation being in excess of $2,000,000,000. These exports showed a gain over the preceding year of more than $300,000,000.

There is widespread appreciation expressed by the business interests of the country as regards the practical value of the facilities now offered by the department of state and the department of commerce and labor for the furtherance of American commerce.

Crying Need for American Merchant Marine.

I need hardly reiterate the conviction that there should speedily be built up an American merchant marine. This is necessary to assure favorable transportation facilities to our great ocean-borne commerce as well as to supplement the navy with an adequate reserve of ships and men. It would have the economic advantage of keeping at home part of the vast sums now paid foreign shipping for carrying American goods. All the great commercial nations pay heavy subsidies to their merchant marine, so that it is obvious that without some wise aid from the Congress the United States must lag behind in the matter of merchant marine in its present anomalous position.

Legislation to facilitate the extension of American banks to foreign countries is another matter in which our foreign trade needs assistance.

Improvement of the Foreign Service.

The entire foreign-service organization is being improved and developed with especial regard to the requirements of the commercial interests of the country. The rapid growth of our foreign trade makes it of the utmost importance that governmental agencies through which that trade is to be aided and protected should possess a high degree of efficiency. Not only should the foreign representatives be maintained upon a generous scale in so far as salaries and establishments are concerned, but the selection and advancement of officers should be definitely and permanently regulated by law, so that the service shall not fail to attract men of high character and ability. The experience of the past few years with a partial application of civil service rules to the diplomatic and consular service leaves no doubt in my mind of the wisdom of a wider and more permanent extension of those principles to both branches of the foreign service. The men selected for appointment by means of the existing executive regulations have been of a far higher average of intelligence and ability than the men appointed before the regulations were promulgated.

I therefore again commend to the favorable action of the congress the enactment of a law applying to the diplomatic and consular service the principles embodied in section 1753 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, in the civil service act of January 16, 1883, and the executive orders of June 27, 1906, and of November 26, 1909. In its consideration of this important subject I desire to recall to the attention of the congress the vary favorable report made on the Lowden bill for the improvement of the foreign service by the foreign affairs committee of the house of representatives. Available statistics show the strictness with which the merit system has been applied to the foreign service during recent years and the absolute non-partisan selection of consuls and diplomatic service secretaries who indeed far from being selected with any view to political consideration have actually been chosen to a disproportionate extent from states which would have been unrepresented in the foreign service under the system which it is to be hoped is now permanently obsolete. Some legislation for the perpetuation of the present system of examinations and promotions upon merit and efficiency would be of greatest value to our commercial and international interests.

WM. H. TAFT.

MINNESOTA HISTORICAL SOCIETY.

THE NORTHERN LIGHT

VOL. I. HOLT, MARSHALL COUNTY, MINNESOTA, FRIDAY, DECEMBER 22, 1911 NO. 21.

SOUVENIERS OF THE MAINE

BILL TO HOUSE CALLS FOR DONATIONS TO CITIES, PATRIOTIC SOCIETIES, ETC.,

IN THE DEFICIENCY BILL

Measure Also Authorizes Additional Appropriation for Raising Work. —Other Congressional News.

Washington, D. C. — Portions of the wreck of the battleship Maine are to be donated to cities, patriotic societies and survivors or heirs of survivors of the disaster, under a plan presented to the house in the urgent deficiency bill.

The entire bill carries $2,270,000. It authorizes an additional appropriation of $250,000 for raising the Maine, making a total appropriation of $900,000 for that purpose.

The bill would authorize the secretary of war to give some portion of the wreck to the republic of Cuba for incorporation in a public monument to be erected in Havana. It would also authorize the secretaries of war and navy to donate pieces of the battleship or of its equipment and the property found in it to any municipality of the United States, or to any military or naval association or society in the United States or to the former officers and crew of the Maine, or their heirs or representatives.

The only conditions upon which these grants would be made are, that the parts can be recovered and removed without interfering with the general work of removal now being done by the war department; that the labor and cost of securing them be paid by the city or society wanting the relic; and that reasonable assurance be given the government that they would be properly preserved and cared for and not disposed of without the government's consent. The work of raising the wreck is nearing completion.

The urgent deficiency bill will be rushed through the house and it is expected to pass the senate early next week. The money now in hand will be used up by the war department Dec. 20, at the present rate of work, and department officials have advised the appropriation committee that if the wreck is to be towed to the United States, an additional expense of $100 a day will be necessary.

President Taft, in anticipation of having to pass on the Sherwood "dollar a day" pension bill through Secretary of the Interior Fisher directed Pension Commissioner Davenport to make a thorough investigation of the bill and to make a report as soon as possible.

Estimates of the increased expenditure from the capital range as high as $75,000,000.

Predicts No Building Bill.

Democratic Leader Underwood of the house predicted that the caucus of the house Democrats would not authorize a public building bill at this session, notwithstanding the public building committee's recommendation for it.

Mr. Underwood said the matter undoubtedly would be considered in caucus. To give everyone a fair show, an appropriation of from $25,000,000 to $30,000,000 he said, would be necessary and the Democratic leaders do not want such a bill to clash with their economy program.

Sugar Raise to Be Probed.

An investigation to determine why the price of sugar was increased several cents a pound last summer was begun by the house committee appointed to investigate sugar conditions. Letters were sent to all the cane sugar and beet sugar refineries in the United States requiring sworn statements showing:

The actual cost of refining each year for the past five years.

The actual cost of each consignment of raw sugar purchased this year.

The amount of raw sugar on hand July 1, 1911, and its actual cost.

The amount of raw sugar contracted for but not delivered July 1, 1911, with actual dates of delivery.

The number of pounds of refined sugar in stock or owned by the refiners July 1.

The beet sugar companies also are required to state the number of tons of beets sliced, the cost of making sugar and the price paid for the beets.

Many members of the special investigating committee, of which Representative Hardwick of Georgia is chairman, have expressed the belief that all stocks of raw sugar were contracted for prior to July 1, and that the sharp rise in price during the summer resulted in large profits for the refiners.

For Government-Owned Road.

Washington.—A bill providing for the construction of a government-owned road in Alaska was introduced in the house by Representative Anderson of Minnesota. Mr. Anderson's proposal is for the construction of a railroad connecting Seward on Resurrection Bay to the Matanuska coal fields as recommended by Secretary of Interior Fisher, and will doubtless be recommended by President Taft in his forthcoming "Alaska message" to congress. The Anderson bill provides for a bond issue to cover cost of construction to bear 3 per cent interest for 30 years.

Washington, D. C. — The Sulzer joint resolution for the termination of the treaty of 1832 between the United States and Russia, because of the latter's discrimination against Jewish American citizens, passed the house 300 to 1. The one negative vote was cast by Representative Malby of New York. A practically identical resolution by Senator Culberson of Texas is pending in the senate. Favorable action of both houses would be necessary to make either resolution effective.

Both the Sulzer and Culberson resolutions would direct the president to give Russia immediately the year's notice necessary for the complete abrogation of the treaty that has been in force nearly 70 years.

An attempt led by Representative Olmstead of Pennsylvania to modify the Sulzer resolution so as to avoid making the direct charge that Russia has violated the treaty in refusing to recognize the passports of American nent Republicans declared that the house should not go on record as charging a violation of the treaty, but should adopt language stating that Russia had so construed the treaty that the United States could no longer be a party to it.

The resolution passed by the house declares that "the government of the United States will not be a party to any treaty which discriminates, or which by one of the parties thereto is so construed as to discriminate between American citizens on the ground of race or religion," and it adds:

"The government of Russia has violated the treaty between the United States and Russia, concluded at St. Petersburg Dec. 18, 1832, refusing to honor American passports duly issued to American citizens, on account of race and religion; and in the judgment of the congress the said treaty, for the reasons aforesaid, ought to be terminated at the earliest possible time."

Washington, D. C. — The Sherwood service pension bill, which would add upwards of $40,000,000 to the government annual expenditure by granting increased pensions to civil and Mexican war veterans on the basis of length of service, was passed by the house despite the determined opposition of many Democratic leaders.

Secretary of the Interior Fisher estimated that the bill would add $75,000,000 to the pension roll if the 4,000 veterans eligible take advantage of the increase.

The Republicans who voted with the 84 Democrats against the bill were Gardner, Gillette and McCall of Massachusetts, Hill of Connecticut, Kent of California, McCreary of Pennsylvania, Payne of New York, and Utter of Rhode Island. Speaker Clark voted with the majority of his party for the bill and Democratic Leader Underwood and Fitzgerald of New York, chairman of the appropriations committee voted against it.

The bill now goes to the senate Senate leaders, however, will proceed slowly in the consideration and many Democrats voted for the measure in the belief that the senate would not pass it.

The Sherwood bill would establish the following basis of pensions.

For service for 90 days to six months $15 per month, from six to nine months, $20 per month, from nine months to one year $25 per month, more than one year $30 per month.

St. Paul Oil Man Testifies.

Joseph Bartles, president of the Bartles Oil company of St. Paul, an independent concern, appeared before the senate committee on interstate commerce, of which Senator Clapp is chairman, to tell of the struggles which the independent concerns of the Northwest had experienced in competing with the Standard Oil company and other similar organizations.

He said that he believed an effective curb could be placed on concerns like the Standard Oil company, if congress would pass a statute similar to that now in force in Minnesota, prohibiting the sale of petroleum at a price lower in one community than in another. The Minnesota law was explained in detail by Mr. Bartles, and his statements proved of great interest to the members of the committee.

Mr. Bartles said that he thought a statute similar to the one he had described would also be applicable to concerns dealing in other commodities.

Urge Abrogation of Treaty.

The house committee on foreign affairs unanimously agreed upon the Sulzer resolution directing the immediate abrogation of the 1832 treaty between the United States and Russia, because of the discrimination by Russia against American Jewish citizens in the recognition of passports.

CHICAGO GETS IT

MEETING TO NOMINATE PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATES WILL BE HELD JUNE 18.

G. O. P. COMMITTEE MEETS

New is Named Head of Arrangement Board—Hill Succeeds Postmaster. Hitchcock as Chairman of National Committee.

Washington, D. C. — The republican national committee in session here ratified the program which had been arranged in advance for its deliberations. The national convention to nominate candidates for president and vice president will be held in Chicago, beginning Tuesday, June 18. The vote in favor of Chicago was overwhelming, the ballot showing: Chicago, 42; Denver, 7; St. Louis, 1; absent, 3.

St. Louis formally withdrew from the contest before the voting began, but Colonel Cecil Lyon of Texas insisted on saving his ballot for that city.

The form of the call for delegates to the national convention, including the disposition of the troublesome presidential preference primary question, was still in the hands of a special committee recessed until 2 p. m.

Hilles Pleased at Result.

Charles D. Hilles, secretary to the president and manager of the Taft forces, was about the committee rooms during the session and was gratified to see the Taft program go through without change.

Colonel Harry S. New of Indiana was appointed to head the committee on convention arrangements, as Mr. Hilles had insisted in his conferences with Postmaster General Hitchcock and others who were said to be opposed to the Indiana committeeman. When Mr. Hitchcock failed to appear at the committee the suggestion was laughingly made that he had been "steam rolled."

The Taft forces also dictated the entire membership of the arrangements committee which was increased from five to seven, as follows; New Indiana; Vorys, Ohio; Mulvane, Kansas; Murphy, Ney Jersey; Williams, Oregon; Rosewater, Nebraska; and Duncan, North Carolina.

Charles P. Taft, brother of the president, was an interested spectator. Former Representative Lowden and Fred W. Upham presented Chicago's invitation for the convention. Denver's seven votes were cast by the committeemen from Colorado, West Virginia, Idaho, Utah, Wyoming, Hawaii and the Philippines. The representatives of North Carolina, Arizona and Nevada were absent.

As indicating a phase of the attitude of the committee its decision to call for the selection of delegates from the District of Columbia at a primary election was of unusual interest.

Subcommittee Is Chosen.

The committee approved the action of the executive committee in appointing a subcommittee to take in hand the preparation of a call for delegates, indicating the method in which they were to be chosen. This committee consisted of Messrs. Borah, Idaho; Ward, New York; Capers, South Carolina; Lowden, Illinois, and Rosewater, Nebraska.

Hill Chosen Chairman.

The national committee also accepted the resignation of Chairman Frank A. Hitchcock dated March 5, 1909, and effective April 1, 1909. Former Governor John F. Hill of Maine was elected chairman by acclamation. On motion of Victor Rosewater of Nebraska, a standing vote of thanks was tendered Mr. Hitchcock.

The call for delegates to the convention requires that they shall be selected not earlier than thirty days after the call and not later than thirty days prior to the date set for the convention. This action nullifies the selection of delegates already made in Alabama and will require South Dakota to select a new primary date. The South Dakota election had been set for June 4.

Train Is Wrecked In Maine.

Portland, Maine.—A special train on the Grand Trunk, bringing several hundred persons to sail for Liverpool, was wrecked at West Parish, Me. Several passengers were hurt, but no one was killed.

Knox-McCook Wedding.

New York, N. Y. — At the residence of General and Mrs. Anson G. McCook today, their daughter, Miss Katherine McCook, was married to Hugh Knox, second son of the secretary of state.

Advance In Benzine and Gasoline.

New York, N. Y. — The Standard Oil company has announced an advance of a quarter of a cent a gallon in the price of benzine and gasoline.

PACKER OUT OF ENGLAND

CANNOT SUPPLY MEAT PENDING SUIT MENTIONED.

J. Ogden Armour, at Chicago, Admits Action Has Been Taken.

London, England. — The British government has decided to exclude all the American meat packers against whom prosecutions have been instituted in the United States from tendering for contracts for the supply of meat to the British army and navy pending the settlement of the suits.

The agents in the British isles of the prominent American meat packers who have up till now secured large government contracts for the supply of meats to the army and navy have received the following notification from the war office:

"Pending the ultimate result of the legal proceedings in the United States against certain meat packing firms it has been decided by the British government that none of the firms involved shall be invited to tender for army supplies."

The decision of the government is due to the opposition of advanced radical members of parliament to the American trusts. The contracts given out by the war office which hitherto had been secured by American firms are now expected to go to Argentine meat packers.

Armour Admits Loss of Trade.

Chicago.—J. Ogden Armour, president of Armour & Co., under indictment for alleged violation of the Sherman act, admitted that Armour & Co. had been notified that its bids for British army contracts would not be accepted pending the settlement of suits by the United States. He refused to make any comment.

Other Chicago packers against whom prosecutions are now pending are: Louis F. Swift, president Swift & Co.; Edward Morris, president of Morris & Co.; Edward Tilden, president National Packing company.

INDIAN POPULATION 265,683.

Report for U. S. Shows Increase of 12 Per Cent From 1900 to 1910.

Washington, D. C. — A preliminary statement, giving for continental United States the distribution of the Indian population by states and territories, as shown by the returns of the thirteenth decennial census, taken as of April 15, 1910, was issued by Director Durand of the bureau of the census department of commerce and labor.

In 1910 the Indian population of continental United States was 265,683, as compared with 237,196 in 1900, 248,253 in 1890. According to these figures, there was an increase in the Indian population from 1900 to 1910 of 28,487, or 12 per cent, as compared with a decrease from 1890 to 1900 of 11,057, or 4.5 per cent.

In the west north central division of the United States, the Indian population in 1910 was distributed as follows: Minnesota, 9,053; Iowa, 471; Missouri, 313; North Dakota, 6,486; South Dakota, 19,137; Nebraska; 3,502; Kansas, 2,444.

TURNER ACCEPTS.

Former Senator Will Succeed T. H. Carter on International Board.

Spokane, Washington. — George Turner of Spokane, former United States senator of Washington, who has been mentioned frequently as a candidate for vice president on the democratic ticket, announced he has accepted the appointment by President Taft as a member of the international joint commission on boundary waters, succeeding the late Thomas H. Carter, United States senator of Montana.

BOYS HELD FOR GRAIN THEFTS.

Superior Police Make Ten Arrests Who are Suspected of Larceny.

Superior, Wisconsin. — The police have made ten arrests of boys involved in systematic thefts of grain from freight cars. The authorities say the gang consists of four or five men and 35 or more boys.

The thievery is done by the youngsters who turn the grain over to the men for a small consideration. The men in turn sell it to the commission men for the market price.

Court Sustains Eckert Will.

New York, N. Y. — The will of the late Gen. Thomas T. Eckert, formerly president of the Western Union Telegraph company, which was contested by his son, James Clendenning Eckert, was sustained Surrogate Cohalan. The bulk of the estate, which was valued at $3,000,000, was left to another son, Thomas T. Eckert, Jr. James, who was left only $50,000, contested on the ground that his brother unduly influenced his father who, he asserted, was of unsound mind by reason of age and physical disability.

JIM ROOT IS DEAD

MAN WHO SAVED MORE THAN 300 LIVES PASSES AWAY IN NEW YORK ROOMING HOUSE.

RAILROAD PENSIONED HIM

Ran Crowded Passenger Train Through Walls of Flame to Lake at Risk of Own Life.

James Root died last Tuesday in an obscure rooming house in New York. Jim Root, as engineer of a passenger train on the old St. Paul & Duluth Short Line, saved the lives of more than 300 persons when Hinckley and other towns in Northern Minnesota were destroyed by the tornado of fire that swept that district September 1, 1894, and in Hinckley alone caused the death of more than 500 people.

The walls of the room in which Root died were literally covered with newspaper clippings, poems, magazine articles and pictures recounting the heroism of the man.

Three years ago Enginer Root, at the age of 64, retired from railroading on a pension provided him by the Northern Pacific railroad, now owner of the Duluth Short Line. He went to New York with his wife and had lived there up to the time of his death. His body will be brought to Stillwater for burial, that having been the home of Mrs. Root.

His Act of Heroism.

Jim Root went with the old St. Paul & Duluth railroad when it was first operated, and was one of the first men to pull a train over the new line. He was on the run when the Hinckley fire broke loose September 1, 1894. He was on the way from Duluth to St. Paul and had arrived within a half mile of Hinckley that day when his train was besieged by a mob of refugees, who had fled from the town. With men, women and children jamming his train to the guard rails, and with the forest around him all ablaze, Engineer Root backed his train five and a half miles to Skunk lake, little more than a slough, where the people plunged into the water and managed to escape the tornado of fire that passed over them.

Engineer Root was in deadly peril all the time he was driving the train back to the lake. The heat was so intense that windows of his cab were broken by it, and for a short space of time was unconscious. His fireman John McGowan, escaped by jumping into the water tank on the tender. Although badly burned about the face and hands, Root stuck to his post, and, but for his heroism, his whole trainload, not only of Hinckley refugees, but comprising many prominent St. Paul men and women and other travelers, would have been burned to death.

Off Duty for Short Time.

A rescue train was made up at Duluth and ran to Skunk lake, where the 300 refugees were picked up and taken back to Duluth. Root, however, was conveyed on a handcar to Hinckley and reached his home in White Bear village the next forenoon. He recovered from his injuries in a couple of weeks and returned to his run, which he held for several years.

Offers were made him to go on the lecture platform and others were received from theaters which wanted to feature him. A play was written in which he and his thrilling experience were the features. Poems were written about him, one by the late Franklyn W. Lee of the St. Paul Dispatch.

Mr. Root was born in Greenbush, N. Y., in 1843, and began railroading on the Hudson River road in 1857.

DR. D. F. DUMAS ACQUITTED.

Cass Lake Mayor Freed on Blackduck Arson Charge.

Brainerd. — The jury in the trial of Dr. Delbert Dumas, mayor of Cass Lake, charged with having committed arson at Blackduck, returned a verdict of not guilty. The jury had been out three and a half hours.

Judge McClenahan in his charge stated there was no evidence that the defendant had been at Blackduck nor was there any evidence that he had set the fire. The theory of the state was that while the defendant had not personally set fire to the buildings, his alleged acts and conduct were within the scope which made him equally guilty with the persons who had set the fire.

On Dec. 15 the state will finish taking testimony in the Edward E. Geralds case. Geralds was a co-defendant with Dr. Dumas in the Blackduck arson charge. This preliminary hearing will be held in the municipal court of Bemidji.

DEMAND RESTITUTION.

University of Minnesota Makes Call On Former Cashier.

Minneapolis. — Hon. John Lind, president of the board of regents of the state university, and State Treasurer Walter J. Smith formally demanded that J. D. Bren, former university cashier and acting treasurer, produce the money he says was stolen from him last spring in a campus holdup, and all other money which came into his hands as a university employee. The demand was served through the Hennepin county sheriff.

Bren is under indictment charging the embezzlement of about $20,000 of university funds. The officials name no specific sum, but demand that all "funds, money and properties" which came into Bren's custody be "forthwith produced."

Negotiations for a settlement of the bond have been under way for some time, but are said not to have been completed. The criminal trial of Bren has been set for next January.

FEWER SALOONS; MORE LICENSE

Bitter Fight Expected at East Grand Forks Over Patrol Limits.

East Grand Forks.—Without a change the East Grand Forks council passed on their second reading, ordinances which will decrease the saloon patrol limits in such a manner as to eliminate eleven saloons, and which will increase the saloon license to $1,000. Only one vote was cast against the ordinances, the aldermen remaining in the same relative position as before.

There will be a big fight against the bills when they come up for final reading. Charges are made that the ordinances have been introduced for political purposes, as the saloon property of John Vossler, and property owned by T. A. Sullivan, principal opponents of the city administration, are set outside of the patrol district.

SUIT OVER EBERHART PARADE.

Mankato Policeman, Hurt at "Home-coming," Asks $5,000 of City.

Mankato.—The city has been served with notice of a suit for $5,000 damages brought by former Policeman Theodore [illegible] for injuries that he sustained on the night of November 23, 1910, in the parade held in honor of Governor Eberhart's homecoming after the election.

The horse that the officer rode was frightened by fireworks and fell dead on the street. The officer fell heavily to the brick pavement. A thigh bone was fractured and his shoulder injured. He has not been able to leave his house since, the complaint alleges, and it is said also that he was ordered to ride a wild and ungovernable horse.

The city will fight the suit, claiming that it was not responsible for the accident.

WINONA STRIKE GROWS VIOLENT

Stones and Bottles Thrown and Cars Are Taken Off.

Winona. — The first violence occurred in the street car motormen's strike and it brought to a halt the attempt of the company to resume service. One of the three cars on the line was attacked by sympathizers early in the evening in the extreme outskirts of the city, where stones and bottles were hurled through the windows.

No one was hurt and no arrests were made. Immediately all of the cars were taken off and the city is again without service. Adequate police protection has been demanded by the receivership managment. Strikebreakers from Chicago manned the cars, three of which were in operation until the trouble developed.

GOOD ROADS BEE IN PROGRESS.

Mankato-Good Thunder Highway Gets Attention of Farmers.

Mankato.—The farmers living in the vicinity of the Sperlich school house, in Rapidan, held a meeting to talk over the matter of graveling the roads in that vicinity, and agreed to haul 1,000 loads this winter.

A "hauling bee" is in progress on the Mankato-Good Thunder road, and farmers are also hauling gravel on other roads leading into Mankato. All previous efforts toward road improvements appear likely to be excelled this winter, for there was never before such a general desire on the part of the farmers to have the roads improved.

Church to Have Silver Jubilee.

Winona.—Sunday the St. Martin's German Lutheran church, which for more than forty years was under the pastorate of the late Rev. Philip von Rohr, celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of the occupation of its present building, which was built and occupied more than twenty-eight years after the church society was founded. Rev. Richard Siegler of Milwaukee preached in the morning. In the evening Rev. August Stock, who spent his boyhood in Winona, conducted the service.

Christmas at Mount Vernon

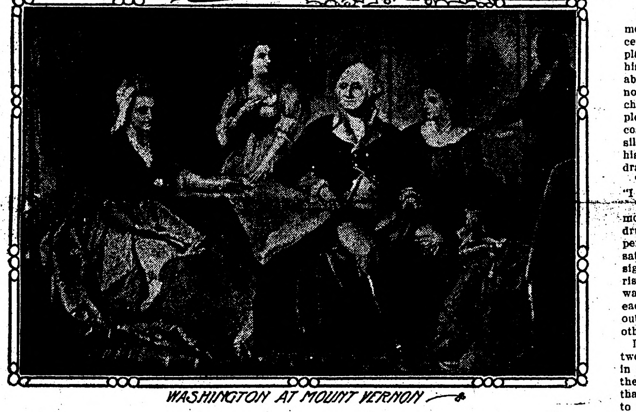
CHRISTMAS at Mount Vernon in the peaceful days which followed the Revolution was always exceedingly merry. The Virginians of those days, being cavaliers, made the most of the holiday which the grim Puritans of New England ignored.

It was a season of profuse hospitality. But in all the northern neck of Virginia no house was the scene of more joyous doings than that of George Washington. Often mere strangers, bearing letters of introduction, came and went at will, sometimes staying for weeks, or even months.

Though stern, Washington could unbend considerably on such an occasion. He was getting to be an old man, and his adopted son, George Custis, describes him as wearing habitually at that period plain drab clothes, with a broad-brimmed white hat, and carrying an umbrella with a long staff attached to his saddle-bow when he rode to shelter him from the sun, his skin being tender and burning easily.

While yet a young man he had inherited the Mount Vernon estate from his half-brother. The house was much smaller than it is today, being what was then called a "four-room cottage"—that is to say, with only that many rooms on the ground floor. It had been built in 1743 by Lawrence Washington by the labor of transported convicts from England, the main timbers being cut from the nearby forest, while the outer sheathing of North Carolina pine was hewn into blocks to resemble stone.

MOUNT VERNON



WASHINGTON AT MOUNT VERNON

There were about a dozen bedrooms, all of them small, and doubtless they were rather crowded at Christmas time—some of the people, very likely, "doubling up." All of the rooms had low ceilings; there was no paper on the walls; water pipes of all kinds were conspicuous by their absence; no furnace heated the mansion (there were no stoves, indeed), and the only illumination in the evening was furnished by candles. Yet, as things went in those days, this was a luxurious establishment.

The Christmas dinner was at 3 o'clock in the "banquet hall," and probably twenty-five or thirty people sat down to the repast. The table was covered with a snowy damask cloth, and there were fine linen napkins—both being luxuries rather exceptional in those days. But this was by no means all. There was a handsome service of pure silver, most of which had belonged to the widow Custis when she married Mr. Washington, and also there was a big display of cut glass even more precious. Most remarkable of all, however, there were real silver forks—a rarity indeed!

Ladies and gentlemen ate with their knives in those days in a way that would now be considered shocking. It was a matter almost of necessity, inasmuch as the forks they used, which had only three tines, did not serve very well for some purposes, such as the carrying of peas to the mouth, for example. It is painful to think of the Father of His Country at his Christmas dinner putting his knife into the mouth, but there is no doubt that he did so. Another oddity, as nowadays it would be considered, was the arrangement of the table, upon which all the dishes to be served, including even the puddings and pies, were placed at once. No wonder that in those times a festive board was said to "groan" beneath the weight of the viands!

As a matter of course, at the Christmas dinner (as on other occasions) the table was waited upon by slaves, who did duty as house servants. Two were allotted to each guest, so that quite a number were required. All of the eatables had to be fetched a considerable distance, the kitchen being detached from the mansion, with which it was connected by a covered way.

At the houses of the great Virginia families at that period it was customary for the slavesto wait on the table in their ordinary plantation garb. But at Mount Vernon many things were on a scale of exceptional luxury, and the negroes who performed such service were clad in Washington's own livery of red, white and gold, which was handsome and striking.

One may suppose, then, that the conversation at the Christmas dinner was more than ordinarily entertaining. As a matter of course, everybody was hungry; for, according to the custom of those days, there were only two meals—breakfast, which was early, and dinner. The necessity for supper was removed by a great prolongation of the dinner, at which each person was expected to eat all that he or she possibly could. In fact, it was the duty of the hostess gently to persuade her guests to gorge themselves to repletion, while the host made it his business to press wine and other drinkables upon the men to an extent which in these times would be considered most imprudent.

The ladies, however, drank little or nothing. So far as they were concerned, the prohibition of stimulants was much more strict than it is today—a rather curious thing, when it is considered how copiously the men imbibed. As for the latter, if on occasions a gentleman took too much, the matter was politely ignored—such an accident, it was considered, being more or less likely to happen to anybody. But it should be understood that the really hard drinking was done, not while the ladies were present, but after their departure from the table.

One may view the scene in imagination, as, the moment having arrived for an important act of ceremony, Washington rises to his feet from his place at the table, holding a glass of Madeira in his hand. He is a very tall man, two inches above six feet in height and large of frame. His nose is slightly aquiline, his mouth broad, his chin square, his cheek bones high, and his complexion rather florid. He is dressed in a suit of costly black velvet, with knee breeches, black silk stockings, and silver buckles on his shoes. At his wrists are fine lace ruffles, and his hair is drawn back and done up behind in queue.

"Gentlemen," he says, bowing right and left, "I drink to my guests!"

The natural response, at the instance of the most distinguished guest present, is a health drunk to Lady Washington. This is followed, perhaps, by five or ten minutes of general conversation, after which Mrs. Washington gives the signal by pushing back her chair, and the women rise to take their departure. The General himself walks to the door, throwing it wide open, and each of the ladies courtesies deeply as she goes out, in response to the bows of the host and the other men.

If, when the time comes to rejoin the ladies, two or three of the guests find themselves hardly in a condition to do so, they are handed over to the care of the African major domo, who sees that they are put to bed. Such things are bound to happen occasionally, and it is not likely that any of the women will have the bad tact to ask what has become of them.

There is a good long evening, which, appropriately to Christmas, is given up to a romp. Such old-fashioned games as blind man's buff and hunt the slipper furnish incidental opportunities for much incidental flirtation and love-making. Perhaps there may even be a kissing game or two; and a spray of mistletoe fastened over a doorway gives excuse for some osculation and a great deal of merriment. It is all very delightful. Christmas gifts are exhibited, and Nellie Custis, it is likely, plays a bit on her harpsichord.

A negro fiddler, one of the slaves on the estate, in picturesque plantation garb, starts some merry music, while the young people choose partners for the dance. But the older ladies and gentlemen prefer cards, and sit about little tables, shuffling and dealing. The host himself plays, for small stakes only, gambling for money to considerable amounts being one of the vices he most abhors. As for Mrs. Washington, she talks to a neighbor and knits. When not otherwise busily occupied she always has knitting in her hands, having acquired the habit in camp during the Revolution, when she made stockings for destitute soldiers.

Fortunately, the frame, or setting, as it might be called, of the Christmas festivities here described in such crude outline is still preserved intact, thanks to the efforts of a few patriotic women who have made this their loving task. The United States government has never paid one cent to keep the home of Washington from destruction. Many years ago congress refused to give the money to buy it. But in the hands of the Mount Vernon Association the historic mansion and its immediate surroundings are kept in such excellent repair that Mount Vernon today is practically as it was more than a century ago, when George and his wife, Martha, kept open house and offered a generous hospitality, not only at Christmastide but at all other seasons of the year.

A MERRY CHRISTMAS.

Christmas brings the remembrance of a gift so great and wonderful that all who realize what it meant to the world feel the desire to give something in return though it may be nothing more than the expression of a wish for a merry Christmas. No one was anxious to receive the gift at first. People do not always know the value of what is given them. The only door opened to receive it, led into a cattle stable! But now, whose door does not fly open at Christmas to send out some blessing, some word of good will?

The old carol, sung to a few shepherds, has gone around the world now, and the message of peace and good will has been carried everywhere. Somehow, when you lay a new-born babe in a man's arms, you are pretty sure to bring a smile to his face, and a softening to his heart as well. An infant is a great peacebringer. What has touched and softened the heart of this grim world more than anything else, is the remembrance that Christmas brought a blessed child down to earth and laid him confidingly in the arms of humanity, brought him from home, and left him outcast, that the opportunity might be given to every man to take him in and give him the love and tenderness which is every child's birthright.

This it is, which moves us to strive to make children happy at Christmas. They may be like those who float along with the river, knowing nothing of its lovely source high up in the everlasting hills. But even if they do not know why, most of us do want to make it a merry time for children. It is emphatically the children's festival. No one ever regrets it who goes out of the way to help some little ones to be happy at Christmas. They are the special friends of the Christmas child, and it is well to be able to entertain the king's friends, if not the king himself.

It does the world good to open its heart and take in the season's greeting. Business goes on all the happier, because there is a warm charitable feeling in a man's soul towards his employers, or employes, or acquaintances. We are all so busy, we are apt to forget to be considerate, forgiving, and kind. It is well to let the brain rest, and allow the heart to rule sometimes, or men may lose the faculty of loving and being charitable.

Centuries of experience have proved that it is well also to make a clearing house of the season, to square accounts by wiping off all the old grudges and settling old quarrels, and listen once again to the message of peace and good will. Anger and malice never gave a man happiness; nothing but forgiveness and charity can do that.

Good Jokes

BRILLIANT IDEAS.

"I've found a new use for those gramophone records you bought last week, and which cost such a lot of money," said his wife.

"How clever you are!" he exclaimed. "What is your latest?"

"In the first place," she began, "I hold a skein of wool over my arms, tie one end of the wool on a reel, place the reel on the gramophone pin, and then start the machine. The wool is wound up in no time!"

The fond husband gaped in admiration.

"But that is not all," she continued "Tomorrow I shall place a little bath brick on one end of the records, start the gramophone, and so clean the knives."

He is still gaping.

Later Information.

The little maid stood in the doorway, one hand on the handle. For a moment she gazed thoughtfully at her father, who was preparing to take his afternoon siesta.

"Papa," she said, "do you know what I'm going to give you for your birthday when it comes?"

"No, dear," answered her fond father. "But tell me."

"A nice new china shaving mug, with gold flowers on it all around," said the little maid.

"But, my dear," explained her parent, "papa has a nice one, just like that, already."

"No, he hasn't," his little daughter answered thoughtfully. "'cos—'cos—I've just dropped it."

Distinction.

"Ah, but you," she said, "have never done anything to attract public attention. The man I marry must have done something worth while—he must, at least, be a man whose picture has been published in the papers."

"Oh, if that's why you have refused me, it's all right. You may as well change your mind and say yes. I've had my picture in the paper, all right."

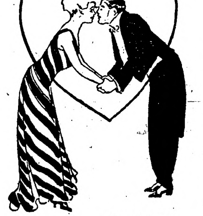
"When?"

"It was last fall."

"I never heard of it. What had you done?"

"I stood near a ball player who was receiving an automobile as a prize for being the best base runner."

HEART TO HEART ADVICE.



Evelyn—I would leave my happy home for you.

George—That's all very good, my precious; but don't burn the bridges behind you.

All Over Now.

In 's aeroplane
He 'gan to glide;
But ne'er again—
That's how he died.

Unconventionalities.

"I don't mind your talking to me, Goovius, but I wish you wouldn't breathe in my face."

"No, Chiggers, I can't give you a letter of recommendation; I know too much about you."

"Oblige me by talking about the weather, Jack; mamma is listening at the keyhole."

"I've just been trying to think, Doctor Fourthly, where I first read that sermon you preached last Sunday."

"They tell me, sir, that any scrub lawyer can get a divorce for a man. That's why I have come to you."

"I don't know who you are, mister, but I know what you are; you ought to travel in a hog train."

Thought It was Stone.

"Professor Blinker is getting more absent minded every day."

"What's his latest break?"

"Why, his oldest daughter is just out of cooking school, you know, and he's been showing his class a cruller she made. He told them it was proof of the fact that the men of stone age played the game of ring toss."

Abhorrent.

The winged horses had just alighted from a long flight.

"Now," he said. "I suppose I'll have to listen to a lot of daffydilly horse fly jokes."

The idea being so abhorrent, he snorted violently, spread his wings and soared away to the Elysian fields.

Awful Moment.

"That man-eating lion glared at you just before you shot him?"

"Intently," replied the scientist "He appeared as if he were looking me over for a pure food label."

GETTING EVEN.

Able Seaman Smith is a barber, and when not engaged about his duties aboard does a brisk trade in shaves.

One night, whilst busy with the razor and brush, Gunner Jones said to him:

"Why is a barber a very mean man, Smithy?"

"Dunno," snapped Smith.

"Because," explained Jones, "when he's not scraping he's sponging."

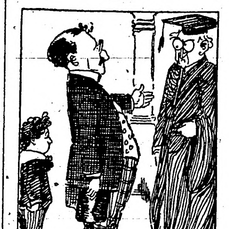
That raised a laugh at Smith's expense; but later, when he was trimming Jones' hair, he got his own back. The conversation had turned on Saturday to Monday leave.

"Jones," said Smith, "why is your head like a Saturday to Monday?"

"Give um up," gurgled Jones.

"Because," said Smithy, "it's your weak end."

NOT PARTICULAR.



Mr. Eisenstein—I vant my boy to learn some odder languages besides der English.

The Professor—All right; which do you prefer, Spanish, Italian, Russian or French?

Mr. Eisenstein—Vich ist der cheapest?

Tranquility.

The swimming-hole's deserted now—
We do not weep for that;
And since wee Willie's gone to school,
We have a quieter flat.

Side Lights on History.

Copernicus had proclaimed his discovery that the sun stood still and the earth moved around it.

"This doesn't necessarily prove that General Joshua was a faker," he said, "but he had to accommodate himself to the popular understanding. It was a much easier task for him to stop the earth than it would have been to stop the sun."

Ah, yes; Copernicus was a great man. His theory of the universe persisted for more than 300 years. Then came the Rev. John Jasper and smashed it into smithereens.

Willing to Lend.

"Grimesby is about the tightest thing in town."

"Penurious proposition, eh?"

"Penurious is no name for it. Know what he did?"

"Search me."

"When the hospital committee went to him for help he said: "No, I will not give any aid, but I will be glad to lend a little assistance."

An Artistic Advantage.

"Would you give an actress an engagement simply because she had a lot of diamonds?"

"I should say so," replied Mr. Stermington Barnes. "It would be a great thing to have all that collateral associated with the show in case of emergency."

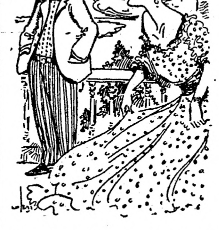
Papa's Prayer.

The Garsides returned one day last week. Next morning the little daughter of the family announced: "I heard papa say his prayers last night."

"What did he say, dear?"

"He said: "Thank God for this bed."

BAH! BAH! BLACK SHEEP.



The Wife (at the summer hotel)—I saw you flirting on the porch.

The Husband—Bah!

The Wife—You needn't act so sheepish about it.

Tough Luck.

Success on him
Refused to wait;
His only fault
Was sleeping late.

The Emperor's Double

NARRATIVE OF CAPTAIN ADAMS

"Detective-Diplomat"

By H. M. EGBERT

(Copyright, by W. G. Chapman.)

WHEN I arrived at Buckingham palace, by reason of a special summons from King Edward, I found him pacing the floor of his study in a high state of excitement. In his hand he held a letter. When I entered he came up to me at once, with the appearance of a man who seeks some consolation after having gone through an intolerable strain.

"Captain Adams," he said, plunging at once into the business on hand, as was his habit, "I am in a most unfortunate dilemma, and there is immediate need of an envoy who possesses courage and discretion in the highest degree. In view of your successful expedition to Berlin recently I am confident that you can solve this difficult problem."

I bowed my acknowledgments and waited for information. At that moment, however, his majesty's secretary, Lord (then Sir Francis) Knowles came quickly in from an ante-room.

"The ambassador is here, sir," he said.

"Bring him in at once, Knowles," said the king. "No formalities." A moment later Lord Walter Eaton strode into his majesty's presence. I recognized him at once as our envoy at Vienna, who had succeeded to an unexpected extent in winning the confidence of Austria and improving relations between that country and Britain.

"Lord Walter Eaton, this is Captain Adams, of whom I spoke to you," said his majesty. "Perhaps you had better tell him why he is to go to Vienna."

"Extraordinary events have been occurring at the Viennese court," began the ambassador. "They were the cause of my journey home."

"Tell Adams what the emperor called you," interpolated his majesty, with a momentary flicker of amusement.

"A scur old horse," said Lord Walter Eaton grimly. "He addressed that remark to me, apropos of nothing in particular, at the last levee. His behavior has, in short, been so peculiar as to give rise to suspicions concerning his sanity. For one thing, he seems to have forgotten entirely the values of the respective orders of nobility, and behaves to each person whom he addresses with the most offensive familiarity."

"Never mind those details at present," said the king. "Captain Adams, I had been receiving confidential reports concerning the mental condition of the Austrian emperor from many sources for some days when, early this morning, I received this letter, which is indubitably in his writing. Read it."

I took it. It was a hurried scrawl, imploring King Edward to intervene to protect the writer, who had been dispossessed of his throne by an impostor resembling him, and imprisoned in the fortress of Vienna. The name signed was that of Francis Joseph.

"I don't know what to make of it," muttered the king, beginning to pace the floor again. "There appear to be only two possible solutions. One, the less likely, is that the emperor has actually been dispossessed of his throne by an impostor; the other, that this letter is merely an additional proof of his insanity. And I don't know how to find out which is correct."

"I can supply the solution, sir," I replied.

"How is that?" the king exclaimed.

"By starting immediately to find out."

"Yes," replied his majesty, "I think that will be best. I will write you a letter to Count Lichtenstein, the emperor's chancellor, insisting that you be given an immediate interview. You had better acquaint yourself with as many details as possible concerning the onset of this delusion—if indeed it be one. But if the letter is genuine, remember, I rely upon you to effect the emperor's release. Use any means, so long as you do not inculpate the British government."

I bowed and took my leave. Hurrying back to my lodgings in Half Moon street, Piccadilly, I ordered Talbot, my soldier servant, to pack my grip.

"Where are you h'off to this time, if I might h'arsk, sir?" questioned my faithful attendant.

"Vienna, Talbot," I replied shortly.

"W'ich is the capital of H'austria, sir, isn't it?" Talbot put in. "Won't you tyke me along to protect you, sir? Them H'austrians is a tricky lot, as I've been given to h'understand."

For a moment I was almost tempted to accede to the fellow's request. But a moment's more reflection convinced me that, in view of the extreme delicacy of the business on hand, I must act alone. With some difficulty I succeeded in dispersing his hopes, and, grip in hand, I entered the night train for Harwich that evening en route for Vienna. The journey across the North sea was accomplished without unusual occurrences, and on the second day thereafter I was standing in the reception room of the Austrian emperor's palace, waiting for word from Count Lichtenstein, to whom I had sent in my card. Lord Walter Eaton had informed me that I could confidently rely upon his assistance, since he was most deeply interested in the emperor's condition.

I was shown upstairs into a magnificent salon, where I found the count waiting to receive me. He was standing stiffly at attention, his heels together in military style, and, when I entered, he saluted me. Then, seeing that I was in civilian clothes, he looked at me inquiringly.

I had already decided upon my course of action. I would tell Count Lichtenstein frankly that I represented his majesty of England, who had heard disquieting rumors concerning the emperor's health. Of course I had presented my special passport, vised by Lord Lansdowne, the head of the foreign office, which insured me a reception.

Hardly had I stated the purpose of my mission when I saw the count start and change color. He looked at me with a penetrating gaze.

"His majesty appears—in his—normal—physical health," he said with difficulty, gulping down the words.

"Mental, my dear count, mental," I rejoined. I saw the muscles of his face twitching and knew that I had him at the confessional. "By the way," I continued, approaching him, "where is his majesty?"

"I'm damned if I know," the count exploded. Then we looked at one another earnestly and both saw that the time had arrived for frankness.

"Is it the emperor or is it some impostor?" I asked.

"It is not the emperor," the count replied. "The resemblance is almost perfect. It would deceive anybody who had not known his majesty so intimately as I. Nevertheless, I know that it is not the emperor. But how can I denounce the man without laying myself open to imprisonment as a lunatic?"

"Tell me how and when the transformation occurred," I asked.

"It was about 18 days ago. I was the minister in attendance for the week at the royal palace. His majesty had gone to bed in his inner apartment, which overlooks the street. A guard was on duty in the outer rooms. I was passing through to inspect them before my departure when we heard the emperor's bell rung. His valet hurried in, came out, and announced that his majesty desired to see me. When I entered I found him in his pajamas, sitting up in bed. 'Count Lichtenstein, you have been in my service for many years, have you not?' he said. I bowed. 'And you would do any favor for me,' 'I would serve your majesty in any way possible,' I answered. 'Then,' he replied, 'be so good as to stand on your head, my dear count, to relieve my ennui.'"

"What did you do?" I queried.

"I stood on my head," replied the count, a slow blush creeping up beneath his bearded cheek. "And then I perceived that this was not my emperor. And ever since I have lived in an agony of doubts, with no one to whom to confide my suspicions."

"What of the prisoner in the fortress?" I asked.

Count Lichtenstein choked. "You have heard?" he cried.

I nodded, waiting. Suddenly Count Lichtenstein grasped me by the arm wildly.

"This man—this false emperor—ordered him to be placed in a mask and taken to the Turkish border fortress of Chodovay," he said. "He thinks his order has been obeyed. But I have managed that he shall remain in the prison here. The chief of police is of my own following. But I have not dared to see this man—this so-called lunatic—for I know it is my emperor."

He collapsed into a chair, painfully agitated. It was with some difficulty that I brought him to a more reasonable view of affairs, for he talked of suicide and of having betrayed the honor and safety of his ruler. Finally I induced him to secure me a presentation to the pseudo-emperor at the levee on the following day.

I had taken up my residence in a little, unostentatious house in a respectable, but not fashionable, quarter. On the following afternoon, arraying myself in court dress, I summoned a carriage and had myself conveyed to the palace, where I found myself in the midst of a throng of notables, all pressing toward the throne room. At the door I was jammed in the mob and held immobile for several moments, during which I witnessed a remarkable spectacle.

Before me, not 12 feet away, stood the impostor upon a crimson carpet under a canopy, surrounded by his staff, all a-glitter with colors and orders. A gentleman in plain black had just bowed to him and turned to pass on, but the emperor (as I must call him) detained him. I had no difficulty in recognizing the features of Mr. Timothy Purroy, the American ambassador.

"One minute, Mr Purroy," cried the emperor, in fluent English. "I hear there's a mad Yankee in the hands of the police who thinks he's the emperor of Austria. What?"

"I have heard the report, your majesty," answered the American ambassador with dignity.

"Well, then, what are you staring at, pinhead?" the emperor cried. "Go about your business."

I held my breath, wondering what Purroy would do. If he had boxed the emperor's ears in the midst of his entourage, I should not have been surprised. But he only looked him steadily in the face until the emperor lost countenance and turned away fretfully. Then Mr. Purroy backed out, bowing, past where I stood, and I heard him mutter:

"If that lunatic weren't emperor of Austria I'd swear he was a born and bred Vermonter."

And suddenly I was struck motionless by a thought that, having gathered force in my mind little by little, now burst upon me with overwhelming assurance. This man, this so-called emperor, was indeed a Yankee—none other, in fact, than the notorious Peter Rowlatt. I had met him in Washington five years previously, and his resemblance to the Austrian emperor had even then been a standing joke among the members of the European embassies. Educated at Heidelberg, possessed of ample means but always more or less unbalanced, he had been by turns vegetarian, temperance advocate, Mormon missionary, and Spiritualist. He had come to Washington, as I recollected, to interest the president in a scheme for universal disarmament.

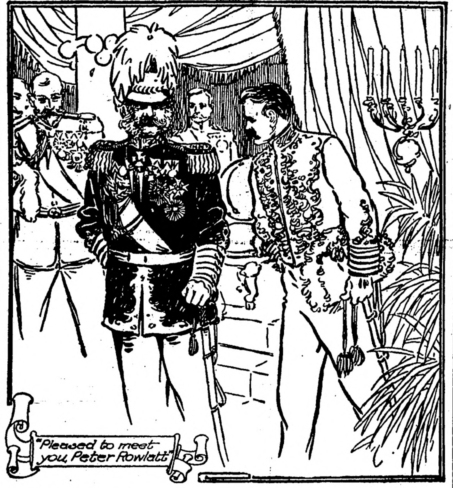
I was thrust forward among the crowd and presently found myself making my bow to the emperor. As I did so, I said, softly:

"Pleased to meet you, Peter Rowlatt."

He heard and turned to his adjutant. I saw him whisper to him, and then, just as I had bowed myself to the door, an aide came up to me.

"His majesty desires to see you after the presentations," he said.

I saw envious glances cast upon me and could not help laughing. The idea of all these staid and solemn dignitaries bowing and scraping before this audacious Yankee impostor was too much for my gravity. A few moments later the emperor called out in German, in a loud voice:



"Pleased to meet you, Peter Rowlatt"

"Put this scum out of my stables!"

A kind of gasp went up. All swung their eyes upon him, but the emperor had withdrawn to an inner apartment, leaving the mob to disperse as best it might. Presently the aide came up to me and led me to the emperor, who dismissed him. We were alone. The emperor took off his plumed hat and kicked it across the room.

"Say, who the devil are you?" he began abruptly.

"Rowlatt," I replied, without answering the question, "what in thunder induced you to play this game?" I could not but feel something of admiration at the man's audacity.

"I wanted to punish the old fool," he answered disrespectfully. "I didn't mean to go as far as I did, but when I got in I found it such fun tickling 'em up that I couldn't stop. Does anyone else know me?" he continued, anxiously.

"Not at present, Rowlatt," I answered. "Unless the American ambassador's wise. Tell me how you did it?"

"Why, it's very simple. I wanted to interest the emperor in a plan I've got for simultaneously destroying the entire tobacco crop all through the world. I couldn't get him to make a date. Well, sir, no true Vermonter's going to stand for that. Quite by chance I found out that the old boy's bedroom overlooks the street and that the sentry paces outside the wall of the grounds instead of within. Thus, if I could scramble over unobserved, I could gain the window by means of the waterspout and get into his bedroom. Once there, I'd sit on his chest and gag him until I'd unfolded my proposition. Well, sir, the plan succeeded beyond my wildest dreams. I jumped through the window, and had my hand over the old fellow's mouth before his eyes were open. 'Keep cool, emperor,' I said. 'I won't harm you. I've just got a dandy proposition to unfold, and hear me out before you renig on it.' Then I began to tell him. I may have gotten a little excited over it, for I saw a look of fear come into his eyes as I went on. 'Well, emp,' says I, 'if you won't help me in my crusade against this vice of smoking I'm going to be emp myself until I've stamped this foul blot off the face of the globe.' So I stuffed the pillow into his mouth and shaved him; then I undressed and put my clothes on him, while I put on the pajamas. Finally, with my pistol at his head, I forced him to climb down the water pipe and over the wall and left him lying in the street for the sentry to find him. I knew he wouldn't be recognized without the whiskers."

"And he was arrested," I asked.

"Yep. The police found my passport in his pocket and thought he was me. I had to send him to Chodovay. I think some people suspect. I've half a mind to chop off the block of my chief of police in a day or so, but really I'm so engrossed in my great plan that I haven't had time to attend to it. I'm going to make war on Turkey first, and compel them to stop smoking. Then I'll send a fleet to Havana, to burn the cigar factories. After that I don't know what steps I'll take exactly.

"The fact, is, Mr. What's-your-name," he added confidentially, "I want to get out of this, but I don't know how to begin. And I've another scheme on hand for growing giant oranges above the frost limit and thus supplying the world with an inexhaustible amount of citric acid. And I want to get out of this and have my old job back."

"Give me an order to the custody of the emperor and I can arrange for the transfer," I said.

"No, no," replied Rowlatt, looking at me with the cunning of a madman. "You'd get me in your power and chop my block off."

"I guarantee your liberty," I answered.

"I'll think it over," he answered irresolutely. "What's your name? Adams? Captain Adams? Say, come round to the palace tomorrow morning at ten and we'll talk business."

And, picking up his hat, he clapped it on his head and pressed a small hand bell. Immediately the aide appeared.

"Take Captain Adams to the front door, you chunk of ham," he shouted, winking at me.

The aide saluted and, scarlet in the face, conducted me with much dignity to the palace gates, leaving me to return home, marveling how court tradition and the habit of obedience could maintain the prestige and authority of this undoubted lunatic, while the real emperor lay in prison. That evening I called upon Count Lichtenstein and told him what had occurred.

"The difficulty," he said thoughtfully, when I had concluded, "is to get the transfer made without scandal. You have no idea of the almost incredible difficulties of the task. The simplicity of the scheme, born in the brain of this lunatic and carried out as none but an insane man could have executed it, makes it unbelievable. It would be impossible to tell anybody that this Peter Rowlatt is not really the emperor. They would simply not be able to credit it. He might play his part for years, unless his insanity became too pronounced, and even then, though a regency were proclaimed, his identity would never be under suspicion. What we have to do is to restore the emperor to his rightful place and hustle this Rowlatt out of the country."

"Perhaps we shall be able to induce him to assent to our plans tomorrow," I returned.

I made an appointment to see him immediately before my interview with Rowlatt, and withdrew, first leaving my address with him in case any emergency requiring my presence should arise. I went home to my lodgings, stopping on the way at a hairdresser's to make a purchase of a certain article of which I surmised need might conceivably arise. After a light supper I went to bed.

I was aroused by a frantic hammering at the door. I tumbled out of bed and unbarred it, while my sleepy landlord revolver in hand, stood trembling behind me, with the evident intention of using me as a rampart for his target practise. Three men stood upon the threshold. The foremost one was Count Lichtenstein himself. The second I did not know; but in the third I recognized, in spite of the shaven face, no less a person than the emperor—the real emperor himself.

Dismissing my landlord, whose fear was now changed into curses and grumblings, only quieted by a gold piece from the count's pocket, I led the visitors into my room.

"Dress yourself instantly," said the count. "There is no moment to lose. This is Herr Obaldstein von Stuerm, chief of police of the city of Vienna. Your majesty," he continued, bowing before the third, "permit me to present to you Captain Adams, of his Britannic majesty's service and a devoted servitor of yours."

I think we were all too ashamed to look into the placid face of the old emperor. He had seen so many troublous events in his long reign—the loss of territory, the tragic deaths of his son and the empress, that it did seem inhuman that he should be made the sport of this Yankee adventurer.

While I was dressing Count Lichtenstein explained the situation to me.

"Peter Rowlatt has changed his mind," he said. "His madness has evidently taken a new form. Hardly had you left when he summoned me to his presence and, not knowing that I was acquainted with you, issued instructions for your instant arrest. When I explained that as an envoy of his majesty you were immune against arrest, he instructed me to have you arrested in secrecy and promptly assassinated in such a manner that your disappearance might forever remain a mystery. Then it was that I resolved to acquaint Herr Obaldstein von Stuerm with all the facts in the case. I found that he had already come to the conclusion that his prisoner was none other than his majesty himself, and had been detained from acting upon this conviction only by the fear that none would believe the story.

"Now," he concluded, "we three must restore his majesty to his throne before the hired emissaries and assassins of Peter Rowlatt can make an end of us. For, rest assured, the impostor has decided to retain his position of kingship. He bitterly regrets his indiscretion with you this afternoon, and will leave no stone unturned to compass your death, or that of his majesty. How, then, can we restore him to his own before daybreak?"

"How did his majesty leave the palace?" I asked.

"Through the window," Lichtenstein returned.

"That way he must return," I rejoined. "That is the only way in which we can take Rowlatt at a disadvantage. By any other route we would have to face the entire guard. Can we elude the sentry outside the wall?"

"There is a secret door in the wall," his majesty interposed. "It was let in for safety during the Revolution of 1848, when the mobs threatened the palace, and I have the secret of its combination. Once within and we can scale the wall unobserved."

It was an arduous undertaking for an old gentleman of seventy years and more. And yet I knew that the emperor had been a soldier all his life, and that, in spite of his years, his muscles were like bars of steel. So I did not hesitate, and we four stepped out into the street. Hardly had we turned the corner, however, before I heard footsteps behind and, turning my head, saw two men burst from the shadows and leap toward us. I did not wait to question their purpose. My revolver was ready in my coat pocket, and I fired through the cloth from the hip. The first fell dead in his tracks; the second tumbled, a writhing heap, into the gutter.

"Come!" whispered the count, taking me by the arm.

We hastened away, as fast as we could convey the aged emperor, who was somewhat cramped from his confinement. When we had satisfied ourselves that we were not observed, we turned in toward the palace. The count pulled us into the shelter of a hallway as the sentry tramped past; then, creeping up softly in his wake, the emperor stooped and pressed his finger against a large, irregular stone in the wall. It turned on an axis, revealing a little wooden door. "Quick!" the emperor whispered, standing aside for us. But the count seized him and thrust him in unceremoniously.

The bedroom was on a level with the top of the wall, and thus sheltered from view from the sentry in the street below. I shinned up the water pipe and clung to the window sill. The room inside was dark. With infinite precaution I threw up the sash Count Lichtenstein was close behind me. Motioning to me to let him precede me, he sprang lightly into the room. I heard a muffled sound, the impact of one body upon another; then I heard the count whisper:

"Feel to your right for the electric light, Adams. I've got him"

I found and turned the button. Two feet away Rowlatt lay helpless upon the bed, and the count was stuffing the pillow into his mouth with one hand, while with the other he held a pistol to the man's forehead.

"Now let them come," he whispered. I beckoned, and a moment later Obaldstein and I had pulled the emperor in.

"Now, Peter Rowlatt," I said sternly, regarding the prostrate man, "you can have your choice. Will you be thrown out into the street, to leave the country within 12 hours, or will you take your chances at the hands of a court martial? For, let me tell you, when you and his majesty are side by side none will believe in you. Let him speak, count."

The count ungagged the Yankee, and he looked at me quizzically; then burst into long and silent laughter.

"You fool," he spluttered presently. "look at the emperor. Look at him. Why, didn't I shave off his whiskers? Who'd recognize him now?"

I pulled my purchase from my pocket. "Permit me, your majesty," I said, adjusting it upon his face. It was the false beard that I had bought that afternoon at the hairdresser's. With it, the emperor looked, as against Rowlatt, like a gold coin beside a counterfeit. The Yankee looked at him silently; then, with resignation, he began thrusting on his clothes.

"Anyway, it was fun while it lasted," he said sullenly.

FOR USES NOT DREAMED

Economical Daughter of Erin Finds Mistress' Hat Most Useful Gift.

It was on her way to the station that Mrs. Pumperton met the kindly-faced black-shawled daughter of Erin who came to her weekly as laundress. Having a few minutes to spare, she stopped to exchange a word or two, and was about to proceed, when she suddenly remembered something.

"By the way, did you like that hat I told Mary to give you, Mrs. Ryan? I mean, did you find any use for it? I wasn't quite sure whether—"

"A-ah, yes! Bless yer heart, mum, I put it to splindid use, ivry last bit of it."

"Did you give it to your eldest daughter? I thought perhaps she might wear it?"

"N-not exactly, mum. But I did a number o' things wid it. 'Twas the most useful thing ye could ha' give me, that it was. Let me see. Firrst I took the iligant buckle that held the feather on, an' gave it to Katty for makin' her belt look new. Thin I shtuck the feather in Norah's ould hat, an' made it look for all the wurrld as new an' stylish as ye like. A-ah, Norah was that plazed! Ye can't imagine it, mum. An' thin, there was—yes, there was full sivin yards o' foine ribbon. That made a Sunday necktie for Tim, brand new shtock collars for Katty an' Norah, a hair ribbon for little Bridgie, an' the lave of it I shwapped wid Mrs. Mullaney fer half a dozen frish eggs. An' Katty took the linin' an' sewed some lace on it, an' made it into a theayter cap she saw a picture of in the paper. Then I give the hat a good shcrubbin', an' put a rope handle on it, an' it makes the foinest market basket, mum! Ye've no idea at all! Yis, mum, that hat was just foine, an' it's iver so much obliged to ye I am for the shparin' of it!"

BUOY AFLOAT FOR SIX YEARS

Strange Story of the Seas and Their Mysterious Currents Comes From Scotland.

A strange story of the seas and their mysterious currents was told in a letter received by Stanley Dollar of this city from John Gear at Lerwick, Scotland, enclosing a clipping from the Shetland Times, published at Lerwick, Scotland, and dated September 30.

The item is to the effect that on September 13 of this year there was picked up on the beach at Cullivoe, Papastour, north of Scotland, a life buoy, tattered and stained, bearing the inscription: "Passed by J. Guthrie, San Francisco, Cal., June 1, 1905."

Captain Guthrie is an assistant local inspector of steamboats for his district.

The Stanley Dollar was wrecked off the west coast of Japan in August, 1905, and this buoy must have been floating in the ocean currents for six years, until it landed over in Scotland. Whether it went around the Horn or through the Northwest passage or down by Australasia and around the Cape of Good Hope into the Atlantic, is a mystery of seafaring men. The buoy holds the world's record for drifting the longest distance ever known. It was six years on the way from the Pacific ocean to the Atlantic, and must have been washed into many a strange port before it was picked up on the Scotch island.

Equally marvelous is the fact that it was not found before, but this may be explained by the theory that it floated in parts of the two oceans unfrequented by many vessels.—San Francisco Chronicle.

TRAPPED BY TAX COLLECTOR

Property Owner's Return Is Forced Up by Prospective Buyer's Inquiry.

A certain Kansas Citian who has the reputation of never—well, hardly ever—getting the worst of a business deal owns a piece of property near the new Union station site, where prices, as everyone knows, are like balloons—that is, you can tell they are high, but not just exactly how high.

The other day a stranger went into the office of the property owner. He was just looking for an investment. Certainly. Downtown property? Well, of course the best thing today was near the station site. Yes, that would do. A growing neighborhood. Just what he wanted.

"Now, it just happens," said the holder of the station land "I own a piece there myself. Let me show you on the plat book."

The stranger listened and observed and made notes; then—

"How much do you consider it's worth?" he asked.

"Not a dollar less than $400,000," said the proud owner. He might as well make it stiff. After all, what was the use of taking a chance? It was a sound investment at that price and perhaps—

"Thank you," said the stranger. "That is just what I wanted to know. I'm the county assessor."—Kansas City Star.

The Northern Light

CHAS. W. LATTA

Editor and Publisher.

Published every Friday at Holt, Marshall County, Minnesota.

Subscription Price: $1.00 per year, strictly in advance.

Entered as second-class matter Sept. 22, 1911, at the post office at Holt, Minnesota, under the act of March 8, 1879.

Be a booster—not a knocker.

This is the time when good wishes and good feelings are supposed to be found on every hand and expressed by word and deed. It is a beautiful old custom, this Christmas observation, and brings no evil in its train. With the rest of humanity we are willing to indulge this Christmas spirit and wish all our friends the best the season can bring. To our enemies we wish the season would bring a change of heart, as we can think of nothing that would tend more to increase their happiness and be a material help to both sides at the same time.

The Cass Lake Times says: Minnesota makes the best butter and raises the best wheat and the best potatoes. To make things complete we must raise the best governor, at least we can root out the bad ones and keep turning the soil until we match up with the wheat and potatoes.

President Taft is vindicated. The tariff commission has reported that the wool schedule is indefensible and the president urges congress to fix it. The probability of political effacement seems to have had a salutary effect on the chief executive, and we shall not be at all surprised to see pretty near all of the bills vetoed at the last session of congress passed up to the president again this session—and signed.

Notice of Contest.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
United States Land Office.
Crookston, Minnesota, December 6, 1911.

To Brodie Watson, of Grygla, Minnesota, Contestee:

You are hereby notified that Tidman L. Bjella, who gives Bemidji, Minnesota, as his post-office address, did on November 22, 1911, file in this office his duly corroborated application to contest and secure the cancellation of your Homestead, Entry No. Serial No. 05149, made March 22, 1910, for W½ SW¼, S½ NW¼, Section 8, Township 155 N., Range 39 W., 5th Prin. Meridian, and as grounds for his contest he alleges that said Brodie Watson has wholly abandoned said land for more than six months next prior to this contest and that he has never improved said land in any respect and never cultivated the same as required by law.

You are, therefore, further notified that the said allegations will be taken by this office as having been confessed to by you, and your said entry will be cancelled thereunder without your further right to be heard therein, either before this office or on appeal, if you fail to file in this office within twenty days after the FOURTH publication of this notice, as shown below, your answer, under oath, specifically meeting and responding to these allegations of contest, or if you fail within that time to file in this office due proof that you have served a copy of your answer on the said contestant either in person or by registered mail. If this service is made by the delivery of a copy of your answer to the contestant in person, proof of such service must be either the contestant's written acknowledgement of his receipt of the copy, showing the date of its receipt, or the affidavit of the person by whom the delivery was made stating when and where the copy was delivered; if made by registered mail, proof of such service must consist of the affidavit of the person by whom the copy was mailed stating when and the postoffice to which it was mailed, and this affidavit must be accompanied by the postmaster's receipt for the letter.

You should state in your answer the name of the post office to which you desire future notices to be sent to you.

JOHN PETTERSON, Receiver.

VAULE & MURPHY
Attorneys for Contestant.

Date of first publication, December 15, 1911.
Date of second publication, December 22, 1911.
Date of third publication, December 29, 1911.
Date of fourth publication, January 5, 1912.

Scholarship for Sale Cheap

We have for sale, cheap for cash, a scholarship good for three months tuition in Crookston College, and for any subject at any time. It is worth $30 but will be sold for considerably less as we need the cash.

Call or address; The Northern Light, Holt, Minn.

Enamelled kitchenware at Kolden's. Triple coated, white lined and the best bargains you ever knew, 10 and 69 cents only, while they last.

We want more subscribers and will take potatoes, chickens, or wood at current market prices on subscription. Of course we prefer the money, but if you haven't the cash bring on the produce. Dont be without your home paper anyway.

M. A. NELSON, M. D.
Physician and Surgeon
Office over Holt Merc. Co's store
HOLT, MINNESOTA.

Your Wife and Children

Are entitled to some Christmas Presents this Year.

In making a selection for your wife or daughter why not come and see our Big Line of ROCKERS and LADIES' DESKS? They make ideal Christmas Gifts and their Prices are Very Reasonable.

We carry a complete line of Musical Instruments and Supplies. Mail orders receive our prompt and careful attention.

TORRISON BROS.
THIEF RIVER FALLS, MINN.

THE DULUTH HERALD
BEATS THE CENSUS THREE TO ONE

During the past ten years the population of Duluth increased 48 per cent., St. Paul 32 per cent., and Minneapolis 49 per cent. In the Same Period the Circulation of The Duluth Herald

INCREASED 150 PER CENT.

This marvelous expansion—so much greater than that of the surrounding territory—is due solely to the merits of The Herald. The Herald has never used any kind of premium, contest, or price reduction to gain subscribers but prints each day the very best NEWSPAPER in the Northwest. Its editorial page is thoroughly independent and its news columns cover every feature of the world's daily history.

Send for sample copy and get The Herald habit.

THREE MONTHS FOR $1.00—Mailed Daily.

ADDRESS HERALD CIRCULATION DEPT., DULUTH, MINN.

John Bright.

The centenary of the birth of John Bright, the great English Quaker, orator and progressive statesman, was celebrated on Nov. 16. To Americans Mr. Bright is known chiefly because of his opposition to slavery and his espousal of the cause of the North during the civil war. By Englishmen he is remembered as one of the chief advocates of the repeal of the corn laws, of the extension of suffrage and the establishment of a national system of education. To the Irish he was a consistent and powerful friend in all their struggles, except the final one for home rule. By the Hindoos he is gratefully recalled for his fight to end the abuses of the East India company and to bring India under the direct control of the crown. To the world at large he stands as an advocate of peace, of the rights of workingmen and of humanitarian movements.

John Bright has been classed as the foremost orator among English statesmen of the nineteenth century. In his directness, his outspoken opposition to wrong and his moral and religious force he has been likened to one of the Hebrew prophets. His diction was well chosen and his voice full and musical, but perhaps his greatest power with an audience lay in his simplicity, honesty and earnestness. He was transparently sincere. Yet with all these gifts he never used them for self aggrandizement and never failed to use them in behalf of the poor and downtrodden. He employed short Anglo-Saxon words, humor and epigram, logic and facts. He fought always against the aristocracy and for the common people, yet he dared to go against public opinion if he thought it wrong, suffering obloquy to denounce the Crimean war and leaving the cabinet because of the bombardment of Alexandria.

He had little education, going into his father's business as a spinner at the age of fifteen. One of the most disinterested and unselfish acts of his life occurred in connection with our own war between the states. That struggle interfered with cotton manufacture, in which Mr. Bright was peculiarly interested. Yet he braved English public opinion to stand with the American Union, although to do so hurt his own business as a spinner.

John Bright took his religion into politics. One of his earliest fights was for temperance. With Richard Cobden he shared the credit of bringing free trade to England. Take him all in all, he was one of the purest types of statesmanship the world has seen.

J. A. EDGERTON.

What Is the Truth About Tripoli?

The Italians deny the stories of atrocities by their soldiers in and about Tripoli. At least a portion of the press has accepted the denial, but there is so much confusion in the news that the exact truth cannot be known for some time, if ever. For the sake of humanity and for the fair fame of Christendom it is to be hoped that the Italians can prove to the world that their soldiers have been slandered.

The probability is that they can prove this in the main. It now appears that the first treachery was shown by the Arabs, a thing not out of keeping with their reputation. That some indiscriminate slaughter followed by the Italians is no more than could have been expected. General Sherman's definition of war still holds good, and the twentieth century is certain to be shocked by even its mildest forms.

One good thing Italy has done in Tripoli was to stop the slave trade through the ports of that country. It will surprise most Americans to know that the barter and sale of human beings are still carried on in parts of the earth. Most of the bondmen are recruited from Africa, as of old. Italy is stopping this, so far as Tripoli is concerned, just as France has stopped it in and through Algeria and Tunis and is stopping it in Morocco, and Great Britain has stopped it in Egypt and elsewhere.

Italy is doing other good things, chief of which is to end Turkish misrule in northern Africa. Italy is the country of Cavour and Garibaldi. Frankly, we take those tales of atrocities in Tripoli not only with a grain but with a bushel of salt.

Some practical jokers in Jersey turned around the guideboards, thus causing several motorists to lose their way. There would be some point to the joke if these humorists were sent to jail for interfering with public property.

A Seattle man has paid $3,000 for a set of false teeth for a race horse. This will be fine for anybody who wants to find out the age of that particular horse.

The world is to last at least ten million years longer, so we are told by scientists. There may be a McNamara jury yet.

One man has been found who willingly gives his wife credit for making him what he is. He is a bankrupt.

Two Views of Immigration.

William Williams, commissioner of immigration at Ellis Island, believes there should be still further restriction of immigration. In his recent report he stated that out of 749,642 arrivals inspected at the port of New York during the past year 14,500 had been turned back. He admitted that there was a much larger minority of undesirables and recommended in effect that the law be so amended as to exclude at least a part of these.

Even under the present law he showed that it was impossible to keep out all at whom the statute was aimed because of lack of facilities. For example, in the case of feeble minded children it was impossible to detect the feeble minded among the very young without a more exhaustive examination than could now be given.

His general objection to many immigrants, however, was on the score of social and economic grounds. He charged that interested persons so clouded the issue on this point that those favoring a reasonably restrictive law were classed as exclusionists, and thus a false prejudice was created against them.

"The time has come when it is necessary to put aside false sentimentality in dealing with the question of immigration," he said, "and to give more consideration to its racial and economic aspects and in determining what additional immigrants we shall receive, to remember that our first duty is to our own country."

Judge Julian W. Mack of the federal court of commerce, in an address in New York, took issue with Commissioner Williams. He asserted that the two big streams now coming to America are the Russian Jews and the Italians, and that while both brought their dangers and their problems, they also brought an idealism and sturdy religious faith.

When closely examined there is not so much divergence between the views of the two men as at first appears, for Commissioner Williams only referred to an undesirable minority, and not to any race as a whole. That there should be more careful scrutiny of immigrants has become a crying national need. There should be, not exclusion, but intelligent discrimination and selection.

A member of the Austrian reichsrath called another a pickpocket. Sounds like the American congress.

Russia is sending Cossacks to Peking. Fortunately there are few Japanese in Peking.

Progress In Porto Rico.

According to the recently issued report of Governor George R. Colton of Porto Rico, American occupation is working a transformation in the island. During the past year the external commerce has increased $10,000,000, or 15 per cent, and is four times that of ten years ago. Eighty-eight per cent of this trade is with the United States. As a purchaser of American goods Porto Rico is exceeded by but twelve foreign countries.

The island bought our products to the amount of $34,671,058 last year and sold us her products to the amount of $34,765,409, there being but a trifle more than $100,000 difference between purchases and sales, the balance of trade being in favor of Porto Rico. With foreign nations the trade balance was still more in the island's favor, amounting to something more than $1,000,000.

The assessed value of the property of the island has increased more than forty millions in one year, or 83 per cent, and has nearly doubled in six years. The deposits in banks have gained 18 per cent during the year. The increase in insurance underwritings have been 37 per cent in fire insurance and 89 per cent in the amount of life insurance written. There have been twenty-seven new domestic and twenty-one new foreign corporations.

The amount of land under cultivation has been largely extended. Methods of farming have been improved. More significant still, the report states that the advance in industrial activity began in 1901, when the tariff barrier between the island and the United States was removed.

Both Porto Rico and Panama show that American enterprise can win even over a torrid climate.

A Philadelphia physician recently removed a diseased kidney from a patient and gave him another taken from a dead man. It is only a question of time when they will take the human body apart and put it together again like an old watch.

Dr. Cook claims he was received with kindness in Copenhagen. The press reports stated that he was rotten egged, hooted and jeered. Yet this may have seemed kindness compared to what he expected.

The flag of the new Chinese republic is red, white and blue and contains a star. Under that sort of banner the insurgents cannot lose.

V-I-V-O
The Best there is in Flour.

Our Elevator and Lumber Yard are always prepared to give the most satisfactory service.

Hanson & Barzen Milling Co.,
OSCAR HANSON, Agent, - - HOLT, MINN.

AXEL NELSON
General Blacksmith Work
HOLT, - - MINN.

All work done Right at Reasonable Prices.

The Evergreen Hotel
P. A. RESBERG, PROP.

Rates, $1.00 per day.

Serves the best Meal in Eastern Marhall Co. for twenty-five cents.

Livery and Feed Barn in connection.

Red Lake Falls Milling Co.
Makers of the Celebrated
Mascot Fl0ur
and bUYERS of all kinds of GRAIN.

Our Elevator will give you satisfaction.

OLE MATSON, Agent - - - Holt, Minn.

Bring us your Job Printing orders

Crookston College...

Is the Leading Business School in the Northwest.

OUR TEACHERS Are all College and University Graduates.

FINANCIAL STANDING It is backed by a capital of $50,000 which is a safe guarantee to its students that every promise will be fulfilled.

ACTUAL BUSINESS The only school in Northern Minnesota having an actual business department.

BOARD and ROOM Can be had in private families for $3 per week. Other school towns will charge from $4 to $6.

POSITIONS The demand upon us for office help is greater than we can supply.

Catalogue and further information given free by writing.

J. C. SATHRE, Crookston, Minn.

Local Items

The Local Market.

(Grain prices furnished by Hanson & Barzen Milling Co. at close of business every Thursday.)

Flax	$1.95
Wheat	.93
Barley	.68
Oats	.38
Rye	.77

Bring us the news.

When in town call at this office and let's get acquainted.

Tony Carlson will leave for Minneapolis tomorrow to spend Christmas with his folks.

The list of officers elected by the local camp of the Woodmen will be published next week.

Church services will be held at T. Dahl's place east of Mud Lake next Thursday morning at 11 o'clock.

Peter Sorenson was over from Strip Wednesday to purchase a lot of holiday supplies from Arvid Carlson.

Miss Edna Risberg came up from Thief River Falls to attend the basket party and dance Saturday night.

Rev. M. B. Ordahl will conduct services at his home south of Mud Lake on Sunday, the 24th, at 1:30 P. M. All are invited.

D. Payne left with his family on Wednesday for Nielsville to spend the Christmas vacation with Mrs. Payne's parents, Mr. and Mrs. L. S. Kolden.

Mr. and Mrs. Torger Noss left on Thursday for Minot, N. D., to visit a sister of Mrs. Ness who is confined to her bed as the result of starting a fire with kerosene a few days ago.

Monday being Christmas day there will be no cream received at the local creamery. Patrons are requested to bring in no cream on that day or the following Monday, New Year's day.

Christmas Candies—We carry a very complete line of finest candies for the holiday trade. In packages at prices from 5 cents to $10.00. Mail orders given special attention. J. A. Swore, Thief River Falls, Minn.

Rumor has it that Holt will have a wedding before the old year has passed away. The young people suspected are decidedly popular and are sure of being given a send-off that will linger in their memories for a long time.

Be a booster—not a knocker.

Mrs. R. L. Olson went to Thief River Falls yesterday.

E. M. Silbaugh made a business trip to Thief River Falls yesterday.

Miss Annie Steinhauer transacted business at Thief River Falls on Friday last.

John Lien is here from Fork, Minn., for a visit with his sister, Mrs C. H. Gunheim.

Special subscription offer from now until January 1st. Call at this office for particulars.

Christmas services Christmas morning in Lutheran Synod church at 10:45 o'clock. All welcome.

Miss Martha Kuehne came up from Crookston on Tuesday to spend Christmas with the home folks.

Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Silbaugh drove to Thief River Falls Tuesday on a combined business and pleasure trip.

Erick Knutson and Ed Ellingson were in from Randen Friday and Saturday last attending to business matters.

Mrs. Martin T. Strom and granddaughter Alpha went to Thief River Falls on Tuesday for a short visit with relatives.

Triple coated enamelled kitchen ware at only 10 cents per piece is a bargain that you never had before. S. S. Kolden & Co.

Christmas services in the German language will be held in the Holt church next Sunday at 10:30 A. M. by Rev. Selz, of Thief River Falls.

There will be children's meeting in the Holt church on Wednesday morning, the 27th inst, at 11 o'clock. All who intend to take part in the Christmas tree should attend this meeting.

Mrs. M. Green came up from Minneapolis on Saturday for a visit with her husband who has the contract for hauling the fuel supply for the big dredges of the Northwestern Drainage Co.

J. M. Jahr arrived with his family last week from Portland, N. D. to take up their residence on a claim in East Valley and Agder which Mr. Jahr successfully contested and made his filing on Tuesday.

Crookston College has placed all its graduates in positions. The demand for office help has been greater than we could supply. School is in session all year. You can begin at any time of year. Good board and furnished room, taken care of in private family, for $3 per week. Send for catalog. Address J. C. Sathre, Crookston, Minn.

Picketts Gave Good Show

Dave and Alice Pickett, known all over the northwest as the Old Reliable comedians, gave a very enjoyable entertainment at the Woodman hall last evening. The hall was well filled and every number on the program was most pleasing, and heartily applauded.

"Old Dave" has been playing all over this part of the country and has always been able to draw bigger audiences the oftener he comes back. He has a well established reputation as a lightning sketch artist and is hard to beat in imitating the Jew, Swede, Irish, Dutch and Italian dialects. Their dancing and clog waltz stunts are decidedly good, and altogether their entertainment was of a kind to drive away dull care. The Pickett show has often been called "a sure cure for the blues," and that description is most appropriate.

The Picketts will play at Middle River on Saturday evening and will furnish music for a big dance after the show. Their music is fine and a peculiar charm which only colored players can impart. Those who attend their show and dance at Middle River will enjoy the pleasure of dancing to real, high class southern music where it can very rarely be found.

Charlie Schwartz was up from his home in Excel yesterday to do some Christmas shopping and found time to make this office a social call.

George Walker was in from his home out near Rollis on Tuesday and favored this office with a call and the cash for a year's subscription.

Miss Nettie Batten arrived here on Saturday from Mayville, N. D., where she has been teaching school, and will remain for an extended visit with her relatives.

There will be a Christmas tree program in the Holt church next Thursday evening. The tree will be unloaded for the children at 7:30 and the program will commence at 8 o'clock. All welcome.

Notice for Bids

Sealed bids will be received by the undersigned up to January 15th, 1912, for furnishing 20 cords of green, and 15 cords of dry, poplar and tamarac wood to be delivered at the creamery in Holt.

The board reserves the right to reject any and all bids.

Farmers' Co-Operative Creamery Company.

J. A. Sorum, Secretary.

Notice for Bids

Sealed bids will be received by the undersigned up to January 15th, 1912, for the filling and packing the ice house at the Holt creamery with ice. All ice must be clean and free from sun eating.

The board reserves the right to reject any and all bids.

Farmers' Co-Operative Creamery Company.

J. A. Sorum, Secretary.

Tranquillity of Liszt.

Liszt was a sweet souled character. One day two of his friends, musicians, resolved to put the maestro into a passion. "Which one of his habits," they inquired, "would most seriously trouble him were he deprived of it?"

"Perhaps," was the answer, "he would suffer most if deprived of a well made bed."

The two confederates, with a louis, bought over a servant to their designs. She was not, it was agreed, to make his bed for that night.

Liszt slept badly and the next morning simply said, "You have forgotten to make my bed."

For two days following she neglected making the bed, and on the third day the maestro simply said:

"I see that you have decided not to make my bed. Well, let it alone. I have come to accustom myself to it."—Cri de Paris.

Artist and Counterfeiter.

There used to be an old German counterfeiter in this country who was a veritable wonder with the brush and pen. This man literally painted pictures of twenty dollar notes which were works of art. He used no tools except his pens and brushes, and it took him a week to do the portrait of a banknote. He figured that his handicap was worth about $3 a day and worked under the idea that the world owned him a fair living and should not object if his talent led him toward portrait painting, with twenty dollar bills for models. Even jail terms failed to impress him seriously with his wrongdoing. A collector of curios once offered $500 for one of his specimens of bill portraiture, and the value of some others was said to be even greater, so marvelous was the delicacy of his brush work.

Books and an Impudent Rascal.

Book buying has its joys, but there comes a time when "weeding out" has to be undertaken. The late Churton Collins crammed his house with books. Then one day he realized that some would have to go. A man from a bookshop was sent for to look at them, writes L. C. Collins in his memoir of his father. * * * The following colloquy ensued: 'Have you selected the ones you are prepared to offer a price for?' 'They're no good to me, guv'nor.' 'What, none of them?' 'No, not one.' After a pause somebody interposed, saying that there really was no room for the books and that the man had better have them for nothing. Thoroughly indignant, my father, however, at length consented. The man then remarked, 'That'll be half a crown.' 'What do you mean—what for?' exclaimed my father in a restrained tone of voice. 'For taking them away,' said the man. 'Leave the house, you impudent rascal!' at last roared the justly incensed professor. And so the books remained."—London Chronicle.

A Cunning Little Bird.

A naturalist had been searching for the eggs of the little dunlin in Siberia and came upon a nest. The bird quietly slipped off and began to walk around the man, now and then pecking on the ground, as if feeding, seldom going more than six feet from him and often approaching within eighteen inches. The tameness of the bird was almost ludicrous. She seemed so extremely tame that the man almost thought for the moment that he could catch her, and, getting on all fours, he crept quietly toward her. As soon as he began to move from the nest the bird's manner entirely changed. She shuffled along the ground as if lame. She dropped her wings, as if unable to fly, and occasionally rested on her breast with drooping wings, as if dying. Finally when she eluded him and darted into the undergrowth he found that he had lost the location of the nest.

Macaulay's Torrent of Talk.

"Macaulay improves! Macaulay improves!" Sydney Smith remarked one day. "I have observed in him of late flashes of—silence." The "sonorous vivacity" of this enormous talker nettled Smith, who found it impossible often to voice his own wit and wisdom. "I wish I could write poetry like you," he complained to a friend. "I would write an 'Inferno,' and I would put Macaulay among a number of disputants and gag him!"

Another contemporary described Macaulay as "slopping all over on every subject and standing in the slops."

D. B. Bakke, Pres. S. S. Kolden, Vice-pres.

HOLT STATE BANK

Incorporated 1910. Resources over $50,000

We have a limited amount of the five and ten Kroner Scandinavian money on hand special for this season of the year. We also issue foreign money orders on all parts of the world.

The past season has, no doubt, been a successful one for you and we cordially invite you to place your hard earned cash on deposit with this bank. By placing the money with us you have the right to draw it out at any time you may need it regardless whether left solely as a time deposit or subject to check; and, in case you have no immediate use for it, we will pay you 4 per cent interest on a time deposit left for a period of six months and 5 per cent for twelve months.

Think it over. Nothing to worry about. Your money earning money for you without any more exertion on your part than to step into the bank and draw your interest at every terminal period, whether six or twelve months.

B. L. BACKE, Cashier.

Genius at Table.

It would appear that the man of genius usually requires a large supply of substantial food. Intellectual work demands full nutrition to repair the waste of brain tissue. Scott was wont to attribute his extraordinary capacity for continuous work to his good digestion and the wholesome restraints of his appetite in his youth. "I have as keen an appetite now as any man," he said, "but I know when to stop."

Mirabeau is stated to have been an enormous feeder, eating as much at a meal as would suffice three ordinary men. Talleyrand was also a noted eater. Goethe and Napoleon ate large quantities of food, but cared little for the quality. Bismarck was noted for his appetite, which was insatiable, but his food was of the simplest.

Many stories are told of the gross delight in eating evinced by the two Dumases, father and son, one of which is that the younger, being overtaken by a storm, took refuge in a hotel near Paris. Twenty-four turkeys were hanging upon the spit.

"And all for a single traveler," exclaimed the host.

"C'est mon pere!" exclaimed Alexandre. He was right.

Friendly Warning.

Rural Justice—I'll have to fine ye $25 fer exceedin' th' speed limit. Motorist (wildly) — What! It's a condemned outrage! Why, I'll swear I wasn't going more than eight miles an hour. Rural Justice (solemnly)—You do an' it'll cost ye $50 more fer perjury, b'gosh, right now—Puck.

It Really Does.

"The rain falls alike on the just and the unjust."

"A good arrangement."

"Why so?"

"Seems to afford considerable satisfaction to both classes." — Chicago Journal.

Appropriate.

"When I was a tiny boy with ringlets," said the man with little hair, "they used to call me Archie."

"I suppose now they call you Archibald."

Love.

At twenty love is a rosy dream, at thirty it is a thrilling reality, at forty it is a calm contentment, and at fifty it is a reminiscence.

GREETINGS!

We desire to wish you all a very Merry Christmas and a Happy and Prosperous New Year.

To our many friends who have favored us with business during the past year we desire to extend our thanks and express our appreciation.

Those whose business acquaintance we have not yet made we desire to see in our store in the near future to get acquainted with us and be convinced that our goods are of the highest quality and right up-to-the minute at exceptionally low prices.

Yours for a Big Business,

HOLT MERCANTILE Co.,
"The Big New Store"

BIG REMOVAL SALE

Hardware and Furniture

One Week More

Ending Saturday, December 30.

We have decided to continue our Big Special sale for one more week as shown above.

Sweeping Reductions in Prices will be made on everything in the lines named. It will be a great Cash Sale and you Can't Afford to let it pass.

S. S. KOLDEN & Co.
HOLT, - - MINNESOTA

Defective Page

COSTS LESS THAN 55 CENTS A BUSHEL TO RAISE WHEAT IN CANADA.

A FREQUENT QUESTION ANSWERED.

Western Canada probably suffered less from weather conditions during the year of 1911 than did almost any other portion of the country. Seeding was most successful and the growing conditions up to July were never better. Crops of all kinds showed wonderful growth at that time and were universally good, but there was not the usually excellent ripening weather in August and the effects of this were felt. Many fields that late in July promised 40 and 50 bushels yield of wheat were reduced to 25 and 30 bushels, while some of course gave the full expectancy and others somewhat less. The quality was also lowered. In face of these conditions, it is found that during the months of September and October, the total amount of contract wheat marketed and inspected was about 20 million bushels, which realized a total of 18½ million dollars, the average price for this wheat being 97¾ cents; that below contract for the two months was a little over 15 million bushels, which at an average price of 89½ cents per bushel realized a little over eleven million dollars, or a grand total for all wheat of 35 million bushels, which realized a total of a little over thirty-one million dollars.

On the first of November, there was in the hands of the farmers of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta for sale and seed about 130 million bushels of wheat, from which fact some idea may be had of the value of the wheat crop of 1911.

A careful canvass made by the Winnipeg Free Press made of a number of men farming in a large way indicates that even with the extreme expense of harvesting the crop, which has been caused by the bad weather and difficulty in threshing, wheat has been produced and put on the market for less than 55 cts. a bushel. The average freight rate is not over 13 cts. per bushel. This would make the cost of production and freight 68 cts. and would leave the farmer an actual margin on his low-grade wheat of 17½ cts. and for his high-grade wheat of 19½ cts.; and though this is not as large a profit as the farmer has every right to expect, it is a profit not to be despised, and which should leave a very fair amount of money to his credit when all the expenses of the year have been paid, unless the value of low-grade wheat sinks very much below its present level.

Modern Methods?

Moliere had written many plays to ridicule doctors and medicine. Louis XIV heard that the author had, however, a doctor at his service since he became famous and well-to-do, so the King one day called upon Moliere and said to him:

"I have heard, Moliere, that you have a physician. What is he doing to you?"

"Sire," answered the author of the Malade Imaginaire, "we chat together, he writes prescriptions for me, I don't take them and I am cured!"—Life.

Awful.

"The cry of Potts when he found the state of his boot was harrowing."

"Why so?"

"Because it was the cry of a lost sole."

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets regulate and invigorate stomach, liver and bowels. Sugar-coated, tiny granules, easy to take. Do not gripe.

Pericles wore his hair pretty close to his eyes—but nobody ever called him a low-brow!

Fargo Directory

KODAKS and KODAK SUPPLIES
Write for catalogues and literature. We do developing and printing. Mail orders given prompt attention. FARGO DRUG CO., FARGO, N. D.

Dakota Business College
LARGEST and FINEST between CHICAGO AND THE COAST.
FARGO, NORTH DAKOTA

HIGHEST CASH PRICES
PAID FOR SWEET AND SOUR CREAM
Prompt payment, honest test, guaranteed return of cans. FARGO ICE CREAM & CIDER COMPANY. Largest creamery in the northwest.

WE MAKE RUGS
FROM YOUR OLD CARPETS
Write for information. Solicitors wanted.
FARGO CARPET & RUG CO., 103 8th St. So., Fargo

Fresh Flowers
Shotwell Floral Co.
Growers and shippers of cut flowers, plants, etc. Write for catalog. Funeral designs on short notice. Phone day or night. Fargo, N. D.

FARGO TANNERY
Receives hides and skins for tanning to harness leather, robes and coats. Robes lined, hides bought, leather and robes for sale. SEND FOR PRICE LIST.
Andrew Monson, Proprietor, Fargo Tannery
Fargo, North Dakota

MONUMENTS
500 in stock. Write for free catalog.
FARGO MARBLE & GRANITE WORKS, N. P. Ave., Fargo, N. D.

THE NELSON NATUROPATHIC INSTITUTE
NO. 1 NORTH BROADWAY, FARGO, N.D.
A strictly drugless institute, with the very best modern appliances for treating chronic diseases including paralysis and tuberculosis successfully. Consultation free. Write for particulars.

SERIAL STORY

No Man's Land

A ROMANCE

By Louis Joseph Vance

Illustrations by Ray Walters

(Copyright, 1910, by Louis Joseph Vance.)

11

SYNOPSIS.

Garrett Coast, a young man of New York City, meets Douglas Blackstock, who invites him to a card party. He accepts, although he dislikes Blackstock, the reason being that both are in love with Katherine Thaxter. Coast fails to convince her that Blackstock is unworthy of her friendship. At the party Coast meets two named Dundas and Van Tuyl. There is a quarrel, and Blackstock shoots Van Tuyl dead. Coast struggles to wrest the weapon from him, thus the police discover them. Coast is arrested for murder. He is convicted, but as he begins his sentence, Dundas names Blackstock as the murderer and kills himself. Coast becomes free, but Blackstock has married Katherine Thaxter and fled. Coast purchases a yacht and while sailing sees a man thrown from a distant boat. He rescues the fellow who is named Appleyard. They arrive at a lonely island, known as No Man's Land. Coast starts out to explore the place and comes upon some deserted buildings.

CHAPTER VII.—(Continued.)

His voice must have carried to the animal; he heard a whine, the quick padding of paws, and a huge Scotch collie bounded clumsily out of the mists, passed him within an arm's length, vanished and returned, whining and circling, nose to ground, as if confused and unable to locate him. He watched the animal, half-stupefied with wonder at its erratic actions; then unconsciously moved slightly. A pebble grated beneath his foot. The dog wheeled toward him instantly and paused at attention, a forepaw lifted, ears pricked forward, delicate nostrils expanding and contracting as he sniffed for the scent of man.

"Here, boy, here!" Coast called softly; and the next moment had the animal fawning upon him, alternately cringing at his feet and jumping up to muzzle his legs and hands, as if they were his own master's.

"Good boy! Steady now! So-o, so!" Puzzled by this demonstrative reception, Coast bent over the animal, trying to soothe it with voice and hand. It was plainly in a state of high excitement and evidently deeply grateful for his sympathetic toleration. He caught the finely modeled head between his palms, lifting up the muzzle. "Come, now," he said in a soothing tone, "let's have a look at you, old fellow. Good old boy—it's all right now—steady . . . Why, the poor brute's blind!"

For as its eyes rolled up he saw that they were blank and lightless, the irides masked with a film of white.

"Cataract," he said, releasing the dog. "That's why he couldn't see me. . . . I wondered . . . Hello, what now?"

Comforted and reassured, the dog had drawn away and resumed its mysterious circling, nosing the earth with anxious whinings. Abruptly is paused, tense, lithe frame quivering, then made off at a rapid trot in the direction whence it had appeared. A moment later the heartrending howl wailed out again.

Almost unwillingly Coast followed, nerving himself against the discovery he feared to make. . . .

Half a dozen steps, and he almost fell over the dog. He recoiled with a cry of horrified consternation.

"Appleyard! . . ."

But it was not Appleyard.

On raw, naked earth in the middle of the rude village street, a man lay prone with one forearm crooked beneath his head, his other limbs repulsively asprawl. His head, near which the collie squatted, lifting its mournful muzzle to the sky, was bare and thickly thatched with reddish hair.

The man had been murdered, foully slain by a means singular and unique outside the Orient. Deep buried in a crease round his throat Coast had seen a knotted loop of crimson silk whipcord—the bow-string of the East. Above it the face was a grinning mask of agony and fear, dark with congested blood; a face that, none the less—despite those frightfully shadowed, blurred and swollen features—had unquestionably once been comely in the youthful Irish way.

He rose and searched the ground for indications of a struggle. He found none. No confusion of footprints about the dead man showed on the damp earth. Apparently the victim had been taken from behind, without warning.

Irresolute, baffled, he lingered for another moment.

By his side the dog howled deep and long.

He turned, half-faint, and fled the place, bearing with him what he was not to forget for many a night: the picture of the blind dog mourning full-mouthed beside the crumpled, lifeless Thing that had been its master, there in that nameless spot of death and desolation.

The horror of it crawled like delirium in his brain.

"No Man's Land?" he muttered huskily . . . "Land of devils . . . !"

CHAPTER VIII.

"There's no sense in this—none whatever!" Coast spoke for the first time in twenty minutes or so. "Where in thunderation am I, anyhow?"

He stood in thought, pursing his underlip between a thumb and forefinger, wits alert to detect the clue to his bearings that was denied him, for all that the fog had thinned perceptibly within the last third of an hour. This much he knew and no more: that he was lost.

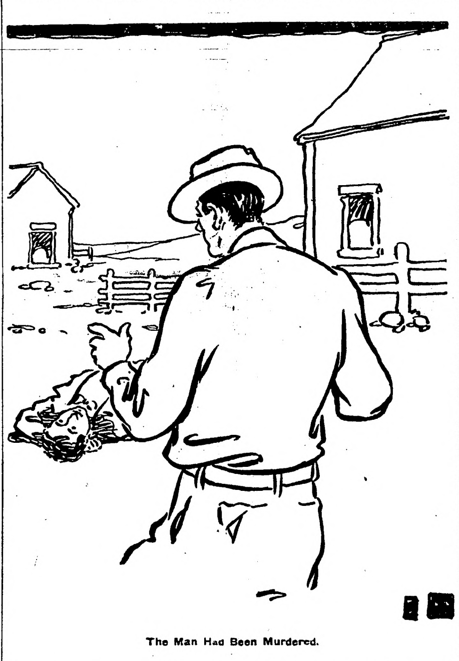
As from a great distance came the muffled mourning of the blind dog. Coast shivered. "I can't stand that," he said irritably, and plunged on in desperation.

Before him, presently, a wall started up out of the mist-bound earth, a low stone wall, grey where it was not green with lichen, and ran off inland, diverting the path to keep it company. Some distance farther on a second wall, counterpart of the other, intersected it at right angles. Here was a primitive stile. Coast climbed over and continued, following the thinly-marked, tortuous trail across a wide expanse of rolling, semi-sterile, treeless upland, thickly webbed with other footways.

Unexpectedly a rail fence sprang up across the path. Beyond it a company of indistinct blurs uncertainly shadowed forth what he took, and what the event proved, to be a farmhouse with outbuildings.

Encouraged, Coast climbed the fence and addressed himself to the farmhouse, coming inevitably first to its main entrance, the kitchen door; which stood hospitably wide, revealing an interior untenanted but warm with recent use.

Coast did not enter, but moved round toward the front of the house, his footsteps noiseless on the sod.



The Man Had Been Murdered.

By the corner he stopped as though he had run against an invisible barrier.

Ten feet distant a woman stood in the gateway of a fence of palings. Half turned away from him and more, so that only the rounded curves of cheek and chin were visible, she seemed absorbed in pensive meditation. One hand held the gate ajar, the other touched her cheek with slender fingers. She was dressed plainly to the verge of severity: a well-tailored tweed skirt ending a trifle above ankles protected by high tan boots; a blouse of heavy white linen with a deep sailor collar edged with blue—sleeves rolled well above the elbow, revealing arms browned, graceful and round; for her head no covering other than its own heavy coils of bronze shot with gold.

Coast was conscious of a tightening in his throat producing a feeling of suffocation, of a throbbing in his temples like the throbbing of a muffled drum. In a trice he had forgotten everything that had passed up to that moment; even the haunting thought of the murdered man dropped out of his consciousness; he was unable to entertain the faintest shadow of a thought that did not center about this woman, not a line of whose gracious pose, not a tress of whose matchless hair, not a tint of whose wonderful coloring but was more intimate to his memory than his own features.

She was—she had been—Katherine Thaxter.

CHAPTER IX.

His first translatable impulse was to turn and make good his escape before she became aware of him. But, as if the shock of recognition had palsied his will, he remained moveless. Contending emotions, resembling the flashes of heat and cold of an ague fit, alternately confounded and stung him to the point of madness. For the first time in days he had forced home to him all that he had sought to banish from his life; his memories, of his gnawing passion for the woman, of the black crime that had severed their lives. Seeing before him the one being in the world dear to him beyond expression, the one being irrevocably lost to him, he divined anew with bitter clarity the bridgeless gulf that yawned between them.

It was inevitable that the woman should in time become sensitive to his proximity. Though wholly unaware of his approach, though thoroughly assured that she was alone, a feeling of uneasiness affected her. She resisted it subconsciously and strove to continue the line of thought which had engaged her; but without effect. Then she turned her head, and threw a flickering glance toward the house; the shadow of his figure lay upon the boundary of her vision. She swung quickly to face him, suppressing a cry. Their eyes focussed to one another, his burning, her successively a-swim with astonishment, incredulity and consternation. For a long moment, during which neither moved or spoke, while she grew pale and yet more pale and he flushed darkly, their questing glances crossed and recrossed like swords at play.

From Katherine's eyes a woman's soul gazed forth, experienced, mature, inured to sadness, gently brave: where had been the eager, questioning, apprehensive, daring spirit of a girl. He who had suffered and lived could see that she in no less degree had lived and suffered since that evening when last he had seen her beneath the street lights, bending forward from the seat of her town-car to bid him farewell. Life is not kind: Life had not been kind to her. If he had endured, she likewise had endured, in another way, perhaps, but in no less measure. She, too, had seen the splendid tapestry of her illusions rent to tatters by Life's implacable hand.

For this one man alone was answerable—Blackstock.

Of a sudden, on the echo of that name in his brain, Coast's hatred of the man, the animosity that had hardened to inexorable enmity in the crucible of his passion, recurred with tenfold strength and nearly overmastered him. It is only the ruin their own deeds have wrought that men can view complacently.

He stepped forward a single pace, with an unconscious gesture as one who tears from his throat that which hinders free respiration. "Where," he demanded without preface or apology, in a voice so thick and hoarse he hardly knew it for his own—"Where is he?"

He saw her recoil from his advance, but whether from fear or repugnance he could not guess. When she replied it was with evident difficulty.

"He?"

Impatient, he waved aside what seemed a palpable quibble: she must know very well what he meant. "What are you doing here, in this place, alone? Why did he leave you here?" He moved nearer, his voice rising to vehemence. "Why are you here, Katherine?"

She drew back again, passing through the gateway, so that the fence stood between them. He comprehended dully that she did this through fear of him.

"I might ask as much of you."

"Of me?" Her quietly interjected remark threw him momentarily off his line of thought.

"Yes, of you," she replied quietly, quick to see and take advantage of his distraction. "How did you get here? And why?"

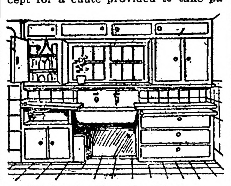
(TO BE CONTINUED.)

SOME KITCHEN HINTS

BEAUTY AND CONVENIENCE ARE HERE COMBINED.

Thoughtfulness in Laying Out Most Important Room in the House Will Be Well Repaid in Saving of Time and Labor.

When beauty and convenience can be combined, as they are in the present design for the end of a kitchen, we have the chief end of house-planning fulfilled, says a writer in the Kansas City Star. The space between the chimney, which stands in the corner, and is connected with the range a few feet away, and the opposite side of the room, is entirely filled with cupboards, framing in two rather high windows. At the top of the space are four doors, which open on shelves where the stores are kept which are little used; the extra soap, the extra dish towels; canned goods provided in case of emergency, and so on. Below these store shelves are two cupboards for spices, flavorings, sugar, tea and coffee. The board that forms the bottom shelf of these cupboards runs all along under the window, giving a place for a pot of bright flowers. This sill is kept sufficiently narrow so that it will not interfere with the use of the sink, drip-board and table space below it. The space under the sink is kept open, of course, except for a chute provided to take papers to the cellar. The chute might open from the floor, instead of projecting into the room, if preferred. Below the slanting drip-board at the left of the sink is an open space. Below this, a closet for pots and pans. The board at the right of the sink is level, for table use, and below it is a molding board that can be slipped back under the table top when not in use. Under this again are three drawers for towels, aprons, etc. If half the space proved sufficient for drawer room, the rest could be profitably used for a flour bin. It is to be noted that in this kitchen the sink is easily seven inches higher than the plumber wanted to put it, and the owner, who had to argue for an hour to gain her point, never ceases to rejoice that she insisted on her own way. The extra height saves hours of backache from bending while working in the kitchen.



Design for End of a Kitchen.

One provision that should always be made for a kitchen is a cold-pantry. This should be a small closet, as far away as possible from the stove and from the radiators, and opening toward the north, if possible. If it can be put in one side of a north entry that opens from a screened porch, so that it will be most useful. The refrigerator should be built in, if possible, and should have a door opening on this same screened porch, so that it may be filled from the outside, without tracking up the kitchen.

For the Dishwasher.

Besides having a pot chain and scraper you should have thick canvas cloths for the pots and pans and separate light cloths for the finer chinaware. A rubber sponge is just the thing for greasy dishes. One of these lasts a long time and gives you such satisfaction that you will never do without one once you try them. Cake tins, patty pans and all small tinware boiled in a dishpan in the water of which a handful of soda has been thrown will become fresh and clean and as bright as new.

Chicken Panada for Invalids.

Take the meat of a chicken which has been either roasted or boiled; free it from the skin and cut into very small pieces. Bruise these in a mortar with an equal quantity of stale bread, and a little salt, adding by degrees either the water in which the chicken was boiled or some beef-tea, until the whole forms a paste. Put it into a pan and boil for ten minutes, stirring all the time. Serve very hot.

Cranberry Jelly.

Wash and pick over one quart of cranberries; put into agate saucepan with one cup of cold water. As soon as they come to a boil mash and add two cups of sugar. Boil five minutes and strain through a wire strainer. Pour in a mold that has been rinsed with cold water and set in an ice-cold place until ready to serve.

Chantilly Potatoes.

Prepare some nicely seasoned, light mashed potatoes and mound on a platter. Beat one-half cup cream until stiff, add one-half cup soft cheese, grated and seasoned with salt and paprika. Pile lightly onto the potato and set on the top grate of the oven until the surface is nicely browned. Be sure that the oven is very hot.

Boil the Clothes Line.

Always boil a clothesline before using it. It makes it smoother and easier to handle.

A FEDERAL HEALTH BOARD.

It is gratifying to note that the bill for the creation of a federal health board will not be allowed to pass without a protest. Reports of organized resistance come from all parts of the country, and it may be that the opposition will soon be sufficiently solidified to defeat a project that promises infinite mischief for the community, and suffering and injustice for the individual.

The proposal is based upon those specious claims that are notoriously hard to controvert. If a federal health board were to confine its activities to the promulgation of salutary advice upon hygienic matters, to the abatement of quackery, and to the purity of drugs, it might be possible to say much in its favor, although it would still be difficult to say that such an organization is needed. But we know that it will attempt to do far more than this, seeing that its adherents have loudly proclaimed their intentions. Indeed, there is no secrecy about them. It is confidently expected that the board will consist of advocates of one school of medicine only and that the methods of that school will be not only recommended, but enforced upon the nation. Indeed a board that was in any way representative of the medical profession as a whole would be stultified by its own disagreements. Outside the domain of simple hygiene, for which we need no federal board at all, there is no single point of medical practice upon which allopaths, homeopaths, eclectics and osteopaths could be in unison. Any board that could be devised by the wit of man must be composed of representatives of one school only, and this means that all other schools are branded as of an inferior caste, even though nothing worse happened to them. And something worse would happen to them. If we are to establish a school of medicine, if we are to assert that the government of the United States favors one variety of practice more than others, why not establish also a sect of religion and bestow special authorities upon Baptists, Methodists and Episcopalians? An established school of religious conjecture seems somewhat less objectionable than an established sect of pseudo-scientific conjecture.

Those who suppose that a federal board of health would have no concern with individual rights are likely to find themselves undeceived. It is for the purpose of interfering with individual rights that the proposal has been made. We need no special knowledge of conditions to be aware that what may be called unorthodox methods of healing have made sad inroads into the orthodox. Homeopathy claims a vast number of adherents who are just as well educated and just as intelligent as those who adhere to the older school. Osteopathy, eclecticism, and half a dozen other methods of practice are certainly not losing ground. Beyond them is the vast and increasing army of those who may be classed under the general and vague name of mental healers. Those who are addicted to any of these forms of unorthodoxy need have no doubt as to the purposes of the federal health board. Those purposes are to make it difficult for them to follow their particular fads and fancies, to lead them, and if necessary to drive them, from medical unorthodoxy to medical orthodoxy.

Now the Argonaut holds no brief for any of the excesses and the superstitions connected with the care of the body in which this age is so rife. But it does feel concerned for the preservation of human liberty and for the rights of the individual to doctor himself in any way he pleases so long as he does not indubitably threaten the health of the community. He may take large doses or small ones, or no doses at all; he may be massaged, anointed with oil, or prayed over, just as the whim of the moment may dictate, and probably it makes no particle of difference which he does. But he has the right to choose, just as he chooses the color of his necktie or the character of his underclothing. It is not a matter in which any wise government will seek to interefere. This is precisely the liberty that the health board intends to take from him. Orthodox medicine, conscious of its losses, is trying to buttress itself by federal statute, to exalt allopathy to the status of a privileged caste, and to create an established school of medicine just as some other countries have allowed themselves to create an established school of religion. It is for the common sense of the community to rebuke that effort and to repel an unwarranted invasion upon elementary human rights.—San Francisco Argonaut.

Waiting.

"Have you named your baby yet?"

"No."

"He's getting pretty old to be without a name, isn't he?"

"Yes; but my wife wishes to call him Percival, and we're waiting to find out whether he's going to have a lisp."

Stung.

"You call this cake angel food," said the harsh husband.

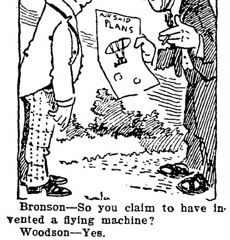
"Yes, dear," said the timid wife, "but if the diet doesn't seem exactly what you want, here are some devilled crabs."—Washington Star.

Sounds Plausible.

"Why do people speak of a 'cool' million?"

"I don't know, unless it's because a man with a million dollars can keep cool, no matter how high the cost of living soars."

ALMOST COMPLETE.



Bronson—So you claim to have invented a flying machine?

Woodson—Yes.

Bronson—Does it fly?

Woodson—Yes. All I've got to do now is to devise some means of finding out where it is going to light.

Men Who Live Long.

The longevity of artists is almost proverbial, and the case of Mr. Thomas Robert Macquoid, who at the age of ninety-one is still painting, is remarkable, but not unparalleled. T. S. Cooper, R. A., exhibited at the Royal academy for several years after passing his ninetieth birthday; John Massey Wright, a water color artist, born in 1773, was fully occupied and in active work up to the time of his death at the age of ninety-three. Most notable, however, was Titian, who, born in 1477, lived just one year short of a century, and continued to paint pictures until the very last.—London Chronicle.

Important to Mothers
Examine carefully every bottle of CASTORIA, a safe and sure remedy for infants and children, and see that it
Bears the Signature of Chas. H. Fletcher.
In Use For Over 30 Years.
Children Cry for Fletcher's Castoria

Both Sides.

She—Just look at the trouble money can get you into.

He—Yes, but look at the trouble it can get you out of.

Tightness across the chest means a cold on the lungs. That's the danger signal. Cure that cold with Hamlins Wizard Oil before it runs into Consumption or Pneumonia.

The easiest thing we do is to convince ourselves that we are overworked—but the family is skeptical!

DR. J. H. RINDLAUB (Specialist),
Eye, Ear, Nose and Throat
Fargo, N. D.

There is seldom any money in the helping hand a man is willing to lend.

The Best Farm and Home Locations

are in the Southeast United States along the lines of the Southern Railway, Mobile & Ohio R. R., and Georgia Southern & Florida Ry.

LAND $10 AN ACRE and up can be obtained in numerous desirable localities, supporting good churches, schools, stores, and improved highways.

ALFALFA GROWS abundantly in nearly all parts of the Southeast. Many acres are producing 4 to 6 tons per season, the crop selling locally at from $14 to $22 per ton.

LIVE STOCK AND DAIRYING pay big returns, and either is conducted at smaller cost than in any other section of the country. Luxuriant pasturage and forage crops the whole year 'round are the reasons for this. Beef and pork are produced at 3 to 4 cents per pound.

APPLES, VEGETABLES, FRUIT, AND COTTON are today some of the best paying crops of the South. The Virginia, Carolinas, Tennessee, and Georgia apples are fast coming into universal demand, and bringing prices that net growers large profits. All of these results are obtained on land costing less per acre than the returns of one six year old apple tree.

CLIMATE UNSURPASSED—Everyday in the year one can work in his fields. These long seasons allow raising two and three crops from the same soil each year.

HOMESEEKERS EXCURSIONS Twice a month. Write for rates and full particulars today.

SPECIAL LITERATURE regarding agricultural, mineral, and geographical conditions, including free subscription to the Southern Field, will be sent you. Address,

CHAS. S. CHASE, Western Agt.,
Room 208 Chemical Bld., St. Louis, Mo.

Make the Liver Do its Duty

Nine times in ten when the liver is right the stomach and bowels are right.

CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS
gently but firmly compel a lazy liver to do its duty.
Cures Constipation, Indigestion, Sick Headache, and Distress After Eating.
SMALL PILL, SMALL DOSE, SMALL PRICE.
Genuine must bear Signature
Brent Good

CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS.

TAKE A DOSE OF PISO'S
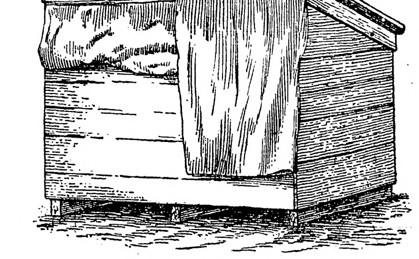
THE BEST MEDICINE
for COUGHS & COLDS

TREMENDOUS LOSS WROUGHT BY PESTIFEROUS LITTLE LOUSE

Many Farmers Do Not Realize That Lice Cause Much Damage to Swine—Parasites Worry Animals and Prevent Feeding and in Many Cases Cause Sores Retarding Natural Growth.



A Simple, but Satisfactory, Hoghouse.

(By R. G. WEATHERSTONE.)

Not long ago in looking over a bunch of hogs in western Illinois we observed that most of the animals were afflicted with little sores, red spots, on the thin places in their skins.

These eruptions were particularly noticeable back of the ear and on the flanks. The farmer complained that his hogs were not eating well and he could not understand what caused the sores to break out.

This bunch of hogs of all ages, from three-months-old pigs to three-year-old sows, ran on a pasture during the day but at night slept in houses which were used for the winter quarters.

I suggested that the trouble might be caused by lice, and the farmer caught two or three pigs and found them almost alive with parasites. He was astonished and admitted that he had never examined one of his animals before.

Many farmers do not realize that lice are a source of tremendous loss in the raising of hogs. They worry the animals and prevent their feeding well, and in many cases produce sores or eruptions which naturally retard growth.

It is not difficult to rid the pig of lice by dipping or spraying, but these remedies are of no use unless the pens and sleeping quarters are rid of the lice as well.

The best dip to use is some of the tar solutions, as they are harmless. We do not believe in kerosene emulsion because unless great care is taken to keep the solution very weak the animals will blister if allowed to run in the hot sun after being sprayed.

When a bunch of hogs is badly infested the animals should be dipped, although spraying may be used, provided the hogs are tied and thrown so that the spray may cover every portion of the body. It is no use to spray the upper part of a hog and leave the under side untouched, because every louse will multiply and soon spread all over the animal's body.

After the hogs have been dipped or sprayed they should be turned into a clean lot that has never been used for hogs and the old quarters should be abandoned, or if this is not practicable, every particle of bedding and litter in the yards must be raked, swept up and burned, and every foot of ground in the yards and the fences and sleeping quarters, as well, thoroughly sprayed with a strong disinfectant.

Kerosene emulsion, which is cheap, can be used in this way to advantage.

The hogs should not be returned to the old quarters for several weeks, and a second spraying or even a third before the hogs are turned in is advisable.

If the hogs are allowed to occupy the same pens and sleeping quarters year after year, which are not frequently cleaned and sprayed as above suggested, lice will surely get into the herd.

As this parasite multiplies with tremendous rapidity it only takes a short time to thoroughly infest hogs so that their thrift will be impeded.

The hog louse affects no other animal, but devotes his entire time and attention to the swine. While he is quite tenacious in the efforts to live, still a moderate application of dips and sprays and the burning of old bedding and whitewashing of the interiors of sleeping quarters will quickly put him out of business.

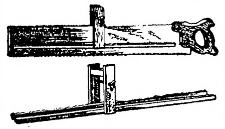
For Mixing Concrete.

For mixing concrete there has been invented a spade with long oval holes in the blade, through which the finer cement will flow and give the surface a finer finish.

SPECIAL DEVICE FOR DEPTH SAWS

Gage Shown in Illustration Will be Found Useful When Cutting to Any Uniform Depth.

It is frequently necessary to make a saw cut of uniform depth, and unless a special device is provided for the purpose the task is an extremely difficult one, says the Scientific American. The accompanying illustration shows a small gage which may be applied to any saw and may be adjusted thereon to prevent the saw from cutting deeper than desired. Two thin strips of wood of about the length of the saw blade are fastened to a pair of arms secured to a block at the upper end. A thumb screw below this block may be tightened to clamp the two strips against the blade of the saw. These strips may be secured at any desired point on the blade, and thus provide an easily adjustable depth gauge.



Depth Gage for Saws.

Horse Susceptible to Cold.

Horses are exceedingly susceptible to cold on the chest, and a horse will oftentimes contract pneumonia or other ills if left standing unprotected, which he would escape if provided with a thick apron of carpet or oilcloth suspended from the hames and reaching to the lowest portion of the chest. It is a little thing and inexpensive, but it is worth attending to.

Italian Cotton Imports.

Italy now imports more than $50,000,000 worth of cotton each year. Hence the government is carefully fostering all attempts to produce a native crop.

PROTEST MADE AGAINST HUNTER

No Reason Why Farmer Should be Expected to Tolerate Band of Trespassers Every Fall.

(By BESSIE L. PUTNAM.)

A few years ago, when the pioneers along the line commenced to object to the depredations of the hunter, they were charged by hunter and surrounding farmers alike as stingy and unaccommodating. But more and more is there a growing sentiment against having one's farm used as a hunting ground.

At this season it is very easy to start a fire, very difficult to check one that has once commenced. Even though the majority of hunters are careful never to toss aside a lighted cigar, never to strike matches in improper places, one never knows when the careless one may come along and do untold mischief.

There is the annoyance to stock. The old saying, "One might as well be killed as scared to death," is applicable with peculiar force. Sheep, worried by hunter and dogs, soon become so wild that not even the owner can approach them readily.

Cattle have been known to stampeed when a gun was fired in close proximity. Such treatment is ruinous to the dairyman, to say nothing of the frequent accidents, when a valuable animal is sacrificed, the hunter making off with his game and leaving the owner of the land that much poorer for his generosity.

Finally, the game is rapidly being exterminated, and much of it is really the farmer's friend. The quail, the clear note of which fills all bird lovers with joy, is one of the best insect and weed destroyers.

A flock of quail in the potato patch renders the use of Paris green unnecessary, and the detested cut-worm is their favorite dessert.

The farmer "feeds the world" but there is no reason why he should be expected to tolerate a band of trespassers every fall, endangering the life of his possessions. In many communities farmers are banding together against the hunting nuisance.

JUDGED BY THEIR CLOTHES

Smart Cigar Store Clerk Ready With Apology That by No Means Mended Situation.

Herman Fellner tells this story on himself, according to the New York correspondent of the Cincinnati Times Star. He was in Washington on business recently and met three or four friends on the street. After a moment's chat he beckoned them to come with him. "I'm off the stuff," said he, "but I want to buy you each a cigar."

They happened to be in front of a combination cigar and news stand at the moment. Led by Mr. Fellner, they all trooped in. The clerk hurried to the cigar case to wait upon them. Before Mr. Fellner could indicate his wishes the clerk had slapped a box on the glass case. "Here y' are," said he. "Best dime smoker in town."

Mr. Fellner is sort of fussy about his smokes. He looked at the cigar then shoved the box away. "Have you no other price?" he asked.

The clerk shoved the box in the case. "Sure thing," said he. "My mistake and your treat."

Having pulled off this time-worn witticism, he addressed Mr. Fellner confidentially. "Your clothes sort of fooled me," said he. "You fellers are a pretty well-dressed lot, you know." Then he put another box on the counter. "Here," said he, "is the best nickel smoker in the village."

ECZEMA DISFIGURED BABY

"Our little boy Gilbert was troubled with eczema when but a few weeks old. His little face was covered with sores even to back of his ears. The poor little fellow suffered very much. The sores began as pimples, his little face was disfigured very much. We hardly knew what he looked like. The face looked like raw meat. We tied little bags of cloth over his hands to prevent him from scratching. He was very restless at night, his little face itched.

"We consulted two doctors at Chicago, where we resided at that time. After trying all the medicine of the two doctors without any result, we read of the Cuticura Remedies, and at once bought Cuticura Soap and Ointment. Following the directions carefully and promptly we saw the result, and after four weeks, the dear child's face was as fine and clean as any little baby's face. Every one who saw Gilbert after using the Cuticura Remedies was surprised. He has a head of hair which is a pride for any boy of his age, three years. We can only recommend the Cuticura Remedies to everybody." (Signed) Mrs. H. Albrecht, Box 883, West Point, Neb., Oct. 26, 1910. Although Cuticura Soap and Ointment are sold by druggists and dealers everywhere, a sample of each, with 32-page book, will be mailed free on application to "Cuticura," Dept. 14 L, Boston.

WOULD HAVE TO WAIT.

Lady—How much for children's pictures?

Photographer—Three dollars a dozen.

Lady—Why, er, I've only got eight.

Meant to Be Real Bad.

Two little girls residing in East Eighty-sixth street, Virginia Clough and Clairie Feldman, who had long envied their boy playmates for their ability to enjoy such badness as is inherent in boys, resolved to be bad themselves. To this end they shut themselves up in Virginia's room and proceeded to be naughty. In fact, they practiced swearing just to see what would happen.

When they were quite sure that none would overhear them each produced a slip of paper containing the swear word and fired away.

"Bulldog!" said Virginia.

"Cigars!" was Clairie's reply.

But the ceiling didn't drop, and there was no earthquake to swallow them up, and the two resumed their play, a trifle disappointed at the tame termination of their badness.—Cleveland Leader.

What! Rub a Kiss Off!

At the tender age of three masculine conceit had gripped that small boy with a relentless clutch. He had kissed a little girl of three and she was rubbing her lips vigorously.

"You musn't do that again," said the boy's mother. "She doesn't like it. Just see how hard she is trying to rub your kiss off."

"Oh, no, she ain't," said the boy. "She is rubbing it in."

Pleasant, Refreshing, Beneficial, Gentle and Effective,

NOTE THE NAME

CALIFORNIA FIG SYRUP CO. in the Circle,
on every Package of the Genuine.

DO NOT LET ANY DEALER DECEIVE YOU

SYRUP OF FIGS AND ELIXIR OF SENNA HAS GIVEN UNIVERSAL SATISFACTION FOR MORE THAN THIRTY YEARS PAST, AND ITS WONDERFUL SUCCESS HAS LED UNSCRUPULOUS MANUFACTURERS OF IMITATIONS TO OFFER INFERIOR PREPARATIONS UNDER SIMILAR NAMES AND COSTING THE DEALER LESS; THEREFORE, WHEN BUYING,

Note the Full Name of the Company

CALIFORNIA FIG SYRUP CO.

PRINTED STRAIGHT ACROSS, NEAR THE BOTTOM, AND IN THE CIRCLE, NEAR THE TOP OF EVERY PACKAGE, OF THE GENUINE. REGULAR PRICE 50¢ PER BOTTLE; ONE SIZE ONLY, FOR SALE BY ALL LEADING DRUGGISTS.

MINIATURE PICTURE OF PACKAGE.

SYRUP OF FIGS AND ELIXIR OF SENNA IS THE MOST PLEASANT, WHOLESOME AND EFFECTIVE REMEDY FOR STOMACH TROUBLES, HEADACHES AND BILIOUSNESS DUE TO CONSTIPATION, AND TO GET ITS BENEFICIAL EFFECTS IT IS NECESSARY TO BUY THE ORIGINAL AND ONLY GENUINE, WHICH IS MANUFACTURED BY THE

CALIFORNIA FIG SYRUP CO.

PERFECTION SMOKELESS OIL HEATER

Always ready for use. Safest and most reliable.

The Perfection Smokeless Oil Heater is just like a portable fireplace.

It gives quick, glowing heat wherever, whenever, you want it.

A necessity in fall and spring, when it is not cold enough for the furnace. Invaluable as an auxiliary heater in midwinter.

Drums of blue enamel or plain steel, with nickel trimmings.

Ask your dealer to show you a Perfection Smokeless Oil Heater, or write to any agency of

Standard Oil Company
(Incorporated)

Baltimore French.

A Baltimore boniface tells of a waiter in that city who lately announced that he had taken up the study of the French language.

"Do you find it necessary here?" asked the patron to whom the man confided this bit of information.

"Not here, sir," explained the waiter; "but I've been offered a steady job in Paris at one of the hotels if I can learn French."

"But Paris is full of French waiters," said the patron. "I'm afraid you're being deceived."

"No, sir," said the man, with much earnestness and absolute simplicity. "The proposition's a straight one. The proprietor of the hotel says that the waiters he has can't understand French as we Baltimoreans speak it, and that's what he wants me for, you see." Lippincott's.

Great Scheme.

"Dear me," said Mrs. Housewife, with a deep sigh, "I can't manage to keep a cook a week."

"You should copy me," observed her friend. "Since my husband learned French I can keep one a year."

Mrs. Housewife looked surprised. "I don't see the connection," she said.

"It's simple enough. He now swears at her in French instead of English. It gives him a vent for his temper, some valuable practice and the cook thinks he's making love to her!"—Satire.

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup for Children teething, softens the gums, reduces inflammation, allays pain, cures wind colic, 25c a bottle.

There are few shade trees in the average man's field of labor.

Why Rent a Farm

and be compelled to pay to your landlord most of your hard-earned profits? Own your own farm. Secure a Free Homestead in Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta, or purchase land in one of these districts and bank a profit of $10.00 or $12.00 an acre every year.

160 ACRE FARMS IN WESTERN CANADA FREE

Land purchased 3 years ago at $10.00 an acre has recently changed hands at $25.00 an acre. The crops grown on these lands warrant the advance. You can by cattle raising, dairying, mixed farming and grain growing in the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

Become Rich

Free homestead and pre-emption areas, as well as land held by railway and land companies, will provide homes for millions. 38

Adaptable soil, healthful climate, splendid schools and churches, good railways.

For settlers' rates, descriptive literature "Last Best West," how to reach the country and other particulars, write to Sup't of Immigration, Ottawa, Canada, or to the Canadian Government Agent.

CHAS. PILLING
Clifford Block Grand Forks, N. Dak.
Please write to the agent nearest you

PARKER'S HAIR BALSAM
Cleanses and beautifies the hair.
Promotes a luxuriant growth.
Never Fails to Restore Gray Hair to its Youthful Color.
Cures scalp diseases & hair falling.
50c, and $1.00 at Druggists

If afflicted with sore eyes, use Thompson's Eye Water

PATENTS Watson E. Coleman, Washington, D.C. Books free. Highest references. Best results.

W. N. U., FARGO, NO. 51–1911.

Housework Drudgery

Housework is drudgery for the weak woman. She brushes, dusts and scrubs, or is on her feet all day attending to the many details of the household, her back aching, her temples throbbing, nerves quivering under the stress of pain, possibly dizzy feelings. Sometimes rest in bed is not refreshing, because the poor tired nerves do not permit of refreshing sleep. The real need of weak, nervous women is satisfied by Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription.

It Makes Weak Women Strong and Sick Women Well.

This "Prescription" removes the cause of women's weaknesses, heals inflammation and ulceration, and cures those weaknesses so peculiar to women. It tranquilizes the nerves, encourages the appetite and induces restful sleep.

Dr. Pierce is perfectly willing to let every one know what his "Favorite Prescription" contains, a complete list of ingredients on the bottle-wrapper. Do not let any unscrupulous druggist persuade you that his substitute of unknown composition is "just as good" in order that he may make a bigger profit. Just smile and shake your head!

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets cures liver ills.

Rayo Lamps and Lanterns

Scientifically constructed to give most light for the oil they burn.

Easy to light, clean and rewick.

In numerous finishes and styles, each the best of its kind.

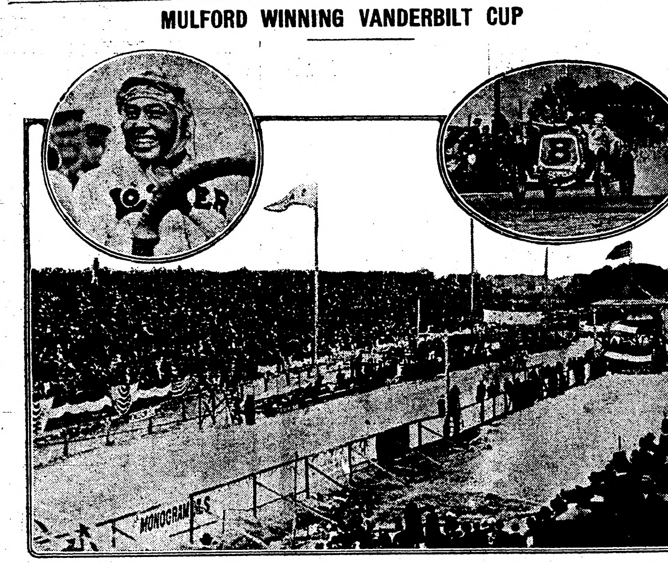
Ask your dealer to show you his line of Rayo Lamps and Lanterns, or write for illustrated booklets direct to any agency of the

Standard Oil Company
(Incorporated)

PUTNAM FADELESS DYES
Color more goods brighter and faster colors than [illegible] her dye. One 10c package colors all fibers. They dye in cold water better than any other dye. You can dye any garment without ripping apart. Wr[illegible] free booklet—How to Dye, Bleach and Mix Colors. MONROE DRUG COMPANY, Quincy, Ill.

Defective Page

MULFORD WINNING VANDERBILT CUP



OUR photograph shows Ralph K. Mulford winning the seventh Vanderbilt cup race at Savannah, Ga. He lowered all previous records for the race, covering 205.68 miles at an average speed of 74.9 miles an hour. At the top left is Mulford with his winning smile and at the right he is seen in the stretch.

FORM PRODIGY CLUB

Young Mental Wonders of Harvard the Founders.

Master Sidis, a Ten-Year-Old Expert on "Fourth Dimension," One of the Organizers of Society.

Cambridge, Mass.—A prodigy club has just been founded in Harvard, where there have been for the past year several boys who entered possessed of extraordinary mental attainments. The two best known of these are the sons of Prof. Weiner of Harvard and Dr. Boris Sidis, the eugenic expert of Boston. The sons of both these men were trained under specially prepared schedules of study, which together with a native ability has shown them to be extraordinary types of mental precocity.

Dr. Boris Sidis recently asserted that he could produce a prodigy from any American child of average intelligence under his system of development. His son William J. Sidis, when ten years old, passed into the Massachusetts Institute of Technology because the age limit at Harvard kept him from entering. When he was a freshman at Harvard young Sidis lectured on the mathematical problem of the fourth dimension. Among the learned professors in the special audience was the late William James.

Another prodigy is fourteen-year-old Norbert Weiner, who is in Harvard's graduate school, having taken his degree at Tufts college. Besides being a linguist he is a mothematician of ability.

The curious features that have been noticed about these boys is their eagerness to put aside their studies for simple games that delight young children.

As they have both been exploited by the magazines, where their pictures have appeared, these two boys a few days ago called on some others in Harvard, who are quite as gifted, and the following conversation, savoring of the nursery, took place.

"Have you been written up?" asked young Weiner of the newest genius.

"Not yet, but they came and took my picture the other day."

"Oh, that's nothing. I had a whole article about myself written by my father," said young Sidis.

"Let's found a Harvard Prodigy Club," suggested the boy bachelor of arts, Weiner.

And so the four child wonders have formed Harvard's first and only prodigy club. The latest addition to the club is Adolph A. Berle of the freshman class, son of the Rev. A. A. Berle of the Shawmut Congregational church in Boston.

RECOGNIZES HIS MOTHER

After Three Weeks of Coma Physicians Give Hope of Recovery of Injured Lad.

Yonkers.—Surprising the physicians of St. Joseph's Hospital and relatives who had given up hope of his life, Daniel Conley, twenty years old, is emerging from a state of coma in which he had lain in the hospital for three weeks. He fell from a roof on October 30 and his skull was fractured.

Following a delicate operation it was thought he would gain, but not until a day or two ago did he show any signs of improvement. His mother was called, and his face brightened as he recognized her and spoke to her. Then he relapsed into unconsciousness, but the physicians said they thought he would recover.

Boy Is Saved By Emperor

Richard Wahrman Is Being Sought For In United States to Tell Him Good News.

Vienna.—Efforts are being made in the United States on behalf of the Austrian court to discover the whereabouts of Richard Wahrmann, son of a Hungarian deputy, who left for America about six weeks ago. The Emperor Francis Joseph has consented to pay all the young man's debts, and the court officials want to inform him of the good news.

It is so rare an occurrence for a Hapsburg to hand out money for a commoner, and so unusual for Francis Joseph to bestir himself and his pursestrings in the cause of simple charity, some are thinking there must be some old love romance of other days concealed behind the Emperor's act. But there is no ground for believing that this is the secret of young Wahrmann being freed from his liabilities.

Maritz Wahrmann, the deputy, once ingratiated himself with the Emperor by some signal service, and this is a return Francis Joseph is making him. Some years ago young Wahrmann's brother Arnst committed suicide when pressed by his creditors and the father was so distressed by the fear that his remaining son might take his own life that friends appealed to the Emperor.

Francis Joseph made it a condition that Richard Wahrmann shall never return to Europe.

Girl Denies Six Murders.

Lafayette, La.—Arrested and accused of the murder of six persons, then confronted with her blood-soaked clothing that had been found near the crime scene, Clementine Barnabel, a negro girl, laughed at the police, refusing to admit any part in the murders.

Her brother and two other young negroes have been arrested with Clementine as material witnesses.

The family of Nerbert Randall, including six persons, were found in bed, their bodies horribly hacked. It is believed they were murdered as they slept.

Woman Swindles Rich Men

Wealthy French Colonial Officer Latest Victim.

Mme. Germot, a Parisian Beauty of American Parentage, Uses Clever Ruse to Defraud Her Admirers.

Paris.—After promising to marry three men in order to swindle them of presents of jewelry, Mme. Germot, who says she was born at Wilmington, Del., in the United States, but who ordinarily resides with her husband and three children in the Rue Basse-Dingre at Orleans, now occupies a prison cell in Paris.

Some weeks ago Mme. Germot, an elegantly dressed and refined looking woman of 25 years, became acquainted at Vichy with a young French colonial official, to whom she pretended that she belonged to one of the most aristocratic families of the Bourbonnais district of France.

An accomplice wrote her several letters, making constant references to her property and aristocratic relatives. Finally the official became engaged to Mme. Germot and presented her with a splendid ring, valued at 8,000 francs. The next day his fiancee left Vichy and disappeared. She went to another pleasure resort, however, and there pursued similar tactics with an officer from a garrison station in the vicinity of Paris. Having again received a handsome present of jewelry she decamped and reappeared in Paris.

Here she made the conquest of a wealthy Russian. As she was engaged with him in attentively examining a jeweler's window in the Rue de la Paix yesterday morning two men approached and politely requested her to step into an taxi-auto with them. They were detectives, who arrested her on the charge of swindling the colonial official and the army officer. Brought before M. Hamard, he ordered her to be detained pending trial.

When informed of the arrest of his wife M. Germot refused to do anything in the matter. "My wife does as she pleases," he said. "I don't interfere in her affairs."

PLUMBER SEALED IN CHIMNEY

California Worker Cuts His Way Out With a Chisel Handed to Him Through a Slit.

Niles, Cal.—While Neil Alberg, a plumber, was clinching rivets inside the chimney of a new factory here the other day the man on the outside was called away.

Another set of mechanics, who did not know Alberg was inside, riveted a rain protector over the top of the stack, sealing him inside.

When the thunder of the hammers died away the prisoner pounded frantically on the iron until he got the attention of those outside. A chisel was then passed through a slit into the smokestack and Alberg cut his way out.

The Plumber Worms Turn

Propose to Bring Suit Owing to Assertions in Begbie's New Book.

London.—At a meeting of the Institute of Plumbers held the other day exception was taken to the statements regarding plumbers made by Harold Begbie in his latest book.

In a chapter headed "The Plumber," according to a delegate at the meeting, Mr. Begbie said that the plumbing trade was the worst from the moral point of view, that there was no bigger set of thieves than those of the plumbing trade, that he did not know why it was, but plumbers appeared not to be able to help it. He would sooner have a burglar in the house than a plumber. Further, if these were "rum" things to say about the whole trade, they were nevertheless true.

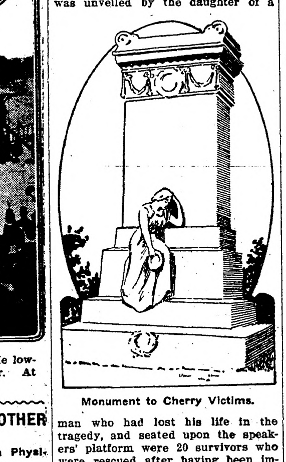
The meeting, in solemn conclave, decided that plumbers were tired of being the butt of comic papers, and a resolution was passed ordering that legal opinion be obtained as to the chance of winning a libel suit against Mr. Begbie as a warning to others.

In real life we don't get the chance to rehearse the big situations—but the rules of the game permit us to fake the lines.—Chicago Journal

SHAFT FOR CHERRY VICTIMS

Monument Unveiled to the Memory of Those Who Died In Mine Disaster.

Bloomington, Ill.—Recently at Cherry a monument was unveiled to the memory of the 256 men and boys who lost their lives in the great mining disaster over two years ago. The officers of the state miners' organizations had charge of the ceremonies and prominent labor leaders were present. The memorial—a simple shaft of gray granite 14 feet high—was unveiled by the daughter of a man who had lost his life in the tragedy, and seated upon the speakers' platform were 20 survivors who were rescued after having been imprisoned one week in the burning mine. Among the speakers was John P. White, president of the United Mine Workers.



Monument to Cherry Victims.

Cherry today is greatly changed from what it was two years ago. Robbed of one-half of its male inhabitants almost in the twinkling of the eye, the town was crushed for a time, but has since been slowly recovering, thanks to the liberality of the American nation.

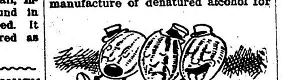
The sum of $316,424 was contributed for the relief of the widows and fatherless children. The Illinois legislature appropriated $100,000. Up to June 1, 1911, the commission in charge had distributed $81,498, leaving most of the remainder in trust as a pension fund for the relief of those robbed of their bread winners. Relief was afforded every widow and every dependent child, and they will be taken care of for life if necessary. Placed on a cash basis, no greater charitable work has ever been accomplished, nor has any relief movement been handled as economically or as successfully.

HERE'S A NEW KIND OF JAG

Department of Agriculture Asserts That It Lurks In Some Southern Watermelons.

Washington.—The department of agriculture asserts that there is a concealed jag in some of the southern watermelons. It requires some labor and scientific knowledge to extract it, but out of every 100 pounds of melons the government chemists have made one-tenth of a gallon of alcohol.

They have also succeeded in extracting a very good quality of alcohol from the sweet potato, and it is expected that these two vegetables can be turned to a good profit in the manufacture of denatured alcohol for manufacturing purposes. Some experiments show that one bushel of sweet potatoes will make about two-thirds of a gallon of commercial alcohol.



A Watermelon Jag.

Dog Buried In Flag.

Washington, D. C.—Because United States soldiers on duty with the aeronautical corps at College Park, Md., are reported to have recently buried a dog wrapped in the American flag, Mrs. Isabel Worrall Ball, chairman of the Woman's Relief corps national committee for the prevention of the desecration of the flag, has written a vigorous protest to Secretary of War Stimson.

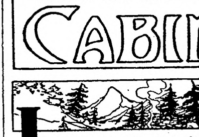
The dog, which was the mascot of the aviation school, was accorded a funeral with full military honors, including sounding of "taps." In her letter to the secretary of war, in which she demands that the guilty men be reprimanded, Mrs. Ball brands their action as "repugnant" and adds!

"The symbol of the great power and authority of the United States is too lofty a thing to be used as a shroud for a dog."

Bites Wife's Leg; Fined $100.

Chicago.—A fine of $100 and costs was imposed by Municipal Judge Caverly upon Antonio Narsko, who was accused of having bitten his wife, Mary, on the left leg during a quarrel in their home. "He attacked me and while we were struggling he stooped down and bit me in the leg," Mrs Narski told the court

THE KITCHEN CABINET



LET'S pretend, just for today,
That our hearts are free from woe,
That the wind blows just the way
We would like to have it blow.

Let's pretend that what we do
Is the work we like the best;
Let's pretend the scene we view
Is of all the loveliest.

Let's pretend we're satisfied,
Let's pretend we're brave and strong;
Maybe after we have tried
We can do it right along.
—S. E. Kiser.

IDEAS WE SHOULD HEED.

It may seem to the majority of women that advice concerning the washing of coffee and tea pots was entirely uncalled for; but knowledge of facts show that poor coffee is more often the result of unclean pots than from inferior coffee.

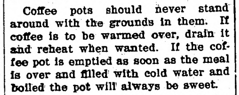
Tea and coffee pots should be washed after using them just as carefully as one does their good china, and left to air in the sunlight, if possible. The ideal way to serve tea is in using a teaball at the table, but for every-day life most people are too busy for such pleasures, so that a stone or earthen teapot is best to use.

Teapots that are not in frequent use will become musty, and should be scalded and well aired before using. If a lump of sugar is left in a company pot it will absorb the impurities.

Coffee pots should never stand around with the grounds in them. If coffee is to be warmed over, drain it and reheat when wanted. If the coffee pot is emptied as soon as the meal is over and filled with cold water and boiled the pot will always be sweet.

Coffee is better and pots are easier cleaned if cheesecloth bags are used to hold the coffee or, better still, have a percolator.

A raw egg or two beaten up and milk or cream added, with a little sugar, a pinch of salt and a grating of nutmeg will often be most satisfying when the stomach has a spell of rebellion.



WE SHALL do so much in the years to come,
But what have we done today?
We shall give out gold in a princely sum,
But what did we give today?
We shall lift the heart and dry the tear,
We shall plant a hope in place of fear,
We shall speak with words of love and cheer,
But what have we done today?
—Nixon Waterman.

SUGGESTIONS AND ECONOMIES.

When washing windows or mirrors do not use soap, but instead a little ammonia or alcohol, which will make them shine.

Rub the bottom of a dish that must be used in the fire with lard and the smut will be easily wiped off.

A delightful invalid drink is made by blending a half cup of grape juice with a cup and a half of strong lemonade.

If the cake flavoring has been forgotten, sprinkle a little over it as it is in the pan before baking.

Figs and dates with a few raisins make a delicious combination with chopped apples for a salad.

Four to six drops of either camphor or turpentine dropped on loaf sugar will relieve a cold if taken in the beginning.

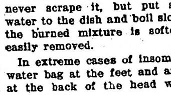
Instead of sewing hangers on towels for the kitchen, make button holes in the corners and they will last as long as the towels.

The flavor of a cup of cocoa is improved if a few drops of vanilla are added to it.

A good floor cleaner is turpentine rubbed into the hard wood floor and followed by a cloth wet with linseed oil.

When a kettle has food burned on never scrape it, but put soda and water to the dish and boil slowly until the burned mixture is softened and easily removed.

In extreme cases of insomnia a hot water bag at the feet and an ice bag at the back of the head will afford quick relief.



HOPE'S a magical compound
To increase our strength, we've found.
It can charm our bars and barriers all away;
With its impulse, which we borrow,
We can always do tomorrow
Lots and lots of things we never do today.
—N. Waterman.

MORE CHEESE DISHES.

Cheese, being so rich in proteid, it may take the place of more expensive meat dishes.

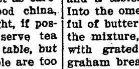
Cheese Wafers.—Sprinkle crackers generously with grated cheese, dust over a little salt and cayenne pepper, and bake in the oven until the cheese is melted.

Cheese and Olive Salad.—Mash a cream cheese, moisten with cream, and season with salt and cayenne. Add six olives finely chopped, lettuce finely cut and half a can of sweet red peppers cut in strips. Press in original shape of cheese and let stand two hours. Cut in slices, separate in pieces and serve on lettuce leaves with boiled or mayonnaise dressing.

Gnocchi a la Romana.—Melt a fourth of a cup of butter, and when bubbling add a fourth of a cup of flour, the same amount of cornstarch and two cups of milk. Cook three minutes, stirring constantly. Add the yolks of two eggs slightly beaten, and a half cup of cheese. Pour into buttered mold or shallow pan and when cool cut in squares or strips, sprinkle with a fourth of a cup of cheese and brown in the oven. Serve from the dish in which it is baked.

Cheese Omelet. — Beat two eggs slightly, add one-half a teaspoon of melted butter, a little salt and pepper and a tablespoon of cheese, grated. Into the omelet pan add a tablespoonful of butter and when melted pour in the mixture, cook until firm, sprinkle with grated cheese and serve with graham bread sandwiches.

Cheese Fondue.—Mix together a cupful each of bread crumbs and scalded milk; add a fourth of a pound of cheese cut in small pieces, a tablespoonful of butter and a half teaspoonful of salt. Beat the yolks of three eggs until thick and add, then cut and fold in the whites, beaten until stiff. Pour into a buttered baking dish and bake twenty minutes in a moderate oven.



THE best thing to take people out of their own worries is to go to work and find out how other folks' worries are getting on.
—Mrs. Whitney.

BEWARE OF TOO MANY SWEETS.

Half the ills of life might be eliminated if our food was properly chosen, we are told, and during or just after the holidays many will suffer from so-called bilious attacks, which mean over-worked livers. Sugar eating in the various forms of candy and cakes is responsible for bad livers, sick headaches, muddy skins and the "seal brown taste" in the mouth.

In the ordinary course of digestion starchy foods reach the circulation as sugar. This is carried to the liver by the portal system and stored to be used by the body. If we ever eat such foods as potatoes, bread and sweets, we overcrowd the liver.

Children can easily cultivate an appetite for sweets, but if they never get the habit much suffering for all concerned is avoided.

Sweet fruits contain sugar that is thoroughly satisfying and wholesome, and little people may be early taught to buy such things, instead of candy.

It is quite a remarkable fact that children who have been so reared that they have had little or no sweets are rarely apt, when reaching maturity, to care enough for such food to overindulge.

The errors in diet that are begun in childhood undermine the vitality, and in time the body is not able to expel the waste and ward off disease.

A child may be plump and the picture of health, and yet by a little overwork or exposure to disease the improperly-nourished body succumbs.

To be natural is to be well. All conditions of sickness are in some way penalties for the transgression of nature's laws. The most readable lesson we have is that "the sins of the fathers shall be visited upon the children," and still the evil goes on, through ignorance and carelessness.

Sweet fruits, such as dates, raisins and ripe bananas contain sugar in its most acceptable form, and appetites deprived of such wholesome sweets will turn for gratification to those which are fermentable and injurious.

A child maye be as easily started right as wrong, when it comes to feeding, for the mother is the architect, and how they build will tell in later years.

Three hundred thousand babies die in our land every year, more from ignorance in regard to diet than from any other cause.

Nellie Maxwell.

"Manana."

In describing the daily life of a certain distinguished citizen of the republic, a writer in the Review of Reviews gives, by way of contrast, the story that follows:

This calls to mind an English humorous writer who sketched out his daily programme as follows: Rise at noon; breakfast at one; a stroll to the club; attention to mail; some afternoon calls; a ride in the park; dinner; a round of evening parties, and then to bed.

"But when do you do your literary work?" he was asked.

"Why, the next day, of course," was the reply.

MINNESOTA HISTORICAL SOCIETY.

THE NORTHERN LIGHT

VOL. I. HOLT, MARSHALL COUNTY, MINNESOTA, FRIDAY, DECEMBER 29, 1911 NO. 22.

WRECK ON MILW.

THE "COLUMBIAN TELESCOPED BY A SILK TRAIN AT ODESSA, MINNESOTA.

TEN BODIES ARE FOUND

All the Bodies Are Taken to Ortonville—Engine of Silk Train Plunged Half the Length of Illfated Sleeping Car.

THE DEAD.

Mrs. R. C. Meyers, Newcastle, Ind.; Mrs. C. W. Barber, Terry, Mont.; W. J. McKone, sleeping car conductor; Dr. Ray R. Whetstone, Minneapolis; Mrs. R. F. Whetstone, Minneapolis; Mrs. J. F. Richard, Mobridge, S. D.; Miss Vessie Richard, Mobridge, S. D.; Miss Peterson, Green Bay, Wis.; Thomas Alexander, second cook, diner; one unidentified.

THE INJURED.

Mrs. F. J. Mathmer, Reeder, N. D.; Ralph Amy, Aberdeen, S. D.; Mrs. Addie Deutsch, Butte, Mon.; Mrs V. A. Williams, Lemmon, S. D.; Moraldus Pierce, Seattle, Wash.; Mrs. Eliza Clement, Boston, Mass.; W. H. Perry, Vancouver, B. C.; E. Leblan, Seattle, Wash.; Miss Leola Kennedy, Newcastle, Ind.; Mrs. L. Revier, Three Forks, Mont.; J. E. Alexander, porter of sleeping car; Dr. Sherman, Levy, Mont..

Odessa, Minnesota. — Ten to twelve persons were killed and as many more injured, some of them seriously, near this station about 5 a. m. when a fast silk train on the Milwaukee road crashed into the Columbian, one of the crack trains of that railway system, also running east.

The sleeping car of the Columbian, which had been attached at Aberdeen and was of lighter construction than the other cars of through coast trains, was telescoped by the engine of the silk train at one end and by the heavy dining car at the other end. Only two cars were hurled from the track, the sleeper and the diner.

Ten Dead Taken Out.

Ten bodies have been taken from the wreckage, and all but one identified. There is some reason to believe other bodies are still under the debris, and men are at work in the ruins. All of the injured will recover. All the bodies of the dead and most of the injured were placed on a train and taken to Ortonville, where good hospital facilities would be obtained.

Relief From Milbank.

The news of the disaster was flashed to Milbank, a freight division headquarters of the road, and to Ortonville. Two of Ortonville's surgeons, Drs. Bert Karn and Charles Bolsta, were hurried to the scene in automobiles and did heroic work in succoring the injured and giving first aid. Section crews were sent on the relief special from Milbank.

Engineer Sorby and Fireman Sandell of the second section jumped when the collision was seen to be inevitable. Sandell's ankle was broken.

The accident occurred a short distance from the signal tower at Odessa. The first section of the train had been stopped by the towerman because of a freight train in the block ahead of it. The second section, which closely followed the first, is what is known as a "silk" train, carrying merchandise.

The railway officials attribute the accident to the failure of the operator to set the signals against the second section. They also believe that the brakeman of the first section failed to run back to flag the second section. Because of the darkness the engineer of the second section did not see the rear light of the train in front in time to avert a collision.

The wreck tore down the telegraph wires and there was some delay in getting word of the disaster to the headquarters of the road.

The operator at the Odessa station says he left the station and block open for the train to go through and went off duty. When the train reached the station the block was closed and the engineer applied the air. The second section was following so closely and at such high speed that there was no time to warn it of the danger.

Worst Since Rio Disaster.

The wreck is said to be the worst the Milwaukee road has had for twenty-seven years, or since that near Rio, Wis., in 1884, when a train southbound from Minneapolis to Milwaukee, left the rails. The wooden cars then in use, took fire from the heating stoves and thirteen persons were burned to death. The entire train was consumed by the fire.

Mrs. J. F. Richard and her daughter Vessie were wife and daughter of the superintendent of the Trans-Missouri division of the Milwaukee road with headquarters at Mobridge, on the Missouri river, west of Aberdeen.

YUAN AGAINST REPUBLIC

GREAT BRITAIN AND JAPAN SUPPORT LIMITED MONARCHY.

Rebel Leaders Declare Powers Backing Premier Enemies of China—Sun Yat Sen Coming.

Pekin, China. — Premier Yuan Shi
Pekin, Dec. 23.—Premier Yuan Shi Kai gave his answer to those who are aiming to transform China into a republic. In an official statement he declared, without qualification, that he refused to accept a republic.

At the Shanghai peace conference Wu Ting Fang, foreign minister in the revolutionist provisional cabinet, spoke strongly in favor of a republic, and, later, Tang Shao Yi said that he was convinced that the abdication of the emperor and the establishment of a republic was the only thing that would satisfy the people. At the same time he expressed doubt whether it would be possible to persuade Yuan Shi Kai to abandon his plan for a limited monarchy.

It is believed here that Yuan Shi Kai means what he says and will uphold the monarchy. A new situation has arisen. Great Britain, which has been supporting the premier's monarchial program for several weeks, is now strengthened by Japan and is endeavoring to obtain the support of the United States and other countries. Great Britain believes the separation of the dependencies, Manchuria, Mongolia and Thibet and the serious disintegration of China proper would result from the establishment of a republic, whereas the republicans already have obtained in a material way everything they desired.

Only the name of the monarchy is left.

Firm for Republic.

Shanghai—The revolutionary leaders here positively assert that if Yuan Shi Kai persists in his refusal to accept a republic the powers giving him their support would be regarded as the enemies of China, and the lives of all foreigners in China would be jeopardized.

It is generally believed among the revolutionists that Great Britain is supporting the monarchy solely because of the dangerous example which would be set for India, should China become a republic.

Dr. Sun Yat Sen, the reform leader, is due to arrive here in a few days and it is believed that he will assume the leadership of the south. Large reinforcements of well-armed and well-trained troops are arriving from Canton.

RUSSO-PERSIAN CLASH OCCURS

Governor's Palace at Tabriz Is Said to Have Been Bombarded.

Teheran, Persia. — That serious fighting has commenced between the Persian constitutionalists and Russian troops is evidenced in dispatches from Tabriz, which states that the governor's palace has been bombarded. There were casualties on both sides, but their number is not yet known. The Russian legation here professes to have no details of the engagement.

There has been fighting also between the Russians and Persians of Enzeli on the Caspian sea, and at Resht, 16 miles northwest of Enzeli. Conflicting versions are given as to the cause of the fighting. One says the Russians seized the police headquarters at Resht.

It is feared that the news will have a deplorable effect on public opinion in Teheran. The special commission of five deputies which the national council decided to appoint to deal with the Russian ultimatum has not yet been formed, owing to the reluctance of the deputies to serve.

Teheran, Persia. — The Persian cabinet resigned, following the action of parliament in refusing to permit the dismissal of W. Morgan Shuster, the American treasurer general.

Cabinet members opposed the course of parliament in retaining Shuster and have been accused of "selling out" to Russia. The formation of a new ministry, of ultra-democratic character, which will support Shuster, is predicted.

A dispatch from Kasbin says Russian troops are preparing to advance upon Teheran. Shuster has received a warning that the czar's soldiers will surround his home to prevent him from performing official duties.

TAFT NOMINATES MINISTERS.

Northcott Goes to Venezuela and Weitzell to Nicaragua.

Washington, D. C. — President Taft sent nominations to the senate including the following: Elliott Northcott of West Virginia, minister to Venezuela; George T. Weitzell of Missouri, minister to Nicaragua; secretaries of embassies: Robert Woods Bliss of New York at Paris; Arthur Bailly Blanchard at Tokio; Montgomery Schuyler, Jr., of New York at Mexico City; Post Wheeler of Washington, D. C., at Rome; Charles S. Wilson of Maine, at St. Petersburg.

TARIFF WAR IS SOON TO OPEN

REPUBLICANS TO PREPARE BILL ON LINES LAID DOWN BY TAFT AND TARIFF BOARD.

DEMOCRATS HAVE ONE TOO

And Will Frame Their Bill With That and the Revenue-Only Theory Uppermost—Wool Interests Pleased With Report.

Washington, D. C. — Every indication is that congress will be thrown into the vortex of tariff agitation, especially with reference to the revision of the wool schedule, immediately after the holiday recess.

The Republican members of the ways and means committee are soon to begin the work of preparing a tariff revision bill along the lines of the board report and the president's message thereon.

The indications now are that there will be hearings on the wool and woolen goods question before the committees of both houses.

The Democrats appear to be considerably dazed by the completeness of the board report and the unanimity of the board in declaring against ad valorem duties, contrary to the expressed policy of the Democrats in congress.

The Republicans are considerably elated over the board findings but they see opportunities for duties being too low in some instances if all the suggestions made by the board with respect to new duties shall be accepted.

The wool men are pretty well pleased and the manufacturers are now planning to watch the situation to see how they will come out if raw wool gets as favorable rates as is proposed in the board report.

It will be a struggle on both sides to prevent any agreement upon a schedule of rates below the protective line.

Up to this time the raw wool men say they have a little the best of it, depending, of course, upon what provisions are made in the law for carrying out the president's recommendations for full tests of imported goods.

Most of the progressive leaders will be away from Washington during the Christmas holidays. Senator La Follette and Senator Clapp are to speak in Ohio and so will others.

The house progressives also will campaign in Ohio. Representatives Myrdock, Lenroot and Norris being among those who are intending to speak.

Washington, D. C. — The senate by a unanimous vote formally ratified President Taft's notification to Russia of the joint termination of the treaty of 1832. The Lodge joint resolution reported by the foreign relations committee as a substitute for the Sulzer resolution that passed the house 300 to 1, was adopted after an all day debate over Russian discrimination against the Jews of America.

Every senator who spoke voiced his advocacy of congressional action to meet Russian discrimination. They were unanimous for termination of the treaty, but showed a wide divergence of views as to the manner in which that end should be accomplished.

Among those who held conflicting opinions were Senator Shively of Indiana, Poindexter of Washington, O'Gorman of New York, Stone of Missouri and Williams of Mississippi.

The roll was called, but there was no division. Seventy-two votes were cast, and all of them were favorable to the measure. It was therefore declared adopted and was started on its way to the house.

With the senate action, the Russian situation has assumed a quieter phase so far as the executive branch of the government is concerned. The officials are looking forward to the receipt from Curtis Guild, the American ambassador to St. Petersburg, of the acceptance of the notice given by President Taft of the desire of this government to terminate the treaty of 1832.

Lodge Defends Taft.

Mr. Lodge in the senate defended the action of President Taft in abrogating the Russian treaty without congressional action. Six treaties, he pointed out, had been terminated by notice, the first by Polk in 1847, the treaty with Great Britain. President Pierce in 1855 terminated by notice a provision of a treaty with Denmark after the senate had given its authority in 1855. President McKinley terminated clauses in the Swiss treaty of 1855 without any congressional action whatever, he declared.

The great tariff fight of the present congress and leading up to the real issue of the coming presidential campaign was opened when President Taft sent to congress his message on the wool and woolen goods question.

The tariff board report on wool and woolens will furnish campaign ammunition enough for both sides. Bulky documents containing vast arrays of facts and figures are now in the hands of congress.

The nomination of William B. Grimshaw to succeed himself as United States marshal for Minnesota was sent to the senate by the president. Senators Nelson and Clapp united in recommending the appointment.

Senator Knute Nelson is among those who will remain at the capital during the holiday season to attend to public matters which other duties have prevented him from completing since congress convened.

His time will be given principally to a study of the legal phases of the water power question in connection with proposed legislation this session on inland waterway topics. Senator Clapp, whose committee on interstate commerce has discontinued taking testimony on the proposed anti-trust legislation, will spend most of the season in making speeches in territory which the insurgents hope to obtain for their own.

Washington, D. C. — Efforts to authorize the sale of the hull of the battleship Maine to private parties who desire to exhibit it at various ports of the United States, and charge admission fee to visitors, were defeated in the house of representatives. The urgent deficiency bill, carrying an appropriation of $250,000 to complete the work of raising the Maine, after a hard fight, passed the house without change.

It was admitted in the debate that offers approaching $1,000,000 have been received from exhibition interests for the rear portion of the hull, which can be fitted with a bulkhead and towed from Havana to the United States. This sum would more than cover the $900,000, the cost of clearing the wreck out of Havana harbor. Chairman Fitzgerald of the appropriations committee said the government would tow the rear part of the hull into the ocean and sink it with full honors.

Representative Sisson of Mississippi attempted to procure an amendment authorizing the war department to invite bids from private parties for the rear portion of the hull, to be used for exhibition purposes. He said General Bixby, in charge of the work at Havana, stated that several tentative offers had been received from the United States, some of them approaching $1,000,000. Mr. Sisson said he did not consider it as opposed to the desires of the American people to provide for a public exhibition of the wreck of the Maine under private auspices.

The bill as passed would permit the secretary of the navy to give a portion of the wreck to the city of Havana for a public monument, a request for it having been made by the president of Cuba, and would authorize the secretary of war and the secretary of the navy to grant other portions as souvenirs to cities and patriotic societies or survivors of the vessel.

A request for an additional $50,000 for the expenses of the house of representatives and an attempt on the part of the "economy committee" of the house to cut in two the mileage of senators and representatives threw the house into a debate on expenses that is considered prophetic of the sessions that are to come.

Exactly $80,000,000 is proposed to be appropriated by congress during the next five years for good roads under a bill introduced by Representative Prouty of Iowa, who advocates national and state co-operation in road construction and maintenance. He proposed that congress appropriate and apportion among the various states $5,000,000 in 1912, $10,000,000 in 1913, $15,000,000 in 1914, $20,000,000 in 1915 and $30,000,000 in 1916. The federal expenditures on each road is limited to one-half the total cost.

Predicts No Building Bill.

Democratic Leader Underwood of the house predicted that the caucus of the house Democrats would not authorize a public building bill at this session, notwithstanding the public building committee's recommendation for it.

Mr. Underwood said the matter undoubtedly would be considered in caucus. To give everyone a fair show, an appropriation of from $25,000,000 to $30,000,000 he said, would be necessary and the Democratic leaders do not want such a bill to clash with their economy program.

Would Amend Pension Bill.

Washington—Forces are at work in the senate to bring about radical amendments in the Sherwood "dollar a day" pension bill which has passed the house. Senators of both parties expressed disapproval of the dollar a day idea. The senate pensions committee is now compiling statistics to show just what the yearly outlay would be if the Sherwood bill were adopted. First estimates placed it at sums ranging from $10,000,000 to $75,000,000 a year over the present heavy expenditures.

The committee will report to the senate a bill carrying much less expenditure of money, which it believes in addition to being generally satisfactory to Civil war veterans would be one which President Taft would be willing to sign.

News of Minnesota

Interesting Items Gathered Throughout the Gopher State.

CORN SCHOOL AT OWATONNA.

Second Annual Show of State Association Opens With New Year.

Owatonna.—The final arrangements for the second annual corn show and school of the Minnesota State Corn Growers' association, to be held in Owatonna Jan. 1-6, have been completed. The premium lists are being mailed to all parts of the state.

Comparatively little lecture work will be done, but most of the time will be spent in classroom work, actually preforming or demonstrating the methods advocated. The livestock work will be handled by Professor R. K. Bliss of Iowa. Professor Sexauer of Albert Lea will have charge of the corn and small grain department, Miss M. H. Olson of Albert Lea college will conduct the domestic science department.

Premiums will be offered to the amount of $1,000 for corn, small grains and baked goods. The state will be divided into three sections—the southern, central and northern, each section exhibiting separately. Special premiums will be offered for single ears and bushel lots. There will be a special junior class for exhibitors under 20. A stock and corn judging contest will be held on Wednesday which will be open to teams of three from any high school in the state.

Afternoon and Evening Lectures.

In addition to the regular instruction and classroom work, which will last from 9 a. m. to 4 p. m. each day, there will be given each afternoon from 4 to 5, lectures by men along special lines as follows: Professor R. K. Bliss, "Care and Management of Swine;" Professor Andrew Boss, "Crop Rotation as a Factor in Farm Management;" Mr. Crane, Minneapolis "Deep Tillage and the Killing of Quack Grass;" Dr. M. H. Reynolds, "Hog Cholera and Hog Cholera Vaccination"; C. S. Cathcart, Albert Lea, "Problems in Farm Engineering."

The evening lectures will be an interesting feature of the week, as follows:

Monday evening, Jan. 1, "Industrial Education," by L. D. Harvey of Menomonie, Wis.; Tuesday evening, Jan. 2, "Value of Domestic Science Training in the Home," by Mrs. Kedzie Jones; Wednesday evening, Jan. 3, Dr. George Vincent, president of the state university, "Social Conditions on the Farm."

Old Fashioned Spelling Bee

On Thursday evening, Jan. 4, Professor Arthur McMurry, a noted lecturer and humorist, will deliver an address on "The Philosophy and Poetry of Farm Life."

On Friday evening there will be an old-fashioned spelling match by Steele county contestants, under the direction of County Superintendent C. L. Davis.

TWO BROWNS ON SUPREME BENCH

Judge P. E. Brown Will Join Judge C. L. Brown Jan. 2.

St. Paul.—Judge P. E. Brown of Luverne, who was elected to the supreme bench at the general election of 1910, will enter upon his duties Jan. 2, succeeding Justice Charles L. Lewis, who failed to obtain the republican nomination in the state convention of 1910. Judge Lewis was retired largely through the efforts of the St. Louis delegation, which presented the name of Judge Homer B. Dibell. In the fight that followed neither of the St. Louis county men landed the nomination, Judge Brown coming in as a dark horse and capturing the honor. Justice Lewis will engage in the practice of law in Duluth.

Justice-elect Brown will be sworn in at the same time as Justice Calvin L. Brown, who was re-elected in 1910. Their terms will be six years.

Balance of $1,000 Reported.

St. Paul.—At a meeting of the executive committee of the Minnesota Educational association, the affairs of the last meeting of the association were settled up. F. J. Sperry of Mankato, treasurer of the association, reported a balance of $1,000 was left from the meeting. Five hundred dollars was set aside for the meeting of the National association to take place in St. Paul next July. A committee will be appointed to investigate means of standardizing courses of the high schools of the state. Three hundred dollars was appropriated for use by that committee. Albert Gullette, chairman of the committee of twenty, of the Minneapolis schools, met with the executive committee to confer on the work to be done by the standardizing committee. Dean George F. James, F. J. Sperry and John L. Silverdale, superintendent of schools in Red Wing, were present.

MINNESOTA IS FIFTH.

Acreage in Potatoes Increases 52.5 Per Cent in Ten Years.

Washington, D. C. — Statistics regarding the potato crop of the United States collected at the thirteenth decennial census April 15, 1910, are contained in an official statement.

In Minnesota the land in potatoes increased from 146,659 acres in 1899 to 223,692 acres in 1909, an increase of 77,033 acres, or 52.5 per cent. The percentage of increase in production was much higher, the actual production in 1909 amounting to 26,802,948 bushels, as compared with 14,643,327 in 1899, an increase of 12,159,621 bushels, or 83 per cent. In 1909 the value of the Minnesota potato crop was $7,685,259, as compared with $3,408,997 in 1899, an increase of $4,276,262, or 125.4 per cent.

In acreage Minnesota ranks fifth in the ten states showing the highest acreage for 1909. In production Minnesota also ranks fifth in the ten states showing the highest production.

The land in potatoes in the United States increased from 2,939,000 acres in 1899 to 3,669,000 acres in 1909, an increase of 730,000 acres, or 24.8 per cent. The percentage of increase in production was much higher, the actual production in 1909 amounting to 389,195,000 bushels, as compared with 273,318,000 bushels in 1899, an increase of 115,877,000 bushels, or 42.4 per cent. The average production an acre, perhaps in part by reason of temporary weather conditions, increased from 93 bushels to 106.1 bushels. Along with the increase in acreage and production went an even larger relative increase in the value of the potato crop, which increased from $98,380,000 to $166,424,000, an increase of over $68,000,000, or 69.2 per cent. The average value of potatoes per bushel thus increased from 36 centes to 43 cents, or about 19 per cent.

SELECTIONS MADE FOR DEBATES

Moorhead High School Contestants to Compete for Journal Cup.

Moorhead.—Miss Inez Lied, Arthur Kalsrud and Carl Booth will represent the Moorhead high school in the state debating league, to compete for the silver cup for efficiency in debating the subject of the adoption or rejection of the parcels post. The opening debate for the ninth congressional district will be held at Barnesville Jan. 12, between the high schools of Barnesville and Moorhead. On the same date the schools of Crookston and Ada will compete for honors. In the Fargo-Casselton-Moorhead debating league the high school of Moorhead will be represented by three of the following students selected by Superintendent Edwards: Marlow Flaten, Alvin Pilot, Louis Wheeler and Egmond Keenemann. The parcels post subject will also be debated by this league. The league was organized to allow operators of the Fargo and Casselton high schools an opportunity to debate the subject.

SIMPSON QUITS SUPREME COURT

Judge Andrew Holt of Minneapolis Becomes His Successor.

St. Paul. — Judge David F. Simpson of the Minnesota supreme court resigned and Judge Andrew Holt of the Hennepin county district bench was appointed to succeed him by Governor A. O. Eberhart. The governor also announced the appointment of Charles S. Jelley as district judge to succeed Judge Holt.

Judge Andrew Holt has been on the district bench since 1905, and was reelected last year for six years beginning next January. Before becoming district judge he was judge of the Minneapolis municipal court. His successor, C. S. Jelley, formerly served as special assistant attorney general, and was about to return to that position Jan. 1.

Winona to Banquet Y. M. C. A.

Winona.—Arrangements have been commenced for a banquet to be given here in connection with the state convention of the Y. M. C. A., early in February. It will be held at the Masonic Temple on the evening of Feb. 9, and it is expected between 300 and 400 men will sit down. It has now been decided to combine the workers' conference in the Men and Religion Forward movement with the Y. M. C. A. state convention. Committees on boys' work, Bible study, evangelism, missions and social service are to be appointed and hold preliminary meetings.

Defective Page

The Affair of the North Sea

NARRATIVE OF CAPTAIN ADAMS
"Detective-Diplomat"

By H. M. EGBERT

(Copyright, by W. G. Chapman.)

OWING to the recent death of the admiral who played the most prominent part in the affair, I am at last free to narrate the true meaning of a series of astonishing events which happened a few years ago and perplexed all Europe. That something lay at the back of the apparently tangled and meaningless maneuvers was obvious even to the uninitiated. But what it was remained a mystery. In particular, why did not the British government declare war upon Russia when the squadron of Rojestvensky ran amuck among the British trawling fleet and shelled the fishermen? I hope that I may here supply the answer.

It was the most critical period in English history for, perhaps, 50 years—that is to say, since the period of the Crimean war. Russia was struggling in the far east against the power of Japan. The war had gone badly with her, and it had been decided, as a last resource, to send the fleet from the Baltic round the coast of Africa and into Asiatic waters. We all know the result which attended on this ill-fated venture.

The activities of Russian cruisers in British waters and the arbitrary holding up of British vessels had strained relations between the two countries to the breaking point. This ill-feeling was increased by the Anglo-Japanese alliance. Finally, it was decided after a cabinet council that the Russian fleet must not be permitted to leave European waters. In other words, Mr. Balfour, who was then premier, resolved to declare war upon the Muscovite.

I, with all those who were acquainted with the inner workings of politics, was, of course, acquainted with the situation. I had been warned to hold myself prepared for service at a moment's notification. I knew that the cabinet council had been in session; I more than suspected the result of its deliberations. There was an electrical feeling in London that night, as though the minds of all were telepathically acquainted with what was impending. Even the theater crowds discussed the probability of war as they straggled homeward. I had taken a stroll along Piccadilly—not far, for I dared not leave my lodgings in Half Moon street for more than a few minutes at a time. As I turned I saw Talbot, my soldier servant, hurrying after me among the crowds that jostled under the arc lights. He held a telegram in his hands. It was the expected summons.

Instructing him to pack my grip, I hailed a hansom and was driven post haste to Downing street, where my presence was requested. When Mr. Balfour's butler opened the door of No. 10 to me I almost burst into the chamber where the council were seated. I knew that the urgency of the affair would brook no considerations of etiquette.

Mr. Balfour was seated at the head of the table. At his side was Lord Lansdowne, the foreign minister. Mr. Joseph Chamberlain, though he had resigned in order to carry on his propaganda for protection, was present, as also were, most significantly, among the rest of the cabinet, Admiral "Jacky" Fisher and Lord Roberts, representing respectively the navy and army.

No sooner had I entered than Mr. Balfour vacated his chair, insisted that I should seat myself, and drew up another for himself. Then he explained the nature of my mission.

"Captain Adams," he said, "this afternoon the cabinet met and resolved to advise his majesty to declare war upon the government of Russia. Such a declaration was to have been made to the Russian ambassador tomorrow morning. By some occult method—nobody knows how these things happen—the ambassador learned of this. He cabled the news to his government at 12 o'clock. Four hours later the Russian fleet sailed on a mission of destruction toward the shores of England.

"That in itself matters little. Our fleet is prepared, and there is little doubt that we could blow the Russians out of the water before they could harm us. But there is more—much more—behind. At two o'clock this afternoon his majesty's government received authoritative notification from Berlin that, the moment that the English and Russian fleets engage in hostilities a German squadron will sail from Kiel to land a hundred thousand men upon our southern shores. Simultaneously an army corps will cross the Russian boundary. In other words, Germany believes that her time for aggrandizement at our expense and Russia's is now come.

"The Russian ambassador has been informed of this plot. Needless to say, the decision has been reversed. England and Russia, instead of meditating war, are now on more friendly terms than they have been for a decade. But—Admiral Rojestvensky has left port and, ignorant of this change, is on his way to England with hostile intent. You must stop him and notify him.

"Here are dispatches countersigned by his majesty and the Russian ambassador," he concluded. "Try to intercept him when he takes his fleet through the Sound. And beware of the German agents, who will, doubtless, soon be upon your trail. The kaiser's representative is none other than the notorious Stapfhaus."

With this he took me by the hand and, after a cordial Godspeed, fairly shoved me down the steps and into Downing street. I was overcome with amazement for a few moments, which was not lessened by the recollection of the enemy I had to face. For Stapfhaus, convicted forger and blackmailer, had been the most adroit of all Germany's representatives before his downfall, and we had crossed swords when I was at Berlin, not wholly to my advantage.

Half an hour later I was at home, saying adieu to Talbot.

"Won't you tyke me with you, sir?" he pleaded. "They's tough devils, I hear, them Rooshians."

I wavered for a moment. But I always like to take my fences alone. Reluctantly I felt that I must play a lone hand in these strange and peculiar circumstances. I ordered Talbot to sew the dispatches inside my coat, at the same time mentioning that I expected to encounter danger from Stapfhaus, whose duty it was at any cost to prevent me from delivering my dispatches to the Russian admiral.

Five minutes later Talbot handed me my coat. Putting it on, I felt the crinkly paper of the dispatches inside the lining. Then, again refusing his urgent and repeated requests that I permit him to accompany me, I jumped into a cab, grip in hand, and started upon my journey to Copenhagen.

With the details of the journey as far as the Danish frontier I need not trouble you. I may state, however, that from the moment when I left the house I perceived that I was under surveillance. In the street, in the train, upon the boat, I was followed by relays of spies. However, I was armed, and gave no opportunity to my enemies. The real struggle, I knew, would come later.

I had calculated that I should be able to reach Copenhagen about five hours before the passage of the fleet through the Sound, which would afford me ample time to communicate with Admiral Rojestvensky. But an unexpected incident effectually changed my plans. We had just crossed the Danish frontier when suddenly a violent impact shook me from my seat. The coach appeared to sway and rock; it hung indecisively upon one side for an appreciable interval, then slowly righted itself. I was upon my feet in a moment and, finding myself uninjured, went to the door and opened it. Then I discovered that the train had left the metals and hung perilously over a steep embankment, from a descent into which we had been saved almost by a miracle.

Happily no lives were lost in the disaster, but by the time that help arrived I knew I was too late to intercept Rojestvensky. On arriving at the Danish capital, however, to my great joy I learned that the vessels of the fleet had passed through only a few hours previously, and were credited with an intention of halting just outside the three-mile limit to await the arrival of the torpedo boats which had left Russia a couple of days later. Then I might yet be in time to intercept the admiral and turn him from his mission of bloodshed with its disastrous sequels.

But how was I to reach the vessels of the fleet? I learned at the British embassy that no vessels of any sort had been permitted within gunshot of the Russians; that Rojestvensky had actually fired upon a small boat that had attempted to enter into communication with him. Clearly his orders had been explicit. The watchers from the town had seen his squadron pass in the offing, at a distance of some two miles, in perfect formation. It was a formidable array, they said. Furthermore, the city was wild with rumors of an impending attack upon the English shores. But nobody, least of all the British officials, seemed to know what events were likely to transpire.

My plan was soon made up. The only way to reach the admiral would be to hire a fishing schooner—one of those numerous vessels that put out daily during the season in quest of herring and cod, off the Banks of the North sea. With the use of this I might approach Rojestvensky boldly when he was anchored on the high seas, and safe from any imminence of danger. I did not doubt but that, under these circumstances, he would accord me an interview. And at the worst, if he should sink me, I could but do my duty and go down to the depths of the ocean, carrying my precious dispatches with me.

Since my arrival in Copenhagen I had been free, so far as I could determine, from espionage. I had not doubted that the wrecking of the express was the result of Stapfhaus' machinations, and believed that he considered that he had effectually prevented me from carrying out my intention of intercepting Rojestvensky at Copenhagen, and had therefore abandoned his enterprise. On making inquiries as to the chartering of a vessel I was informed that a certain Captain Olafsen, who had spent many of his years as a fisherman off the Maine coast, had a fine schooner, carrying four men. I determined to inspect it. I discovered that she was admirably suited to my purpose, being lightly built and evidently capable of making a high rate of speed. She also carried, in addition to her crew, an antiquated small muzzle-loader for protection against pirates who often plundered fishing schooners that became separated from the fleet.

Captain Olafsen was a fine specimen of his race; a man of some 60 years, with much natural dignity and almost perfect English. I thought it best not to declare my purpose, but merely stated that I would pay him a thousand pounds for his services, and those of his crew, during the next five days, the vessel to be completely under my command. I calculated that, by heading toward the Banks, we could reach the anchorage of the Russian squadron the second morning, since in all probability, they would be lying just outside the shoal water.

The captain looked at me quizzically. Then he burst forth into a roar of pure and nervous English.

"By God, I'm with you every time," he shouted, slapping his thigh. "When it comes to England or America against the Rooshians, I'm an Anglo-Saxon every time. Give me the thousand first, though," he added cautiously.

I handed him ten bank notes for a hundred pounds apiece, which I had carried with me for just such a need. He pocketed them.

"When do you want to start, sir?" he asked.

"In two hours," I replied.

"Right," he answered. "The Yankee Girl will be ready, and so will her crew. And the gun loaded up to the muzzle," he added proudly, "ready to defy the whole Rooshian navy. There isn't a fishing vessel on the wharves could overhaul this one or capture her," he concluded, "except the Lena over there, and she's got three guns and carries a crew of fifteen. But she's used as the flagship of the fishing squadron, when she's in commission."

We put out from port promptly to the minute. A strong breeze was blowing and we sailed gaily over the dancing waters of the harbor, which were alive with all manner of craft. As we passed abreast of a certain anchorage the captain uttered an exclamation.

"By thunder, the Lena's put off for the Banks," he said. "I thought Bjornsen was going to lay her up for the season."

By nightfall we were on the high seas, well out of sight of land. I slept but little, for the wind freshened and we tossed in the trough of the combers. The next day the sky was overcast and the glass fell rapidly. Through the vast rolling expanse of waters we could discern a few sailing vessels passing us, scurrying toward the land before the breaking of the storm. We were well on our course by now, and, storm or no storm, expected to reach our destination by the following daybreak. About two in the afternoon, as the captain surveyed the horizon with his binoculars, he uttered an oath.

"Thunder and spitfire!" he shouted. "If there isn't the Lena!" And he indicated a distant speck upon the waters—yet not so very distant, since the heaving billows considerably shortened the horizon.

"And crowding on sail," he muttered. "What the devil's she here for? This isn't the shortest cut to the Banks!"

Our query was soon answered. From the peak of the Lena a tiny flag fluttered. The captain nearly dropped his binoculars. Then he turned to me grimly.

"Had you any—er—enemies that wanted you particularly?" he asked. But he did not wait for a reply, for he saw the answer in my face. A moment later the crew were at work among the rigging. A jib topsail was spread to the winds, and the acceleration of our pace immediately became evident. We rolled heavily in the trough of the seas, the white foam scudding level with our deck. But behind us the speck had grown into a tiny ship, about as large, to my view, as those toy boats that children sail on ponds, perfect in all details. Momentarily it grew larger. The captain broke into curses.

"She'll get us," he yelled. "No hope to make the fishing grounds unless the wind aids us."

Suddenly, as I watched, I saw a tiny puff of smoke emerge from the Lena's side and spread fanwise over her. Simultaneously something kicked up a splash of water astern of us, and the echoes of the shot went undulating along the waters.

"What's that?" I cried.

"Shell," replied Captain Olafsen, laconically. "Not even a blank shot first." He turned on me. "I don't know who you are or why they want you," he cried, "but, by thunder, we'll best them. Smid! Petersen! Get to the gun. So! Let her have it now!"

The little Yankee Girl rocked with the recoil. Looking toward the pursuing vessel I saw a splash of water apparently leap up and overwhelm her. "A hit, by heavens!" I cried. But a moment afterward I perceived her sailing steadily onward as before. And she had decreased the interval to little more than a thousand yards. An instant later I heard a shell shriek through the air and plunge into the sea beside us. Afterward, but so soon that it seemed to synchronize, came the sound of the discharge.

"Let her have it, boys," cried the captain again. The Yankee Girl rocked again with the recoil, and then heaven seemed to be alive with the reverberations that followed. All three of our pursuer's guns had gone off together. A mountain of water appeared to leap up at me. I saw the horror-struck features of the sailor Petersen, staring into my own. Then something heavy took me in the chest, squeezing the breath out of me, and I went sliding seaward through three feet of turgid sea water across a sloping, shuddering deck. Cries rang in my ears. Sulphurous fumes were stifling me; a deadly lethargy overcame me. Then, after an appreciable interval, I opened my eyes.

I was lying in a reclining posture against the deck house. At my feet lay the dead sailor, Smid, fearfully mangled; the bodies of his companions lay near by, awash in the water that flowed from side to side of the deck at every motion of the fast scurrying ship. At the wheel the captain stood, but he made no attempt to steer. There was a bloody handkerchief round his head and one arm hung helplessly at his side. And close upon our heels came on the Lena, now within hailing distance. I saw her spin before the breeze; she glided alongside, and a sailor sprang nimbly from her deck to ours, carrying a rope with him, by means of which we were made fast to her. A moment later we were in the hands of the enemy. I saw a mob, armed with cutlasses, surround Olafsen; saw him raise his sound arm and fire, point-blank, into their faces; saw his form totter beneath a rain of blows that beat him down until he lay lifeless at their feet; saw his corpse tossed into the sea. Then I must have fainted again.

When I opened my eyes I was in the center of a group, and a man wearing a short, pointed beard was bending over me. There was a taste of brandy in my mouth. The first thing that I noticed was that he held the envelope containing my dispatches to Rojestvensky. He had robbed me while I lay helpless.

"Welcome, my dear Adams," he said with a mock bow. "You do not remember me?"

"Stapfhaus!" I muttered weakly.

He grinned. "Sorry to have put you to so much inconvenience, captain," he said; "but it was necessary that Admiral Rojestvensky should not obtain those papers. You see, war will now break out between your country and Russia."

"You were always a thief, Stapfhaus," I retorted. "None but a thief would steal papers from an unconscious man's pockets. Let me see, was it picking pockets or forgery that you were dismissed the service for?"

His face grew dark.

"Bah! You always were a hypocrite, Adams," he retorted. "I don't want your papers. I only want to prevent Rojestvensky from getting them." With a sudden motion of his arm he tossed the envelope into the sea. "So much for your accusations," he continued. "But now that I have done with you, I will pay my respects and leave you."

"Well, murderer, what are you going to do with me?" I asked. "Fling me overboard to join the captain?"

Stapfhaus mused, while I waited. I did not dare to hope; thought that it was merely a ruse whereby he might enkindle my hopes again, only to crush them.

"Adams," he said at last, "when I was sent to prison in Berlin for forgery you were one of the witnesses against me. I had forged a check of yours to the amount of a thousand marks. You had the power of adding another count to my indictment. When you were called upon to testify you refused, pleading your diplomatic privilege. Why did you do so? Because you pitied me?"

"Because I would not trouble to go to court," I responded.

Stapfhaus jumped forward impulsively.

"That's well said," he cried. "If you had pitied me I should have flung you into the ocean. But now—well, why should I? You are a prisoner of war, and, so long as I remain in Germany, my government will never deliver me up to pay the penalty for this technical piracy. So you shall be left to the arbitration of fate. Get up!"

I rose unsteadily, with aching head. I could draw my breath only with the greatest difficulty; there was a bruise on my side the size of a plate—the result of a spent fragment of shell, as I discovered afterward. It had exploded, knocked over the deck house, and killed the sailor Petersen, before knocking me over.

"Tie him to the wheel!" Stapfhaus commanded, and I was speedily lashed up. Then, bidding me a mock farewell, he was gone to his own vessel. Their sails were unfurled and they began to draw away from us, but not more than a hundred feet. Straining my eyes through the murk and gloom of the gathering night, I perceived that we were still linked by a cable, and that the Lena was towing me, for some reason of her own, toward an unknown destination.

Night fell; nothing was any longer visible. I did not even know that the Lena was within sight, except that the steady soughing of the waves against the vessel on which I stood told me that I was still being towed along. The night wore on; I was shivering in the cold. It was growing rougher, too, and flying spray drenched me. Pain from my wound and weakness at length produced a semi-comatose condition, from which I was awakened suddenly to find that the Yankee Girl was no longer being towed through the waters, but drifted helplessly at the mercy of the waves. The Lena had gone.

Suddenly a long beam of light fell upon the waters on the port side, played there, and disappeared across the surface of the ocean. Now, following it to its source, I perceived a single eye of light at a great distance; and behind it another; then another. Instantly I knew the solution of this mystery. It was the Russian squadron, feeling its way cautiously toward the coast of England.

Then from the depths beneath me I heard a cry.

"Ship ahoy!" it came.

And suddenly a rocket flew into the air, not 50 yards away, and descended in a shower of sparks.

It was a rocket fired by the fishing fleet, in warning of danger, or to keep the vessels together. Undoubtedly the Lena had towed me into the middle of the fishing squadron and left me there, with no lights showing, to their imminent danger.

Suddenly the finger of light from the Russian vessel pointed full at me, illumining every inch of the ship. In it I saw the little fishing boats tossing like cockleshells, here and there, on every side of me. And suddenly I heard a roar as of an express train in the air above. My ears had been schooled to that cry the previous afternoon. But whereas the Lena's were toy shells, these were from the heavy guns of battleships.

It was the Russians, shelling the fishing fleet.

I pass over the scene that followed. In the dark, save where those fiery fingers picked them up, the fishermen were helpless. Again and again the giant shells hurtled through the air, plunging all round me, bringing death and destruction in their wake. Cries and curses came to me as the fishermen frantically endeavored to escape from the destruction, only to be tracked down. I expected my own destruction imminently.

Suddenly I saw a figure scramble over the sides of the Yankee Girl. He rushed toward me, a knife in his hand. I closed my eyes, too weak to care. Death would be welcome, now that I had failed in my mission. Then I heard a voice that was sweeter than any music I ever listened to.

It was Talbot's.

"'Old 'ard, old man," he shouted. "Where's them ropes? I couldn't make you before, so 'elp me," he continued, as he cut my bonds. "It's all right, old man. The Lena's ten sea knots away, and they've stopped firing. See, it's growing light."

And he half carried and half led me into the cabin below. He poured me out brandy and wrapped me in blankets.

"Now, old man," he said, "you've got half an hour to rest up before it's light enough to make for Rojestvensky's flagship."

I smiled bitterly at this.

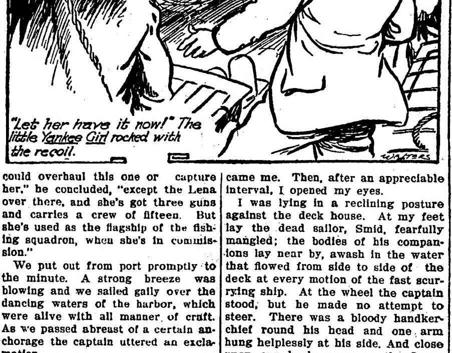
"They've got the papers," I answered.

Talbot burst into a shout of laughter. He tossed an oil skin package into my hand.

"Look inside that," he cried, wringing my hand hard.

The explanation was a simple one. Talbot, knowing that Stapfhaus had outwitted me once before, had been desperately anxious to accompany me upon my mission. When I refused to take him he secretly opened the envelope containing the official document, removed the contents, and substituted a sheet of wrapping paper, the same which Stapfhaus had stolen and flung into the sea. Having the real document in his possession, he had disguised himself and followed me. He had been one of the spies, at least, whom I had noted as following me; he had been aboard the train; he had not been 20 yards away when the Yankee Girl departed from Copenhagen, and, in despair of losing me, had managed to obtain a post on board the Lena, learning by accident that Stapfhaus had engaged her. He had actually been one of the crew that stood round me after the capture; and when the Lena cut me adrift off the Banks, he had lowered one of her boats in the darkness and pulled around for an hour before he located me.

Two hours later I stood upon the deck of Rojestvensky's flagship and delivered to him the dispatches from the British government. I learned that he had fired on the fishing vessels thinking that they were, in fact, British torpedo boats, and that war had been declared. An excuse was hastily invented and promptly accepted by the British government as sincere; and thus a war which might have shaken Europe to its foundations was happily averted.



"Let her have it now!" The little Yankee Girl rocked with the recoil.

WHERE WOMEN PROPOSE

Odd Welsh Town In Which It Seems That the Sexes Have Changed Places.

Llangwm, in Pembrokeshire, Wales, is a huddled group of blunt stone cottages upon the luxuriant bank of the River Cleddau and within view of the Atlantic. Were it not for its strange customs and the relations of the sexes Llangwm would not merit special attention, a writer in the New York Sun remarks. The inhabitants are of Flemish origin. In this community mere man no longer holds sway as head of the household, nor is he compelled to earn his own living.

This is what occurs to him in Llangwm: If a likely youth and if arrived at an age—not necessarily of discretion—and size that enable him to make himself useful about the house in cooking, washing, cleaning, bedmaking and such other duties as usually are discharged by the weaker sex, he is approached by some maiden who has "laid eyes on him"; a few words are spoken, perhaps kisses interchanged, and the bargain is completed. Such embarrassing duties as "asking ma and pa" and those incidents peculiar to courtship in other localities are quite unnecessary at Llangwm. The marriage ceremony is of the simplest character, and no such thing as a honeymoon is allowed. The youth settles himself down to his life job and is happy so long as he does not become entangled with the heads of other households.

The Llangwm maiden is an expert fisherwoman. She rises early and braves all weathers. She not only catches her fish, but sells it in the neighboring towns. She is usually stronger than the average champion oarsman and can row with almost as much skill.

Of course, the wife is the chancellor of the exchequer in this strange community. As she earns the money, she naturally feels competent to spend it to the best advantage. Indeed, the husband, known among fishwives as "my man," is not considered sufficiently elevated to buy his own Sunday clothes. The domestic fisherwoman queen selects such garments as may suit her taste, and from her decision there is no appeal.

In religious matters the Llangwmians are extremely straitlaced. Dancing, card-playing and novel reading are absolutely barred. No intoxicating liquor can be obtained in the place, for years ago inhabitants revolted against the opening of an inn.

In the house conversation is not allowed during meals, and although newspapers are sometimes brought in they are hidden away from Saturday night until Monday morning. The villages look askance at all strangers picking their way along the narrow street and stigmatize them as foreigners.

Perfect Birds Live Longest.

The more perfect a bird is racially, that is, the further it has advanced along the lines of evolution of the bird group, the longer lived it will be. That is the opinion of Director Mitchell of the London Zoological gardens. Typical birds, therefore, must be the raven, which has been known to live 69 years; the eagle owl, 68; the mute swan, 70; the domestic goose, 80; the gray parrot, 93; the sulphur crested cockatoo, 81; the Amazon, 102; the golden eagle, 104; the Egyptian vulture, 118. Of course, these are not the average ages of these species.

Keen Business Woman.

Mrs. Ellen Rose of Buena Vista, Pennsylvania, is carrying on a unique business for a woman—pumping sand and coal from the bottom of the Susquehanna river. Although Mrs. Rose has passed her seventieth year she directs her force of fifteen workmen personally, going out with them every morning and visiting them several times a day to see that everything is going right.

Defective Page

SERIAL STORY

No Man's Land

A ROMANCE

By Louis Joseph Vance

Illustrations by Ray Walters

(Copyright, 1910, by Louis Joseph Vance.)

12

SYNOPSIS.

Garrett Coast, a young man of New York City, meets Douglas Blackstock, who invites him to a card party. He accepts, although he dislikes Blackstock, the reason being that both are in love with Katherine Thaxter. Coast fails to convince her that Blackstock is unworthy of her friendship. At the party Coast meets two named Dundas and Van Tuyl. There is a quarrel, and Blackstock shoots Van Tuyl dead. Coast struggles to wrest the weapon from him, thus the police discover them. Coast is arrested for murder. He is convicted, but as he begins his sentence, Dundas names Blackstock as the murderer and kills himself. Coast becomes free, but Blackstock has married Katherine Thaxter and fled. Coast purchases a yacht and while sailing sees a man thrown from a distant boat. He rescues the fellow who is named Appleyard. They arrive at a lonely island, known as No Man's Land. Coast starts out to explore the place and comes upon some deserted buildings. He discovers a man dead. Upon going further and approaching a house he sees Katherine Thaxter.

CHAPTER IX.—(Continued.)

"By boat," he returned stupidly, only irritated by this persistence in raising what to him, in his humor of the moment, seemed trivial and inconsequent issues—"my boat. We got lost and ran aground in the fog last night. I came ashore to try to find out where we were."

"Then you have escaped!" She went directly to the sole explanation of his presence there that lay within her understanding.

"Escaped?" He shook his head, not in negation but testily. "Yes, of course; or I shouldn't be here." It was plain enough to him that he had escaped the fate to which he had been sentenced. To what else could she refer? "But you—he—that dog Blackstock—I want to know—"

"Garrett!" she cried sharply; and he fell silent beneath the challenge of her eyes. "Mr. Blackstock is my husband. "Please," she continued, more gently, "don't forget that."

"Is it likely?" he sneered. "But where is he? What made him leave you here?"

"Garrett!"

Her tone would have warned him, but he was able to see but one thing, the conclusion to which his reason, spurred by his inclination to credit the worst to the man, had jumped the moment he realized her existence in surroundings so foreign to her kind: that Blackstock, true to type, having persuaded Katherine to their clandestine marriage and gained his end, the control of her little fortune, had abandoned her even as he had abandoned Dundas, even as he would have discarded an old shoe or anything that had served his purpose and worn out its usefulness to him, leaving her to languish in this forlorn and desolate spot, out of his way and out of the world's way. . . . He hesitated to collect his wits, then pursued doggedly:

"Tell me where to find him," he said, his voice shaking—"give me the least hint to go by, Katherine, and I'll—I'll hunt him down, wherever he may be, I'll bring him back, I'll—" In his agitation he verged on incoherence.

Quietly but effectively the woman brought him to his senses. "I shall have to ask you not to continue in that tone," she said with disconcerting dignity. "You must not misconstrue matters arbitrarily to suit your prejudice. My husband has not left me, as you insist; there is no need for you to contemplate 'hunting him down.' He is here."

"Here!" Involuntarily Coast's glance veered to the house, suspicious and alert.

"On this island," she affirmed.

"What island?" he demanded, turning back to her.

"No Man's Land."

He accepted this confirmation of his conjecture with an inconclusive, "Oh?"

"You didn't know—?" she asked, incredulous.

"How should I know?"

She watched him, distrustful. "You didn't come here on purpose . . .?"

"It was chance," he asserted. None the less an unformed suspicion involving Appleyard crossed his mind. He considered, rejected and forgot it all in a breath.

"We bought the island last spring . . ."

"Yes," he said listlessly

Her nervousness drove her on in rambling, inconsecutive and unnecessary explanation: "After we returned from Germany, on account of Douglas' eyes. . . . He is quite blind, you know, and the shock of losing his sight almost prostrated him. He is permitted no excitement, no social life—just peace and such mental employment as his work affords. So we heard of this place, looked it up and bought it. The Standard Wireless people installed an experiment station for his use. But it isn't generally known—the vice-president of the company, one of his best friends, managed it all for us. The necessity for seclusion, you understand . . . Even the servants know him only as Mr. Black."

"I understand," he said in an expressionless tone. "And this"—he nodded toward the farmhouse—"is your home?"

"Not exactly." Already she was regretting the intimacy her breathless explanation had implied. She hesitated, seeming reluctant to continue. "We—Douglass and I—occupy two rooms of the bungalow, where the wireless station is, up on the hill. There are no facilities for housekeeping, so we come here for our meals. The servants live here—and Mr. Power, my husband's assistant."

He looked away from her, avoiding her eyes, while the struggle for mastery of self went on within him. To make time, "You—you don't find it lonely?" he asked.

She shook her head.

"And yet—cut off from the world—I should think—"

"I have sufficient to occupy me," she interrupted. "And we're not wholly out of touch. A boat brings us provisions and whatever else we may require from New Bedford every week."

"You see the papers, then?" he asked with a trace of eagerness.

"No; they are prohibited—doctor's orders."

"And no one writes you?"

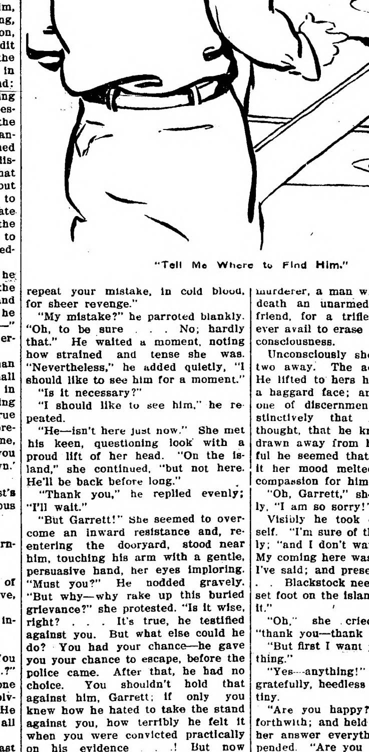
"Nobody knows where we are . . ."

"An admirable arrangement: I congratulate Mr. Blackstock," Coast commented—contemptibly, he felt.

She gave him a look of slow, withering scorn. "Do you think he fears you?"

"Me? O!" He laughed shortly. "Probably not."

"Why should he? We both know you too well to believe you would—repeat your mistake, in cold blood, for sheer revenge."



"Tell Me Where to Find Him."

"My mistake?" he parroted blankly. "Oh, to be sure . . . No; hardly that." He waited a moment, noting how strained and tense she was. "Nevertheless," he added quietly, "I should like to see him for a moment."

"Is it necessary?"

"I should like to see him," he repeated.

"He—isn't here just now." She met his keen, questioning look with a proud lift of her head. "On the island," she continued, "but not here. He'll be back before long."

"Thank you," he replied evenly; "I'll wait."

"But Garrett!" She seemed to overcome an inward resistance and, reentering the dooryard, stood near him, touching his arm with a gentle, persuasive hand, her eyes imploring. "Must you?" He nodded gravely. "But why—why rake up this buried grievance?" she protested. "Is it wise, right? . . . It's true, he testified against you. But what else could he do? You had your chance—he gave you your chance to escape, before the police came. After that, he had no choice. You shouldn't hold that against him, Garrett; if only you knew how he hated to take the stand against you, how terribly he felt it when you were convicted practically on his evidence . . .! But now that it's all over and past remedy, wouldn't it be better not to reopen that old wound? Kinder, Garrett, and more generous . . . to me? You are free, can go where you will . . ." She broke off with an anxious thought: "The detectives don't know where to look for you?"

"What? No." He laughed aloud, but mirthlessly "Oh, no, I gave them the slip some time ago."

"I'm glad. But now, please, Garrett, won't you give this up. . . ."

She said more, much more, continuing to plead with him in a fever of distress, able only to thing, that she mus
the encounter he d rapid, stumbling ac meaningless in his which seemed to
by this revelation c
She had said enough face to face with famous fact that sh blood-guilty, still h lieved Blackstock.
shake his wits toget herently, but to lit
the world was mad
—a mad, mad world,
was false, faith wa
tice parodied, hono
For a little he felt hung in the balanc
tween wild laughter
tears. If man can Coast was near to it
And Katherine, w
citement as evidence of his features, his hands so tightly c nails (she thought) deep into his palm that he no longer lis
She ceased to sp
hoping against hop deemed the best.
He was (so ran h
tracted, like wild th not reasonably to be count for his attitu for his actions. In there must inevitab lacking, something consciousness of righ ability to distinguis that rudder of the charity she must acc
If her eyes told h
a man than the Gar (and she saw him n flush of health and w weather-seasoned;
strength and vitalit vision clothed him
abnormality like a s repellent. He figure murderer, a man w death an unarmed friend, for a trifle ever avail to erase consciousness.
Unconsciously sh
two away. The a
He lifted to hers h a haggard face; an one of discernmen stinctively that thought, that he kn drawn away from h ful he seemed that it her mood melte compassion for him
"Oh, Garrett," sh
ly, "I am so sorry!"
Visibly he took self. "I'm sure of t
ly; "and I don't wa
My coming here was
I've said; and prese
. . Blackstock nee set foot on the islan
it."
"Oh," she crie
"thank you—thank
"But first I want thing."
"Yes—anything!"
gratefully, heedless tiny.
"Are you happy?
forthwith; and held her answer everyth pended. "Are you
Blackstock?"
It was like cold
She gasped and straight and slim right have you to as
"None but that of you once, and who not loves you st
may think him, Kath (TO BE CON

A Surr
Every tr
you suppose any
The do

The Northern Light

CHAS. W. LATTA

Editor and Publisher.

Published every Friday at Holt, Marshall County, Minnesota.

Subscription Price: $1.00 per year, strictly in advance.

Entered as second-class matter Sept. 22, 1911, at the post office at Holt, Minnesota, under the act of March 3, 1879.

Be a booster—not a knocker.

Governor Eberhart is credited with holding the belief that he is a man of destiny. We believe he is, but we dont believe the destiny is just the kind he thinks it is.

Congress is enjoying a holiday vacation. It is to be hoped that all the members will resume their duties filled with a resolution to give the people some relief regardless of politics.

The old year is almost spent and the new year is at hand. It is worth while to look backward long ong enough to fix in mind some of the mistakes we have made and then begin the new year with a new grip on things and a firm determination to do better, both for ourselves and our fellow mortals.

The Duluth Herald has made the discovery that the state of Minnesota is completely under the control of the Republican machine, and says: "it is getting to be time that somebody made a test of the strength of this organization, and that somebody made the experiment of trying to win a fight in Minnesota with the special interests against him and only the people behind him."

Polk county made the experiment last year and elected an anti-organization senator in spite of the special interests and their boodle. If the Herald wants to enlighten the public on how to fight the organization it can find lots to tell if it will get posted up on the Polk county campaign.

Notice for Bids

Sealed bids will be received by the undersigned up to January 15th, 1912, for the filling and packing the ice house at the Holt creamery with ice. All ice must be clean and free from sun eating.

The board reserves the right to reject any and all bids.

Farmers' Co-Operative Creamery Company.

J. A. Sorum, Secretary.

Scholarship for Sale Cheap

We have for sale, cheap for cash, a scholarship good for three months tuition in Crookston College, and for any subject at any time. It is worth $30 but will be sold for considerably less as we need the cash.

Call or address The Northern Light, Holt, Minn.

Farms Wanted.

I have prospective buyers for a few good improved farms; also for 960 acres of wild land. All must be in eastern Marshall county.

Chas. W. Latta, Holt, Minn.

Enamelled kitchenware at Kollen's. Triple coated, white lined and the best bargains you ever knew, 10 and 69 cents only, while they last.

We want more subscribers and will take potatoes, chickens, or wood at current market prices on subscription. Of course we prefer the money, but if you haven't the cash bring on the produce. Dont be without your home paper anyway.

Crookston College has placed all its graduates in positions. The demand for office help has been greater than we could supply. School is in session all year. You can begin at any time of year. Good board and furnished room, taken care of in private family, for $3 per week. Send for catalog. Address J. C. Sathre, Crookston, Minn.

Subscribe for The Northern Light. Only $1.00 per year.

Notice of Contest.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
United States Land Office.
Crookston, Minnesota, December 6, 1911.

To Brodie Watson, of Grygla, Minnesota, Contestee:

You are hereby notified that Tidman L. Bjella, who gives Bemidji, Minnesota, as his post-office address, did on November 22, 1911, file in this office his duly corroborated application to contest and secure the cancellation of your Homestead, Entry No. Serial No. 05149, made March 22, 1910, for W½ SW¼, N½ NW¼, Section 8, Township 155 N., Range 39 W., 5th Prin. Meridian, and as grounds for his contest he alleges that said Brodie Watson has wholly abandoned said land for more than six months next prior to this contest and that he has never improved said land in any respect and never cultivated the same as required by law.

You are, therefore, further notified that the said allegations will be taken by this office as having been confessed to by you, and your said entry will be cancelled thereunder without your further right to be heard therein, either before this office or on appeal, if you fail to file in this office within twenty days after the FOURTH publication of this notice, as shown below, your answer, under oath, specifically meeting and responding to these allegations of contest, or if you fail within that time to file in this office due proof that you have served a copy of your answer on the said contestant either in person or by registered mail. If this service is made by the delivery of a copy of your answer to the contestant in person, proof of such service must be either the contestant's written acknowledgement of his receipt of the copy, showing the date of its receipt, or the affidavit of the person by whom the delivery was made stating when and where the copy was delivered; if made by registered mail, proof of such service must consist of the affidavit of the person by whom the copy was mailed stating when and the postoffice to which it was mailed, and this affidavit must be accompanied by the postmaster's receipt for the letter.

You should state in your answer the name of the post office to which you desire future notices to be sent to you.

JOHN PETTERSON, Receiver.

VAULE & MURPHY
Attorneys for Contestant.

Date of first publication, December 15, 1911.
Date of second publication, December 22, 1911
Date of third publication, December 29, 1911.
Date of fourth publication, January 5, 1912.

A Spunky Poet.

Ramsey Colles in a book about Iceland tells the story of a man whom he met in a public house. This person, without the formality of an introduction, presented himself to Mr. Colles as a poet. He then presented the following as a sample of his manufacture:

You should always keep yer hosses on the go.
You should always keep yer hosses on the go.
The sure and steady pace,
It's that as wins the race
You should always keep yer hosses on the go.

Mr. Colles was not disposed to admit that the improvisatore had made his claim good.

"Why not?" said this person. "Hasn't it more sense than some of the poetry made by Swinburne or Yeats? Yeats wrote:

She brings in the dishes and lays them in a row.
With her to an isle in the water I would go.

"Now," he continued, "why did she lay the dishes in a row instead of one on top of another? Simply because the poet must find a rhyme to 'go. And where on earth should an isle be but in water?"

Inhospitable Siberian Peasants.

The Siberian peasant, and we have stayed or lived in fourteen of his villages and had dealings with another score, is not hospitable. He, or rather his wife, will not dream of cooking any food specially for a well paying guest. It needs a distinct effort to obtain boiled eggs. A plate of soup is more the exception than the rule. Butter and milk are frequently refused in a prosperous agricultural village, and there is no joint of meat or fish. Though earning over 50 shillings a week, a family will eke out existence on bread and tea with an occasional treat of pirotishkies, or hashed meat balls. You pay at a posthouse double the government's scheduled price for victuals, and the man and his wife grumble. In one instance—there is no space to detail more—a woman met us at the door with a saucer we had used, bearing an age old black crack, and demanded money on the ground that we had caused it.—Cor. London Express.

Dogs and Porcupines.

No matter how many lessons a dog has received, it is a peculiarity long noted that it will attack a porcupine every time it is met. A setter or pointer after partridges, just as a half or full blooded hound after deer, will throw himself on a porcupine every time it is seen and immediately set up the same familiar howl of dismay. When cornered the porcupine rolls up into a ball, hiding legs, head and belly and presenting nothing except an animated cactus. It has the faculty of loosening its hold on the quills, which are imbedded in pores in its skin, and they come off and stick to another object at the slightest touch. In fact, so quick is the attack of the dog and so rapidly does he retreat, howling, with muzzle and breast covered with the spines, that many say the hedgehog can throw its quills, but this is nonsense.—Exchange.

Accomplished.

"She's a clever conversationalist."

"Very. She can even make a man who is talking about himself stop to listen."—Detroit Free Press.

Followed the Prescription.

"My doctor said I needed a change."

"And did you act on his advice?"

"Yes. I employed another doctor."—Boston Transcript.

Children have more need of models than of critics.—Joubert.

Smart Business.

The people of a country town not far from Edinburgh received a shock recently, says a London weekly. One day they were startled by a lavish display on the hoardings of posters bearing in large letters the announcement, "He is coming." Who "he" was or when "he" was coming was nowhere stated, and the folks were left in anxiety until a week later, when another display appeared bearing the words, "He is here!" and the public were also informed that "he" was a mysterious wonder who would that night appear at the town hall and perform feats of magic and mystery such as had never been previously witnessed. This was a treat indeed for the inhabitants, and on the night advertised the hall was filled to its utmost capacity. The anxious moment arrived, and up went the curtain. But, to the surprise of the audience, nothing could be seen except a larger poster bearing these words: "He has gone." He had, too, and taken all the admission money with him. Only a few of the victims enjoyed the joke.

Lisbon's Great Earthquake.

Each recurring All Saints' day, the first day of November, recalls to the people of the city of Lisbon the most awful event in the history of that country or indeed in all Europe, the great earthquake of 1755. At 9 o'clock in the morning on a day clear and serene came a hollow rumbling sound, as of thunder, and immediately after the terrible convulsion of the earth which shook down houses and buried or crushed 30,000 persons. Many of the churches were at the time filled with their congregations, and each one became a huge catacomb entombing its worshipers. Twenty-two successive shocks were counted. In the city prison 800 were killed and in the hospital 1,200. The sea retired from the harbor, which it left dry, and then returned in a gigantic wave fifty to sixty feet high, overwhelming many who had escaped the falling houses. It was estimated that in Lisbon and its immediate neighborhood nearly 6,000 persons had perished.

A Strange Incident.

A singular episode marked the visit of the ex-Empress Eugenie to the grave of her son. The journey to Cape Town—it was in 1880—was undertaken when the stricken mother was in feeble health. There she rested and then, with a large party as escort, proceeded north and after a wearisome experience came near to the place where "Lulu" fell, but ordered a halt because she felt herself too weak to proceed. That night, unable to sleep, she wandered from her tent. Aimlessly she strode in the brush till suddenly the fragrance of verbenas, her son's favorite flower, arrested her attention. Guided by the odor, she walked on, but her strength failed, and she fell and was found unconscious by the servants who had followed her. Next day they took her to the grave. It was the spot where she had fainted. The verbenas were there, but they were dead.

He Was In a Hurry.

Charles Monselet in his "Curiosites Litteraries" tells of a friend of his living at Bordeaux who, glancing through a Paris bookseller's catalogue, saw the title of a book which he had vainly sought for thirty years. Looking at the clock, he found there was just time to catch the morning express for Paris. Stopping only to take some money from his cash box, he dashed off to the station and arrived at the bookshop in time to secure the prize. As he wrapped up the book the shopman remarked, "I suppose you live in this street, monsieur." "No; I have just come from Bordeaux," was the reply. The man looked astonished, and the bibliophile discovered that in his eagerness he had traveled 300 miles in dressing gown and slippers and had never noticed any deficiency of attire.

Britain's Tongues.

Within the narrow compass of the British isles no fewer than seven languages are spoken. They are English, Welsh, Erse (in Ireland), Manx (in the Isle of Man, where until recently church services were conducted in that tongue), Gaelic (in Scotland), French in the Channel islands and Cornish in Cornwall. Though the total for his own islands is seven tongues, yet is the Englishman said to be the poorest linguist in the world.

A Preference.

"I shall leave my reputation to be judged by posterity."

"That's a good idea," replied Senator Sorghum. "The way things are going I'd much rather take my chances with posterity than with an investigating committee."—Washington Star.

An Exception.

"Who was it wrote 'Distance lends enchantment to the view?'"

"I don't know, but I'll bet he never sat on the gable end of a house and watched a ball game that was going on two blocks away."—Chicago Record-Herald.

After the Secrets.

"Ma's just crazy to serve on a jury."

"That so?"

"Yes; she says she wants to be one of the first to tell the secrets of the jury room."—Detroit Free Press.

Overdoing It.

"She married him to reform him."

"And what was the result?"

"He's so good now that he's shocked at nearly everything she does."—Boston Transcript.

It is easier for the generous to forgive than for offense to ask it.—Thomson.

A Yankee in the Orient.

Whatever the outcome of the imbroglio between Russia and Persia, Americans will glory in the spunk of their fellow citizen, William Morgan Shuster, in his manly attitude as Persian treasurer general. A Yankee that has the pluck to stand up against England and Russia for the liberty and independence of a weaker nation possesses a double portion of the spirit of '76. Even though Uncle Sam could not mix in and go to his rescue, Mr. Shuster won the unanimous moral support of his countrymen. Not only so, but he gained the respect and applause of many Englishmen, despite the fact that their government was allied with Russia. More to the purpose, he rallied to himself the support of the Persians. For a young man scarcely heard of till the present row made him a central figure in world politics, this represents something of an achievement.

Persia is one of those nations that have recently emerged into constitutionalism and some degree of liberty. As an earnest of her change of heart she chased her former shah out of the country and started to reform things generally. Having need of some one to look after her finances, she applied to the United States and Mr. Shuster was recommended as the man for the place. Those who stood sponsor for him have reason to take pride in their discrimination. Shuster made good. Not only did he handle the finances in a way acceptable to his employers, but he showed himself loyal to the land he was serving in her new spirit of nationalism.

Shuster is simply a victim to the machinations and land greed of Russia, backed by Great Britain, who expects to share in the spoil. That is the whole story as it looks to American eyes.

Having made a thornless blackberry, Luther Burbank is now being appealed to by the French government to create a desertless Sahara. If anybody can do it Burbank is the man. He will probably breed a cross between desert sand and swamp mud, or graft seaweed on to a mirage.

A hangman has turned evangelist. Perhaps the transformation is not so radical as it seems, however. Hanging may be the best thing for some men's souls.

The new way of writing presidential messages should be called the serial story method, or "continued in our next."

Some Solace For the Male.

Despite the advance of woman suffrage, women's clubs, women in business and women generally, there are still some crumbs of comfort for mere man. The census furnishes one. In the United States proper there are 106 males for every 100 females. The exact figures for the whole country, exclusive of Alaska and our island possessions are: Males, 47,332,122; females, 44,640,144.

The proportion of males over females has risen in ten years. At the last census the proportion was 104.4 to 100 as against 1[illegible] to 100 now. The census enumerators ascribe this increase to the large immigration, the natural tendency being for more males to immigrate than females. Yet this alone could not explain the difference, as there was proportionately as great an immigration in the decade prior to 1900 as there has been in the decade since.

The officials of the census bureau have another ingenious theory to account for the masculine excess. It is that at birth the number of males always exceeds the number of females. But in countries where the death rate is high they say that the male mortality is greater than that of the females, and hence an equilibrium is soon struck. Through better health conditions we have lowered the death rate, hence the numerical superiority of the males.

There are some exceptions to the rule. In Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Maryland, North Carolina, South Carolina and the District of Columbia the females are in excess of the males. Among negroes and native whites of foreign parents the same is true. But among native whites and immigrants the men have the best of it—in numbers.

Mexico is now talking reciprocity with the United States. That is all right, but we positively refuse to reduce the import duty on revolutions. And they now seem a standard Mexican crop.

A Staten Island man got into an argument with two guests and broke both of their heads with a hammer. Rather an enthusiastic way of pounding an argument home!

Somebody ought to nominate Mayor Shank of Indianapolis for president. Not only did he reduce the high cost of living, but from his name he should run well.

Several cities are discussing how to get rid of smoke. That is easy. Swear off.

V-I-V-O
The Best there is in Flour.

Our Elevator and Lumber Yard are always prepared to give the most satisfactory service.

Hanson & Barzen Milling Co.,
OSCAR HANSON, Agent, - - HOLT, MINN.

AXEL NELSON
General Blacksmith Work
HOLT, - - MINN.

All work done Right, at Reasonable Prices.

HOUSEWIVES

Do you want to know about a wonderful new time, health and money-saving kitchen convenience?

Then you should see the complete line of "1892" Pure Spun Aluminum Cooking Utensils now on exhibition at your dealers.

This ware is guaranteed by the makers for 25 years. It is absolutely pure, wholesome and thoroughly hygienic, will not crack, scale, peel, break, rust, tarnish, scorch or burn.

PURE ILLINOIS 1892 ALUMINUM THE ORIGINAL
TRADE MARK

It is light weight, easy to handle and easy to clean; makes kitchen work a delight instead of drudgery; saves your money, time, fuel; protects your health against metal poisoning and serious troubles resulting from chipping of small particles into the food, which is one of the dangers from the use of the old style enameled wares.

You buy patent carpet sweepers, egg-beaters, dishwashers, clothes-wringers and many other time and labor saving conveniences, but there is nothing that will prove a greater practical household blessing than the "1892" Pure Spun Aluminum Ware.

Lose no time in seeing for yourself what it will do. Your money back if this ware fails to do what is claimed for it.

S. S. KOLDEN & Co.

THE DULUTH HERALD
BEATS THE CENSUS THREE TO ONE

During the past ten years the population of Duluth increased 48 per cent., St. Paul 32 per cent., and Minneapolis 49 per cent. In the Same Period the Circulation of The Duluth Herald

INCREASED 150 PER CENT.

This marvelous expansion—so much greater than that of the surrounding territory—is due solely to the merits of The Herald. The Herald has never used any kind of premium, contest or price reduction to gain subscribers but prints each day the very best NEWSPAPER in the Northwest. Its editorial page is [illegible] independent and its news columns cover every [illegible] of the world's daily history.

Send for sample copy and get The Herald habit.

THREE MONTHS FOR $1.00—Mailed Daily.

ADDRESS HERALD CIRCULATION DEPT., DULUTH, MINN.

Local Items

The Local Market.

(Grain prices furnished by Hanson & Barzen Milling Co. at close of business every Thursday.)

Flax	$1.94
Wheat	.95
Barley d	.90
Oats	.37
Rye	.77

Bring us the news.

Be a booster—not a knocker.

When in town call at this office and let's get acquainted.

K. O. Flakne is here today from his claim east of Mud Lake.

Mr. and Mrs. Sauter, of Star City, Canada, are visiting with Mrs. Aug. Kuehne.

Nick Baker was a business visitor here from Excel between trains on Tuesday.

Fred Nagel and Mollie Sauter go to Blakely, Minn., today for a short visit with relatives.

The Misses Moen are here from Dakota for a visit at the home of their cousin, H. Fosholm.

A. H. Huseth and family left last Tuesday for Fertile to visit with Mrs. Huseth's relatives and other friends.

Peter L. Anderson spent Christmas with his parents at St. Hilaire and reports having had a most enjoyable time.

Oscar Knudtson was in from Randen last week and returned home on Sunday. His sister, Julia and Edna Risberg went out with him for a brief visit.

Charlie Horian surprised the folks at home by walking in unannounced after some years absence. He has been working in Faribault county but may decide to remain at home.

A boiler explosion at the Evelyn hotel in Thief River Falls this morning blew out the big glass front of the building and bursted the dining room floors. Nobody was seriously injured.

A party of thirty people from town drove out to W. A. Silbaugh's home on Monday evening and completely surprised that gentleman. All were masked and it was some time before the host discovered their identity. They presented Mr. Silbaugh with a fine rocking chair in honor of his birthday anniversary and an elegant oyster supper was served. Mr. and Mrs. P. A. Risberg were awarded the honors for being the best masked couple in the party.

Monson Defeated Kline

Ludvig Monson, the champion wrestler of Holt and the Mud Lake region, won fresh laurels last Friday evening by throwing Bill Kline, who has had an easy time throwing local men and others at Thief River Falls. Monson and Kline wrestled in that city and, altho the latter was considerably heavier and stronger than the Holt boy, he was lacking in speed and science and was beat in just 55 minutes. Monson had secured a scissors hold and had his big opponent's shoulders to the mat, when Kline attempted to break the hold and three of his ribs were broken. The match had to stop and the referee awarded the decision to Monson. Some of the Thief River Falls sports realize Monson's ability and they will try to arrange other matches for him in the near future.

Creamery Statement

Business done by Holt creamery in month of November, 1911. Number of patrons, 48.

Cream received	6,106lbs
Average test	27.48
Butter fat	1,677,98 lbs
Per cent overrun	9.89
Butter made	1,842 lbs
Price paid for fat	33 cts
Balance from last month	$603.72
Received for butter sold	588.49
Total	1192.21
Paid patrons by check	544.21
Expense fund	149.15
Balance	498.85
Total	$1,192.21

J. A. Sorum, Secretary.

Miss Olga Furr came up from Grand Forks, N. D., on Tuesday for a holiday visit at home.

Arvid Carlson intends to leave tomorrow for Duluth for a visit with a brother who he has not seen for several years.

Triple coated enamelled kitchen ware at only 10 cents per piece is a bargain that you never had before. S. S. Kolden & Co.

Ole Storholm, who has been visiting with his daughter, Mrs. Sam Mickelson, left yesterday for a visit with relatives at Crookston.

Mrs. Ed Horian left yesterday for her old home at Easton, in Faribault county for a short visit with her parents. It is ten years or so since she was home and she expects to have a most enjoyable time.

M. A. NELSON, M. D.
Physician and Surgeon
Office over Holt Merc. Co's store
HOLT, MINNESOTA.

M. W. A. Officers

The officers elected by the Holt Camp, M. W. of A. for the ensuing year are as follows:

Consul—C. Schwartz.
Adviser—A. L. Carlson.
Banker—Martin O. Nelson.
Clerk—John C. Davidson.
Escort—Arvid Carlson.
Watchman—Albin Knauf.
Sentry—Svenke Svenkeson.
Trustees—John A. Sorum, Frank Coppay, C. Schwartz.

The installation will take place on Saturday evening; January 6th.

Notice of Annual Meeting

The annual meeting of the stockholders of the Farmers' Co-Operative Creamery Co., of Holt, Minn., will be held at the creamery in Holt on Saturday, January 27, 1912, at 1 o'clock P. M. for the purpose of electing officers for the ensuing year and to transact such other business as may come before the meeting.

J. A. Sorum, Secretary.

Notice for Bids

Sealed bids will be received by the undersigned up to January 15th 1912, for furnishing 20 cords of green, and 15 cords of dry, poplar and tamarac wood to be delivered at the creamery in Holt.

The board reserves the right to reject any and all bids.

Farmers' Co-Operative Creamery Company.

J. A. Sorum, Secretary.

A Snail's Tongue.

A snail eats by rasping off small particles with the tongue. This tongue is a narrow band or ribbon with pointed teeth set in rows across it. The common slug, often found in damp places, has more than 25,000 teeth on the tongue, which act like the ridges on a file and scrape the food into the mouth. I once watched with a magnifying lens a small water snail feeding as it slowly crawled up the side of an aquarium, and, although I made no very accurate count, the tongue seemed to be pressed against the glass about forty times a minute.—Exchange.

Reciprocity.

"Sure," said Patrick, rubbing his head with delight at the prospect of a present, "I always mane to do me duty."

"I believe you," replied his employer, "and therefore I shall make you a present of all you have stolen from me during the year."

"Thank yer honor," replied Pat, "and may all your friends and acquaintances trate you as liberally."—London Telegraph.

The Matrimonial League.

The baseball player gazed softly at her.

"Would you sign with me for the game of life?" he whispered tenderly.

"That will depend somewhat on your batting average and your capacity for making home runs," she replied.—Harper's Weekly.

You Never Can Tell.

Crawford—You spoke of opening a bank account in your wife's name in order to teach her the value of money. How did it turn out? Crabshaw—She used it up to pay a lot of bills I could have staved off for six months.—Lippincott's.

Her Sort.

Alice—What kind of girl has Jack engaged himself to? Rose—Oh, she's the sort of woman you never dare ask to luncheon for fear she'll stay to dinner.—Harper's Bazar.

Little Choice.

"Is there any choice in speculation between the bulls and bears?"

"Well, it is the choice between a tight squeeze and a toss up."—Baltimore American.

If we had no failings ourselves we should not take so much pleasure in finding out those of others.—Rochefoucauld.

Warned In Time.

A soft answer sometimes disarms. A story is told of a landlord on the north shore. A guest, seldom satisfied, came to him and said, "Mr. Smith"—that was not the landlord's name—"Mr. Smith, your coffee is rotten." The landlord shook him by the hand. "Thank you, sir; thank you. I haven't had my breakfast yet, and I'll skip the coffee this time. Much obliged."—Boston Herald.

Complimentary.

Uncle Tom—Have you named your dog yet, Harry? Harry—Sure thing. I named him after you. Uncle Tom—That's not very complimentary, is it? Harry—Oh, well, he hasn't got sense enough to know the difference.—Chicago News.

Legend of the "Mouth of Truth."

In front of the old basilica of Santa Maria in Cosmedin, at Rome, there is an enormous block of marble, resembling a huge face with a widely gaping mouth. It is called the Bocca della Verita, or "mouth of truth," and in the days of ancient Rome the legend ran that if any one who had told a lie placed his or her hand within that yawning cavity the jaw would descend and cut it off. The Bocca della Verita is a large round stone of white marble about five yards in circumference. It is pierced with two holes representing eyes, an opening for a mouth, a slightly raised nose, and two locks of hair are carved on each side of the forehead. The stone is of great antiquity, and, according to some, it was laid on the altar of Jove, and those suspected of perjury were led to it and obliged to confess by much the same threats as are used to children now. It is most likely, however, that the stone served as a sluice to some ancient sewer, for others like it, used for this purpose by the Romans, have been found.—Wide World Magazine.

Kindness to Animals.

Far out on the very edge of town is a little schoolhouse, the first and second grades of which are commanded by a pretty little normal school graduate. Her pupils are all sons and daughters of the warmer sort of impulsive foreigners and have all reached a state of adoration for their queen and vie with each other in ways to please her. One day she had dwelt especially upon loving and caring for dumb animals. The next day little Pietro remained in his seat when his schoolmates dropped out to play. Teacher was busy at her desk and did not notice him until she felt a little fist tugging at her sleeve.

"Why, Pietro," she exclaimed, "what is the trouble?"

"Nothin', teacher. I just wanted to tell you how I was good to dumb animals yesterday," he promptly replied.

"Why, isn't that nice? Pietro, just what did you do?"

Pietro drew himself up to his full three feet and proudly asserted:

"I kissed the cat."—San Francisco Chronicle.

Inertia of Bodies.

Lay a visiting card on the tip of the left forefinger and on it place a penny. A quick flick of the card with the right second finger will remove the card without disturbing the coin. Another trick which illustrates the inertia of bodies is to knock away the bottom of a pile of draftsmen without upsetting the pile. This is effected quite easily with the help of a flat ruler. The remaining draftsmen are removed successively by a number of smart blows.

A more spectacular and apparently risky trick consists of drawing a newspaper away from under a glass filled with water. Provided, however, that the table is smooth and the paper be pulled away smartly and horizontally there is no danger of the water being spilled. A certain well known conjurer is able to remove the tablecloth from under knives, glasses, plates, etc., as laid for a meal without disarranging them or doing any damage.

Proof of a Conspiracy.

The following story is told in explanation of the reason why the teaching of chemistry in Turkish schools was forbidden some years ago. It had been proposed that this science should be added to the curriculum, but the first thing that struck the eyes of the ruler of the faithful on opening an elementary textbook of chemistry was the formula for water, H2O. "Here," said the sultan, "is proof of a conspiracy to undermine my authority in the eyes of my subjects. H two O! That's nothing but a sly way of intimating that Hamid II. is a naught."

Start the New Year Right!

We're going to start it with a Big Special Sale on

RUBBERS and OVERSHOES

During next week we will make a special reduction of 10 per cent on everything in these lines in order to close out our present stock. All New, strictly High-grade Goods. Your opportunity is here to get Real Bargains in these lines.

HOLT MERCANTILE Co.,
"The Big New Store"

We wish you a Happy and Prosperous New Year

We would also remind you that we are still offering some Exceptional Bargains in Hardware and Furniture. Come in and let us show you that our prices will really save money for you.

S. S. KOLDEN & Co.
HOLT, - - MINNESOTA

D. B. Bakke, Pres. S. S. Kolden, Vice-pres.

HOLT STATE BANK

Incorporated 1910. Resources over $50,000

We have a limited amount of the five and ten Kroner Scandinavian money on hand special for this season of the year. We also issue foreign money orders on all parts of the world.

The past season has, no doubt, been a successful one for you and we cordially invite you to place your hard earned cash on deposit with this bank. By placing the money with us you have the right to draw it out at any time you may need it regardless whether left solely as a time deposit or subject to check; and, in case you have no immediate use for it, we will pay you 4 per cent interest on a time deposit left for a period of six months and 5 per cent for twelve months.

Think it over. Nothing to worry about. Your money earning money for you without any more exertion on your part than to step into the bank and draw your interest at every terminal period, whether six or twelve months.

B. L. BACKE, Cashier.

Red Lake Falls Milling Co.

Makers of the Celebrated
Mascot Fl0ur
and bUYERS of all kinds of GRAIN.

Our Elevator will give you satisfaction.

OLE MATSON, Agent - - - Holt, Minn.

The Evergreen Hotel
P. A. RESBERG, PROP.

Rates, $1.00 per day.
Serves the best Meal in Eastern Marhall Co. for twenty-five cents.

Livery and Feed Barn in connection.

Bring us your Job Printing orders

Thousands Now Use This Low-Cost Cough Syrup

A Family Supply for 50c, Saving You $2—The Quickest, Best Thing You Ever Used, or Money Refunded.

The prompt and positive results given by this inexpensive cough medicine have caused it to be used in more homes in the U. S. and Canada than any other cough remedy. It gives instant relief and will usually wipe out the most obstinate, deep-seated cough inside of 24 hours. It quickly succeeds, even in whooping cough and croup.

A 50-cent bottle of Pinex, when mixed with home-made sugar syrup, makes a full pint—a family supply—of the most pleasant and effective cough remedy that money could buy, at a saving of $2. Easily prepared in five minutes—full directions in package.

Children take Pinex Cough Syrup willingly, because it tastes good. It stimulates the appetite and is slightly laxative—both excellent features. Splendid for hoarseness, throat tickle, bronchitis, etc., and a prompt, successful remedy for incipient lung trouble.

Pinex is a special and highly concentrated compound of imported Norway White Pine extract and is rich in guaiacol and other natural healing pine elements. Simply mix it with sugar syrup or strained honey, in a pint bottle, and it is ready for use.

Pinex has often been imitated, but never successfully, for nothing else will produce the same results. The genuine is guaranteed to give absolute satisfaction or money refunded. Certificate of guarantee is wrapped in each package. Your druggist has Pinex or will gladly get it for you. If not, send to The Pinex Co., 238 Main St., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

THE RUB.

Judge—Don't you know that you should try and make your married life pleasant, like our first parents? Adam never quarreled with Eve.

Prisoner—Dat's berry true, jedge, but yo' see Adam didn't have no mother-in-law.

BURNING ITCH WAS CURED

"I deem it my duty to tell about a cure that the Cuticura Soap and Ointment have made on myself. My trouble began in splotches breaking out right in the edge of my hair on the forehead, and spread over the front part of the top of my head from ear to ear, and over my ears which caused a most fearful burning itch, or eczema.

"For three years I had this terrible breaking out on my forehead and scalp. I tried our family doctor and he failed to cure it. Then I tried the Cuticura Soap and Ointment and used them for two months with the result of a complete cure. Cuticura Soap and Ointment should have the credit due, and I have advised a lot of people to use them." (Signed) C. D. Tharrington, Creek, N. C., Jan. 26, 1911.

Itching Scalp—Hair Fell Out.

"I will say that I have been suffering with an itching on my scalp for the past few years. My hair fell out in spots all over my head. My scalp started to trouble me with sores, then the sores healed up, and crusts formed on the top. Then the hair fell out and left me three bald spots the shape of a half dollar. I went to more than one doctor, but could not get any relief, so I started to use the Cuticura Remedies. I tried one bar of Cuticura Soap and some Cuticura Ointment, and felt relieved right away. Now the bald spots have disappeared, and my hair has grown, thanks to the Cuticura Soap and Ointment. I highly recommend the Cuticura Remedies to all that are suffering with scalp trouble." (Signed) Samuel Stern, 236 Floyd St., Brooklyn, N. Y., Feb. 7, 1911. Although Cuticura Soap and Ointment are sold by druggists and dealers everywhere, a sample of each, with 32-page book, will be mailed free on application to "Cuticura," Dept. 9 K, Boston.

Danger.

Edmund Lamy the skating champion, said the other day at Saranac Lake: "Skating on thin ice is very, very dangerous. I heard two sisters—daughters of an aged millionaire widower—talking the other day about it.

"'Did you hear about poor pa's heroism?' the first sister said. 'That beautiful young chorus girl, Tottie Tights, broke through the ice this morning, and pa plunged in and rescued her.'

"The second sister bit her lip. 'Well!' she said. 'How dreadful! Now we'll have to rescue pa.'"

A Plea Rejected.

"I made a mistake," said Plodding Pete. "I told that man up the road I needed a little help 'cause I was lookin' fur me family from whom I had been separated fur years."

"Didn't that make him come across?"

"He couldn't see it. He said dat he didn't know my family, but he wasn't goin' to help in bringing any such trouble on 'em."

The miserablest day we live there's many a better thing to do than dying. —Darley.

New Year's in Washington

BY EDWARD B. CLARK

COPYRIGHT BY WRIGHT A. PATTERSON

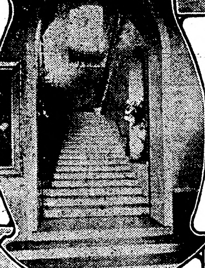
THE practice of New Year's Day calling is said to be a heritage of the American people from the early Dutch fathers and mothers on Manhattan Island. Therefore it is of northern origin, but it has a firmer hold on the South today than it has in many places in the North. In Washington, the capital, New Year's calling seemingly is a fixed habit. Custom has given it virtually the force of law, and the Washington people do not wish to be considered in any way law-breakers.

The president of the United States holds the earliest New Year's Day reception. It is in the broadest sense a public reception, for every American of whatever creed, color or station in life is welcomed into the big White House to greet the chief executive and his wife, who by custom as fixed as that of the holiday calling, is known as "the first lady in the land." The "wedding garment" is not necessary for the visitor at the White House on the first day of the year. The callers come literally some in rags and some in velvet gowns.

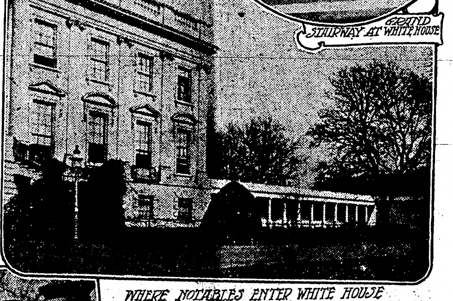
The president by force of the custom-law of precedence is obliged to divide his reception into two parts, one for officialdom and one for the "laity." Precedence would not be such a powerful thing in Washington were it not for the presence here of so many foreigners to whom precedence is everything. The representatives of foreign governments would take instant offense and also would take means to show it if they were not given the exact place in line to which their service rank entitles them. There is one thing which foreigners have to forget while in the diplomatic service. Their social rank at home counts for nothing in diplomatic circles. Length of service is the only thing which is given consideration in establishing precedence except, of course, that ambassadors rank ministers, irrespective of the time they have been in the diplomatic employment. New Year's Day President Taft seeks his office and transacts such business as is absolutely necessary. Ordinary official matters must wait the coming of the second day of the year for consideration. When the first office duties of the morning are over the president returns to the White House proper, where he takes his place in the big east room with his wife at his right hand. By the special invitation of Mrs. Taft the wives of some of the more prominent officials of Washington, with some of her close acquaintances among the resident Washington families, are asked to become members of the receiving party. The cabinet women always are present at the White House reception, taking their places at the right of Mrs. Taft in order of cabinet rank. The wife of the secretary of state takes the first place, and the wife of the secretary of commerce and labor the last place. Cabinet positions rank in the order of the creation of the departments.

WHERE SECRETARY KNOX RECEIVES DIPLOMATS NEW YEAR'S

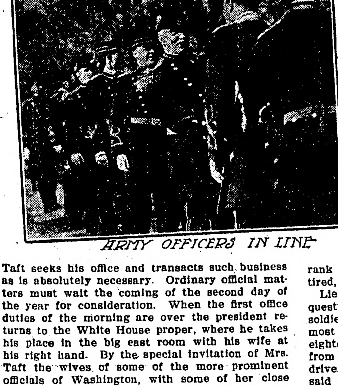
WHERE PRESIDENT RECEIVES NEW YEAR'S CALLERS



GRAND STAIRWAY AT WHITE HOUSE



WHERE NOTABLES ENTER WHITE HOUSE ON NEW YEARS



ARMY OFFICERS IN LINE

With the president and in full uniform are the young army officer and navy officer aides. It is Major Archibald Butt of the army who is Mr. Taft's chief personal military attendant. It is Major Butt's duty to repeat the name of each guest as he or she is presented to the president, and a hard duty it is, for the major must catch every whispered name as the visitor gives it to him and catch it correctly, for if he makes a mistake he is likely to give offense to some person who thinks that his name ought to be known even without the asking. Major Butt's position carries with it cares to make a man's hair grow white over night.

At eleven o'clock in the morning the official procession begins. For an hour it has been forming outside the White House, for the lines of the visitors are long, being made up as they are of senior and junior officials of some hundreds of departments, divisions, bureaus and sub-bureaus of the government.

The president receives the diplomatic corps in a sense separately. The foreigners rank by themselves and anything like a chance to give offense is avoided by treating diplomacy as an entity separate from American officialdom. The diplomats are all garbed in the dress of their rank and some of them are fearfully and wonderfully garbed, wearing in some cases high boots, the soft leather of which falls over from the tops in more or less graceful folds, tight trousers, sometimes white, sometimes blue and on occasion red, and cloaks trimmed with costly furs. With some of the foreigners the sword is an inseparable companion when full dress is worn.

The cabinet comes first, headed by Secretary of State Philander C. Knox. The members of the supreme court and the members of both houses of congress follow with army and navy officers in their handsome dress uniforms treading fast on their heels. Some one might ask why the army and navy do not take precedence of the civilian officials at New Year's receptions and other formal functions. To get the answer to the question it is only necessary to remember that in a republic the military power is always supposed to be subordinate to the civil power. The army ranks the navy because it was of earlier creation. The highest ranking officers of the army today are the lieutenant generals of the service, all of whom are now on the retired list, but their rank holds, nevertheless, because, although retired, they are still in the military service.

Lieutenant General Nelson A. Miles, who unquestionably is the best-known living American soldier, resides in Washington. He still takes a most active interest in government affairs. About eighteen months ago the general was thrown from his horse while riding along the Potomac drive. Miles is a splendid horseman and it is said that his mishap was the first of the kind which had happened to him in all the years of his service. It was feared that he would die from his injuries, but his splendid natural constitution, reinforced by the strength which comes from an abstemious life and from campaigning in the free air of the fields, helped him on to rapid recovery. He shows no sign today of the accident.

The first officer in the holiday line of the soldiers still on the active list of the army is Major General Leonard Wood, now the chief of staff of the United States army. Only fourteen years ago Wood was a surgeon of the service, ranking as a captain. He became colonel of Rough Riders through the influence of Theodore Roosevelt, and later McKinley made him a brigadier general of the line, from which position he rose to be a major general. By the deaths or the retirements of ranking major generals, Wood is now at the head of the army.

There are three hundred army officers stationed in Washington. Every one of them, unless on sick report, is compelled to be in line at the New Year's reception. A few days before the holiday an order is issued by the general commanding that all officers of the District of Columbia subject to duty shall pay their respects to the president of the United States on the morning of the year's first day. If an officer fails to put in an appearance he is likely to be called to account for disobedience, a serious offense. The army in its commissioned ranks is represented in Washington by details to general staff, to quartermaster, to commissary, to ordnance, to engineer and to artillery work. Moreover, there are many officer students in the city who are taking "strategy" courses at the war colleges.

The highest ranking officer of the active list of either armed service in Washington today is Admiral George Dewey. He holds his active rank for life. He is long past the general retiring age which is fixed for the navy at sixty-two years, but an act creating him full admiral carried with it the delegated right to remain on the active list as long as he should choose. Dewey is still in active service, although he no longer goes to sea. There is no army officer of equal rank with Dewey. An admiral ranks with a general and there has been no full general of the service since the days of the last great trio—Grant, Sherman and Sheridan.

The official visitors to the White House on New Year's Day form in separate lines, the members of each department of government taking positions by themselves. The lines radiate from the front door of the executive mansion in a dozen different directions. The multitude of officials and sub-officials is so great that it would seem it would take hours for the president to greet each of Uncle Sam's servants separately and to call him by name, but the arrangements are perfect for expediting the line of march past what might be called the reviewing stand.

In two hours at the most the last official has been greeted and then the "laymen" are admitted to the presidential presence. Year after year thousands of Washington residents and visitors from afar take advantage of the holiday to shake the president's hand and to exchange a word of greeting. Men, women and children are in the line. Some of the men in frock coats and silk hats, some of the women in fetching morning apparel, but for the most part it is the workaday portion of the populace which files into the great east room to say the Happy New Year word. Colored people are numerous, for in Washington they form at least one-third of the population, and many of them seek the White House on the holiday. It is a picturesque crowd and one well worth watching for the charm of the human interest which it holds.

As soon as the White House reception is over the women of the cabinet retire to their own homes, where in turn they hold receptions to which everybody is welcome. The wives of nearly all the public officials also keep open house on the afternoon of New Year's Day. The White House reception is the only one given by the president during the year which is in every sense a public reception. No one is barred from admittance. The holiday reception is followed by four semi-public receptions given in the evening, and to these admission is only by card.

So it is that only once in the year is it possible for every American to call at the White House and be certain of a personal greeting from the president.

We greet you with a hearty hail,
  A welcome of the best;
We bring fond hopes of friendly deeds,
  And that you'll do the rest.
We usher in your coming reign
  With fealty and cheer,
And heart to heart, give royal start
  To you, our glad New Year.

What are you bringing unto us,
  This welcome to return?
What's hidden in your secret hands,
  Fate fortunate or stern?
What are the words of destiny
  You'll speak for us to hear?
Oh, bring you good or bring you ill,
  As on you go, New Year?

You will not speak—the secret's safe,
  Your lips are firmly sealed,
And not on threshold of your reign,
  Are they to be revealed.
Yet will you not, to human will
  A pliant friend appear,
And let us shape some part of you,
  Oh, promising New Year?

THE CAUSE.

DRUG DRUG STORE
PHIL JOYCE

Eph—What were de mattah wif Sal an' dat drug clerk?

Rufus—Why, she wanted some complexion powder an' he done gib her powdered charcoal.

More.

First Kid—My papa's got so much money he don't know how to spend it.

Second Kid—That's nothing. My papa's got so much money that mamma can't even spend it.

$125 net per Acre from Cucumbers

Mr. R. D. Hudson, on his farm in Neuces County in the Gulf Coast Country of Texas and Louisiana, averages $125.00 an acre net profit on his cucumbers. He planted them in February and marketed them in March.

Think of it—enough profit in two months to more than pay for the land, and 10 months left in which to grow two other crops.

Two and three crops a year is not unusual in the Gulf Coast Country of Texas and Louisiana for they have twelve months of growing weather.

Making money down there is not difficult. Any man with ordinary intelligence can make good in the Gulf Coast Country of Texas and Louisiana. Thousands of men have left the stores, offices, and factories of the north to go down there to lead an independent, out-of-door life. They enjoy being their own boss, and piling up their own bank account feels good to them.

Better look into this

Investigate! Go down there this fall or winter. See and talk to these growers. Then you will realize the big opportunities open to you. The trip by the Frisco will alone be worth the little cost of going. Excursion fares via the Frisco, the first and third Tuesdays of each month, make the trip inexpensive. The Frisco Lines operate splendid, electric lighted, all steel trains, daily, from Chicago, St. Louis, Kansas City, Birmingham and New Orleans. These trains carry through cars, daily, and on excursion days, through tourist sleeper to the Gulf Coast Country.

3 Splendid Books FREE

One on the Mid-Coast country of Texas, one on the lower irrigated sections of the Rio Grande Valley and one on Louisiana, all beautifully illustrated, showing scenes in actual colors. They describe the country and crops from one end to the other, giving examples of success and personal statements by men who have gone there and made good. Write for your free copies today, while you think of it.

FRISCO LINES

A. HILTON, General Passenger Agent,
537 Frisco Building, St. Louis, Mo.

Splendid Crops

In Saskatchewan (Western Canada)

800 Bushels from 20 acres of wheat was the thresher's return from a Lloydminster farm in the season of 1910. Many fields in that as well as other districts yielded from 25 to 35 bushels of wheat to the acre. Other grains in proportion.

160 ACRE FARMS IN WESTERN CANADA FREE

LARGE PROFITS are thus derived from the FREE HOMESTEAD LANDS of Western Canada.

This excellent showing causes prices to advance. Land values should double in two years' time. Grain growing, mixed farming, cattle raising and dairying are all profitable. Free Homesteads of 160 acres are to be had in the very best districts; 160 acre pre-emptions at $3.00 per acre within certain areas. Schools and churches in every settlement, climate unexcelled, soil the richest; wood, water and building material plentiful. 59

For particulars as to location, low settlers' railway rates and descriptive illustrated pamphlet, "Last Best West," and other information, write to Sup't of Immigration, Ottawa, Canada, or to Canadian Government Agent.

CHAS. PILLING
Clifford Block Grand Forks, N. Dak.
Please write to the agent nearest you

Don't Persecute Your Bowels

Cut out cathartics and purgatives. They are brutal, harsh, unnecessary. Try

CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS

Purely vegetable. Act gently on the liver, eliminate bile, and soothe the delicate membrane of the bowel. Cure Constipation, Biliousness, Sick Headache and Indigestion, as millions know.

CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS.

SMALL PILL, SMALL DOSE, SMALL PRICE.

Genuine must bear Signature

Brent Good

PISO'S will immediately relieve COUGHS & COLDS

LETHBRIDGE, ALBERTA, SECURES DRY FARMING CONGRESS FOR 1912.

The term, "dry farming" does not indicate all that might be implied. It does not mean a system of irrigation, but one where all the rain fall and precipitation is stored up and conserved in the soil, to be drawn upon by scientific and sane processes when it may be required to forward and increase the growth of grain.

In certain sections of the Canadian West as well as in the American West, there is a portion of the country in which the soil is the very best for the growing of cereals, but the geographical locations and relative position to the rain avenues, do not give the advantage that other parts possess in the matter of precipitation.

Agricultural science, however, has been making rapid progress during the past few years, and it is now ascertained that it is not altogether the number of inches of rain that is essential to the growing of crops, but its conservation, and that is the meaning of "Dry farming." "Dry Farming" may well be applied to districts where there is a heavy rain fall and better results will follow. The education of the public into these new methods, not new exactly, but such as have had satisfactory demonstration, is not alone the purpose of these dry-farming Congresses. One idea is to bring into life and into operation the great areas of splendid land lying within what might be termed semi-arid, without placing them under the restrictive and expansive process of irrigation.

The Congresses are attended by thousands and they bring representatives from all parts of the world. The Province of Alberta, and also of Saskatchewan, has taken a vital interest in the Congresses which have been held in the past two or three years. The Province of Alberta has made provincial exhibits, districts have shown their products, and last year, several hundred dollars were taken in prizes; this year the Province of Alberta took prizes ten to one in excess of any state in the Union. Alberta has won eight out of twenty special cups, that province taking one, Lethbridge one, Arthur Perry six, and John Baxter, Edmonton, carrying off one sweepstakes. When it came to a matter of location for the Congress for 1912, the City of Lethbridge, which had put up a splendid fight for it, secured the Congress by a unanimous vote. It is expected that the Lethbridge Congress will be the largest yet held and will be the biggest convention in the history of Western Canada. In emphasizing his invitation to Lethbridge, one of the speakers said he had just received a telegram from Magrath (near Lethbridge) stating that of one thousand acres of wheat just thrashed Hethershaw and Bradshaw had thrashed 47,000 bushels.

Literature sent out recently by the Canadian Government Agents, which will be sent postage free on application, tells of hundreds of splendid yields in all parts of Western Canada.

NOT COMPLIMENTARY.

Magistrate—You are accused of having kissed this lady. What have you to say in your defense?

Prisoner—Nothing (looking at the woman)—I was drunk and deserve to be punished.

Pantomime Code.

James T. Fields of the firm of Ticknor & Fields wore a flowing beard, as many men of his time did. He was scrupulous in the care of it, and in the main managed it at the table with skill.

His wife was always on watch for him, too, when they went out to dinner together. They had a pantomime code and a few expressive spoken signals. Should a bread crumb catch in the floss Mrs. Fields would say:

"My dear, there's a gazelle in the garden."

Small Comfort.

"You seem cross, Pillsey."

"So I am. A fellow called me a born idiot today."

"That's nothing to worry about. I think it was very considerate of him to blame it on your ancestors."

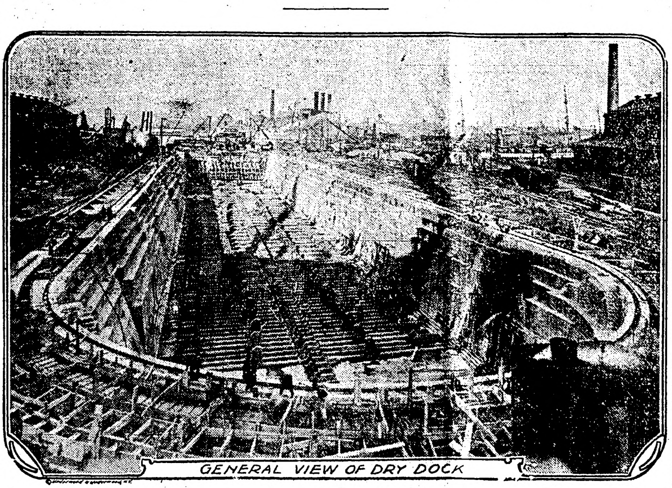
Dr. Pierce's Pellets, small, sugar-coated, easy to take as candy, regulate and invigorate stomach, liver and bowels. Do not gripe.

The wise manicure never hits the nail on the head.

DR. J. H. RINDLAUB (Specialist),
Eye, Ear, Nose and Throat
Fargo, N. D.

Mechanical kisses are the kind women give each other.

LARGEST DRY DOCK ON ATLANTIC COAST



GENERAL VIEW OF DRY DOCK

THE new million-dollar dry dock at the Brooklyn navy yard, which has been in progress of construction for eight years, is the largest on the Atlantic coast. It has been constructed at a cost of $112,000, and is the largest caisson ever built in the United States.

MAKES FUTILE FIGHT

British Naval Officer in Heroic Battle With Waves.

Details of the Drowning of Commander Brine of Battleship St. Vincent, Who Was Washed Overboard During Gale.

London.—When the battleships St. Vincent, Collingwood, Temeraire and Vanguard arrived at Bemerehaven, County of Cork, full details were learned of the fate of Commander Frederic G. Brine of the St. Vincent, who was washed overboard and drowned.

On rounding Land's End at daybreak a short time ago, the battle squadron encountered a wind which was blowing with hurricane force from the southwest, with a mountainous sea, which washed the vessels fore and aft and caused all hatches to be closely battened down. At 6:30 a. m. Commander Brine was informed that the port accommodation ladder, still hanging over the ship's side, was being broken up by the sea, and he immediately went on deck to see if it could be secured and brought on board.

As he reached the deck a heavy spray struck him on the back and, turning to some one standing near by, he laughingly remarked: "That cold water down the back was not very comfortable." A minute later a gigantic wave crashed on board just behind where Commander Brine stood and, though he strongly fought for a foothold, his efforts were futile and before the eyes of several members of the ship's company he was swept right over the lee side of the ship.

Then commenced a magnificent but ineffectual fight for life by the unfortunate officer. With lightning alacrity a number of lifebuoys were flung to him, the nearest just missing him by inches as he was borne off by the waves. Though completely at the mercy of the terrific sea Commander Brine managed, after herculean efforts, to divest himself of his coat, boots, and trousers. He next attempted to remove a heavy white sweater, but this proved a difficult task, and he literally tore it to shreds.

In the meantime the first lifeboat had been slung out on the davits, and the call for volunteers was answered by practically all present. For a long time nothing could be seen of Commander Brine, but at last he was discerned feebly struggling some distance away. Willing hands quickly manned a second lifeboat, which was soon on its way to the spot where the struggling man was last seen. He was picked up and taken on board, but life was extinct.

His magnificent efforts in such a sea had aroused hope and enthusiasm to fever pitch in the hundreds of watchers in the St. Vincent, and the disappointment and grief manifested on board when it became known that the recovery of his body had been just too late bore eloquent testimony to the great esteem in which Commander Brine was held.

DIVORCED WIFE IS A WIDOW

That is the Ruling of a California Judge, at Least in the Case of Mrs. Eugenia Jones.

San Francisco.—A recent ruling of Superior Judge Thomas F. Graham of this city defines a widow as "a married woman who has lost her husband either by death or judicial decree."

The ruling received the affirmation of the district court of appeals in a decision giving Mrs. Eugenia Jones, divorced wife of the late Everett Jones, the share of the estate she claimed under the will of Jones' father, S. L. Jones.

It was provided in that will that in the event of the death of Everett Jones before that of Mrs. Eugenia Jones, who then was his wife, a monthly income of $300 and half the estate should go to her "while she remained his widow." The couple were divorced later and, shortly before his death Jones remarried. Suit by his former wife to put the father's will in effect resulted in a legal tangle as to whether Jones' divorced wife legally could be described as his widow.

Finds Poison in a Cigar

Jury Finds Man Guilty of Putting Strychnine in Weed That He Presented to Johannes de Beer.

Ladybrand, Africa.—Sentence of a year's imprisonment and a fine of £250 has been inflicted at the criminal sessions here on Charles Maher, who was found guilty of attempting to murder Johannes de Beer by means of a poisoned cigar.

The prosecutor, in his evidence, stated that he was sitting in the yard of his house with members of his family and was about to smoke a cigar when the prisoner entered and said: "Johnnie, try this cigar and I will try one of yours." He accepted the offer, but found that the cigar tasted very bitter. He cut off half an inch, but again found it bitter, and did not smoke it any more.

After having tea with the accused he returned to his own house, and there noticed something white and glittering in the remainder of the cigar, and showed it to his wife and friends. On analysis it was found to be strychnine.

The prisoner admitted buying strychnine to use for vermin, but could not explain how it got into the cigar. There was no reason why he should wish to get rid of Mr. de Beer. The jury returned a verdict of guilty, with a strong recommendation to mercy.

"Beggar" Left $50,000.

San Francisco, Cal.—Michael Sullivan, who has begged on the streets of San Francisco for thirty-five years, was found dead in his hovel here. Bankbooks discovered in a mattress showed deposits of more than $50,000. Sullivan's death was apparently due to natural causes. He left a will in which he bequeathed $5,000 to his sister, Mary A Sullivan of Utica, N. Y.

Man Who Saw Napoleon, Alive

Until Seventeen Years Ago He Lived in Warsaw, Poland Where He Was Engaged in Business for 70 Years.

New York.—There was a wedding at the Hotel Astor at which the twenty-year-old bride danced with a man who saw Napoleon on the famous march to Moscow, one hundred years ago.

This man is Abraham Hanover, of 162 East 110th street. He is 106 years old now, but during the night led in the dancing at the wedding, appearing on the floor nearly a dozen times, and performing with his young partners waltzes, two-steps and several varieties of the Boston.

With a twinkle of humor in his eyes, the old man declared that his next accomplishment would be to learn the famous turkey trot.

The wedding was that of Samuel Steinberg, of 600 West 136th street, to Miss Sadie Frankel, of 808 West End avenue. Mr. Hanover is the grandfather of Mr. Steinberg.

Until seventeen years ago the centenarian and his wife, who is eighty-five years old, lived in Warsaw, Poland. Then the old man retired from the business in which he had been engaged for seventy years, and came to New York where his seven children had preceded him.

"To what do I owe my long life?" he asked today. "Why, to my wife's cooking, of course. Nobody else has ever cooked for me, and nobody else ever will. If I die before I am 120 I shall be surprised."

With not a gray hair in his head, and with just a shade of snow in his long beard, with his eyes as bright as when he was twenty, and his muscles just as supple, Mr. Hanover laughed when his ability as a dancing swain was mentioned.

"Yes," went on the centenarian, "I was a small boy at the time, but I remember seeing Napoleon march through our village on the famous progress to Moscow. He sat very small, and very compactly on his horse, and looked neither to right or left. We were afraid to go out, but I recall my father pointing out the great general. All day and night his soldiers followed behind him past our home."

"You see," he said, "Mrs. Hanover does all her own housework, even though she is well along in years.

"But now you will have to excuse me, as I want to hang some pictures, and move the piano into the next room. My sincerest wishes that you may live so long as I have."

Rides Steer to Safety.

St. Joseph, Mo.—William Hamilton, a cowboy from the Texas panhandle, fell into a corral of wild steers, scrambled to his feet, and drawing a revolver fired full in the face of the oncoming steers and crippled one. Then, as the others stopped short, he seized one by the horns and rode it until the animal got close enough to the fence for him to leap to safety.

HISTORIC ARMY POST TO GO

New Fort in Arizona to Take the Place of Huachuca, Which Will Be Abandoned.

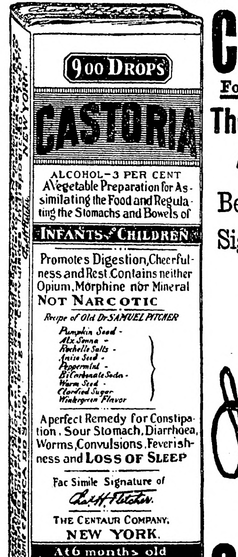
Bisbee, Ariz.—The Second squadron, Sixth cavalry, which arrived here supposedly to patrol the international border, returned to Fort Huachuca after completing some roadway maps from Bisbee to the border.

It became known that the army post at Fort Huachuca will not be enlarged, but is to be abandoned. It is said that a regimental post is to be established either at Bisbee or Tucson. The post quartermaster is now considering the matter of a site.

El Paso, Tex.—Orders from the war department were received at Fort Bliss converting the post from an infantry to a cavalry post. Four troops of cavalry will take the place of the Twenty-third infantry now at the post. The Twenty-third infantry will probably be sent to Fort Benjamin Harrison at Indianapolis.

Girls Kill Selves.

Vienna.—Two school girls, who were preparing for the examination that gives them entrance into Vienna university, threw themselves from the window of the school where they were studying and succumbed to their injuries. One of the girls, Wilhelmina Proksch, aged fifteen, was the daughter of a well known solicitor, and the other, Elise Vilnal, also aged fifteen, was the daughter of a wealthy merchant. Some days ago they were told that there was no hope of their passing the examination. They were much distressed and decided to die together.



900 DROPS
CASTORIA
ALCOHOL—3 PER CENT
A Vegetable Preparation for Assimilating the Food and Regulating the Stomachs and Bowels of
INFANTS & CHILDREN
Promotes Digestion, Cheerfulness and Rest. Contains neither Opium, Morphine nor Mineral
NOT NARCOTIC
Recipe of Old Dr SAMUEL PITCHER
Pumpkin Seed
Alx. Senna
Rochelle Salts
Anise Seed
Peppermint
Bi Carbonate Soda
Worm Seed
Clarified Sugar
Wintergreen Flavor
A perfect Remedy for Constipation, Sour Stomach, Diarrhoea, Worms, Convulsions, Feverishness and LOSS OF SLEEP
Fac Simile Signature of
Chas. H. Fletcher
THE CENTAUR COMPANY, NEW YORK.
At 6 months old
35 DOSES—35 CENTS
Guaranteed under the Food and

Exact Copy of Wrapper

CASTORIA

For Infants and Children.

The Kind You Have Always Bought

Bears the Signature of Chas. H. Fletcher.

In Use For Over Thirty Years

CASTORIA

THE CENTAUR COMPANY, NEW YORK CITY

PERFECTION SMOKELESS OIL HEATER

In every cold weather emergency you need a Perfection Smokeless Oil Heater. Is your bedroom cold when you dress or undress? Do your water pipes freeze in the cellar? Is it chilly when the wind whistles around the exposed corners of your house?

A Perfection Smokeless Oil Heater brings complete comfort. Can be carried anywhere. Always ready for use—glowing heat from the minute it is lighted.

Ask your dealer to show you a Perfection Smokeless Oil Heater; or write for descriptive circular to any agency of

Standard Oil Company
(Incorporated)

NOT THE OLD MASTER'S.

Visitor (admiring painting)—Is that one of the old masters?

Rastus—No, sah; dat belongs to de ole missus.

New Work for the Audubons.

"Some birds are plucked alive to get the feathers for women's hats."

"So are some husbands."

The Chicago Fire could have been prevented with one pail of water, but the water was not handy. Keep a bottle of Hamlins Wizard Oil handy and prevent the fiery pains of inflammation.

Cold cash makes an excellent hot weather comfort.

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup for children teething, softens the gums, reduces inflammation, allays pain, cures wind colic, 25c a bottle.

Most women like the villain better than the hero.

Fargo Directory

KODAKS and KODAK SUPPLIES
Write for catalogues and literature. We do developing and printing. Mail orders given prompt attention. FARGO DRUG CO., FARGO, N. D.

Dakota Business College
LARGEST and FINEST between CHICAGO AND THE COAST.
FARGO, NORTH DAKOTA

FARGO TANNERY
Receives hides and skins for tanning to harness leather, robes and coats. Robes lined, hides bought, leather and robes for sale. SEND FOR PRICE LIST.
Andrew Monson, Proprietor, Fargo Tannery
Fargo, North Dakota

BUILDERS MATERIAL CO.
FARGO, NORTH DAKOTA
Face Brick, Hollow Block, Hollow Face Tile. Fire Places and Fixtures. Wall Ties, Mortar Color, Metal Lath, Fire Brick, Water Proofings, Prepared Roofings, Ideal Ventilators, Cement Coatings, Asphalt.

Ship Your Hides, Furs and Pelts
To BOLLES & ROGERS FARGO, N. D.

We Furnish Positions To Graduates
A Beautiful Catalog Free
Aaker's Business Colleges
Fargo or Grand Forks
H. H. AAKER, Pres.

Remedies are Needed

Were we perfect, which we are not, medicines would not often be needed. But since our systems have become weakened, impaired and broken down through indiscretions which have gone on from the early ages, through countless generations, remedies are needed to aid Nature in correcting our inherited and otherwise acquired weaknesses. To reach the seat of stomach weakness and consequent digestive troubles, there is nothing so good as Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, a glyceric compound, extracted from native medicinal roots—sold for over forty years with great satisfaction to all users. For Weak Stomach, Biliousness, Liver Complaint, Pain in the Stomach after eating, Heartburn, Bad Breath, Belching of food, Chronic Diarrhea and other Intestinal Derangements, the "Discovery" is a time-proven and most efficient remedy.

The genuine has on its outside wrapper the Signature R. V. Pierce, M.D.

You can't afford to accept a secret nostrum as a substitute for this non-alcoholic, medicine OF KNOWN COMPOSITION, not even though the urgent dealer may thereby make a little bigger profit.

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets regulate and invigorate stomach, liver and bowels. Sugar-coated, tiny granules, easy to take as candy.

Rayo Lamps and Lanterns

The strong, steady light.

Rayo lamps and lanterns give most light for the oil they burn. Do not flicker. Will not blow or jar out. Simple, reliable and durable—and sold at a price that will surprise you.

Ask your dealer to show you his line of Rayo lamps and lanterns, or write to any agency of

Standard Oil Company
(Incorporated)

Defective Page

FINANCES ARE IN GOOD SHAPE

Economies Have Effected Cut in Expenses of Various Departments.

MONETARY REFORM IMPORTANT

President Hopes It Will Not Be Made Subject of Party Politics—Surplus in Postal Department—Attention Called to Canal Matters—Postal Savings.

Washington. — Finances and currency reform are the subject of a special message to congress, which reads in part as follows:

The financial condition of the government, as shown at the close of the last fiscal year, June 30, 1911, was very satisfactory. The ordinary receipts into the general fund, excluding postal revenues, amounted to $701,372,374.99, and the disbursements from the general fund for current expenses and capital outlays, excluding postal and Panama Canal disbursements, including the interest on the public debt, amounted to $654,377,907.89, leaving a surplus of $47,234,377.10.

The postal revenue receipts amounted to $237,879,823.60, while the payments made for the postal service from the postal revenues amounted to $237,660,705.48, which left a surplus of postal receipts over disbursements of $219,118.12, the first time in 27 years in which a surplus occurred.

The interest-bearing debt of the United States June 30, 1911, amounted to $915,353,190. Teh debt on which interest had ceased amounted to $1,870,830.26, and the debt bearing no interest, including greenbacks, national bank notes to be redeemed, and fractional currency, amounted to $386,751,917.43, or a total of interest and non-interest bearing debt amounting to $1,303,984,937.69.

The actual disbursements, exclusive of those for the Panama Canal and for the postal service for the year ending June 30, 1911, were $654,137,997.89. The actual disbursements for the year ending June 30, 1910, exclusive of the Panama Canal and the postal service disbursements, were $659,705,391.08, making a decrease of $5,567,393.19 in yearly expenditures in the year 1911 under that of 1910. For the year ending June 30, 1912, the estimated receipts, exclusive of the postal revenues, are $666,000,000, while the total estimates, exclusive of those for the Panama payable from the postal revenues, amounted to $654,842,799.34. This is a decrease in the 1912 estimates of $1,534,367.22.

For the year ending June 30, 1913, the estimated receipts, exclusive of the postal revenues, are $667,000,000, while the total estimated appropriations, exclusive of the Panama Canal and postal disbursements payable from postal revenues, will amount to $637,920,803.35. This is a decrease in the 1913 estimates from that of the 1912 estimates of $7,921,995.99.

As to the postal revenues, the expansion of the business in that department, the normal increase in the post office and the extension of the service, will increase the outlay to the sum of $260,938,463; but as the department was self-sustaining this year the postmaster general is assured that next year the receipts will at least equal the expenditures, and probably exceed them by more than the surplus of this year. It is fair and equitable, therefore, in determining the economy with which the government has been run, to exclude the transactions of a department like the post office department, which relies for its support upon its receipts. In calculations heretofore made for comparison of economy in each year, it has been the proper custom only to include in the statement the deficit in the post office department which was paid out of the treasury.

A calculation of the actual increase in the expenses of government arising from the increase in the population and the general expansion of governmental functions, except those of the post office, for a number of years shows a normal increase of about 4 per cent. a year. By directing the exercise of great care to keep down the expenses and the estimates we have succeeded in reducing the total disbursements each year.

Efficiency and Economy in the Treasury Department.

In the treasury department the efficiency and economy work has been kept steadily up. Provision is made for the elimination of 134 positions during the coming year. Two hundred and sixty-seven statutory positions were eliminated during the last year in the office of the treasury in Washington, and 141 positions in the year 1910, making an elimination of 542 statutory positions since March 4, 1909; and this has been done without the discharge of anybody, because the normal resignations and deaths have been equal to the elimination of the places, a system of transfers having taken care of the persons whose positions were dropped out. In the field service of the department, too, 1,259 positions have been eliminated down to the present time, making a total net reduction of all treasury positions to the number of 1,801. Meantime the efficiency of the work of the department has increased.

Monetary Reform.

A matter of first importance that will come before congress for action at this session is monetary reform. The congress has itself arranged an early introduction of this great question through the report of its monetary commission. This commission was appointed to recommend a solution of the banking and currency problems so long confronting the nation and to furnish the facts and data necessary to enable the congress to take action.

In order to do its work with thoroughness and precision this commission has taken some time to make its report. The country is undoubtedly hoping for as prompt action on the report as the conveniences of the congress can permit. The recognition of the gross imperfections and marked inadequacy of our banking and currency system even in our most quiet financial periods is of long standing; and later there has matured a recognition of the fact that our system is responsible for the extraordinary devastation, waste and business paralysis of our recurring periods of panic. Though the methods of the monetary commission have for a considerable time been working in the open, and while large numbers of the people have been openly working with them, and while the press has largely noted and discussed this work as it has proceeded, so that the report of the commission promises to represent a national movement, the details of the report are still being considered. I can not, therefore, do much more at this time than commend the immense importance of monetary reform, urge prompt consideration and action when the commission's report is received, and express my satisfaction that the plan to be proposed promises to embrace main features that, having met the approval of a great preponderance of the practical and professional opinion of the country, are likely to meet equal approval in congress.

With the present prospects of this long-awaited reform encouraging us, it would be singularly unfortunate if this monetary question should by any chance become a party issue. And I sincerely hope it will not. The exceeding amount of consideration it has received from the people of the nation has been wholly nonpartisan; and the congress set its nonpartisan seal upon it when the monetary commission was appointed. In commending the question to the favorable consideration of congress, I speak for, and in the spirit of, the great number of my fellow citizens, who without any thought of party or partisanship feel with remarkable earnestness that this reform is necessary to the interests of all the people.

The War Department.

There is now before congress a bill, the purpose of which is to increase the efficiency and decrease the expense of the army. It contains four principal features: First, a consolidation of the general staff with the adjutant general's and the inspector general's department; second, a consolidation of the quartermaster's department with the subsistence and pay department; third, the creation of an army service corps, and fourth, an extension of the enlistment period from three to five years.

With the establishment of an army service corps, as proposed in the bill, I am thoroughly in accord and am convinced that the establishment of such a corps will result in a material economy and a very great increase of efficiency in the army. It has repeatedly been recommended by me and my predecessors. I also believe that a consolidation of the staff corps can be made with a resulting increase in efficiency and economy, but not along the lines provided in the bill under consideration.

The army of the United States is in good condition. It showed itself able to meet an emergency in the successful mobilization of an army division of from 15,000 to 20,000 men, which took place along the border of Mexico during the recent disturbances in that country. The marvelous freedom from the ordinary camp diseases of typhoid fever and measles is referred to in the report of the secretary of war, and shows such an effectiveness in the sanitary regulations and treatment of the medical corps, and in the discipline of the army itself, as to invoke the highest commendation.

The Panama Canal.

The very satisfactory progress made on the Panama canal last year has continued, and there is every reason to believe that the canal will be completed as early as the 1st of July, 1913, unless something unforeseen occurs. This is about 18 months before the time promised by the engineers.

We are now near enough the completion of the canal to make it imperatively necessary that legislation should be enacted to fix the method by which the canal shall be maintained and controlled and the zone governed. the fact is that today there is no statutory law by authority of which the president is maintaining the government of the zone. The implied authority of the president to maintain a civil government in the zone may be derived from the mandatory direction given him in the original Spooner act, by which he was commanded to build the canal; but certainly, now that the canal is about to be completed and to be put under a permanent management, there ought to be specific statutory authority for its regulation and control and for the government of the zone, which we hold for the chief and main purpose of operating the canal.

I fully concur with the secretary of war that the problem is simply the management of a great public work, and not the government of a local republic; that every provision must be directed toward the successful maintenance of the canal as an avenue of commerce, and that all provisions for the government of those who live within the zone should be subordinant to the main purpose.

I renew my recommendation with respect to the tolls of the canal that within limits, which shall seem wise to congress, the power of fixing tolls be given to the president. In order to arrive at a proper conclusion, there must be some experimenting, and this cannot be done if congress does not delegate the power to one who can act expeditiously.

I am very confident that the United States has the power to relieve from the payment of tolls any part of our shipping that congress deems wise. We own the canal. It was our money that built it. We have the right to charge tolls for its use. Those tolls must be the same to everyone; but when we are dealing with our own ships, the practice of many governments of subsidizing their own merchant vessels is so well established in general that a subsidy equal to the tolls, an equivalent remission of tolls, cannot be held to be a discrimination in the use of the canal. The practice in the Suez canal makes this clear.

The Philippine Islands.

In respect to the Philippines, I urgently join in the recommendation of the secretary of war that the act of February 6, 1905, limiting the indebtedness that may be incurred by the Philippine government for the construction of public works, be increased from $5,000,000 to $15,000,000. The finances of that government are in excellent condition. The maximum sum mentioned is quite low as compared with the amount of indebtedness of other governments with similar resources, and the success which has attended the expenditure of the $5,000,000 in the useful improvements of the harbors and other places in the islands justifies and requires additional expenditures for like purposes.

Rivers and Harbors.

The estimates for the river and harbor improvements reach $32,000,000 for the coming year. I wish to urge that whenever a project has been adopted by congress as one to be completed, the more money which can be economically expended in its construction in each year, the greater the ultimate economy. This has especial application to the improvement of the Mississippi river and its large branches. It seems to me that an increase in the amount of money now being annually expended in the improvement of the Ohio river which has been formally adopted by congress would be in the interest of the public. A similar change ought to be made during the present congress, in the amount to be appropriated for the Missouri river.

Waterway From Lakes to the Gulf.

The project for a navigable waterway from Lake Michigan to the mouth of the Illinois river, and thence via the Mississippi to the Gulf of Mexico, is one of national importance. In view of the work already accomplished by the sanitary district of Chicago, an agency of the state of Illinois, which has constructed the most difficult and costly stretch of this waterway and made it an asset of the nation, and in view of the fact that the people of Illinois have authorized the expenditure of $20,000,000 to carry this waterway 62 miles farther to Utica, I feel that it is fitting that this work should be supplemented by the government, and that the expenditures recommended by the special board of engineers on the waterway from Utica to the mouth of the Illinois river be made upon lines which while providing a waterway for the nation, should otherwise benefit that state to the fullest extent.

The limitation of the liability of the master to his servant for personal injuries to such as are occasioned by his fault has been abandoned in most civilized countries and provision made whereby the employe injured in the course of his employment is compensated for his loss of working ability irrespective of negligence. The principle upon which such provision proceeds is that accidental injuries to workmen in modern industry, with its vast complexity and inherent dangers arising from complicated machinery and the use of the great forces of steam and electricity, should be regarded as risks of the industry and the loss borne in some equitable proportion by those who for their own profit engage therein. In recognition of this the last congress authorized the appointment of a commission to investigate the subject of employers' liability and workmen's compensation, and to report the result of their investigations, through the president, to congress. This commission was appointed and has been at work, holding hearings, gathering data and considering the subject, and it is expected will be able to report by the first of the year, in accordance with the provisions of the law.

Measures to Prevent Delay and Unnecessary Cost of Litigation.

In promotion of the movement for the prevention of delay and unnecessary cost, in litigation, I am glad to say that the Supreme court has taken steps to reform the present equity rules of the Federal courts, and that we may in the near future expect a revision of them which will be a long step in the right direction.

Postal Savings System.

On January 3, 1911, postal savings depositories were established experimentally in 48 states and territories. After three months' successful operation the system was extended as rapidly as feasible to the 7,500 postoffices of the first, second and third classes constituting the presidential grade. By the end of the year practically all of these will have been designated and then the system will be extended to all fourth-class postoffices doing a money-order business.

The deposits have kept pace with the extension of the system. Amounting to only $60,652 at the end of the first month's operation in the experimental offices, they increased to $679,310 by July, and now after 11 months of operation have reached a total of $11,000,000. This sum is distributed among 2,710 banks and protected under the law by bonds deposited with the treasurer of the United States.

Parcel Post.

Steps should be taken immediately for the establishment of a rural parcel post. In the estimates of appropriations needed for the maintenance of the postal service for the ensuing fiscal year an item of $150,000 has been inserted to cover the preliminary expense of establishing a parcel post on rural mail routes, as well as to cover an investigation having for its object the final establishment of a general parcel post on all railway and steamboat transportation routes. The department believes that after the initial expenses of establishing the system are defrayed and the parcel post is in full operation on the rural routes it will not only bring in sufficient revenue to meet its cost, but also a surplus that can be utilized in paying the expenses of a parcel post in the city delivery service.

The suggestion that we have a general parcel post has awakened great opposition on the part of some who think that it will have the effect to destroy the business of the country store keeper. Instead of doing this, I think the change will greatly increase business for the benefit of all. The reduction in the cost of living it will bring about ought to make its coming certain.

The Navy Department.

On the 2d of November last I reviewed the fighting fleet of battleships and other vessels assembled in New York harbor, consisting of 24 battleships, 2 armored cruisers, 2 cruisers, 22 destroyers, 12 torpedo boats, 8 submarines, and other attendant vessels, making 98 vessels of all classes, of a tonnage of 576,634 tons.

The fleet was deficient in the number of torpedo destroyers, in cruisers, and in colliers, as well as in large battleship cruisers, which are now becoming a very important feature of foreign navies, notably the British, German and Japanese.

The building plan for this year contemplates two battleships and two colliers. This is because the other and smaller vessels can be built much more rapidly in case of emergency than the battleships, and we certainly ought to continue the policy of two battleships a year until after the Panama Canal is finished and until in our first line and in our reserve line we can number 40 available vessels of proper armament and size.

Like the Treasury Department and the War Department, the Navy Department has given much attention to economy in administration, and has cut down a number of unnecessary expenses and reduced its estimates except for construction and the increase that that involves.

I urge upon congress the necessity for an immediate increase of 2,000 men in the enlisted strength of the navy, provided for in the estimates. Four thousand more are now needed to man all the available vessels.

Departments of Agriculture and Commerce and Labor.

For the consideration of matters which are pending or have been disposed of in the agricultural department and in the department of commerce and labor, I refer to the very excellent reports of the secretaries of those departments. I shall not be able to submit to congress until after the Christmas holidays the question of conservation of our resources arising in Alaska and the west and the question of the rate for second-class mail matter in the postoffice department.

Elimination of All Local Offices From Politics.

I wish to renew again my recommendation that all the local offices throughout the country, including collectors of internal revenue, collectors of customs, postmasters of all four classes, immigration commissioners and marshals, should be by law covered into the classified service, the necessity for confirmation by the senate be removed, and the president and the others, whose time is now taken up in distributing this patronage under the custom that has prevailed since the beginning of the government in accordance with the recommendation of the senators and congressmen of the majority party should be relieved from this burden. I am confident that such a change would greatly reduce the cost of administering the government, and that it would add greatly to its efficiency. It would take away the power to use the patronage of the government for political purposes. When officers are recommended by senators and congressmen from political motives and for political services rendered, it is impossible to expect that while in office the appointees will not regard their tenure as more or less dependent upon continued political service for their patrons, and no regulations, however stiff or rigid, will prevent this, because such regulations, in view of the method and motive for selection, are plainly inconsistent and deemed hardly worthy of respect.

TAFT FOR LOW WOOL

PRESIDENT TRANSMITS FINDINGS OF THE TARIFF BOARD TO CONGRESS IN MESSAGE.

DEMOCRATIC VIEW IS SUSTAINED

In Document Which Urges a General Reduction of Schedule K and Retention of the Tariff Board.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

In my annual message to congress December, 1909, I stated that under Section 2 of the act of August 5, 1909, I had appointed a tariff board of three members to co-operate with the state department in the administration of the maximum and minimum clause of that act to make a glossary or encyclopedia of the existing tariff so as to render its terms intelligible to the ordinary reader, and then to investigate industrial conditions and costs of production at home and abroad with a view to determining to what extent existing tariff rates actually exemplify the protective principle, viz.: That duties should be made adequate, and only adequate, to equalize the differences in cost of production at home and abroad.

In the last session of the sixty-first congress a bill creating a permanent tariff board of five members, of whom not more than three should be of the same political party, passed each House, but failed of enactment because of slight differences on which agreement was not reached before adjournment. An appropriation act provided that the permanent tariff board, if created by statute, should report to congress on schedule K in December, 1911.

In my message of August 17, 1911, accompanying the veto of the wool bill, I said that, in my judgment, schedule K should be revised and the rates reduced. My veto was based on the ground that, since the tariff board would make, in December, a detailed report on wool and wool manufactures with special reference to the relation of the existing rates of duties to relative costs here and aboard, public policy and a fair regard to the interests of the producers and manufacturers on the one hand and of the consumers on the other demanded that legislation should not be hastily enacted in the absence of such information, that I was not myself possessed at that time of adequate knowledge of the facts to determine whether or not the proposed act was in accord with my pledge to support a fair and reasonable protective policy; that such legislation might prove only temporary and inflict upon a great industry the evils of continued uncertainty.

I now herewith submit a report of the tariff board on schedule K. The board is unanimous in its findings. On the basis of these findings I now recommend that the congress proceed to a consideration of this schedule with a view to its revision and a general reduction ot is rates.

The report shows that the present method of assessing the duty on raw wool—that is by a specific rate on the grease pound, i. e., unscoured—operates to exclude wools of high shrinkage in scouring but fine quality from the American market and thereby lessens the range of wools available to the domestic manufacturer; that the duty on scoured wool of 33 cents per pound is prohibitory and operates to exclude the importation of clean, low priced foreign wools of inferior grades, which are nevertheless valuable material for manufacturing and which cannot be imported in the grease because of their heavy shrinkage. Such wools, if imported, might be used to displace the cheap substitutes now in use.

To make the preceding paragraph a littler plainer, take the instance of a hundred pounds of first class wool imported under the present duty, which is 11c a pound. That would make the duty on the hundred pounds $11. The merchantable part of the wool thus imported is the weight of the wool of this hundred pounds after scouring. If the wool shrinks 80 per cent, as some wools do, then the duty in such a case would amount to $11 on 20 pounds of scoured wool; this, of course, would be prohibitory. If the wool shrinks only 50 per cent, it would be $11 on 50 pounds of wool, and this is near to the average of the great bulk of wools that are imported from Australia, which is the principal source of our imported wool.

These discriminations could be overcome by assessing a duty in ad valorem terms, but this method is open to the objection, first, that, it increases administrative difficulties and tends to decrease revenue through under-valnation due to different shrinkages, and vance, the ad valorem rate increases the duty per pound at the time when the consumer most needs relief and the producer can best stand competition; while if prices decline the duty is decreased at the time when the consumer is least burdened by the price and the producer most needs protection.

Another method of meeting the difficulty of taxing the grease pound is to assess a specific duty on grease wool in terms of its scoured content. This obviates the chief evil of the present system, namely, the discrimination due to different shrinkages, and vance, the ad valorem rate increases thereby tends greatly to equalize the duty. The board reports that this method is feasible in practice and could be administered without great expense. The scoured content of the wool is the basis on which users of wool make their calculations, and a duty of this kind would fit the usages of the trade. One effect of this method of assessment would be that, regardless of the rate of duty, there would be an increase in the supply and variety of wool by making available to the American market wools of both low and fine quality now excluded.

The report shows that the duties on noils, wool wastes, and shoddy, which are adjusted to the rate of 33 cents on scoured wool, are prohibitory in the same measure that the duty on scoured wool is prohibitory. In general, they are assessed at the rate as high as or higher than, the duties paid on the clean content of wools actually imported. They should be reduced and so adjusted to the rate on wool as to bear their proper proportion to the real rate levied on the actual wool imports.

The duties on many classes of wool manufacture are prohibitory and greatly in excess of the difference in cost of production here and abroad, This is true of tops, of yarns (with the exception of worsted yarns of very high grade), and of low and medium grade cloth of heavy weight.

On tops up to 52 cents a pound in value, and on yarns of 65 cents, the rate is 100 per cent with correspondingly higher rate for poor values. On cheap and medium grade cloths the existing rate frequently runs to 150 per cent and on some cheap goods to over 200 per cent. This is largely due to that part of the duty which is levied ostensibly to compensate the manufacturer for the enchanced cost of his raw material due to the duty on wool. As a matter of fact, this compensatory duty on numerous classes of goods is much in excess of the amount needed in strict compensation.

On the other hand, the findings show that the duties which run to high ad valorem equivalents are prohibitory, since the goods are imported, but that the prices of domestic fabrics are not raised by the full amount of duty. On a set of 1 yard samples of 16 English fabrics, which are completely excluded by the present tariff rates, it was found that the total foreign value was $41.84; the duties which would have been assessed had these fabrics been imported, $76.90; the foreign value plus the amount of the duty, $118.74; or a nominal duty of 183 per cent. In fact, however, practically identical fabrics of domestic made sold at the same time at $69.75, showing an enhanced price over the foreign market value of but 67 per cent.

Although these duties do not increase price of domestic goods by anything like their full amount, it is none the less true that such prohibitive duties eliminate the possibility of foreign competition even in time of scarcity so that they form a temptation to monoply and conspiracies to control domestic prices, that they are much in excess of the difference in cost, of production here and abroad, and that they should be reduced to a point which accords with the principle.

The findings of the board show that in this industry the actual manufacturing cost, aside from the question of the price of materials, is much higher in this country than it is abroad; that in the making of yarn and cloth the domestic woolen or worsted manufacturer has in general no advantage in the form of superior machinery or more efficient labor to offset the higher wages paid in this country. The findings show that the cost of turning wool into yarn in this country is about double that in the leading competing country, and that the cost of turing yarn into cloth is somewhat more than double. Under the protective policy a great industry, involving the welfare of hundreds of thousands of people, has been established despite these handicaps.

In recommending revision and reduction I therefore urge that action be taken with these facts in mind, to the end that an important and established industry may not be jeopardized. The tariff board reports that no equitable method has been found to levy purely specific duties on woolen and worsted fabrics and that excepting for a compensatory duty, the rate must be ad valorem on such manufactures. It is important to realize, however, that no flat ad valorem rate on such fabrics can be made to work fairly and effectively. Any single rate which is high enough to equalize the difference in manufacturing cost at home and abroad on highly finished goods involving such labor would be prohibitory on cheaper goods, in which the labor cost is a smaller proportion of the total value. Conversely, a rate only adequate to equalize this difference on cheaper the fine goods manufactured, the increase on which has been one of the striking features of the trade development in recent years. I therefore recommend that in any revision the importance of a graded scale of ad valorem duties on cloths be carefully considered and applied.

It is in no part of the function of the tariff board to propose rates of duty. Their function is merely to present findings of facts on which rates of duty may be fairly determined in the light of adequate knowledge in accordance with the economic policy to be followed. This is what the present report does.

The findings of facts by the board show ample reason for the revision downward of schedule K in accordance with the protective principle, and present the data as to relative costs and prices from which may be determined what rates will fairly equalize the difference in production costs. I recommend that such revision be proceeded with at once.

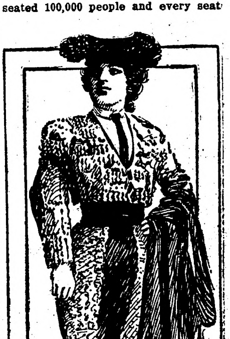
WILLIAM H. TAFT,

The White House, Dec. 20.

YOUNG WOMAN BULLFIGHTER

Senorita Terara Vies With Men of Mexico In Playing With Death In the Arena.

Mexico City.—Senorita Terara, the woman bullfighter, has for many years been something of a character about this city. The fighting of bulls is the first passion of the peoples of Spanish blood and the great arena in Mexico City is such as to make any other place of amusement the world around look to its honors, for in it may be seated 100,000 people and every seat looks directly into the bull ring. Here the Senorita Terera has met many a wild and longhorned bull from the mountains and played with death between his horns. The secret of bullfighting lies in self control, for the successful fighter must stand still until the bull is within an arm's reach before beginning the leap to one side. If this movement is made too soon the animal has time to change its course and may overtake and dispatch the bullfighter. Senorita Terara has vied with the men of Mexico for years in this dangerous amusement and is still alive to repeat her exploits.



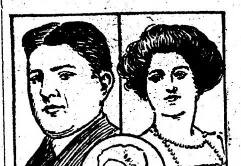
Senorita Terara.

The bull fight was once popular in ancient Greece and Rome and was introduced by the Moors into Spain from whence it passed to the Spanish colonies throughout the world. The bull fight is held in an arena of more or less magnificence. The bulls are turned out one by one with many forms of pomp and ceremonial where they are assailed, first by horsemen, picadores, who attack them with the lance; second, by banderilleroes armed with sharp pointed darts and flags; and, third, by the matador, who with the sword gives the coup de grace to the tortured bull, sheathing the blade with one sure thrust up to the hilt in the body of the bull just at the juncture of the neck and spine. Some times more than a score of bulls are killed at one entertainment. In Spanish countries the bull fighter is a popular hero.

WILL LIVE IN A HOUSEBOAT

Mr. and Mrs. Hopkins of New York and Their Baby to Thus Spend the Winter.

New York.—While other babies are taking chances with croup and influenza in the north this winter, little John Randolph Hopkins will be enjoying life cruising about Florida inland waters in a houseboat. Of course his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Russell Hopkins, will be with him, so that there will be little chance of his falling overboard and becoming a free lunch for a hungry alligator.



Mr. and Mrs. Hopkins and Baby.

John Randolph Hopkins is a very lucky youngster. He is worth $5,000,000 in his own right, a tidy sum of which he will become possessed when he reaches twenty-one. Probably by that time the fortune will have doubled or trebled.

While ordinary children must get their pleasure from rag dolls and Teddy bears, young John Randolph Hopkins has the advantage of a real live menagerie which his father maintains on the roof of his Fifth avenue mansion in this city. The live Teddy bears, however, will not go to Florida; they have been sent to the Hopkins country home at Irvington.

HISTORICAL SOCIETY

THE NORTHERN LIGHT

VOL. I. HOLT, MARSHALL COUNTY, MINNESOTA, FRIDAY, JANUARY 5, 1912. NO. 23.

PACKERS OBJECT

DEFENSE OBJECTS TO EVIDENCE REGARDING OPERATIONS OF TWO COMPANIES.

TRIAL MAKES A HALT

Government Contends Firms Marketed By-Products at High Prices—Concerns Reaped Huge Profits.

Chicago, Ill. — Objections made by counsel for the defense to evidence which the government seeks to introduce regarding the operations of the Kenwood company, and the Aetna Trading company, halted the packers' trials and caused Judge Carpenter to excuse the jury, pending the hearing of legal arguments.

The government contends that the Kenwood company, which was organized by the packers in 1900, and continued in business until 1905, was one of the pools used to market the packers' by-products. It is alleged that the Kenwood company dealt in oleo and the Aetna Trading company in the same period dealt in casings.

The government expects to show that the Kenwood company profits were $4,000,000 in one year, despite the fact that it was only incorporated with a capital stock of $14,000. The profits of the Aetna Trading company are also alleged to have been proportionately large, by counsel for the government.

Kept Profits Limited.

By making an inadequate allowance for these by-products in figuring the test cost of the animals slaughtered, the packers were enabled to keep the profits of the parent concerns within reasonable limits, according to counsel for the government.

The objection to this line of testimony came when Albert H. Veeder was questioned in regard to the business transacted by these subsidiary companies.

"We have a right to know what the government intends to prove by going into the business of these companies and what relation it has to this company," said Attorney Levy Mayer, counsel for the defense. "The Kenwood company dealt in oleo oils and the Aetna Trading company dealt in casings and we cannot understand what violation this has to the allegations made in the indictment that there was a combination to control the price of fresh meat and the price paid in the purchase of cattle. For this reason we contend that this testimony is incompetent and ask to have it excluded."

Merger Was Englishman's Idea.

Lord Panmure Gordon, an English promoter, first suggested the giant merger of the packing corporations in the United States with a capitalization of $923,000,000, according to Mr. Veeder.

The witness said that the National Packing Co., which was capitalized at $15,000,000, was formed by the merging of 13 companies and their subsidiaries and that the properties were paid for in stock of the National Packing company. A list of the companies and the amounts paid for them by the National Packing company was given as follows:

The Companies.

Stock Yards Warehouse Co., $530,000; Anglo-American Provision and Refrigerator Car Co., $360,000; Kansas City Refrigerator Car Co., $130,000; Fowler's Canadian Co., limited, $70,000; Friedman Manufacturing Co., $110,000; G. H. Hammond & Co., $3,600,000; St. Louis Dressed Beef Co., $2,100,000; Hammond Packing Co., $1,000,000; Omaha Packing Co., $2,200,000; Hutchinson Packing Co., $100,000; Anglo-American Provision Co., $2,000,000; Fowler Packing Co., $900,000; United Dressed Beef Co., $1,900,000.

Veeder said these companies were all purchased by Armour, Swift and Morris before Michael Cudahy was taken into the combination. He said all the men who sold their plants agreed not to engage in the packing business for 15 years.

MAN KILLS SEVEN AND SELF.

Arkansan Slays Whole Family With Club and Hangs Himself.

Benton, Ark. — Because he was in "deep despair" and believed he and his family "would be better off in heaven," James Grant clubbed his wife, five children and stepson to death and hanged himself.

The bodies of the children were found in their beds, each skull being crushed. The body of Mrs. Grant was found half dressed. Evidently she was killed as she was about to go to bed. A heavy club covered with blood was found in the house and it was apparent that it was the weapon with which Grant killed the seven members of his family. The children ranged in age from 5 to 15 years.

RUSSIA GRABBING ORIENT

EMPIRE MAY ANNEX MONGOLIA AND TURKESTAN.

Both Countries Proclaim Their Independence—Jap Alliance Is Expected.

Pekin, China.—Mongolia, which almost equals China proper in size, is proclaimed independent, simultaneously with the cutting off from China of the vast dependency of Turkestan. Both will pass under Russian influence and will become Russian protectorates. Russia at any time will be able to annex them. A grand khan will be named as monarch of Mongolia. The construction of the trans-Mongolian railway, for which Russia has long sought permission from China, will now be but a matter of time, Europe thereby coming nearer to Pekin by three or four days.

Russian influence will flank the Japanese sphere in Manchuria perilously, and a Japanese alliance for the sake of preserving Japanese interests may sooner or later be expected. Russian officers and officials, if not the Russian government proper, have influenced this action in Mongolia.

Dr. Sun May Be President.

Shanghai.—The arrival of Dr. Sun Yat Sen in Shanghai has injected an entirely new and forceful element in the ranks and councils of the revolutionaries. There is every evidence that Dr. Sun is receiving more consideration than other leaders of the revolutionaries here. His residence is crowded from morning till evening with representatives of all the provinces, generals and governors, with whom he has continual consultations.

The delegates from the provinces of China proper who have been attending the Nankin convention, came in a body to Shanghai, where they met Dr. Sun, later returning to Nankin.

There is reason to believe that they will meet on Dec. 28 and elect Dr. Sun president of the provisional government of the united provinces of China proper by a unanimous vote of the delegates of the 18 provinces. After that has been done, the revolutionaries plan the selection of a cabinet by the president, who will then issue a proclamation setting forth the terms offered by the revolutionaries to the Manchus and the imperial court in event of their peaceful surrender. Should this not occur, this campaign against the Manchus and the imperialists will be continued and Pekin will be taken.

Dr. Sun Yat Sen evidently does not regard the peace conference here seriously and will proceed with his plans without regard to Pekin.

PLAN TO BOOST WHEAT PRICES.

Large Supply Held in Baltimore Elevators Creates Suspicion.

Baltimore, Md. — The elevators of Baltimore at present hold more than three times the quantity of wheat and considerably more corn than they did a year ago, but the enormous quantity of cereals stored here does not mean a corresponding increase in the amount of business transacted in these commodities. On the contrary, it is claimed that it acts as a restraint, because the wheat and corn are not intended to fill orders already booked, but to be held to force up the prices.

A story is told in grain circles of the local agent of a western speculator who experienced all kinds of trouble in obtaining a comparatively small amount of wheat which he urgently needed, although his principal had stored in this city an unusually large supply which, however, was held for higher prices.

According to statistics compiled at the chamber of commerce the stock of wheat yesterday amounted to 1,769,189 bushels, or more than three times the amount stored on the corresponding day a year ago. The stock of corn was 862,836 bushels, compared with 582,755 a year ago.

DRASTIC BILL AIMED AT U. S.

Nationalists Offer in Duma Sweeping Measure of Prohibitive Character.

St. Petersburg, Russia. — A supplementary legislative proposal of a frankly prohibitive character was introduced by the nationalists in the duma. It is aimed directly at the United States.

According to the terms of the proposed enactment American citizens of the Jewish religion are to be totally excluded from Russia, and in the second place customs duties are to be raised by 100 per cent unless the Russian normal schedule is lower than the American. In that case a duty equalling the American duty will be collected.

The author of the bill states that the last provision is necessary in order to deal with the import of American agricultural machinery.

SEN IS PRESIDENT

DELEGATES TO MEET AT NANKIN AND CHOOSE REFORMER FOR FIRST PRESIDENT.

ORGANIZING HIS CABINET

Yuan Shi Kai Takes Sick Leave.—Russians Want China to Continue in Control of Mongolia.

Shanghai, China. — An imperial edict will not be accepted by the revolutionaries except in the most liberal form under which a republic can be established without delay, or unless it provides for the recognition of the provisional government of which Dr. Sun Yat Sen was elected president at the regular convention of the Nanking conference at which 18 delegates appointed by the governors of the provinces or by the provincial assemblies, will act in behalf of China proper.

Dr. Sun Yat Sen has made preparations to organize his cabinet. It is believed that the first ministry will be strong and may include some of Yuan Shi Kai's delegates, who accompanied Tang Shao Yi, the premier's representative, to the peace conference.

The revolutionary leaders here laugh at the apparent struggle of Yuan Shi Kai, the imperial premier, to temporize with the situation, which they declare has passed out of his control.

Dr. Sun Yat Sen.

Disgusted at the refusal of the imperial clan to contribute to the war chest, Yuan Shai Kai last night took sick leave. It is believed this presages his early retirement from the premiership. He bitterly resents the bad faith of Wu Ting Fang and his party in proposing a national congress and now insisting upon a rump, not a representative, congress. Yuan fears that a republic means the country's dissolution, and believes the only sane solution is to fight it out, but he is handicapped by lack of money.

China Ordered to Keep Mongolia.

Pekin.—In response to a direct request of the Russian government, handed to the Chinese foreign office by the Russian charge d'affaires that China should promptly resume control of Mongolia, the Chinese government declared its inability to comply at the present moment.

The only action the government is able to take regarding Mongolia, the independence of which has been proclaimed, is the appointment of two commissioners who have been ordered to proceed by way of the trans-Siberian railway to Urga, the chief city, to persuade the Mongol authorities, if possible, to renew their allegiance to China.

The kutuktu, who is the religious head of the Mongol Buddhists, was proclaimed khen.

According to the Lama doctrine, this dignitary—the kutuktu—is the terrestial impersonation of the godhead and never dies, but passed after his apparent decease into the body of some newly born boy, who is sought for afterwards according to the prophetic indications of the Delai Lama in Thibet. The independence movement is largely religious.

The dissatisfaction of the Mongolian people has been long standing, the Russians say, owing to Chinese incapacity and corruption. The Chinese ambans, or governors, have always plundered the Mongols and enriched themselves, while at the same time carrying on an unjust administration.

Russia does not intend to declare a protectorate and refused the Mongol appeal for the establishment of a protectorate last July. Such a declaration might cause objection on the part of the other powers, while in fact something like a protectorate already exists in the association of Russian and Mongolian Buddhists.

J. J. HILL IS OPTIMISTIC

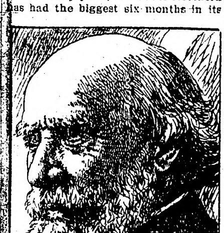
SEES NOTHING UNFAVORABLE IN COMMERCIAL SKY.

His Lines Have Biggest Six Months in Their History Since July 1.

New York, N. Y.—Chairman James J. Hill of the Great Northern road reached New York with a good report of conditions in the Northwest.

"Business is quiet, but good," he said. "Taking all the known factors into account, the outlook for next year is favorable. Naturally, people are not starting many new enterprises and there is little new railroad work projected, but otherwise things are all right. We are still doing a little 'ghost dancing.' Business would be better now in that section but for the reduced crop. Moisture conditions are excellent so far for next year's harvest, but of course it is a long way from now to the half-bushel measure."

Notwithstanding the effect of a smaller crop yield, the Great Northern has had the biggest six months in its history since the beginning of the current fiscal year. Gross earnings have shown a substantial increase, but net earnings have made a much larger relative gain.



JAMES J. HILL.

The Great Northern has attained an operating ratio as low as 49 per cent, in recent months, while its train load has ben brought up to as high as 731 tons for the month. Mr. Hill says the increased net earnings are not being obtained by stripping the property, but that the company is reaping the benefit of construction work well done.

Maintenance of way a mile has been higher than on other western roads, but the cost of keeping the equipment in repair has been as usual, considerably lower than the average. Mr. Hill expects next year to increase the Great Northern's efficiency and to show still lower operating costs, in spite of the tendency toward higher, with further increases in tonnage.

Influence of Canal.

As for the Panama canal, Mr. Hill says it will play a small part in changing either the nature or amount of the western roads' business. The Northwest will find it cheaper to continue moving its business by rail and in a direct line. He thinks there is little eastbound business that the canal can take from the railroads.

Mr. Hill denied the St. Paul report that Louis W. Hill is to resign as president of the Great Northern early in the new year, to be succeeded by C. R. Gray.

L. E. Katzenbach, who has been assistant secretary and assistant treasurer of the Colorado Southern, has been appointed secretary and assistant treasurer of the Great Northern, succeeding Edward Sawyer, retired.

FIFTY DEAD IN BERLIN.

Mysterious Poisoning Affair in Municipal Lodging House.

Berlin, Germ.—Fifty deaths due to a wholesale poisoning plot, have occurred at the Municipal Shelter for the homeless in this city. Sixty or seventy others are seriously ill at hospitals while new cases are being rushed there at such a rate that statistics cannot keep up with them.

At first it was believed that the death were due to the eating of tainted smoked herring which some of the homeless people had brought with them to the Shelter to eke out the scanty diet provided there. The affair, however, has assumed such proportions that this theory has almost been abandoned and the superintendent of the asylum asserts that the deaths have not been due to fish, but to deliberate poisoning.

Many cases have also been reported from another municipal Shelter and from the city jail. The symptoms of some of the patients correspond to those of cholera, but several postmortem examinations have disproved absolutely the existence of cholera.

MILLER IS HONEST

F. A. BEAN, WHO WENT BROKE 20 YEARS AGO, PAYS EVERY CENT WITH INTEREST.

CELEBRATES HIS XMAS

Surprises Holders of His Outlawed Paper and Accounts By Settling in Full With Six Per Cent Interest.

Minneapolis. — Penniless and $100,000 in debt twenty-one years ago, a northwestern miller is observing the 1911 Christmas season by distributing $200,000 among men who have absolutely no legal claim against him, but to whom he owed money when the crash came which left him stranded at middle age. The miller is now 71 years old.

The story of F. A. Bean of New Prague, Minn., reads like a business romance with a Dickens Christmas tale ending. It is a story of a man who lost his fortune when he was 50 years old, who started at the bottom and built up another fortune, only to give $200,000 away because of a sense of business honor. Not a cent of the $200,000 which Mr. Bean has distributed among his former creditors could have been collected and for every cent of the $100,000 which he originally owed he has paid 6 per cent interest for the entire twenty-one years. And the best part of the story is that Mr. Bean has enjoined secrecy on every man to whom he has paid money, has said that he didn't want the news to get out that he was paying back the money, that he just wanted to think about it himself, that he owed the money no matter what the law was and that no thanks are due him from the people who are sharing in the $200,000 distribution.

Fails, But Not Discouraged.

Mr. Bean was president of Polar Star Milling company in Faribault in 1890. The company had business reverses. Mr. Bean was unable to meet his obligations. He lost his business, his property and his credit and found himself in debt to the extent of approximately $100,000. The indebtedness was distributed throughout the northwest.

He was 50 years old, but he was not discouraged. He was an experienced miller and he heard that the "Zimmer" mill, well known to pioneers in the northwestern milling business, was closed down and could be leased. He went to his brother-in-law, J. H. Mallory, a Rice county farmer, and Mallory placed a second mortgage on his farm and let Mr. Bean have $1,000. With this sum Mr. Bean went to New Prague and leased the Zimmer mill. For years he did business under the name of J. H. Mallory. Finally the New Prague Milling company was organized with F. A. Bean as president. The company gradually acquired property in the United States and Canada until it had five big mills. Recently the company became the International Mills company with headquarters at New Prague. One of its mills, at Moose Jaw, Canada, was recently destroyed by fire.

POULTRY SHOW A SUCCESS.

Over 600 Fowls on Exhibition at Crookston.

Crookston.—The fourth annual show of the Northern Minnesota Poultry association, just closed, was the most successful since organization. Over 600 birds were exhibited, and the next show will require the new armory.

Judge Benjamin of Hutchinson, who scored the birds, was amazed at the growth of the show. The officers elected were as follows: President, Senator John Saugstad, Climax; first vice president, C. E. Brown, second August Aas; third, W. P. Murphy; secretary-treasurer, Mrs F. C. Mitchell, Crookston; superintendent, F. C. Mitchell, Crookston.

In addition to nearly $500 in cash prizes, the association gave away eighteen silver cups and local merchants gave merchandise prizes for attendance.

CHURCH TO GIVE DANCES.

Pelican Rapids Experiment to Combine Prayer and Festive Step.

Fergus Falls.—It is reported from Pelican Rapids that a new plan has been adopted there which will combine religious services with dancing and card playing. The plan is to hold dancing and card parties under the auspices of one of the churches, open the festivities with prayer, and, after a session of dancing, religious services will be held and the evening close with the Christian Endeavor benediction. A series of these parties is to be held during the winter as an experiment, church leaders having come to the conclusion that it is better to hold them under religious auspices than to have the young people attending secular parties.

EQUIPPING EXHIBIT CAR.

Minnesota Products Again to Be Sent Through East.

St. Paul.—The Minnesota Immigration commission has begun the work of equipping the advertising car which it will send out this winter through the Eastern States. The Great Northern railroad, this year the same as last, will furnish the car and transportation and the state will furnish the exhibits and two men to go with the car. The start will be made January 15 and the car will be gone about three months. It will travel through parts of Indiana, Ohio and Illinois.

The samples to be shown in the car will be selected from the Minnesota exhibit at land show, which won the silver cup for the most comprehensive exhibit. As the car will not hold the entire exhibit only the best samples displayed at the show will be taken.

F. M. Eddy of Sauk Center, former congressman, will be in charge of the car, and Harold Knutson of Foley will assist him.

MERRITT IS AN INDIAN CHIEF.

Man Who Made the Charge Against Rockefeller Is Head of Band.

Duluth. — Leonidas Merritt of Duluth, who gave testimony before the Stanley committee at Washington, is a Chippewa Indian by adoption, and as the chiefs of the Nikaniss band are now all dead, this distinction gives Merritt the right of adoption. While in Washington, it is now made known, he adopted Miss Katherine Green of Henderson, Ky., into the band.

Back in 1856 when "Leon" Merritt was a boy of 12 years Chief Loon Foot adopted him. Merritt is now chief of the Nikaniss.

Merritt presented Miss Green with a book of verse containing his experiences with John D. Rockefeller and Rev. Frederick T. Gates. The book does not tell of the final triumph of Rockefeller, as alleged by Merritt, as it was written before that event.

TO UPLIFT FARIBAULT SCHOOLS.

Board of Education Disapproves Students Attending Public Amusements.

Faribault.—The Faribault school board at a recent meeting passed the following resolution with the view to bettering the conditions of the students:

"Resolved, That the Faribault school board cannot countenance and does not approve of any organization or club, or attendance at entertainments and places of amusements, or patronage of billiard halls and pool rooms, and other public resorts, which can possibly interfere with the efficiency or proficiency of pupils of the public schools in their school work."

DINNER TO HILL IN DULUTH.

Business Men to Give Function to Him January 3.

Duluth.—President L. W. Hill of the Great Northern will be in Duluth early next week, and some of the Duluth business men are arranging a banquet in his honor.

He resided at the Kitchi Gami club in Duluth for a couple of years, when he was president of the old Eastern Minnesota road, and has many warm friends here. The banquet will be held at the Spalding on the evening of January 3.

FUEL COMPANY'S FIRM PACT.

Pittsburg and Duluth Concerns Make New Shipping Agreement.

Duluth, Minn.—The Shenango furnace interests and the Carnegie Coal company, in Pittsburgh, and the Carnegie Fuel company, in Duluth, have formed a traffic agreement which involves the transportation of the coal company's coal to Duluth. The furnace interest owns a modern fleet and ships 2,000,000 tons of ore per year down the lakes and the Carnegie upbound coal tonnage is rapidly approaching that volume.

Immigration Commissioner Selected.

St Paul. - H. J. Maxfield, of Wadena, was elected state immigration commissioner at a meeting of the state immigration board. Mr. Maxfield was not a candidate, his name had not been mentioned in connection with the position, and his election was a genuine surprise. He is county attorney of Wadena county, is about 40 years of age, was one of the organizers of and the first president of the Northern Minnesota Development association, and held that office until his retirement after the recent annual meeting of the association at St. Cloud.

Mayo Is Resting Easily.

New York, N. Y.—Physicians at the Presbyterian hospital declare Dr. Charles H. Mayo, noted Rochester, Minn., surgeon, is resting easily. Unless complications set in, they beleve he will recover.

The Dinner in the White House

NARRATIVE OF CAPTAIN ADAMS
"Detective-Diplomat"

By H. M. EGBERT

(Copyright, by W. G. Chapman.)

THE names in the following adventure are avowedly fictitious. The interval which has elapsed since it occurred is so recent that it would serve no useful purpose to disclose them. "Jordans" and "Stevens" stand, however, for well-known personages in American public life for whom literally nothing is impossible.

It was about six weeks after my return from my mission to Admiral Rojestvensky and the adventures in the North Sea, which I have previously recounted, when I received an urgent summons to the foreign office. I found Lord Lansdowne there, in the company of a young man to whom he introduced me. The gentleman was Mr. Gardiner, the third secretary of the American embassy.

"Captain Adams," said Lord Lansdowne, "I think it will be best for you to hear Mr. Gardiner's report and then we will take up the matter of acting upon it."

Mr. Gardiner plunged into the matter without preliminaries.

"I may begin by saying that my father is a colonel in the Grand Army of the Republic," he began, "which consists, as you may know, of the veterans of the federal forces who fought during our Civil war. He is in Washington at present, where the veterans are holding their annual reunion, and learned of the affair from an old comrade in arms, the personal secretary of Stevens, the millionaire senator, whom he encountered for the first time since the close of the war. The two old gentlemen met, drank a few juleps, and then, somehow, Stevens's secretary found that he had allowed the julep to play havoc with his tongue. There is a plot afoot for nothing less than the establishment of a monarchy in America.

"As you probably know, for many months relations between the president and his congress have been very strained, chiefly on account of the president's desire to effect the passage of certain anti-trust legislation. He has opposed to him the entire power of the trust magnates, who are predominant in both houses of the legislature. Jordans, the multimillionaire, who is said to control the food supply of every American, and Stevens, his millionaire son-in-law, who has the senate under his thumb, are thus face to face with the president in a desperate encounter. There can be no compromise. It is a fight for popular rights against a plutocracy.

"The president has the country with him, and, knowing this, the plutocracy is prepared to resort to a desperate device—nothing less than the overthrow of the republic. Unfortunately the president, by his reforms, has antagonized the army, and Jordans has bought over General Bramwell, the commander-in-chief. Now this is the scheme:

"Bramwell has fifteen thousand troops camped down in Maryland, just outside the capitol, ostensibly for the maneuvers. Tomorrow week the president entertains the National Chamber of Commerce at the annual banquet in the White House. Jordans and Stevens and fifty lesser lights will be there, together with the president, the speaker, the leaders of both parties, many of the senators, General Bramwell, and a dozen or more army officers. Practically all of these are privy to the conspiracy. At midnight, when, by arrangement, the regulars will have entered the city, General Bramwell will rise and announce that the republic no longer exists. Jordans will be acclaimed emperor, a company of soldiers will be brought into the White House, and the president will be made prisoner. To ensure the loyalty of the troops, I may say that enormous sums have been placed at General Bramwell's disposal. It is calculated that each of the men will receive several thousand dollars."

"This—in modern America?" I exclaimed.

"That's just the point," Lord Lansdowne interrupted me. "It is precisely the incredibility of the scheme that will insure its success. Your entire regular army," he continued, addressing Mr Gardiner, "amounts to less than seventy thousand men, and half, at least, of these are cooped up in remote and inaccessible army posts on the western frontier, from which they can never be transported, the railroad lines being under the thumb of the conspirators. Half of the remainder is in the Philippines. So you see, Captain Adams, there is absolutely nothing to prevent the success of this coup. Before America awakens to a realization of what is happening, she will be in the hands of Jordans and Stevens who, by their complete organization of all industry, can actually starve the people into submission."

"Then how can I prevent this?" I interpolated.

"By conveying a message to Jordans," Lord Lansdowne answered. "That is our only hope. As you know, it is a cardinal point of English policy to keep America strong. Let her once weaken and the Monroe doctrine falls into abeyance; Germany will overrun South America and gain a strategic footing in every sea. To be plain, the message which you will take informs Jordans that unless he abandons his intended coup he will be forbidden to carry on business in Britain or her colonies. That will mean financial disaster for him, and the threat is our only hope, since the time is too short to permit any other form of intervention."

Seven days later—on the day before that set for the fulfilment of the conspiracy—I was seated with Jordans in his private office at Broadway and Pinto streets, New York. And all America was hurrying to its work outside, never dreaming that the morrow would, unless my mission succeeded, see events that would shake it to its foundations and undo the results of a century and more of democratic government.

He was a man of some seventy years, obese, with little, shrewd eyes and thin wisps of hair plastered down over his temples. The dispatch which I handed to him was nominally from Lord Rothschild, for of course the British government could hold no communication with him in person; but it was easy for him to understand its allusions.

He read it through silently while I sat near him. Then he placed it in his pocket and turned to me.

"Captain Adams," he said, "do you know what was in this dispatch?"

I admitted it. I told him. He smiled coldly.

"If I succeed," he replied, "England will be glad enough of my alliance without daring to carry out this threat. If I fail—well, we will discuss that afterward. My answer is: No."

He rang a bell and his secretary entered. With a curt adieu, he bade him show me to the door.

One day only before the debacle—and, in his New York office, this man could sit calmly, planning, scheming, secure of the success of his scheme. One thing alone could overthrow it: the disloyalty of the army. But the army were totally ignorant of the part they had to play; and who could doubt but that, when brought to the White House, they would follow their own general, especially at the price of a fortune each?

I went to the White House. The president was attending a political meeting in Delaware; he would not be back until the following morning. I made an appointment to see him the moment that he returned, and, with a sense of being completely baffled, retired to my room in the Hotel Boulevard. All night I tossed upon my pillow, following in anticipation the result of the next night's work.

It was so deadly simple, so impossible of failure. Stay! A thought came to me. What if the millions of Jordans could be offset by more millions? What if Bramwell and his officers could be bought over? The price Jordans had paid them must have been uncountable. Where could the president obtain a larger sum? In the national treasury!

I found him quite unperturbed when he accorded me our interview the following morning. And when, stuttering and stammering, I began to tell him, I found that the whole plot was known to him.

"But—but are you going to do nothing?" I burst out.

"What is there for me to do?" he answered. "Let the glory of opening a new chapter of civil strife in this nation's history belong to my enemies. I might proclaim martial law, close the shops, enroll volunteers secretly and so commence the struggle myself. I prefer to do nothing. Captain Adams, the moment that Jordans is proclaimed emperor I shall shoot him through the head with the revolver that I carry in this pocket. If I am not slain instantly, my second bullet will be for the traitor Bramwell. I can do no more."

"You can do more," I cried. "There is a hundred millions in the treasury. Take it, bribe Bramwell and the soldiery—"

"It isn't mine," the president answered. "It is the credit of the nation, and that I will never tamper with."

I could make no rejoinder to this. Sick and despondent, I made my way back to my hotel. I looked at my watch. It was past one in the afternoon. In less than twelve hours, a single revolution of the hour hand, the destiny of the nation would have been altered. And there was no hope. I heard a boy calling an afternoon newspaper, and bought a copy, and, opening it, read: "Maneuvers in Maryland ended. General Bramwell will lead troops past the president tomorrow." But I knew how, at nightfall, the swift and silent march cityward would begin, with its ensuing tragedy for American freedom.

Well, I had done everything that I could do. Suddenly the idea came to me to take a steam car out to Laurel, half way between Washington and Baltimore, where the troops were in camp, to see them. It would not avail me; yet there was a curious fascination in the idea. I wondered whether the officers had yet been told of the conspiracy, whether they would experience difficulty in inducing the men to obey them. Little, I knew. I boarded a train and we went whirling out of the capital, under the tunnels, then through the fresh Maryland fields, parallel with the trolley cars, until we halted at Hyattsville. And there I saw the rows and rows of white tents of soldiers.

"I thought the troops were camped further out, at Laurel," I hazarded to a fellow passenger.

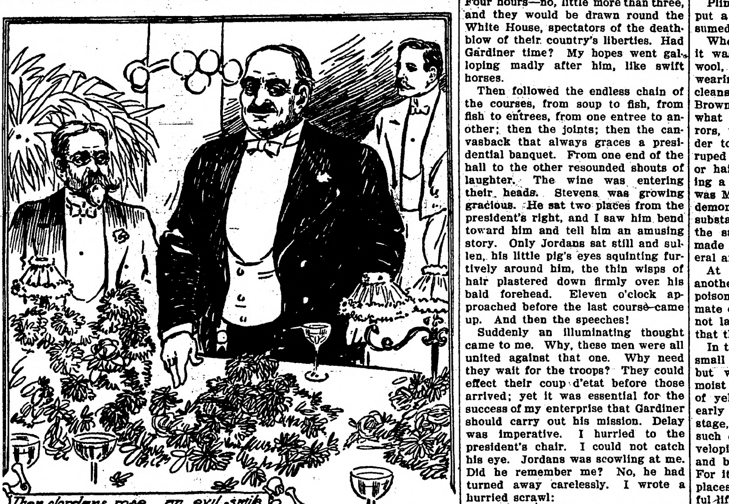
He turned upon me indignantly.

"Mon," he said, with a broad Scotch accent, "do ye no ken that yon's the Gr-r-rand Ar-rmy of the R-republic?"

It was the annual assemblage of veterans that I had seen. As the train sped past the encampment there came to my ears faintly, yet easily distinguishable, the fragments of one of those old battle-songs inspired by faith in the republic and love for her—that faith and love that hurled three million men southward upon the bayonets of their no less gallant enemies. And it was the successors—in many instances descendants of these men—that were going to rob America of her birthright of liberty!

A quarter of an hour later I had descended from the train at Laurel and was entering the lines of the soldiery. The maneuvers were over; the rifles were stacked in front of the tents; horses pulled at the picket lines; forage and provisions, ammunition boxes and paraphernalia of all sorts were piled by the long line of transport wagons. A drizzling rain had set in, and the soldiers shivered within their tents. I tried to scent whether any unusual excitement was prevalent there, but there was none discernible. The thought occurred to me to visit General Bramwell, to make some wild appeal to his patriotism; but I learned that he was not there. He had gone to Washington with several of the officers of field rank that morning. After a fruitless stroll and more fruitless racking of my brains, I returned to Washington by the next train.

At five o'clock I was back in my hotel, packing up to leave. I would not remain in Washington to be a witness of the ultimate disaster. I was waiting in the capacious hall, while the porter carried down my things, when the behavior of a group of men standing at the bar, straight across from me, attracted my attention. One of these, a gray-haired old fellow, was evidently under the influence of liquor and talking loudly and rather at random, while another was endeavoring to quiet him, and two more looked on with some concern.



Then Jordans rose, an evil smile on his face

"I tell you there'll be something do-ing in W-Washin—how's it go?—tomorrow," said the old man, hiccoughing. "Wasser use of being Stevens' sec-secretary if I don't know?"

"Will you keep your mouth shut?" exclaimed his companion, a man evidently of his own age, in exasperated tones.

"No, now Gardiner, keep qui-quiet," replied the drunkard, placing his hand upon the shoulder of the other. "I'm not—going blab. Goo' ole Gardiner. Goo' ole com-rade Grand Ar-Army Repub-lic."

I could not repress the slightest start. Gardiner! Where had I heard that name and what did it portend? It was only a few seconds before remembrance came back to me. Why, this must be the father of the third secretary of the American embassy in London, who had warned his son of the plot learned from the bibulous old comrade of his boyhood, who occupied the position of secretary to the millionaire senator, Stevens.

Hope, which had sunk so low, suddenly flamed up within me. It was a frantic and well-nigh desperate chance; just such a chance as had often before pulled me out of the jaws of danger. I crossed the room hurriedly. I beckoned to the old gentleman to an alcove.

"Mr. Gardiner," I began hurriedly, "I must have a half hour with you upon a matter of the most vital nature. Not now. In one hour I will be back and meet you here."

"But, sir, sir," he spluttered, drawing himself up with offended dignity, "I do not know you, sir."

"I know your son," said I, and told him who he was. "It is with relation to—" I bent down and whispered—"that scheme of the White House dinner."

His eyes fell. "I will be here," he murmured.

I left him abruptly and, hailing a hack, instructed the driver to go like the wind to the White House. Arrived there I dashed past the policeman at the entrance and past the officials, straight to the private room of the president. His secretary caught me at his door. He must have thought me mad. Then he recognized me.

"I must see him," I cried.

The secretary nodded. "He said you were to have admittance if you should come," he replied, knocking upon the door.

The president was seated at a table with a document spread out before him. At his side was a man whom I recognized at once as Mr. Frothingham, the eminent lawyer.

"I am making my will," he said with a smile. "My last day of public duty must include time for a personal settlement of affairs. Well," he continued, "what news have you? Is there anything?"

"I can save you yet," I cried. "Tell me, are there arms in Washington?"

He considered; then shook his head.

"There is an armory at Baltimore," he answered. "But where are the men to bear the weapons?"

I thought harder than I had ever thought before.

"If you supply the arms I will supply the men," I replied. "Is there not the museum of war relics? Does it not contain two thousand weapons of sorts—sabers and the old, early breech-loaders of the sixties?"

"Yes; eaten through with rust," he answered.

"That is an unimportant detail. Give me an order placing them at the disposal of anyone whom I may nominate. That is my first request. And my second is, invite me to the banquet tonight in the capacity of waiter, so that I can see the result of my plan to save the government."

The president hesitated a moment. Then he wrote me the order for the arms. "You shall be present as my guest," he said, handing it to me. But I demurred.

"I am known to several who will be here tonight," I answered. "I will come as a waiter."

I hurried away and leaped into the waiting hack, which I directed back to the hotel. I found old Mr. Gardiner still waiting for me. We went into a private room and sat down together. Then I turned and faced him.

"You offered up your life in your youth freely, in order that the republic might endure," I said. "Has old age so deadened you to every generous principle that you can become the sordid tool of such men as Jordans and Stevens to overthrow your country's liberties?"

Gardiner turned pale. "What do you know?" he stammered.

"I know that you half repent the part assigned to you to play," I answered. "I know that, overcome by remorse, you wrote to your son at the embassy in London, informing him, urging him to take any steps that might be feasible to prevent this contemplated plan from being executed." I stood up. "Mr. Gardiner," I said, "the fate of the American republic is in your hands."

"I—I—" he stammered.

"You can save her and only you."

"How?" he muttered.

I told him. As I unfolded my plan a light of enthusiasm dawned in his eyes. He seemed to shake off the lethargy of age, to become again a youth, full of noble enthusiasm and patriotic purpose. When I had finished he clasped my hands.

"I swear that I will succeed," he cried.

"Then go like the devil," I answered.

Evening was drawing on apace. I had staked everything upon the single chance: Gardiner's ability to frustrate the coup d'etat by the means that I had suggested to him. I ordered the porter to take my possessions up to my room again, followed him, and changed into my evening clothes. Then I descended the stairs, ordered a hack, and was driven to the White House, but leisurely this time. The president's secretary met me at the door.

"The president wishes me to repeat his invitation for you to be his guest," he said. "But if you prefer not to be—" He smiled and led me into the kitchen. He spoke a few hurried words to a man in evening dress of faultless cut who stood in military fashion against the wall; then introduced us. "The head waiter," he said. It was arranged that I should be on duty inside the banquet hall as a supernumerary.

I had just time to take up my position there when the guests began to arrive. Jordans and Stevens were almost the first. They came in smiling and chatting. The president received them and all three shook hands, measuring one another with quiet looks. The president's air of nonchalance plainly disconcerted the visitors. They knew he knew what was afoot and had expected that he would fly, postpone the banquet, engage in any desperate and ineffective measure rather than stand there, smiling at them with the pleased, half-bored look of a host at a dinner.

I contrived to whisper as I brushed past him once:

"Do nothing. When Jordans cheers you will be the signal for something—different from what he imagines."

I saw the president smile. But now the room was filling up. Senators, congressmen were there. The speaker came in jauntily, followed by the heads of the great commercial institutions of the nation. Not one but knew something was afoot, for that evening the first whispers had gone stirring round Washington, and each—even the master mind, Jordans himself—regretted in his own way what he believed was to be the passing of representative institutions from the western continent.

The climax of audacity was Stevens's. He was a burly, leering brute, with an evil smile of power. I saw him go up to the president and hand him an evening paper which he had pulled from his coat pocket. I saw a three-column head:

"Army Strikes Camp at Six. Marching to Salute President at Midnight."

So they were already on the way! Four hours—no, little more than three, and they would be drawn round the White House, spectators of the deathblow of their country's liberties. Had Gardiner time? My hopes went galloping madly after him, like swift horses.

Then followed the endless chain of the courses, from soup to fish, from fish to entrees, from one entree to another; then the joints; then the canvasback that always graces a presidential banquet. From one end of the hall to the other resounded shouts of laughter. The wine was entering their heads. Stevens was growing gracious. He sat two places from the president's right, and I saw him bend toward him and tell him an amusing story. Only Jordans sat still and sullen, his little pig's eyes squinting furtively around him, the thin wisps of hair plastered down firmly over his bald forehead. Eleven o'clock approached before the last course came up. And then the speeches!

Suddenly an illuminating thought came to me. Why, these men were all united against that one. Why need they wait for the troops? They could effect their coup d'etat before those arrived; yet it was essential for the success of my enterprise that Gardiner should carry out his mission. Delay was imperative. I hurried to the president's chair. I could not catch his eye. Jordans was scowling at me. Did he remember me? No, he had turned away carelessly. I wrote a hurried scrawl:

"Hold them with your speech until I drop my napkin. They have planned their coup for the moment of returning thanks and pledging you."

On second thoughts I placed this boldly upon a platter and took it to him. He opened it, read it, and put it in his pocket nonchalantly. Nevertheless, when he arose, I could see that he watched me closely.

When he arose a sense of the awful solemnity of the occasion seemed to pass over the assemblage. With unlit cigars, with downcast eyes, they sat beneath him as he spoke of the majesty of the republic, the duties of those at the helm not to let the charge of the nation's welfare fall into the hands of greed and incompetence. Then, more sternly, he rebuked those who had endeavored to obscure the destinies of America. His scorn rose. He lashed them with whips of epigram. He all but named them. Stevens grew scarlet under the audacity of that denunciation. Once he half rose, then changed his mind and sat down again.

And all the while I saw the president looking at me as I stood, a napkin on my arm, listening intently against the darkness outside. Would Gardiner never come?

It could not last much longer. They had given tongue against him now. Cries of dissent punctuated his speech. He had spoken. I saw him cease one moment and glance toward me appealingly. Then, through the darkness, I heard the steady tramp, tramp of infantry. All heard it, too. I dropped my napkin. The president sat down.

Then Jordans rose, and I saw the aged man stand like a rock in the midst of the assembly, an evil smile on his face.

"I ask you to give three cheers for the president of this country," he began. He held up his hand. "General Bramwell, who could not be present tonight, having ably concluded the maneuvers in Maryland, has brought with him two regiments of infantry to salute our host. I ask you to give him this opportune tribute."

He led the cheering. The sounds echoed through the banqueting hall and were renewed without. I saw the door flung open and a company of soldiers enter and take up their posts around the walls, file by file, impassive and silent now. I saw the president look toward me and smile. I saw the leer of triumph on Jordans's face freeze into stony and expressionless silence. Then, as though realizing the failure of his scheme, he sank down and buried his head in his hands.

For this was not the Army of Maryland, still one hour's distance away. This was those veterans of the Grand Army of the Republic, whom Gardiner had brought from Hyattsville to uphold their country's liberties. And if they did not know the historic part that they played; if they imagined that they were there merely in response to the president's own invitation, at least they would have been true to death against treachery on the part of their younger compeers. The republic was saved; and if their empty rifles were rotted with the rust of a generation, how was Jordans to know it?

MANY LIBELS ON SALAMANDER

Myths About the Little Batrachian, Long Accepted as Truths, Are Now Set Straight.

About that little batrachian, the salamander, there has been much fiction written by those ancient naturalists, Aristotle, Pliny, De Thaun, Porta, Marco Polo and Browne, and by those of a later day, the New York Evening Post remarks. The ancients all agreed that the salamander was a small reptile, a lover of cold and wet, never venturing from its lair except in rainy weather. It was believed by some that the salamander was a living fire extinguisher, just as if its body were truly made of ice. Others asserted that it lived and thrived in fire. The fire resisting charm was even ascribed to certain gnomes and sylphs, as well as to the fair water nymph, Undine. And so in fable and mythology the salamander existed for years considered both fire proof and fire extinguishing.

Pliny, a scientist of a practical turn, put a salamander in a fire and consumed both salamander and myth.

When asbestos was first discovered it was thought to be salamander's wool, and was made into cloth and wearing apparel capable of being cleansed by fire instead of water. But Browne loosened this theory somewhat in his exposure of vulgar errors, when he declared the salamander to be "a kind of lizard, a quadruped . . . without woole furre or haire," making such wool gathering a most hopeless undertaking. It was Marco Polo, however, who finally demonstrated that the real fire-proof substance was asbestos, asserting at the same time that the salamander made of this material must be a mineral and not a beast.

At one time the salamander had another less acceptable power, that of poisoning whatever it touched, animate or inanimate. This tradition did not last long, and today it is known that this animal is perfectly harmless.

In truth, this batrachian is simply a small amphibian resembling a lizard but without scales, having a soft moist skin colored in spots or bands of yellow, orange or brown. In its early life it has an aquatic larval stage, but in later life it puts aside such childish things as gills, and, developing lungs, becomes air-breathing and behaves like an ordinary reptile. For its habitat it chooses dark damp places where it leads a quiet, peaceful life, feeding on aquatic worms, insects and very small animals.

For those interested in a study of the salamander Dr. Leonhard Stejneger has written a paper on three batrachians from Panama and Costa Rica. This paper is publication 1857 of the proceedings of the United States National Museum, and deals with two curious tree toads from Panama and a new salamander from Costa Rica. This modern animal, a little over two and a half inches in length, has a smooth brown skin somewhat striped in lighter shade, a wide, flat head and a long cylindrical tail. Dr. Stejneger, the author, has named the new species after the collector, C. Picado, who discovered it in La Estrella, southeast of Cartoga, Costa Rica.

Origin of Common Sayings.

Here are a few examples from Basil Hargrave's "Origins and Meanings of Popular Phrases and Names": The phrase "every man Jack of them" is explained as a corruption of the archaic "everich" or "every-chon" (everyone) into "every-John" and then "every-Jack." "Hobson's choice" goes back to the seventeenth century. Tobias Hobson, who kept a livery stable at Cambridge, England, and who "would only let out his horses in strict rotation, saying: 'This or none.'" "Mind your P's and Q's" is said to be a reference to pints and quarts in the old alehouse score, and an admonition "not to allow the score to run too long." "Point blank" was the white spot in the center of the target, from the French blanc.

Absent-Minded.

"Do you take this woman to be your lawfully wedded wife?" begins the minister, when the bridegroom, Mr. Cheetin Stox, the eminent financier, interrupts with:

"I don't remember."

Then, seeing the looks of amazement on the faces of all, he realizes where he is, and exclaims:

"I beg your pardon! For the moment I was thinking about my trial last week. Certainly I take her!"—Life.

SERIAL STORY

No Man's Land

A ROMANCE

By Louis Joseph Vance

Illustrations by Ray Walters

(Copyright, 1910, by Louis Joseph Vance.)

13

SYNOPSIS.

Garrett Coast, a young man of New York City, meets Douglas Blackstock, who invites him to a card party. He accepts, although he dislikes Blackstock, the reason being that both are in love with Katherine Thaxter. Coast fails to convince her that Blackstock is unworthy of her friendship. At the party Coast meets two named Dundas and Van Tuyl. There is a quarrel, and Blackstock shoots Van Tuyl dead. Coast struggles to wrest the weapon from him, thus the police discover them. Coast is arrested for murder. He is convicted, but as he begins his sentence, Dundas names Blackstock as the murderer and kills himself. Coast becomes free, but Blackstock has married Katherine Thaxter and fled. Coast purchases a yacht and while sailing sees a man thrown from a distant boat. He rescues the fellow who is named Appleyard. They arrive at a lonely island, known as No Man's Land. Coast starts out to explore the place and comes upon some deserted buildings. He discovers a man dead. Upon going further and approaching a house he sees Katherine Thaxter, who explains that her husband, under the name of Black, has bought the island. He is blind, a wireless operator and has a station there.

CHAPTER IX.—(Continued.)

She held her answer, quivering with indignation. That he should dare—! Yet there were two things in his attitude to calm her: an impersonal note, puzzling, and a simple dignity that left little foothold for resentment.

As for Coast, momentarily while she did not reply, the issue hung in the balance, whether he should speak or no: whether enlighten her forthwith or leave her (were she happy in her marriage) in her fool's Paradise. He felt himself a prey to discordant impulses, pride and generosity counselling him, each with a double tongue.

"I hold your happiness above all else," he resumed as the pause lengthened—"far above my own, Katherine. That is why I ask you: are you happy."

"I have no regrets," she told him steadily.

"That doesn't answer me."

Her eyes wavered beneath his searching glance. She turned away and stared off into the vacancy of the fog.

"How is one to tell?" she said presently. "Isn't happiness difficult to define? A thing of comparative values?. . . I am content, that much I know. I have discovered something in life higher than the gratification of self; I have learned that to serve means more than to be served. I married the man I loved; he needs me now, could hardly do without me. I am a help to him in his work; he would probably be unable to continue it without my assistance. . . . I have my cares, as he has his, as you have yours. Who has not? . . . But a year is a long time; I have learned much since . . ." She took a deep breath. "Yes," she concluded evenly: "I think I may say I am happy, Garrett."

But she kept her face averted.

"And this?" he asked, stepping to her side and lightly touching her bare forearm with his finger.

Just below her left elbow four marks, like bluish stripes set close together, stood out like weals upon her delicate skin, where the flesh had been bruised by the cruel pressure of a man's strong fingers.

At his touch she recoiled with a half-stifled cry, her face blazing. "Dont'—don't—!" she gasped, trying with faltering fingers to pull down the sleeve. But realizing that it was too late, that he had already seen, she recovered, sullenly leaving the sleeve as it was.

"I'm sorry," said Coast soberly; "I didn't mean to touch you. I didn't think—had forgotten what—what I may not expect you to forget. Only . . . that is his mark, Katherine."

"Well," she flashed defiantly, "and what if it is? Is he, or am I, answerable to you? Can he not touch me . . ." But his undeviating and penetrating gaze disconcerted her; her anger rang unconvincing even to herself. "It was an accident," she finished lamely. "One of the servants angered him—they are Chinese and stupid—and in his blindness he mistook me for the man and caught my arm. . . ."

"It must have hurt," said Coast, trying to believe her.

She was silent, facing him with a trace of bravado He bowed.

"I beg your pardon; it was, as you suggest, none of my affair. I merely happened to notice, and it startled me. Will you be good enough to tell me the way to the beach?"

Silently the woman indicated a path leading away from the gate.

Still he lingered, letting his eyes drink their fill of her; and knew, in a swift flash of certitude, that never had she been more dear to him than in this moment of renunciation, that never would his heart's allegiance waver from her, whatever her mood or circumstance. Whether she suffered him or as now sedulously discountenanced him, his queen could do no wrong. . . .

With a sigh, inaudible, he went to the gate.

"There's nothing I can serve you in, Katherine?"

"Nothing—only go away."

"Then good-by." He shrugged slightly, lifted his cap and put himself outside the dooryard.

"But, Garrett—"

He stopped. She moved down to the fence.

"Garrett," she begged, breathless with the anxiety roused by an unsuspected latent fear, "promise me something . . ."

He looked down into her sweet face, plaintive with appeal. "Name it," said he.

"If by any chance you should meet him—Douglas—I'm not sure where he is—don't please—"

"I'll be careful," he assured her. "Don't worry; I shant let him know who I am. If possible, I'll keep out of his way."

Her eyes were eloquent of inexpressible relief. "Thank you," she faltered, keenly alive to the trite inadequacy of the words. "And, Garrett, you're not—not angry with me?"

"Angry? With you!"

She was twisting her hands together. "I can't seem to forget," she said in a tremor. "I've tried—I only wish I might—but I can't, I can't. Remember that, if I seen unkind."

"You haven't been unkind to the man who shot Van Tuyl," he said, in spite of himself.

She did not seem to hear, or, if she heard, to read the riddle in his enigmatic answer. "It isn't that alone," she protested; "that, perhaps, I could forget in time You weren't yourself: Douglas has always insisted you were not. But, O Garrett, Garrett; it was unmanly, it was unworthy of you to try to shield yourself by accusing him! That I can't forget, that I'm afraid I shall never learn to forgive. Why, Garrett, why did you permit that man Warburton to do it?"

He heard her out in pitiful patience, too deeply moved for anger or resentment to have any place in the conflict of his thoughts.

"As to that," he said, his tone colorless, "I would ask you to suspend judgment if you hadn't already pronounced it. But I leave you this to consider: one of two men only could have killed Van Tuyl. Dundas we except by mutual consent; Blackstock admits and I admit he didn't do it. There remain Blackstock and myself, neither of whom could have been convicted on the other's unsupported evidence."

"You are cowardly to say this to me, when he's not here!"

But he had a level and emotionless look with which to meet the impassioned scorn she showed him.

"Perhaps; but don't forget I asked only the opportunity to say as much to him. . . . Has it ever occurred to you that Dundas, not your husband, sent me to Sing Sing—that, had Dundas been in my pay, Blackstock would now be occupying the cell I occupied?"

He had himself well in hand. Otherwise she must have seen how deeply moved he was. Simply to watch her and not give way was almost more than he could endure. His eyes kindled and his face blazed, and his heart ached—with his love for her, the longing that he must never voice. But she did not see.

She was answering him; her words came in a torrent, stumbling over one another: her voice vibrant with unutterable contempt sounded in his bearing like the hymning of angels. "Oh," she cried in loathing—"insufferable!" And the desire to catch her in his arms and stop her lips with kisses was like a pain. "I never dreamed that man could be so low, so vile!" she said; and he wished himself beneath the foot she stamped. "I hate you!" she told him; and beneath his breath he whispered over and over: "I love you, I love you!"

"I ask nothing," he said, when she had to stop, as much for lack of words as breath, "more than that you think it over. You've told me what you think of me—and I daresay you're somewhat justfied. But think it over; you owe me and you owe yourself that. Weigh the worst you knew of me before Van Tuyl was shot against what you have learned of Blackstock since you married him; then judge between us. Try to think which would be the more likely to lose his temper because of a drunken man's maudlin insolence. At best you'll admit it's his word against mine, Dundas's word deciding. And one way or another Dundas was a perjurer: first his testimony convicted me, then his testimony set me free."

"What do you mean by that?" she demanded, impressed in spite of herself.

"Dundas," he explained patiently, "committed suicide in the Tombs a few days ago, after signing a confession that he had testified falsely at my trial. On the strength of that confession I was pardoned by the Governor. You understand.?"

Her face was ghastly. "You bought that confession," she asserted between set teeth.

He smiled painfully. "I presume I might have anticipated that. . . ."

"You daren't deny you bought it!"

"From a man contemplating suicide?"

That silenced her. Her poor, distraught wits would frame no retort to his inexorable logic. Pulled this way and that by doubts, each more terrible than the last, she could no more than stay and stare at him with eyes blank in a face like parchment.

His heart bled for her in her misery. If he could he would have unsaid all that he had said, to ease her suffering. "I feel like a dog," he told her contritely; "to have told you this . . . I meant to, but . . . I couldn't help it. Think and . . . and judge between us, Katherine."

"It is a lie!" she wailed. "You have lied to me—lied to me! All you have said was lies—all lies. I can't believe you. . . . But you have poisoned my life for me. . . . Truth or lies: what am I to believe? . . . I am the most wretched of women, and you have made me so. Why couldn't you leave me in peace? Why must you have come to make me suffer so? How am I to know what is true, what false? . . . Oh, you are monstrous! You are cruel, cruel! If only you would go and let me forget! . . . Go, go, and let me be!"

In his remorse, reluctant to leave her so, he tried to comfort her with broken protestations that even he knew were rank with insincerity; nor would he willingly have gone before she grew more composed. But at length, despairing, he yielded to her unending importunity, and bowing his head, went his way in a daze of misery as black and dense as the relentless, sullen fog.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

She Kept Her Face Averted.

The Ruling Passion.

"Yes the elevator fell six stories."

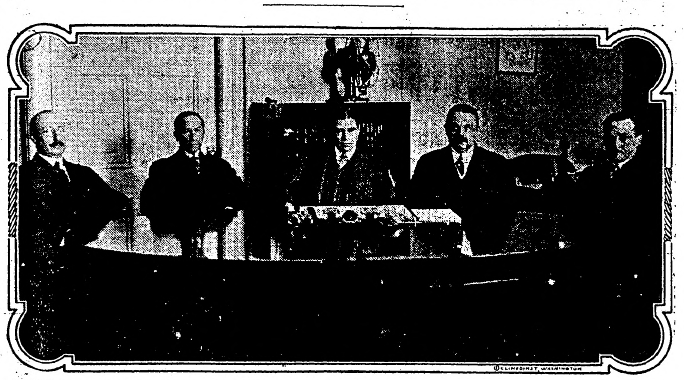
"Everybody screamed and prayed, of course?"

"No. There would have been absolute silence if it hadn't been for the elevator boy."

"What did he do?"

He shrieked 'Going down,' as we passed each floor."

HAS COMPLETED ITS REPORT ON THE WOOL TARIFF



HERE is the tariff board appointed by President Taft, which has just completed its report on wool for the guidance of congress in readjusting the wool schedule. The document is a comprehensive digest of the difference in the cost of production in this country and abroad. The board members, from left to right are Thomas W. Page, Alvin H. Sanders, Henry C. Emery, James B. Reynolds and William M. Howard.

ORLEANS LOSES HOPE

"Pretender" Changes Plans in Attempt to Form Monarchy.

Royalist Leader Attempts to Reconcile Few Warring Followers—Populace Care Nothing for Restoration of Throne.

Paris.—The royalists, who are always fervent in France, although their political influence ceased to be important long ago, were surprised and rather dismayed to receive from the Duke of Orleans an order that he will have no direct representative in France hereafter.

The Duke of Orleans, the royalist pretender to the French throne, of course, who is an exile in England, writes an open letter in which he expressly says that any one assuming to be his personal representative will do so without authority.

In this way the duke hopes to end the discord which began several months ago after he changed his representative here. On the one side is the newspaper known as Action Francaise, of which Leon Daudet is head; on the other are individuals who oppose the militant methods of this newspaper.

In his letter the Duke of Orleans says he has undertaken to reorganize his followers in an effort to decentralize the royalist movement, as he has always been opposed to centralization. The political bureau is suppressed, but delegates will be appointed who, by means of committees, will carry on the royalist campaign.

As a matter of fact the cause of the Orleanists, the most important branch of royalism in France, has shrunk to a mere shadow. Tourists, particularly Americans, visiting France, are prone to discuss the possibility of the monarchy some day replacing the present republic. But these discussions spring more from romantic speculation than from any knowledge of the situation.

The French republic was never stronger, more solidly placed on its foundations than at this moment. The royalists proclaim themselves openly in the senate and chamber of deputies, but their number is insignificant; they fail to hold even the balance of power when the other parties are closely divided.

Among the working classes no desire for the restoration of the monarchy is apparent. The last stronghold of those who still retain loyalty to a king of France is found among the aristocracy, but even there the sentiment is not nearly as strong as it was a decade or even five years ago. The Catholic church has always been royalist in its tendencies, but since the separation of church and state this influence is not as far-reaching as it was.

Many officers in the French army and perhaps the majority of those holding highest rank in the navy belong to the old nobility or aristocracy, but the new generation is quickly crowding these representatives of the ancient life of France into the background. In spite of the Socialists' efforts to decry militarism, the army is intensely loyal to the republic.

In a word, the old ghost, the restoration of the monarchy, seems to be laid definitely. Therefore the letter of the Duke of Orleans, completely changing his past plans, awakens interest only among his few followers.

HAS WORKED A FULL CENTURY

Coloradan Retires at Age 114—Said to Be Nation's Oldest Man—Wanted to Retire With $100,000.

Grand Junction, Col.—"Cherokee Bill," an Indian-negro, said to be one hundred and fourteen years old, and declared by the United States census to be the oldest man in America, has announced that he will retire.

"One hundred years of work is enough for any man," said Bill. "I wanted to retire with $100,000 to my credit, an average of $1,000 for every year of my life, but I cannot make it."

He is reputed to have 300 pounds of gold cached away in hiding places about the little shack which he calls home. His gold, according to estimates, is worth between $75,000 and $80,000. His fortune has been made within the last fifteen years from gold mining in Leadville, Cripple Creek and along the Grand river. The only name by which he has ever been known in this part of the country is "Cherokee Bill."

Tug Hits Whale During Fog

Strikes Sea Monster Asleep Off the Pacific Coast, But Escapes Damage.

Tacoma, Wash.—With a mighty thump, that sent Capt. Crosby sprawling in his deck house, and deck hands flopping wildly out of the bunks, put the engineer on his back and set the mechanism shuddering, the tug Redondo came to a sudden stop near the light four miles north of the fork of the Fraser river on the sturdy tramp ship's trip here from Vancouver, B. C.

At first Capt. Crosby thought the tug was aground. But the real reason for the big thump and the cessation of the engines was even more hair raising. For it was discovered the Rodonda was on the back of a whale. And it was a whale something more than three times as big as the tug.

Capt. Crosby said the sea monster must have been asleep, for otherwise he would not have lain about in the deep in that way and got bumped into. Whales have been reported as extraordinarily plentiful off the mouth of the Fraser, and constant lookout was kept for them, but the night was misty and completely hid the whopping, napping ocean giant.

The tug smashed into the whale with terrific impact, and as the big fellow struggled, the tug's propeller blades sank into his sides. That put the engine out of commission.

"The tug," said Capt. Crosby, "was really at the mercy of the big fish for several minutes. If he had been inclined to get mad over his loss of sleep and try tossing about a bit he certainly could have turned the Redonda over. But he was apparently a peaceful fish, for, instead of trying to throw us up in the air, he only struggled enough to get the propeller blades out of his ribs and then left us on the dive.

Finds $10,000 in Wooden Leg.

Oklahoma City, Okla.—An old wooden leg may not be much of a legacy, but when it contains $10,000 it certainly is worth having, thinks Jacob Randall, a pauper at the poor farm of Canadian county. The leg was given to him by Alexander P. Hamilton, a supposed pauper at the farm, just before he died a few days ago.

Randall later discovered a large roll of money in the stock of the artificial limb. If Hamilton had relatives they are not known of here.

Clever Russian Swindler

He Got Insurance Money by Fraud—Now St. Petersburg Police Have Him in Custody.

St. Petersburg.—A widespread swindle effected by fictitious life insurance operations has just been discovered by the St. Petersburg police. The chief figure is Sigismund Poplavsky, son of an insurance agent. He has owned to frauds on the New York Life, the Urbaine and the Kertch insurance companies. Poplavsky' received a high school education in his native town of Tiflis and started swindling early. He got appointed to the traffic department of the Vladikavkag railroad and there sold six wagonloads of wheat belonging to a shipper He was indicted and his mother bailed him out, giving him the title deeds of an estate she owned as security He sold the bail security and hid in the Caucasus.

His first experiment in fraudulent life insurance was a dozen years ago. He insured himself with the Urbaine company for 15,000 rubles The following year a very sick man presented himself at the Pskof office of the company, far away from where the policy was taken out, and duly paid the premium. He showed all the passport identification documents of Poplavsky. Soon the sick man, whose true name was Ivan Fediounin, died, and Poplavsky, who had taken the other's identity, drew the insurance policy. Still keeping Fediounin's name, he went to Narva and in a year had spent the money. Then in 1901 he insured as Fediounin with the New York Life for 35,000 rubles and in the following year he took a man from the hospital who was incurably ill and equipped him with all the Ferlounin papers. The dying man was installed in the apartment of Poplavsky's brother, where very soon he died. His real name is so far unknown, but he was buried as Fediounin and once again Poplavsky got the insurance money

Then Poplavsky married a young woman named Smurnoff and forthwith insured her with the Kertch company for 1,500 rubes. Soon he found a female patient in one of the St. Petersburg hospitals whose case was hopeless. He was able to get her furnished with his wife's civic papers, and when she died he collected his wife's insurance money. She also was buried in the name of Fediounin. Then he settled in St. Petersburg as Boleslav Kupinsky and opened a timber business. He tried to insure with the Helsingfors company for 25,000 rubles, as he now admits, intending to repeat the swindle that had so far succeeded. But by this time he was being watched

The police will exhume his and his wife's doubles to try and learn how they died. They believe that he had several pupils, who worked the trick on other companies. The obligation in Russia to produce passports and documents showing one's antecedents really made the swindle easy, because the production of them had the effect of stopping the inquiries that would have followed natural suspicion.

MAN 71 TO WED WOMAN 38

Professor H. F. Fisk of Northwestern University and a Former Pupil to Marry in Spring.

Evanston, Ill.—Dr. Herbert F. Fisk member of the faculty of Northwestern university, and Miss Carla Sargent, formerly a student in one of his classes, are to be married next spring.

Dr. Fisk is 71 years old and his fiancee is 33 years his junior. The romance began several years ago, when Miss Sargent was a pupil listening daily to Dr. Fisk's lectures.

Dr. Fisk has been an instructor in Northwestern university for nearly 40 years and is one of the best known educators in the west. He is a graduate of Wesleyan university. In 1873 he became principal of the Evanston academy, which position he held until 1904, when he resigned. Since then he has been principal emeritus of the academy and professor of pedagogics in the university.

Dr. Fisk's first wife was Miss Anna Green, whom he married in 1866. They had two daughters, the elder being the wife of Prof. Charles Zueblin, and Miss Nell Fisk Mrs. Fisk died in 1908.

Miss Sargent was a student of Dr. Fisk, first in the academy, from which she was graduated in 1891, and later in his classes in pedagogics in the university, from which she graduated in 1895. She is a member of the Phi Beta Kappa sorority. In 1897 she became a member of the faculty of the academy.

She resigned, giving as her reason that she "wished to take care of her mother during her declining years."

Defective Page

The Northern Light

CHAS. W. LATTA

Editor and Publisher.

Published every Friday at Holt, Marshall County, Minnesota.

Subscription Price: $1.00 per year, strictly in advance.

Entered as second-class matter Sept-22, 1911, at the post office at Holt, Minnesota, under the act of March 3, 1879.

Be a booster—not a knocker.

Can you write it "1912" yet?

The present winter is more severe than usual and the number of disastrous railroad wrecks throughout the northwest is the greatest in fifteen years.

Say, boys, this is leap year and you want to be careful in permitting the girls to get too familiar. First thing you know you will be exclaiming, "Oh, Suffering Suffragette, this is so sudden."

A youth, a cigarette and a can of gasoline formed a combination up at Winnipeg the other day and started a fire that cost $200,000. The corporation the kid was working for has decided to get along without cigarette smokers in the future.

The situation in the far east must not be regarded as a tempest in a teapot altho it threatens to scatter a lot of old China in fragments. The pieces will be picked up by the various powers and distributed among them to suit their respective tastes.

Reports from southern Colorado are to the effect that for the past couple of weeks the thermometer has been hanging at from 20 to 32 degrees below zero and any amount of stock dying from cold and hunger. Minnesota is not such an awfully bad place to live in after all.

H. J. Maxfield, of Wadena, has been elected state immigration commissioner and will accept the position. He was the first president of the Northern Minnesota Development Association and this section of the state need have no fear of being slighted during his administration of his new office.

Notice for Bids

Sealed bids will be received by the undersigned up to January 15th 1912, for the filling and packing the ice house at the Holt creamery with ice. All ice must be clean and free from sun eating.

The board reserves the right to reject any and all bids.

Farmers' Co-Operative Creamery Company.

J. A. Sorum, Secretary.

Scholarship for Sale Cheap

We have for sale, cheap for cash, a scholarship good for three months tuition in Crookston College, and for any subject at any time. It is worth $30 but will be sold for considerably less as we need the cash.

Call or address The Northern Light, Holt, Minn.

Farms Wanted.

I have prospective buyers for a few good improved farms; also for 960 acres of wild land. All must be in eastern Marshall county.

Chas. W. Latta, Holt, Minn.

We want more subscribers and will take potatoes, chickens, or wood at current market prices on subscription. Of course we prefer the money but if you haven't the cash bring on the produce. Dont be without your home paper anyway.

Crookston College has placed all its graduates in positions. The demand for office help has been greater than we could supply. School is in session all year. You can begin at any time of year. Good board and furnished room, taken care of in private family, for $3 per week. Send for catalog. Address J. C. Sathre, Crookston, Minn.

Notice of Contest.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
United States Land Office.
Crookston, Minnesota, December 6, 1911.

To Brodie Watson, of Grygla, Minnesota, Contestee:

You are hereby notified that Tidman L. Fjella, who gives Bemidji, Minnesota, as his post-office address, did on November 22, 1911, file in this office his duly corroborated application to contest and secure the cancellation of your Homestead, Entry No. ..., Serial No. 05649 made March 22, 1910, for W½ SW¼, S½ NW¼, Section 8, Township 155 N., Range 39 W., 5th Prin. Meridian, and as grounds for his contest he alleges that said Brodie Watson has wholly abandoned said land for more than six months next prior to this contest and that he has never improved said land in any respect and never cultivated the same as required by law.

You are, therefore, further notified that the said allegations will be taken by this office as having been confessed to by you, and your said entry will be cancelled thereunder without your further right to be heard therein, either before this office or on appeal, if you fail to file in this office within twenty days after the FOURTH publication of this notice, as shown below, your answer, under oath, specifically meeting and responding to these allegations of contest, or if you fail within that time to file in this office due proof that you have served a copy of your answer on the said contestant either in person or by registered mail. If this service is made by the delivery of a copy of your answer to the contestant in person, proof of such service must be either the contestant's written acknowledgement of his receipt of the copy, showing the date of its receipt, or the affidavit of the person by whom the delivery was made stating when and where the copy was delivered; if made by registered mail, proof of such service must consist of the affidavit of the person by whom the copy was mailed stating when and the postoffice to which it was mailed, and this affidavit must be accompanied by the postmaster's receipt for the letter.

You should state in your answer the name of the post office to which you desire future notices to be sent to you.

JOHN PETTERSON, Receiver.

VAULE & MURPHY
Attorneys for Contestant.

Date of first publication, December 15, 1911.
Date of second publication, December 22, 1911
Date of third publication, December 29, 1911.
Date of fourth publication, January 5, 1912.

Enamelled kitchenware at Kolden's. Triple coated, white lined and the best bargains you ever knew, 10 and 69 cents only, while they last.

Subscribe for The Northern Light. Only $1.00 per year.

Captain Dan Went Some.

A vivid picture of the burdens which British policies and wars laid upon our infantile commerce is supplied by the experience of Captain Daniel Driver of the schooner Three Brothers, sailing to the West Indies in 1759 with a cargo valued at £550. First the Three Brothers was seized by an English privateer, the King of Russia, nine guns, Captain James Inclleto, and carried into Antigua, and that was the last of her. Sailing again in the schooner Betsey for Guadeloupe, a French frigate captured and carried him into that port, where he had to ransom his vessel for 4,000 livres ($800) and leave three hostages for payment. Returning with the schooner Mary under a flag of truce, he was sent into New Providence by the English privateer Revenge, Captain James McDonald, which, however, had to release him. He reached Guadeloupe, paid the ransom, released his hostages and was bound for home when a Captain Blanche in a French frigate arrested the whole outfit and detained him until midwinter, when, penniless and worn out with undeserved persecution, he managed to get home.—National Magazine.

Easy to Make Space.

"Old Colonel Ruffenreddy was night editor of a morning paper," said the major, "and I was night city editor The paper was small, and there was always more than enough to fill, even when the ads, were at the lowest point. When the ads were up it was a fight to get anything into the sheet.

"But the colonel had a rule that always met the situation. In the early part of the evening, just as the crush was beginning, he would come into the news room and declare that everything must be cut to a paragraph. 'Any story can be told in a paragraph.'

"Then he would slash into everything and as far as possible get things into paragraphs, even if they required scare heads. When makeup time came and there was a flood of ads, the colonel would throw out the paragraphs with the remark, 'If it isn't worth more than a paragraph it isn't worth using.'

"No; he never had any trouble in making space for the ads.—New York Herald.

The Lydd of Lyddite.

Lyddite, the powder that has such enormous explosive force and that can be fired from a gun which is easily carried about, does not, as has been widely supposed, take its name from a man, but from an ancient town near the coast of Kent, in England—the town of Lydd, where there is a government artillery range. Here the tests were made that resulted in the preparation of this explosive, and the name of the peaceful Kentish village is now associated with a substance that has dealt out death to thousands. It has other odious qualities besides its explosive force, since its fumes are so suffocating as sometimes to be intolerable. Lydd shares the notoriety which attaches to the name of Dumdum, that other peaceful city, in distant Bengal, where are manufactured the expanding bullets that Great Britain has used from time to time.—Harper's Weekly.

A Good Rule.

A good general rule is not to neglect your work to watch for opportunity.—Atchison Globe.

Attacking Postal Banks.

Since its inauguration the postal savings bank system has been gradually extended. Not long ago one of these depositories was established in the Panama canal zone. There is now one or more of the banks in practically every state in the Union, and as rapidly as it can be done with safety they are being started in additional postoffices, the process to continue until they embrace the entire country.

While there has been no wild rush of depositors to place their savings in these nonbreakable government banks, the business has been healthy and is on the increase. It requires time for the people to become accustomed to a new institution, but in a few years the American people should grow as familiar with postal savings banks as are the people of Europe. The system will then become a habit, so to speak, and it is only by waiting till it does become a habit that a fair test can be made.

It was to be expected that assaults would be made on the new plan. One of these assaults has already come. Not long ago the postal bonds sold on the New York market at 92½, although practically all other government bonds were going at or above par. There was no especial reason for the discrimination, except on the supposition that there was a deliberate attempt to discredit the postal bonds and through them strike at the whole postal savings bank system.

It should be the business of congress to stand behind the postal bonds and so strengthen them that their price cannot be beaten down in a hostile market. The bonds bought by the poor should be as good as those bought by the rich.

That was rather a neat retort of a commission government speaker who, when a hearer objected that three men were not enough to govern a particular town, replied that it only required the Father, Son and Holy Ghost to run heaven.

Scientists have discovered a little bunch of tissue which they call the pacemaker of the heart. But there are times when the young man's best girl is the heart's real pacemaker.

A New York paper says there is no tariff on brains. Perhaps it would not yield sufficient revenue to make it worth while.

Andrew Carnegie is now several laps ahead in the long distance giving race.

Killing Birds For Plumage.

For many years there has been an outcry among bird lovers against the use of plumage in women's hats. The Audubon societies and others have begun a farreaching campaign. Not long ago similar societies from other lands held an international convention and made the movement worldwide. Fortunately the crusade has begun to bear fruit.

An investigation of the traffic in plumage ordered by Secretary Wilson has just been completed. The result shows that from Los Angeles and San Francisco to Chicago the trade in bird plumage for millinery purposes was very limited, apart from Chicago, where aigrets were being sold in large numbers. Preparations have been made looking to the more stringent enforcement of the laws restricting the plumage trade after 1911.

As New York city is the receiving and distributing point for practically all the plumage brought in from foreign countries, the Shea law, prohibiting sale and possession in New York of much of the plumage now used for millinery purposes, is one of the most important measures relating to plumage ever proposed for adoption in the United States. As New Jersey has adopted a similar law, it will not be possible to evade the New York law by transferring their business to Jersey City or other points adjacent to New York city.

A London physician says that a shock may change the color of the eyes. Sure! When a young man sees his best girl in the arms of another the shock turns his eyes green. Then when he meets the other the shock often makes one of their eyes black.

The bromide that "the high cost of living" should be termed "the cost of high living" is an insult to the American people. It is like blaming the victim for being robbed. The people who suffer most from exorbitant prices are not high livers.

Uncle Joe Cannon says he does not know what to do with himself between midnight and bedtime. Well, he might move to New Jersey and slap mosquitoes.

Is it going to take longer to choose a jury in the McNamara case than it does to nominate and elect a president of the United States?

A physician has made the discovery that fat goes to the weakest part of the system. This is certainly true of fatheads.

The Story of the Year.

The most prominent feature of 1911 was the fighting in many lands. Despite the agitation for peace, it was a year of wars and rumors of wars. From the standpoint of the historian the overshadowing event was the Chinese revolution. The full story of this uprising will not be told till well along in 1912 and possibly not for years to come. Yet it was in 1911 that it had its inception. There is now a growing prospect that the result of the insurrection will be a Chinese republic, which has a sufficiently startling sound.

Following the new Japan, the upheaval in China is a further evidence of the transformation of the orient. The leaven of the west is working in the east. Great Britain has found the same spirit in India, and there have been shrewd guesses that George V. attended the durbar in person to impress his Hindu subjects and to overcome in some degree the tendency of India to follow Japan and China toward progress, democracy and nationalism.

The successful termination of the Mexican revolution was another milepost of 1911. This resulted not only in deposing Diaz and elevating Madero to the presidency, but, infinitely more important, it gave Mexico substantially free elections.

The war between Italy and Turkey, while not a contest of first class importance, the actual fighting being confined almost wholly to Tripoli, marked the expulsion of Turkey from Africa and the further wane of the Ottoman empire. The end of this contest also must be chronicled by 1912 or some later year.

Of the "rumors of war" there have been many, the loudest having concerned Morocco when Germany, France and England just grazed the edge of a gigantic world conflict. The attempt of Russia to drive W. Morgan Shuster, the American treasurer general, out of Persia may also be placed in the martial "rumor" class.

Against all this red background, however, stands out a patch of peaceful white in the signing of the arbitration treaties between the United States, England and France. The dove was not entirely homeless during 1911.

Other noted events were the trimming of the British house of lords, the refusal of Canada to accept American reciprocity, the veto of the tariff bills in the United States and the marked progress of aviation, the most noteworthy feature of which was an aeroplane flight across the American continent.

J. A. EDGERTON.

Rebellion in Spain.

There has been talk of an impending Spanish revolution for two or three years. Ever since the death of Francesco Ferrer, in fact, the mutterings have been heard. Yet they always ended in talk. There has been no uprising. Portugal revolted and established a republic overnight, but poor Spain only stirred once or twice uneasily in her sleep.

It has remained for a woman, and a scion of royalty at that, to pull off the only real insurrection Spain has seen or is likely soon to see. The Infanta Eulalie, aunt of the present king, has dared to publish a book without the royal approval. In consequence there is a pretty kettle of fish. The book itself seems to have been harmless enough. About the most sensational thing in it was a mild approval of divorce.

To a rational being it would seem that if any member of royalty had enough original ideas to write a book, or even thought so, he or she should be encouraged. The king of Spain apparently does not agree with this idea. The moment he heard that Aunt Eulalie had the author bug he wrote expressing surprise and forbade her publishing the book until he had seen it and given the royal O. K.

The Infanta Eulalie was in America at the World's Columbian exposition and apparently imbibed enough democratic independence to make her stand up for the rights of infantas. At any rate she published the book, king or no king, and said she would quit Spain forever. Good for her! If there is any king or relative of a king that has brains enough to write a book that anybody else will read, God speed him or her in the task!

The United States government fined a man 25 cents for carrying sausages across the North river from New York to New Jersey. He was charged with violating the pure food law, and the federal authorities claimed jurisdiction because carrying the sausages from one state to another constituted interstate commerce. Considering the amount involved, that 25 cent fine was about on a par with some of those assessed on corporations.

The Century Dictionary says that bunko is probably derived from the Italian banco, meaning bank or money changer's stall. Moral.—Well, why point it out?

That England and Germany are now completely at peace is proved by the frantic way in which both countries are building warships.

V-I-V-O

The Best there is in Flour.

Our Elevator and Lumber Yard are always prepared to give the most satisfactory service.

Hanson & Barzen Milling Co.,

OSCAR HANSON, Agent, - - HOLT, MINN.

AXEL NELSON

General Blacksmith Work

HOLT, - - MINN.

All work done Right, at Reasonable Prices.

HOUSEWIVES

Do you want to know about a wonderful new time, health and money-saving kitchen convenience?

Then you should see the complete line of "1892" Pure Spun Aluminum Cooking Utensils now on exhibition at your dealers.

This ware is guaranteed by the makers for 25 years. It is absolutely pure, wholesome and thoroughly hygienic, will not crack, scale, peel, break, rust, tarnish, scorch or burn.

PURE
ILLINOIS 1892 ALUMINUM
THE ORIGINAL
TRADE MARK

It is light weight, easy to handle and easy to clean; makes kitchen work a delight instead of drudgery; saves your money, time, fuel; protects your health against metal poisoning and serious troubles resulting from chipping of small particles into the food, which is one of the dangers from the use of the old style enameled wares.

You buy patent carpet sweepers, egg-beaters, dishwashers, clothes-wringers and many other time and labor saving conveniences, but there is nothing that will prove a greater practical household blessing than the "1892" Pure Spun Aluminum Ware.

Lose no time in seeing for yourself what it will do. Your money back if this ware fails to do what is claimed for it.

S. S. KOLDEN & Co.

THE DULUTH HERALD

BEATS THE CENSUS THREE TO ONE

During the past ten years the population of Duluth increased 48 per cent., St. Paul 32 per cent., and Minneapolis 49 per cent. In the Same Period the Circulation of The Duluth Herald

INCREASED 150 PER CENT.

This marvelous expansion—so much greater than that of the surrounding territory—is due solely to the merits of The Herald. The Herald has never used any kind of premium, contest, or price reduction to gain subscribers but prints each day the very best NEWSPAPER in the Northwest. Its editorial page is thoroughly independent and its news columns cover every feature of the world's daily history.

Send for sample copy and get The Herald habit.

THREE MONTHS FOR $1.00—Mailed Daily.

ADDRESS HERALD CIRCULATION DEPT., DULUTH, MINN.

Local Items

The Local Market.

(Grain prices furnished by Hanson & Barzen Milling Co. at close of business every Thursday.)

Flax	$1.97
Wheat	.95
Barley	.93
Oats	.37
Rye	.77

Bring us the news.

Be a booster—not a knocker.

When in town call at this office and let's get acquainted.

T. A. Silverness went to Duluth on Wednesday afternoon.

S. S. Kolden transacted business at Middle River on Saturday last.

Tom Severson made a business trip to Thief River Falls Tuesday.

A baby girl was born to Mr. and Mrs Oscar Schenkey at Middle River on Monday last.

Miss Esther Thomas made a trip to Thief River Falls Tuesday and returned next day.

C. B. Warner and J. J. Kelly, of Rollis, were business visitors here the first of the week.

Miss Mabel Smith made a trip to Thief River Falls Wednesday on business and pleasure combined.

The cold weather this week has kept people pretty closely to their homes and local news items are very scarce.

Miss Louise Rux has severed her connection with the Gunheim store and went to her home southwest of town on Tuesday.

Divine services will be held in the Holt church next Sunday at 11 A. M. and children's meeting immediately after. All are welcome.

D. Payne returned on Tuesday from his holiday visit with relatives at Nielsville. Mrs Payne and the children will remain away for a more extended visit.

The Holt Mercantile Co. will continue their special sale of rubbers and overshoes all next week. Now is your time to buy. All new goods of the best quality.

Mr. and Mrs. B. L. Backe, Miss Mortenson, P. L. Anderson, Clarence Kolden and John Lain went to Thief River Falls to attend the grand New Years ball Monday night and report a most enjoyable time.

The Ladies Aid of the Mud Lake congregation will meet, and services will be conducted by Rev. Ordahl, at Ed Johnson's place east of Mud Lake Wednesday, the 10th inst. All who can should attend this meeting as the constitution of the newly organized congregation will be considered.

Notice for Bids

Sealed bids will be received by the undersigned up to January 15th, 1912, for furnishing 20 cords of green, and 15 cords of dry, poplar and tamarac wood to be delivered at the creamery in Holt.

The board reserves the right to reject any and all bids.

Farmers' Co-Operative Creamery Company.

J. A. Sorum, Secretary.

Notice of Annual Meeting

The annual meeting of the stockholders of the Farmers' Co-Operative Creamery Co., of Holt, Minn., will be held at the creamery in Holt on Saturday, January 27, 1912, at 1 o'clock P. M. for the purpose of electing officers for the ensuing year and to transact such other business as may come before the meeting.

J. A. Sorum, Secretary.

Subscribe for The Northern Light. Only $1.00 per year.

Miss Matilda Furr returned to her school near Grand Forks on Wednesday after spending the holidays at her home here.

Triple coated enamelled kitchen ware at only 10 cents per piece is a bargain that you never had before. S. S. Kolden & Co.

The Ladies Aid will meet at the home of Mrs. A. C. Jahr in East Valley on Wednesday, the 17th inst. All are invited to attend.

Dr. M. A. Nelson has been called upon several pretty strenuous trips into the country during the past few real cold days. He says that there ar numerous cases of quinsey but not many of more serious maladies.

C. G. Mugg, O. S., the Grand Forks Eye man, will refit any unsatisfactory glass that is not over six months old. He will do this to show his greater skill. He will be in Holt Wednesday afternoon, January 24th.

Mrs. John Johnson died Sunday at her home northwest of here after a very brief illness of pneumonia. She was about 45 years of age and is survived by her husband and one daughter. The funeral will be held tomorrow.

The people receiving their mail on rural routes should see to it that the roads are kept open for the carrier to get through. It is no part of the carrier's duty to buck snow drifts and the service is liable to be discontinued if the roads are not kept open.

M. A. NELSON, M. D.

PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON

Office over Holt Merc. Co's store

HOLT, MINNESOTA.

Start the New Year Right!

We're going to start it with a Big Special Sale on

RUBBERS and OVERSHOES

During next week we will make a special reduction of 10 per cent on everything in these lines in order to close out our present stock. All New, strictly High-grade Goods. Your opportunity is here to get Real Bargains in these lines.

HOLT MERCANTILE Co.,

"The Big New Store"

Preventing Railroad Accidents.

Prevention is not only better than cure, but is also better than denunciation. As more and more of our people travel yearly, their safety becomes of increasing concern to us all. Yet recent government reports indicate that the number of railroad accidents is growing. From the same sources we are informed of two causes for at least a portion of the disasters. One is the tendency to run past signals. The other is rail breakage due, in part at least, to heavier engines and trains.

It is notorious that on many railroads engineers are rewarded for making time and that, while no specific orders are given to disregard signals, such disregard is winked at if no accident ensues. The public itself is in part responsible for this condition. We demand ever greater speed and are willing to take the risk. Under such circumstances disasters are well nigh certain.

The heavier equipment is due to a desire for increased capacity, which in its last analysis means the movement of more goods or people, hence more speed. Efforts for improvement are laudable, provided they do not jeopardize life or property. Evidence goes to show that the limit has probably been reached in the matter of heavy rolling stock, as the pounding of these great loads weakens the rails and breakages result.

In most European countries the rule is "safety first." It is likewise true that in these countries there are fewer accidents than with us. Have we not also reached the stage where we must adopt the rule of "safety first?" Even American hurry must pause when it endangers life.

People have more trouble in pronouncing the name of Senator La Follette than they used to have even with that of Roosevelt. Many make the mistake of accenting the last syllable, as though they were in France. The writer heard one man call it La Folletty, with the accent on the "let." The right way to pronounce it is as though it were spelled La Follet, with the accent on the "fol." At least that is the way it is done in Wisconsin.

A man in a Los Angeles hotel shaved with champagne and bathed in milk. We are not told what he drank, but from his antipathy to water it is safe to bet he never went fishing, sailing or swimming.

Russia not only refuses to admit American citizens into her own territory, but objects to them in Persia.

Canal Not a Charitable Enterprise.

One of the duties facing congress is that of fixing the tolls for the Panama canal. One of the proposals concerning these is that the same charges be made to all vessels, whether American or foreign, but that the United States government make it up to our own ships by paying the tolls itself. This it would do to encourage the American merchant marine.

Now comes John Barrett, head of the Pan-American union, with the proposal that there shall be no tolls at all, but that all ships shall go through the canal free of charge. He argues that the big ditch is partly a naval venture anyway, and therefore our enormous expenditure on it is justified as a defense measure. Moreover, he thinks that such immense benefits will accrue to our west coast and to our trade generally that we shall be more than repaid and therefore will not need to charge anything to make up our outlay. One other argument against tolls is that they are advocated by the transcontinental railroads, who think a free canal would create unfair competition.

This is on a par with the argument that the United States should not fortify the canal, but should throw it open to the navies of the world, even though some of these navies were bent on our own destruction. It suggests a question: Is the Panama canal a charitable institution? We have built it with our own money, at the risk of the lives of our own men. What sort of equity or justice is there in the proposal that we bear all the burden and let other nations have the benefits without return?

A laborer in Orange, N. J., picked up a pearl necklace worth $5,000 that had been dropped by a society woman. He took the string home to his wife, who contemptuously dropped it into her apron pocket, saying that she could get the same kind of a necklace at the 5 and 10 cent store. Neither the laborer nor his wife had any notion of the value of their find until the police accidentally discovered the whereabouts of the pearls. Query: If all people had the same estimate of pearls as this humble couple what would pearls be worth? Value is an idea.

The census reports that there are nearly 3,000,000 more males than females in the United States. Even if the women do get the ballot we can outvote them.

The Standard Oil company and the tobacco trust at least have the physical aspects of having been "busted."

Strength of the Condor.

The enormous strength of the condor is equaled by his voracity and boldness. This immense bird often pounces upon small animals, but from the shape and bluntness of his claws he is unable to carry anything very heavy, so he contents himself with fixing it against the ground with one of his claws, while with the other and his powerful beak he rends it to pieces. Gorged with food, the bird then becomes incapable of flight and may be approached, but any attempt at capture is furiously resisted. An American traveler in the Andes encountered a large condor just after it had finished a hearty banquet on a young sheep and foolishly attempted to seize the bird, with the result that he received a gash from its claw. Then he called up his two guides, and the three men maneuvered to take the bird alive. But every attempt was frustrated, and in the end one of the men killed it by a blow with a hatchet.

Some Indian Chiefs.

Spotted Tail was a strong character, a wise and really great chief. He would have been a statesman, diplomatist or able governor if he had been a white man.

Crazy Horse was the incarnation of ferocity—a fierce, restless warrior, who had made a great reputation as a successful leader of raids and war parties and had become at the age of twenty-six the recognized leader of the Ogallallas, the most warlike tribe of the Sioux nation.

Sitting Bull of the Uncapapas * * * was the embodiment of everything hostile to civilization, a perfect type of the savage Indian, a natural born leader of men, cunning and courageous.

Chief Joseph was the highest type of the Indian I have ever known, very handsome, kind and brave. He was quite an orator and the idol of his tribe.—General Miles in "Serving the Republic."

WHY YOU NEED THIS NEWSPAPER

WHATEVER your business you NEED a newspaper. You cannot keep house without it.

IN ANY ISSUE YOU MAY SEE AN ITEM THAT WILL PAY YOUR SUBSCRIPTION FOR TEN YEARS.

It may be a bargain; it may be news of somebody who wants to buy an article that you have to sell; it may be a hint as to how you can improve your methods or make more money.

By following the markets you know when to buy or sell. By following the advertisements you know where to trade.

THE PAPERS TELL YOU OF MORTGAGE AND TAX SALES, OF AUCTIONS AND OF OTHER EVENTS WHEREBY GREAT BARGAINS MAY BE PICKED UP.

Taking a paper is commercially profitable, especially to the man who keeps his eyes open. WHY not SUBSCRIBE NOW?

It seems the only country suffering from the yellow peril is China.

D. B. Bakke, Pres. S. S. Kolden, Vice-pres.

HOLT STATE BANK

Incorporated 1910. Resources over $50,000

We have a limited amount of the five and ten Kroner Scandinavian money on hand special for this season of the year. We also issue foreign money orders on all parts of the world.

The past season has, no doubt, been a successful one for you and we cordially invite you to place your hard earned cash on deposit with this bank. By placing the money with us you have the right to draw it out at any time you may need it regardless whether left solely as a time deposit or subject to check; and, in case you have no immediate use for it, we will pay you 4 per cent interest on a time deposit left for a period of six months and 5 per cent for twelve months.

Think it over. Nothing to worry about. Your money earning money for you without any more exertion on your part than to step into the bank and draw your interest at every terminal period, whether six or twelve months.

B. L. BACKE, Cashier.

Red Lake Falls Milling Co.

Makers of the Celebrated

Mascot Fl0ur

and bUYERS of all kinds of GRAIN.

Our Elevator will give you satisfaction.

OLE MATSON, Agent - - - Holt, Minn.

The Evergreen Hotel

P. A. RESBERG, PROP.

Rates, $1.00 per day.

Serves the best Meal in Eastern Marhall Co. for twenty-five cents.

Livery and Feed Barn in connection.

Bring us your Job Printing orders

We wish you a Happy and Prosperous New Year

We would also remind you that we are still offering some Exceptional Bargains in Hardware and Furniture. Come in and let us show you that our prices will really save money for you.

S. S. KOLDEN & Co.

HOLT, - - MINNESOTA

Defective Page

HOW BIRDS WITHSTAND WINTER'S BLASTS

By EDWARD B. CLARK

THE greater battalion of the army of the birds is in the southland for the winter. The warblers were the pioneers in the march to escape the cold. The naturalists of the world would give much to know what it was in the torrid time which told these daintiest of the feathered creatures that they must be moving on.

There is a puzzle for the scientists even more complex than that offered by the spectacle of migration. It is to get the solution of the problem of why some birds with the recurring autumns invariably seek warmer climes while others apparently much more poorly fitted by nature to withstand cold weather conditions, stay about the familiar nesting scenes when the snow lies deep and the cold is like that of "St. Agnes Eve."

The titmouse, the Concord chickadee of Emerson, is a little feathered gem which looks as though a breath of cold would set it all a-shiver. Yet this little fellow sticks by his Northern friends all through the winter, when bigger, more heavily feathered, and apparently more hardy species have sought out the orange and the magnolia groves of the gulf. There are scores of other birds which remain with us to pipe a cheerful note over the snow wastes while their southern-flying friends are silent amid their congenial surroundings.

One of the most interesting bird studies is that which leads to a personal knowledge of how the feathered species care for themselves during a time when exposed man, even though heavily clothed, at times freezes to dath. It is a question if many people know how the despised English sparrow, whom we always have with us, manages to pull through a Northern winter without offering himself up as a sacrifice to Jack Frost. It is a matter of current but mistaken belief among those who have noticed the great bulky nests which the sparrows have built in almost every tree that these bunches of straw, dried grass, and feathers form the abiding places of the sparrows during the coldwinter nights. As a matter of fact, a sparrow seldom goes near a tree nest in winter. If he has found a lodging for his summer home in a cornice of a building he may go there to sleep away the long, cold nights, but the tree nest is deserted from the moment the last brood is hatched.

If one wishes to know where thousands of the sparrows sleep in winter let him on some cold night take a stout club and rap with all his might upon an electric light pole that is fitted with an overhanging hood. There is a little platform in some of these hoods directly over the glass globe. Upon this as many sparrows as can conveniently crowd together rost throughout the cold weather nights. A club rapping experiment on an electric light pole at a Chicago avenue corner near the North Side water works lot during a howling blizzard one winter night resulted in the dislodgment of twelve frightened sparrows. They fluttered about in the storm and hung like so many fascinated moths. When the pounding ceased they made their way back to their resting place and doubtless remained undisturbed until morning. Their flat was certainly modern in its appointments, for it was heated and lighted by electricity.

Take a trip through a thistle field in July and there will be seen scores of goldfinches feeding on the seeds of the prickly plants. These little creatures have the appearance of the birds of the tropics. It would seem that barely a breath of the north wind would send them scurrying southward. In truth, however, these birds, frail though they appear, stay with us all winter, yet not one person in fifty outside of the ranks of the bird students knows the fact.

In late August the goldfinch drops his gold and black livery and puts on a sober sparrowlike garb. This is the reason why people think that the little thistle seed lover has left them and that another bird has taken its place. In the Chicago Academy of Sciences there is pathetic evidence of how the goldfinch keeps warm during the winter nights. The curator has there an oriole's nest from the outside of which hangs the body of a goldfinch caught by the neck and literally hanged by one of the cords with which the oriole has fashioned its home. The goldfinch has sought refuge in the nest from the weather and on leaving it in the morning has thrust his head through the fatal noose. These birds utilize the deserted homes of all their brethren who build deep nests. The goldfinches return night after night to a nest which an oriole had swung from the tips of an elm in Western Springs, Ill.

The chickadee of which something has been said, builds its nest somewhat after the manner of the woodpecker, but if observation goes for much, the bird does not use this absolutely safe and warm retreat for its winter night lodging. They have been startled time after time just after sunset on cold nights from the vacated nests of many species of birds, the chickadee simply burying itself in the warm linings in which the summer before the young of its friends had been cradled.

By mid-September the swallows one and all had disappeared. It may be that if the appearance of one swallow does not make a summer, the absence of the entire tribe may not make an autumn, but it is certain that the birds must feel something that bids them begone, for they go in a body and they go in the twinkling of an eye. The swallows live upon insects, and there is no reason as far as food is concerned, why they should not stay at least two weeks longer, for their homes are in sheltered nooks. The humming birds, despite its delicacy, stays longer than the swallow and complains not.

If one can catch sight of a saucy little woodpecker going into a hole in a tree on his lawn at this season of the year he may hope to have an interesting neighbor during the entire winter. All the downy woodpeckers remain in the north the years through. Some of the red heads stay too, but most of them go a few score of miles to the south. All of these birds that remain pass their nights in holes in trees, and at the time of the first fall month they are busy locating proper cold weather habitations. If enough interest in the woodpecker is felt to keep him as a companion throughout the winter a piece of suet bound firmly to the limb of a tree and occasionally renewed will insure his presence as a guest as long as the snow flies, and with him, tempted by the suet, will be a goodly company of jays, chickadees, and golden crowned kinglets.

The kinglet, smaller than any of our birds, save the ruby throated humming bird alone, manages to live through all the cold Northern winter and be all the while as cheerful as a robin in April. The kinglet, as far as the experience of one person is concerned at least, prefers to get his summer food in the thick bushes, and seemingly has a preference for those which are near clambering vines. The kinglets cast about for likely places in which to pass the winter. As far as can be ascertained they simply get into the heart of some thickly twigged bush through which run vine branches and there all night long they defy both cold and snow.

The great northern shrike, which is due in the northern states from its summer home in the British possessions about October 1, spends his nights close to the bole of an evergreen tree. There is a little clump of evergreens well within the limits of the city of Chicago where a half dozen of these birds roost nightly from October to March. Inasmuch as they live on a diet of English sparrows and spend all the daylight hours in the laudable vocation of killing the imported feathered pest, the exact location of their roosting place will not be given for fear some champion of the sparrow might disturb the rest of these feathered friends, whom many are unkind enough to call butcher birds.

As a matter of fact one need feel little anxiety for the welfare of the birds that stay with us in winter. The nursery ditty of "What will the robin do then, poor thing?" is tear-compelling, but the robin, the bluebird, the jay, and the chickadee will all care for themselves and will feel no envy of man in his steam-heated flat.

During the bitter weather of winter while people with hearts in the right places are scattering crumbs and seeds at their doorsteps for the little feathered land visitors, the great city of Chicago as a whole is doing its best to feed the storm-blown birds of Lake Michigan. Not all the sewage of the city, notwithstanding the completion of the drainage canal, is sent towards the Mississippi. Some little of it still finds it way into the lakes with its burden of garbage, and there the gull scavengers, by eating much of the output that from their point of appetite is edible, do their best to aid in purifying the water supply.

In the dead of winter when the cold is so intense that it seems that no exposed creature can live, the waste of water between Chicago and St. Joe, Mich., is peopled with strange feathered visitors, who shun the same water stretches when the wind blows soft out of the south. A storm which once rose and preceded a "spell" of zero weather brought with it from the north scores of strange, beautiful arctic visitors known as long-tailed ducks. They may be seen all through the winter well out into the open water of Lake Michigan. They fairly revel in cold weather and in cold water. It is highly probable that they would never come to the great lakes at all were it not for the fact that everything northward is frozen solid. The male "long-tail" is a beauty, with his strongly contrasted black and white plumage and the two great sweeping tail feathers that give him his name. With his wife he does not lack other names, and they are known in various places as "old injun," "old wife," "old molly," "old granny," "old squaw," and "old south southerly." Because of the oily nature of their flesh these ducks are unfit for food, and yet the gunners on the Chicago breakwaters and on the government pier used to kill dozens of them in the pure wantonness of sport.

When the sloping stone abutment that protects the outer Lincoln Park driveway, Chicago, from the waves is piled high with ice during the winter the venturesome person who will scale the side of the pile may see in the dark water only a few yards beyond one of the most beautiful ducks known to the bird kingdom. The golden eye, or whistle wing, frequents the cold waters of Lake Michigan all through the winter, and comes close to the shore. It is seldom that more than four or five are seen together, and oftener a single pair will be found. If the protection which the male apparently tries to extend to the female during all times of the year be a basis for judgment, these birds remain mated for life.

The golden eye almost invariably places himself between his gentler companion and danger, and when they are swimming or flying to new foraging places he invariably leads the way. The movement of their wings is so rapid that it produces a musical whistling audible at a great distance. Because of the rapidity of their flight the Indians call them spirit ducks, believing that some supernatural aid is given them to add to the swiftness of their journeyings.

The best of the bird scavengers acting as the allies of the Chicago health department in winter are the herring, the ring-billed gulls. The herring gull is a big grayish creature, almost pure white if he is three years old, with black tips to his wings. The young of the first year are mottled gray, entirely different in appearance from their parents. The result of this difference is that people looking at a winter flock of the gulls think that it contains several species. The lagoons in Jackson and Lincoln Parks are often fairly covered with these birds, provided a heavy storm is coming in from the eastward.

A delicate-looking bird is the kittewake gull. It does not look as if it could stand the rigors of lake winter weather for a day, and yet neither storm nor cold succeeds in chilling its optimism or in abating its industry. The kittewakes have been in the lake off Chicago in winter, and here they doubtless occasionally have remained until March.

A bird lover considers it an ornithological epoch when he sees a great black-backed gull. The persistent and careful observer who cares nothing for weather conditions may find this rare creature, perhaps the largest of our gulls, if he will but keep a constant watch along the lake front. The bird has been seen here on several occasions in winter. Its name gives a good description of it. It is sometimes known gruesomely as the "coffin carrier."

STUDIES OF GULLS

DOOM LATTICE MAST

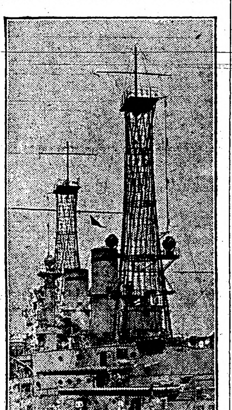
Navy Men Say They Must Be Abandoned.

Practically Indestructible, but Vibration Proves Handicap to Range Finders and Diminishes Accuracy in Gunnery.

Washington.—The skeleton masts on the United States battleships, distinctly a feature of American war craft, are said to be doomed for the scrap heap. There is a great deal of discussion in naval circles over the apparently well-founded report that the navy department intends to abandon the skeleton masts with which all battleships are now equipped because they have not come up to expectations, and from the viewpoint of naval experts are a hindrance and a handicap to efficient marksmanship. The vibration of the mast, due to its slender mechanism, is said to be the chief defect. For this reason the range finder, whose duty it is to pick up the object and communicate the distance to the gun pointers, is unable to do so with the celerity and accuracy that would be demanded in a naval engagement.

When the skeleton mast was introduced on American battleships it was agreed generally a great step had been taken in advance of other nations. It was the belief then, and still is, that the mast is indestructible, which gave the ship in time of action a big advantage, for if the mast could not be shot away the fire control system of the vessel at no time would be threatened.

The position of the range finder is at the top of the mast. He is the pulse of the ship, and mistakes made by him may mean the destruction of the vessel. Naval experts figured a 12-inch shell would pass through the skeleton mast without destroying it, whereas one shot in the old style hollow steel mast would bring it down and with it the whole fire control system. It was calculated several shots could go through the skeleton masts and it still would stand. But from all indications those who advanced the skeleton mast theory evidently were carried away by their enthusiasm and overlooked the drawback in another direction that would be caused by the vibration of a battleship steaming at full speed.



Masts of the South Carolina.

How much depends upon the range finder can be understood only by men who make a study of fighting at long range, as was pointed out by an expert who says the skeleton masts are a failure. It was expected that when the lattice work masts first made their appearance other nations would be quick to adopt them. It was a surprise to advocates of the new type of mast that this was not done. The skeleton mast is typically an American naval idea, but from all indications the defects now seen by experts here were foreseen by experts in other navies, and the American mast let alone.

Those in favor of the skeleton masts point to the excellent gunnery records made in target practice since their adoption as proof of their success, but the counter argument is advanced that if the range finders were placed on more substantial posts the marksmanship of the navy, increasing in excellence as it has done year by year, would be still better and all records for speed and accuracy would be smashed. The unpopularity of the skeleton masts has been growing steadily. It is said the change is not far off, and any day may see orders issued doing away with what a year or two ago was thought to be great stride forward in naval construction.

Death Follows Alcohol Rub.

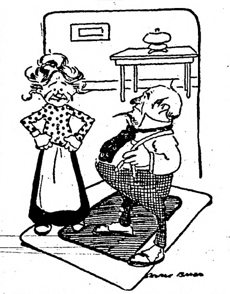
Birmingham, Ala.—M. E. Torphy, a well known young man of this city, was burned to death under unusual circumstances. He was rubbing his body with alcohol after taking a bath and the alcohol caught fire from an open grate, enveloping his body with flames.

BEST TRICK NOT IN THE AIR

Remarkably Sound Advice for the Woman Who Has Some Years of Life to Her Credit.

The way to ward off old age is not to fear it, not to allow one's self to be oppressed by the dread of advancing years. Use only legitimate preventives and avoid trying experiments with preparations not indorsed by physicians. Do not wear toilettes intended for young girls, they only add years to the appearance. Keep up your interest in the young, but do not envy them. Retire with dignity from the struggle, do not pose as your daughter's rival. Above all, surround your life with sweet, true affections which prevent the heart from growing bitter. Do not lose interest in the growing events of the day; do not fall behind the times and do not harp on other and better days. To those who come to you for advice be always kind and sympathetic. As you advance in years preserve carefully your personal appearance, for once lost it may not be regained save by strenuous effort. Your costumes should be simple and unpretentious, yet graceful. These rules, carefully and sensibly followed, will keep you young and attractive.—Exchange.

MAKING THE BEST OF IT.



She—I am sorry I ever married you!

He—Oh, don't worry about me. I'm pretty tough and can stand it!

Important to Mothers
Examine carefully every bottle of CASTORIA, a safe and sure remedy for infants and children, and see that it
Bears the Signature of Chas. H. Fletcher
In Use For Over 30 Years.
Children Cry for Fletcher's Castoria

Tearful Pair.

"I'm the saddest thing there is—the ghost of a lost love."

"Huh! I'm worse than that! I'm the ghost of a vanished bank account!"—Puck.

Never Fail.

"My wife can't decide on a car."

"This model is the last word in touring cars."

"The last word, eh? Then she'll have it."

Constipation causes and aggravates many serious diseases. It is thoroughly cured by Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets. The favorite family laxative.

What has become of the old-fashioned man whose word was as good as his bond?

You'll generally always find that the person who is most suspicious of others, himself needs watching.

Sore Throat is no trifling ailment. It will sometimes carry infection to the entire system through the food you eat. Hamlins Wizard Oil cures Sore Throat.

You need expect no quarter from the footpad until you give up your last cent.

PILES CURED IN 6 TO 14 DAYS
Your druggist will refund money if PAZO OINTMENT fails to cure any case of Itching, Blind, Bleeding or Protruding Piles in 6 to 14 days. 50c.

Profitable goods are good friends that we dearly love to part with.

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup for Children teething, softens the gums, reduces inflammation, allays pain, cures wind colic, 25c a bottle.

Some society women are known by what they waste their affection on.

Knees Became Stiff
Five Years of Severe Rheumatism
The cure of Henry J. Goldstein, 14 Barton Street, Boston, Mass., is another victory for Hood's Sarsaparilla. This great medicine has succeeded in many cases where others have utterly failed. Mr. Goldstein says: "I suffered from rheumatism five years, it kept me from business and caused excruciating pain. My knees would become as stiff as steel. I tried many medicines without relief, then took Hood's Sarsaparilla, soon felt much better, and now consider myself entirely cured. I recommend Hood's."
Get it today in usual liquid form or chocolated tablets called Sarsatabs.

WHO IS TO BLAME. Women as well as men are made miserable by kidney and bladder trouble. Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root the great kidney remedy promptly relieves. At druggists in fifty cent and dollar sizes. You may have a sample bottle by mail free, also pamphlet telling all about it. Address, Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y.

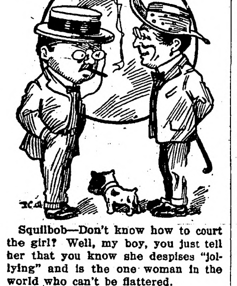
PARKER'S HAIR BALSAM
Cleanses and beautifies the hair. Promotes a luxuriant growth. Never Fails to Restore Gray Hair to its Youthful Color. Cures scalp diseases & hair falling. 50c, and $1.00 at Druggists

PISO'S IS THE NAME OF THE BEST MEDICINE for COUGHS & COLDS

A HEALTHY, HAPPY OLD AGE
May be promoted by those who gently cleanse the system, now and then, when in need of a laxative remedy, by taking a desertspoonful of the ever refreshing, wholesome and truly beneficial Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna, which is the only family laxative generally approved by the most eminent physicians, because it acts in a natural, strengthening way and warms and tones up the internal organs without weakening them. It is equally beneficial for the very young and the middle aged, as it is always efficient and free from all harmful ingredients. To get its beneficial effects it is always necessary to buy the genuine, bearing the name of the Company—California Fig Syrup Co.—plainly printed on the front of every package.

W. N. U., FARGO, NO. 1-1912.

THE WEAK POINT.



Squilbob—Don't know how to court the girl? Well, my boy, you just tell her that you know she despises "jollying" and is the one woman in the world who can't be flattered.

Squilligan—Well?

"That sort of guff will flatter her!"

Young, but Oh, My!

The lawyer was sitting at his desk, absorbed in the preparation of a brief. So bent was he on his work that he did not hear the door as it was pushed gently open, nor see the curly head that was thrust into his office. A little sob attracted his notice, and turning, he saw his face that was streaked with tears, and told plainly that his feelings had been hurt.

"Well, my little man, did you want to see me?"

"Are you a lawyer?"

"Yes. What is it you want?"

"I want—" and there was a resolute ring in his voice—"I want a divorce from my papa and mamma!"

How He Found Out.

"Mr. Chairman," shouted one of the delegates to the convention, "I move that the nominating speeches be limited to one minute each!"

"Second the motion!" yelled a dozen others.

A storm of protest arose, but the chairman put the motion.

It was lost by a vote of 47 to 45.

"I merely wished to find out, Mr. Chairman," explained the delegate who had made the motion, "how many ambitious orators there are in this convention. There are forty-seven."

TIED DOWN.
20 Years' Slavery—How She Got Freedom.
A dyspepsia veteran who writes from one of England's charming rural homes to tell how she won victory in her 20 years' fight, naturally exults in her triumph over the tea and coffee habit:
"I feel it a duty to tell you," she says, "how much good Postum has done me. I am grateful, but also desire to let others who may be suffering as I did, know of the delightful method by which I was relieved.
"I had suffered for 20 years from dyspepsia, and the giddiness that usually accompanies that painful ailment, and which frequently prostrated me. I never drank much coffee, and cocoa and even milk did not agree with my impaired digestion, so I used tea, exclusively, till about a year ago, when I found in a package of Grape-Nuts the little book, 'The Road to Wellville.'
"After a careful reading of the booklet I was curious to try Postum and sent for a package. I enjoyed it from the first, and at once gave up tea in its favor.
"I began to feel better very soon. My giddiness left me after the first few days' use of Postum, and my stomach became stronger so rapidly that it was not long till I was able (as I still am) to take milk and many other articles of food of which I was formerly compelled to deny myself. I have proved the truth of your statement that Postum 'makes good, red blood.'
"I have become very enthusiastic over the merits of my new table beverage, and during the past few months, have conducted a Postum propaganda among my neighbors which has brought benefit to many, and I shall continue to tell my friends of the 'better way' in which I rejoice." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.
Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a reason."
Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

The KITCHEN CABINET

WE MUST never complain of our lot: trials introduce heroism and strength; ignorance the joy of learning, and sin itself the glory of salvation.

WINTER BREAKFASTS.

There are those who will say that they want an egg, a piece of toast or two, a slice of bacon and a cup of coffee, without variation, throughout the cold months. The breakfast table should never be so fixed in idea that one may not look for a little change. In some families the buckwheat cake is in constant demand from December until April. The buckwheat cake is a perfectly good cake, but we all know when we have enough. To most cooks and housekeepers the breakfast, if any variety and study is put into its menus, is the most difficult of the day, for appetites are at the lowest ebb and need to be coaxed by appetizing and dainty food.

Fortunately for those who are not blessed with a large amount of worldly goods to expend upon the table, fruits and foods that are cheap and good are easily prepared. Oranges are now reasonable and will be cheaper; grape fruit is never very cheap fruit, but it is so agreeable for the breakfast table that it should be used as often as possible. When three can be bought for a quarter, they may not be called too much of a luxury.

An orange, an apple or half a grape fruit is a most gratifying beginning to a breakfast.

There is such a variety of ways of cooking breakfast eggs that the poached, fried and "cooked in the shell" should be varied often.

There are any number of omelets, which may be served plain or with sauces, then a very nice egg dish, is one in which the eggs are baked with a tablespoonful of cream in small ramekins.

Griddle cakes may be served in any number of ways, in combination with cooked rice, or cereals. Gems and muffins are improved by the addition of cooked cereal.

The coffee cake and the doughnut are special breakfast cakes. The following recipe is the Queen of Doughnuts.—Beat together two eggs, add one and two-thirds cups of sugar and beat until the sugar is nearly dissolved; add a half teaspoon of salt, one and a fourth cupfuls of sour milk, a fourth of a cup of sour cream, a teaspoonful each of soda and nutmeg, and as little flour as possible to handle. Set on ice to chill and roll out as soft as possible. The secret of a good doughnut is frying them very soft, using very little flour. When cold shake in a paper bag with a few tablespoonfuls of powdered sugar.

HE WHO receives friends without himself bestowing some pains upon the repast prepared for them, does not deserve to have friends.

—Brillat-Savaria.

SEASONABLE DISHES.

The time-honored dish of roast pig is served during the cold weather, as pork is best served in the winter months.

Roast Pig.—A pig for this purpose should not be over four weeks old, and should not be kept more than two or three days after it is killed. The skin of a larger pig will not develop that desirable crackle which is one of the charms of the roast.

The pig is usually stuffed with a poultry stuffing, though some like rice and cheese. The fore legs are skewered forward and the hind legs back. The mouth is fastened open with a piece of wood or a cob, and when it is served the traditional apple is used in its place. The ears are protected with buttered paper while it is roasting. The oven should be moderately hot, and basting often improves the roast. The time for roasting is about three hours.

Roast Goose.—A young or green goose is recognized by its pliable yellow feet and its tender windpipe. As it grows older the down on its legs disappears and the feet become darker in color. The skin is so fat and greasy that a warm soda bath and a good scrubbing is necessary to prepare it before it is drawn.

When the goose is drawn, wash quickly in clear water and wipe dry. Roast like a turkey, pouring off the fat from the pan. Serve with giblet sauce, made by adding to a brown gravy the liver, heart and gizzard chopped fine after boiling tender.

Stuffing for Goose.—Use hot mashed potato highly seasoned with salt, pepper and parboiled onions or onion juice. Moisten with one tablespoonful of butter and the yolk of an egg to each cup of potato. Sprinkle a little sage over the potato, if liked.

Steamed Apple Pudding.—Slice tart apples into a deep dish. Cover with a light bread dough into which has been worked a large spoonful of butter. Set in a warm place for an hour, then lift the edge and add one-half pint of boiling water, according to the size of the pudding. Cut an opening in the middle and cover with an inverted basin. Set on the back part of the stove and cook steadily one hour, without lifting the cover. Serve on a hot platter with the apples on top. Use thick cream and maple sirup for sauce.

IF THINGS don't go to suit us,
Let's never fume and fret,
For finding fault with fortune
Ne'er mended matters yet.
Make best of whate'er happens;
Bear failure like a man;
In good or evil fortune
Do just the best you can.

—Eben E. Rexford.

SOME SIMPLE DESSERTS.

Often the word simple does not imply inexpensive, as a simple gown may be one of much cost; a simple dish may be of few ingredients yet quite expensive. The following is both cheap and simple when eggs are plenty:

Sponge Pudding.—Stir a third of a cup of flour into a cup of milk until smooth. Set in boiling water and cook. When cool add a half teaspoon of melted butter and the yolks of three eggs well beaten, with a fourth of a cup of sugar. Cut and fold in the whites of the eggs beaten stiff, and after flavoring to taste set in a pan of water and bake twenty minutes. Serve with hard sauce. Prepare the sauce by creaming four tablespoonfuls of butter and add a half cup of sugar and a teaspoonful of boiling water; flavor with grated nutmeg and chill before serving. Powdered sugar makes the sauce more smooth and creamy.

Cavendish Pudding.—Put a cup of stale bread crumbs to soak in a pint of cold milk, let stand for half an hour. Beat two eggs slightly, put in a layer of bread crumbs in a greased mold, then some fried fruit and bits of butter; mix a half cup of sugar and some of the milk and the eggs with a little flavoring and pour over, steam one and a half hours. Serve with any desired liquid sauce. Lemon is particularly good.

Fig Cups.—This is a most delicious dessert and sounds extravagant, but will not prove so. Take a half a pound of pulled figs, steam them until tender in a sieve over water; cut a small opening in the side and fill with chopped salted almonds. Prepare a sauce of a half cup of orange juice, a tablespoonful of lemon juice and a half cup of sugar; when hot drop in the figs and simmer until thoroughly cooked. Serve cold with unsweetened whipped cream.

When serving hot ginger bread for dessert, apple sauce is a fine accompaniment, or seasoned cream cheese mixed with a little grated rich American cheese and molded in green peppers, then when well chilled slice in small slices and serve with the ginger bread or with crackers and coffee as dessert.

BE DIPLOMATIC.—A farmer out west used to keep himself supplied with coal by making faces at the engineer as the train went by.

USING UP LEFT-OVERS.

Left-overs are like the poor, "always with us," and the problem how to convert them into appetizing and wholesome dishes is a constant one. Especially at this season, after the holiday dinners and entertainments, there is always much left that is too good to be thrown away. The questionable economy of some housekeepers, who are most careful to save every particle of food and convert it with great pains and expense into dishes which cost more than the original, cannot be too strongly condemned. Common sense and brains must be used in mixing food.

Turkey Soup.—The carcass of the turkey makes a finely flavored soup. Break the bones and cover with cold water, adding any bits of meat that may be left. Bring slowly to the boiling point and simmer two hours. Strain, remove fat and season with salt and pepper. A few pieces of celery may be added to the soup while cooking, or a slice of onion, for flavor.

The ways of using stale bread and cake are legion. The crumbs may make stuffing for fowl or for breading chops or crumbing croquettes, for puddings and griddle cakes, such a number of things that never a crumb should be thrown away unless it is to fed the hungry birds.

Buckwheat Cakes.—Pour a pint of scalded milk over a third of a cup of bread crumbs and let stand thirty minutes; add a half teaspoonful of salt and a yeast cake which has been softened in lukewarm water, then add enough buckwheat to make a thin batter to pour. Let rise over night; in the morning beat well and add a tablespoonful of molasses and a fourth of a teaspoon of soda dissolved in two tablespoonfuls of water.

Nellie Maxwell.

PULLED IN DIFFERENT WAYS

Ordinary Man on the Street Somewhat Puzzled by Seeming Business Contradictions.

"Life is full of contradictions."

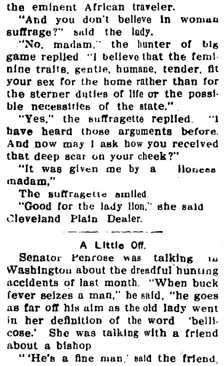
"Yes?"

"For instance, about six months ago a life insurance agent got after me, and hounded me nearly to death. I told him at the start that I had all the insurance I was able to carry, but he kept right on trying to persuade me that I needed more and, finally, in sheer desperation, I consented to take out another policy. Then the company's doctor began trying in every way he could think of to make it impossible for me to get the insurance. He acted as if I was voluntarily trying to beat the company in some way, and when I failed to pass the examination both he and the agent appeared to think I had wronged them by taking up their time."

"That's nearly as bad as my case. Several months ago representatives of a piano house got after me for the purpose of persuading me to buy a piano on the installment plan. Just to get rid of them I at last agreed to buy. Now they've got a corps of men out trying to dig up proof that I never could or would pay for the piano if they were to let me have it. Business is a great thing."

ALMOST FRANTIC WITH ITCHING ECZEMA
"Eight years ago I got eczema all over my hands. My fingers fairly bled and it itched until it almost drove me frantic. The eruption began with itching under the skin. It spread fast from between the fingers around the nails and all over the whole hands. I got a pair of rubber gloves in order to wash dishes. Then it spread all over the left side of my chest. A fine doctor treated the trouble two weeks, but did me no good. I cried night and day. Then I decided to try Cuticura Soap and Ointment but without much hope as I had gone so long. There was a marked change the second day, and so on until I was entirely cured. The Cuticura Soap we have always kept in our home, and we decided after that lesson that it is a cheap soap in price and the very best in quality. My husband will use no other soap in his shaving mug." (Signed) Mrs. G. A. Selby, Redonda Beach, Cal., Jan. 15, 1911. Although Cuticura Soap and Ointment are sold by druggists and dealers everywhere, a sample of each, with 32-page book, will be mailed free on application to "Cuticura," Dept. 24 K, Boston.

IN HASTE, TOO.



"I t'ought yous said yous kin lick me wid yer hands tied behind yer back?"

"I—I—can! I'm j—just goin' now to get a string to tie 'em!"

Feminine Rebuke.

The suffragette was conversing with the eminent African traveler.

"And you don't believe in woman suffrage?" said the lady.

"No, madam," the hunter of big game replied. "I believe that the feminine traits, gentle, humane, tender, fit your sex for the home rather than for the sterner duties of life or the possible necessities of the state."

"Yes," the suffragette replied. "I have heard those arguments before. And now may I ask how you received that deep scar on your cheek?"

"It was given me by a lioness, madam."

The suffragette smiled.

"Good for the lady lion," she said.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

A Little Off.

Senator Penrose was talking in Washington about the dreadful hunting accidents of last month. "When buck fever seizes a man," he said, "he goes as far off his aim as the old lady went in her definition of the word 'bellicose.' She was talking with a friend about a bishop.

"'He's a fine man,' said the friend, a fine, handsome man. His only trouble is that he's a little bellicose.'

"'Bellicose?' said the old lady with a surprised frown. 'He must have changed, then. The last time I saw him he was tall and rather slender.'"

Accepting a Compliment.

Neighbor—What a lovely day this is!

Weather Man—Thank you.

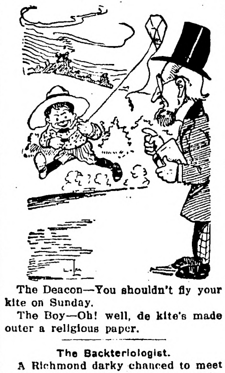
DR. J. H. RINDLAUB (Specialist), Eye, Ear, Nose and Throat Fargo, N. D.

It doesn't take a fisherman to cast slurs.

Discouraged
The expression occurs so many times in letters from sick women, "I was completely discouraged." And there is always good reason for the discouragement. Years of pain and suffering. Doctor after doctor tried in vain. Medicines doing no lasting good. It is no wonder that the woman feels discouraged.
Thousands of these weak and sick women have found health and courage regained as the result of the use of
Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription.
It establishes regularity, heals inflammation and ulceration, and cures weakness.
IT MAKES WEAK WOMEN STRONG AND SICK WOMEN WELL.
Refuse substitutes offered by unscrupulous druggists for this reliable remedy.
Sick women are invited to consult by letter, free. All correspondence strictly private and sacredly confidential. Write without fear and without fee to World's Dispensary, R. V. Pierce, M. D., Pres't, Buffalo, N. Y.
Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets regulate and invigorate stomach, liver and bowels. Sugar-coated, tiny granules, easy to take as candy.

The Famous Rayo Lamps and Lanterns
Rayo lamps and lanterns give most light for the oil used.
The light is strong and steady. A Rayo never flickers. Materials and workmanship are the best. Rayo lamps and lanterns last.
Ask your dealer to show you his line of Rayo lamps and lanterns, or write for illustrated booklets direct to any agency of
Standard Oil Company
(Incorporated)

ONE WAY OUT OF IT.



The Deacon—You shouldn't fly your kite on Sunday.

The Boy—Oh! well, de kite's made outer a religious paper.

The Backteriologist.

A Richmond darky chanced to meet on the street a friend who complained of much "mis'ry." Indeed, the afflicted one was in despair, so "tuckered out" was he.

"Wot seems to be de matter?" asked the first negro.

"Jim," said the other with a moan and a gesture indicating the portion of his anatomy that was giving him so much trouble, "I'se got sech awful pain in mah back heah!"

Jim assumed an air of great solemnity and wisdom. "In that case," said he, "dere's only one thing fo' yo to do, s' yo' put yo'se'f in de hands o' dat Doctah Blank. I hears dat he's de finest backteriologist in de whole souf."

Mary's Little Postscript.

Mistress—Mary, wasn't that gentleman asking for me?

The New Maid—No, mum, he described the lady he wanted to see as being about 40, and I told him it couldn't be you.

Mistress—Quite right, my dear. And you shall have an extra afternoon off tomorrow.

The New Maid—Yes, mum! Thankee, mum! Yes, mum! I told him couldn't be you, as you was about 60.

Mistress—And while you're taking your afternoon off you'd better look out for a new place!

Important Distinction.

"You can take that ax and get up an appetite for a little dinner," said the farmer's wife.

"Lady," replied Meandering Mike, "what I was applyin' fur was food; not physical culture."

CREAM OF RYE
For health and energy eat it for breakfast. Reduces cost of living. Free Silver Spoon in every package. Ask your grocer for a package.

Most of us would keenly enjoy working—if only we weren't compelled to do it.

Many a man's handshake is less sincere than the wag of his dog's tail.

TO CURE A COLD IN ONE DAY
Take LAXATIVE BROMO Quinine Tablets. Druggists refund money if it fails to cure. E. W. GROVE'S signature is on each box. 25c.

A woman falls in love gracefully but a man usually stumbles into it.

44 Bu. to the Acre
is a heavy yield, but that's what John Kennedy of Edmonton, Alberta, Western Canada, got from 40 acres of Spring Wheat in 1910. Reports from other districts in that province showed other excellent results—such as 4,000 bushels of wheat from 120 acres, or 33 1-3 bu. per acre. 25, 30 and 40 bushel yields were numerous. As high as 132 bushels of oats to the acre were threshed from Alberta fields in 1910.
160 ACRE FARMS IN WESTERN CANADA FREE
The Silver Cup at the recent Spokane Fair was awarded to the Alberta Government for its exhibit of grains, grasses and vegetables. Reports of excellent yields for 1910 come also from Saskatchewan and Manitoba in Western Canada.
Free homesteads of 160 acres, and adjoining preemptions of 160 acres (at $3 per acre) are to be had in the choicest districts. Schools convenient, climate excellent, soil the very best, railways close at hand, building lumber cheap, fuel easy to get and reasonable in price, water easily procured, mixed farming a success.
Write as to best place for settlement, settlers' low railway rates, descriptive illustrated "Last Best West" (sent free on application) and other information, to Sup't of Immigration, Ottawa, Can., or to the Canadian Government Agent. (36)
CHAS. PILLING
Clifford Block Grand Forks, N. Dak.
Please write to the agent nearest you

Constipation Vanishes Forever
Prompt Relief—Permanent Cure
CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS never fail. Purely vegetable — act surely but gently on the liver. Stop after dinner distress—cure indigestion, improve the complexion, brighten the eyes.
SMALL PILL, SMALL DOSE, SMALL PRICE.
Genuine must bear Signature
Brent Good
CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS.

PATENTS Watson E. Coleman, Washington, D.C. Books free. Highest references. Best results.

Fargo Directory

Dakota Business College
LARGEST and FINEST between CHICAGO AND THE COAST.
FARGO, NORTH DAKOTA

HIGHEST CASH PRICES
PAID FOR SWEET AND SOUR CREAM
Prompt payment, honest test, guaranteed return of cans. FARGO ICE CREAM & CIDER COMPANY. Largest creamery in the northwest.

Shotwell Floral Co.
Growers and shippers of cut flowers, plants, etc. Write for catalog. Funeral designs on short notice. Phone day or night. Fargo, N. D.

FARGO TANNERY
Receives hides and skins for tanning to harness leather, robes and coats. Robes lined, hides bought, leather and robes for sale. SEND FOR PRICE LIST.
Andrew Monson, Proprietor, Fargo Tannery
Fargo, North Dakota

MONUMENTS
500 in stock. Write for free catalog.
FARGO MARBLE & GRANITE WORKS, N. P. Ave., Fargo, N. D.

PERFECTION SMOKELESS OIL HEATER
Smokeless Odorless Clean Convenient
The Perfection Smokeless Oil Heater warms up a room in next to no time. Always ready for use. Can be carried easily to any room where extra warmth is needed.
A special automatic device makes it impossible to turn the wick too high or too low. Safe in the hands of a child.
The Perfection burns nine hours on one filling—glowing heat from the minute it is lighted. Handsomely finished; drums of blue enamel or plain steel, with nickel trimmings.
Ask your dealer or write for descriptive circular to any agency of
Standard Oil Company
(Incorporated)

PUTNAM FADELESS DYES
Color more goods brighter and faster colors than any other dye. One 10c package colors all fibers. They dye in cold water better than any other dye. You can dye any garment without ripping apart. Write for free booklet—How to Dye, Bleach and Mix Colors. MONROE DRUG COMPANY, Quincy, Ill.

Defective Page

YEAR JUST GONE ONE OF REVOLTS

Marked by Unrest Involving the Entire World.

"REBELS" ALWAYS VICTORS

Chinese and Mexican Revolutions and Strife Against Graft and Monopoly—Great Strides Made in Aviation.

When the historian of the future records the events of the year 1911, he will lay particular stress on the political and social unest throughout the world. This was not confined to any one country, nor to a few countries; it was world-wide, involving practically every nation, both civilized and uncivilized. It included revolutions against long-standing governments, battles of labor and capital, wars between different nations and, in short, everything that could be branded as strife against existing conditions or growing conditions.

Most significant of all the events of the year was the explosion in open rebellion of the hatred, that had been accumulating through the ages, of the Chinese against the despotic Manchu dynasty. Passive, unresisting, yet at the same time loathing and despising the power that held them in subjection, the millions in the Far East empire had for centuries submitted to being trodden on by unreasoning, overbearing, all-potent self-styled demigods. But China was gradually awakening and, when the first flames of revolution burst forth, it was the signal for the conflagration to become general.

Rebels the Winners Everywhere.

But the Chinese insurrection was but a larger edition of dozens, yea, scores, of upheavals of various kinds in other parts of the world. They broke forth with such suddenness that it was almost impossible to realize what was occurring until the whole thing was over. Without exception, every one of the great disturbances of the year that reached an ultimate result, wound up in favor of the party or element rebelling against the condition. In not one did the defense win over the offense.

The Mexican revolution, near to our own doors, was a striking example of the overturn of regime. Nearer still was the successful culmination of the battle for statehood of Arizona and New Mexico.

Other struggles of equal magnitude developed during the year, many of them with sensational effect, in which the issue is still being fought. Among these are the battle between labor and capital, the "people" and monopoly, and advocates of popular government as opposed to representative government. Campaigns on graft have been waged with fierce resolution by city, state and federal authorities, not only in all corners of the United States, but abroad as well.

The McNamara dynamiting case, the growth of sentiment for popular election of all federal officials, the progress of the woman suffrage movement, trust prosecutions, the campaign for currency reform and that for lower tariffs—all these typify the unrest that exists in our own country.

Year's Important Events.

Aside from the numberless conflicts, many noteworthy things have been penned in the diary of 1911. Science has witnessed vast strides, particularly in the field of aviation. The flights of Atwood from St. Louis to New York and of Rodgers from New York to Pasadena, Cal., were the crowning achievements in this line. About all that remains to be accomplished in aviation, as a feat, is the crossing of the ocean.

When all that is good and all that is bad are considered together, it cannot be said otherwise than that the year was one in which the good predominated.

A chronological table of the important events of 1911 follows:

JANUARY.

1—Juan Estrada inaugurated president of Nicaragua.

2—President Taft officially recognizes the Estrada government.

3—W. E. Corey resigns presidency of the United States Steel corporation.

First postal savings banks opened.

4—Senator Elkins of West Virginia dies.

10—Tobacco trust dissolution suit started in United States Supreme court. President Taft sends congress special message urging fortification of Panama Canal.

14—Battleship Arkansas launched at Camden, N. J.

19—Paul Morton, president of Equitable Life Insurance company and former secretary of the treasury, dies.

23—David Graham Phillips, noted author, shot in New York by a mad violinist; died a day later.

26—Canadian reciprocity agreement presented to congress by President Taft.

31—House of representatives votes the Panama-Pacific Exposition of 1915 to San Francisco, defeating New Orleans' efforts.

Rear Admiral Charles S. Sperry dies.

FEBRUARY.

7—Miss Vivian Gould married to Lord Decies of England in New York.

11—Archbishop Ryan of Philadelphia dies.

21—Premier Asquith introduces into English house of commons bill abolishing veto power of house of lords.

MARCH.

1—Senator Lorimer of Illinois retains his seat by senate vote with margin of six.

4—Reciprocity fails in senate. Sixty-first congress adjourns.

President Taft makes good on extra session threat, setting special session at April 4.

8—United States troops ordered to Mexican frontier.

11—Trial of the Camorrists begins at Viterbo, Italy.

18—Supreme court sustains constitutionality of corporation tax law, increasing national income by $27,000,000.

25—Triangle Shirt Waist company fire in the Asch building, New York, resulting in 141 deaths.

APRIL.

4—Special session of Sixty-second congress convenes.

10—Tom L. Johnson, former mayor of Cleveland, dies.

12—Canadian reciprocity bill and farmers' free list bill introduced in house.

13—House approves direct election of senators by 296 to 16.

14—David Jayne Hill resigns as ambassador to Germany.

21—House passes Canadian reciprocity, 265 to 89.

22—McNamara brothers arrested in Chicago and Indianapolis; rushed by automobile on way to Los Angeles to face dynamite charges.

29—Jay Gould marries Annie Douglass Graham of Hawaii, in New York.

30—Bangor, Me., devastated by fire.

MAY.

2—Chinese rebellion begins in Kwantung province.

3—House orders investigation of steel trust.

8—Battle of Juarez begins, resulting in capture by Mexican rebels two days later.

12—J. M. Dickinson resigns as secretary of war; succeeded by Henry L. Stimson of New York.

15—Standard Oil company ordered dissolved by Supreme court decision.

17—Porfirio Diaz announces he will resign presidency of Mexico.

23—New Mexico and Arizona statehood resolution passes in house.

25—Diaz resigns presidency of Mexico.

29—Tobacco trust ordered dissolved by Supreme court decision.

JUNE.

8—W. E. D. Stokes shot in New York by Lillian Graham and Ethel Conrad.

10—American polo team beats British in deciding game of international series.

13—Resolution for popular election of senators passed by senate.

18—European aviation circuit race begins at Vincennes, France. Three aviators—Captain Princeteau, M. La Martin and M. Lendran—killed when machines fall to ground.

19—President Taft celebrates his silver wedding anniversary.

21—Arrival in New York of Olympic, largest passenger boat in world.

22—Coronation of King George of England.

28—Cornell crew wins Poughkeepsie regatta.

JULY.

2—Harry N. Atwood flies in biplane from Boston to New York.

8—Lieutenant Conneau ("Andre Beaumont") wins 1,000-mile aviation circuit race, from Vincennes, over France, Belgium, Holland and England.

12—American Harvard-Yale athletic team defeated by Oxford-Cambridge team at London.

14—Investiture of prince of Wales.

18—Henry Clay Beattie shoots his wife.

22—Canadian reciprocity passed by senate.

27—President Taft signs Canadian reciprocity treaty.

AUGUST.

10—London dock strike begins.

15—Harry N. Atwood starts flight for New York from St. Louis.

19—English dock strike settled.

23—Special session of congress adjourns.

22—G. A. R. special train wrecked near Manchester, N. Y., 37 civil war veterans and members of their families being killed.

27—Atwood arrives at New York, finishing his flight from St. Louis.

SEPTEMBER.

9—Col. John Jacob Astor marries Madeline Talmage Force.

10—Cross-continent aeroplane flight for Hearst $50,000 prize officially begins.

12—H. H. Hilton of England wins American golf championship at Apawamis links.

15—Premier Stolypin of Russia shot while attending opera at Kiev, dying two days later.

President Taft starts on trip through west.

17—Cal P. Rodgers leaves New York on cross-continent flight. Rodgers was the only one to complete the trip.

21—Canadian voters reject reciprocity bill.

25—French battleship Liberte blown up in harbor of Toulon, killing three hundred.

29—Italy declares war on Turkey, as result of Tripoli controversy, and rushes troops to Tripoli.

30—One hundred killed by breaking of dam at Austin, Pa.

OCTOBER.

2—Rear Admiral Winfield S. Schley dies.

13—Republic of China proclaimed at Wu Chang.

14—Associate Justice John Marshall Harlan of the United States Supreme Court dies.

19—Aviator Eugene Ely killed at Macon, Ga.

20—Rev. C. V. T. Richeson arrested in Boston as slayer of Avis Linnell.

21—Rev. Frand W. Sandford, leader of the Holy Ghosters, arrives in Portland, Me., aboard the Coronet, on which he starved the fanatical members of the party. He is arrested.

Chinese national assembly convenes.

23—Winston Churchill is made England's first lord of the admiralty, being succeeded as home secretary by Reginald McKenna.

26—Philadelphia Athletics win world's baseball championship from New York.

29—Joseph Pulitzer, noted publisher, dies.

Names of 18 new cardinals-designate announced.

NOVEMBER.

1—President Taft reviews great battleship fleet at New York.

2—Kyrle Bellew, famous actor, dies.

4—Chinese rebels capture Shanghai, controlling mouth of Yangtse-Kiang river.

5—Cal P. Rodgers arrives at Pasadena, Cal., concluding his epochal flight from New York to Pacific coast.

Ambassador Guild at St. Petersburg protests to Russia against alleged insuits to American Jews.

6—Persia refuses Russia's demand to remove W. Morgan Shuster, young American in charge of Persian finances.

7—New Mexico's first election as a state results in Democratic governor.

Italian advance in Tripoli begins.

8—United States circuit court at New York approves tobacco trust dissolution plan.

16—Chinese republic appeals for recognition by the world.

Russia starts troops for Persian frontier.

19—President Caceres of Santo Domingo assassinated.

24—Henry Clay Beattie executed.

25—Miss Mildred Sherman marries Lord Camoys of England in New York.

30—Public consistory creating 19 cardinals at Rome.

DECEMBER.

1—McNamara brothers change pleas in dynamite case to "guilty."

2—King George arrives in India for the Durbar.

4—First regular session of Sixty-second congress convenes.

5—J. B. McNamara sentenced for life, John J. to 15 years. President Taft sends congress message devoted entirely to trust problems.

6—Beef trust suit begun at Chicago.

8—Investigation board reports battleship Maine was destroyed by outside explosion.

9—207 miners entomber at Briceville, Tenn., by explosion.

Constitution of Chinese republic framed.

12—Durbar at India held by King George emperor of India.

Republican national committee names Chicago, June 18, for 1912 national convention.

13—Sulzer bill abrogating passport treaty with Russia passed by house.

17—Alfred G. Vanderbilt weds Mrs. Margaret McKim in London.

Ambassador Curtiss Guild at instruction of President Taft, notifies Russia of intention to abrogate treaty of 1832.

19—Senate approves President Taft's abrogation of Russian treaty. President sends congress special message on wool tariff.

John Bigelow, America's "grand old man," dies.

21—Russian forces open hostilities with Persia, bombarding the governor's palace at Tabriz.

Again the Poor Fat Man.

Among the passengers on a downtown car the other evening were a fat man, a lean man, who proved to be deaf, and a couple of giggly girls. On one of the side streets a German band was engaged in making life miserable for the residents of the neighborhood. The fat man shifted uneasily in his seat and remarked sarcastically to the lean man in a low tone, "Music!"

The lean man put his hand to his ear and said, "Eh?"

"Music," repeated the man in louder tones.

"Beg pardon, I am not able to hear," said the lean man.

"Music," yelled the fat man, so loud that the passengers all tittered and the little giggly girls all grew red in the face.

"Oh," said the lean man as he turned around and looked about him. The little German band was out of sight by this time, and the passengers laughed immoderately at the vain attempts of the unfortunate man to find the object of the fat man's comments. Fat men are proverbially good natured, and by that time the oddity of the situation had dawned upon this particular fat man.

"Hum," he said, "you folks needn't laugh. Our friend saw fully as much music as you and I heard."

Natural Timepiece.

There is no need for clocks on the Aegean sea any day when the sun is shining. There nature has arranged her only timepiece, one that does not vary though the centuries pass. This natural time marker is the largest sundial in the world. Projecting into the blue waters of the sea is a large promontory which lifts its head 3,000 feet above the waves. As the sun swings round, the pointed shadow of the mountain just touches one after the other a number of small islands, which are at exact distances apart and act as hour marks on the great dial.

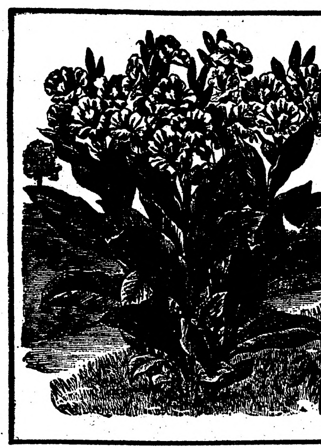
The Lesser Evil.

Marks—Why do you allow your wife to run up such big bills?

Parks—Because I'd sooner have trouble with my creditors than with her—that's why.

IMPROVED CANNAS ATTRACTIVE AND SATISFACTORY PLANTS

Started in March and Bedded Out When Danger of Frost Is Past It Begins to Bloom Early in Summer and Keeps Up Display Until Killing Frosts of Autumn—How to Propogate.



Canna in Bloom.

The improved cannas are among the most attractive and satisfactory of bedding plants. The beds have tropical foliage, grow well in any rich, moist, sunny bed, branch, and bear huge spikes of rich-colored flowers that often measure more than six inches across. Started in March and bedded out when danger from frost is past the plants begin to bloom early in summer, and keep up the display until the frosts of autumn, says Park's Floral Magazine.

Cannas are propagated either from seeds or by division of the clumps. Seedlings begin to bloom the first year, and a fine mixed bed can be produced from them. The seeds are rather tardy in germination unless dropped in scalding water till the hard outer cover bursts, then taken out and planted. Some file through the covering. Many persons, however, plant the seeds without treating them, and meet with good success. By starting plants from seeds choice varieties are often found, and it was by this means that the beautiful named Cannas used for beds were produced. To have the most effective display, however, it is better to plant named varieties, which are increased by dividing the clumps. These come in green and bronze foliage, and vary in color from white to rich crimson. Among the best for beds in the different colors are Pennsylvania, four and a half feet high, with green foliage and big clusters of huge scarlet flowers; King Humbert, five feet high, with fine yellow clusters; and Florence Vaughan, three and a half feet high, with fine clusters of flowers, golden yellow, spotted red.

The bed should be prepared by spading deep, at the same time incorporating well-decayed stable manure with it. See that it is in a warm, sunny exposure, and when Nature does not water copiously, add to the supply. The plants should be set 18 inches apart. They like an abundance of water. On the approach of hot weather they will be benefited by a liberal mulching of stable litter. As the flowers fade cut them off, this will insure continued bloom.

When frost spoils the bed cut the tops off, after a rain, lift the clumps with a portion of the wet soil adhering, dry well, then place on a hanging shelf in a dry, frost-proof cellar. Examine them occasionally. If too dry, sprinkle; if too wet, air.

STUMBLING IS VERY BAD HABIT

Some Horses Naturally Addicted to Fault While Others Have It Thrust Upon Them by Ignorance.

(By R. G. WEATHERSTONE.)

Some horses are naturally addicted to stumbling, others acquire the fault and still others have it thrust upon them by the carelessness and ignorance of the owners.

The horse that stumbles when a colt is almost incurable. His manner of traveling may be improved to some extent with careful driving with a tight rein and the moderately high checking, but a born stumbler is a hard case to deal with.

Many horses are made to stumble by wrong shoeing. If shod heavily in front and light behind they are almost certain to acquire the habit.

Weak joints or imperfectly formed legs are also causes of stumbling. Some colts are born with marked evidence of weak knees. We know of some cases where colts at three years that have never been driven were perceptibly knee-sprung. Such an animal can never be cured of this stumbling habit.

Driving with a slack rein is another cause of stumbling and very often the sole cause. If a horse becomes fatigued it should be kept well up on the rein if driven over rough roads. No good horseman will ever take chances of allowing his horse to fall down by driving with a slovenly rein.

Stumbling often causes bad accidents, not only to the horse, but to the occupants of the vehicle he is drawing. We once saw a fine looking carriage horse who was being driven by a woman who allowed the reins to dangle loosely in her hands, fall on the Lake Shore drive in Chicago. He stumbled for more than 15 feet before he finally fell. He overturned the carriage in his struggles and when he was assisted to his feet it was found that both knees were broken, and he was rendered useless for life.

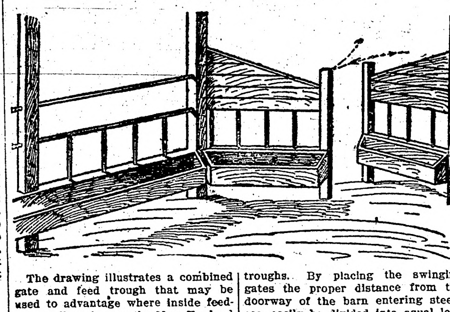
Care of Roads.

Any neighborhood that does not have enough enterprise to keep two or three log road drags going for a couple of weeks during the late fall is sadly behind the times. Farmers who are too lazy to do this ought to be compelled to drag their weary legs through the mud to town—next spring—as they surely will.

Celery in California.

Orange county, California, raised something more than 1,000 carloads of celery this season, valued at $320,000.

COMBINED GATE-FEED TROUGH



The drawing illustrates a combined gate and feed trough that may be used to advantage where inside feeding is allowed, says the New England Homestead. The space inclosed by the troughs corresponds to an alleyway in an ordinary barn. The man doing the feeding can easily distribute feed owing to the closeness of the troughs. By placing the swinging gates the proper distance from the doorway of the barn entering steers can easily be divided into equal lots. The divisions above each trough serve, in a way as stanchions. This arrangement has been found very convenient by Langdon Brothers, extensive farmers of Winona county, Minn.

FIGHT ON INCREASE

Higher Rates on Second-Class Mail Opposed.

BULLETIN FROM PUBLISHERS

Postal Committee of the A. N. P. A. Calls the Post Office a Badly Managed Business.

Washington.—The protest of the publishers against the proposition to increase second-class mail rates as the congressional post office commission desires is growing stronger daily. The Illinois Daily Newspaper Publishers' association registered its objections recently, and now the American Newspaper Publishers' association's postal committee, of which the chairman is Don C. Seitz of the New York World, has issued the following bulletin:

"The extent to which the post office department does not carry second-class matter is well revealed in the following abstract of inquiry of publishers conducted by house committee on expenditures in the post office department (William A. Ashbrook, chairman) concerning the volume, weight and handling of the output of publications entered as mail matter of the second-class for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911:

"'Inquiry was made of all publishers, approximating thirty thousand, of which nearly seventeen thousand are weekly publications.

"'More than ten thousand returns were received, embracing sixty-six plus per cent. of all tonnage of publications.

"'The publications reporting represent an annual output of more than six and one-half billion copies, the weight of which was one and three-quarter billion pounds.

"'These publications delivered by mail in such period weighed 633,012,902 pounds.

"'They delivered by their own carriers, newsboys, and news companies 840,466,574 pounds, of which an unascertained percentage was carried to destination by express and other rail shipments outside the mail. They delivered by express, 202,729,510 pounds, and by other rail shipments 121,491,748 pounds. The rate by express and rail varies from ¼ to 1 cent per pound, but the bulk of these shipments went at a rate of ¼ to ½ cent per pound.

"'The post office for the year ending June 30, 1911, handled 951,001,669, and excluding one-half million pounds free in county matter, it received one cent per pound.'

"All this goes to add to the absurdity of the proposed Hitchcock legislation doubling the second-class rate from one to two cents per pound, and limiting the 'privilege' to publications that carry as much reading matter as they do advertising.

"The proposition was stupid enough when the postal deficit reached $17,000,000 two years ago. It becomes preposterous in face of a surplus.

"What business has a transportation corporation, which is all the post office is, to prescribe how a business shall be conducted?

"Newspapers cannot afford to expand their columns beyond the call of the day's news, nor can they be expected to control the requirements of their advertisers who have a right to reach the public as copiously as they care to.

"It cannot be assumed that such legislation will ever get by congress. But publishers are requested to fight the theory that the right to send their output by mail is a 'privilege.' The figures show it's not.

"The post office is a badly managed business. That is all. We should fight its dictation, its censorship and its inefficiency."

Brigand Also a Patriot.

Gravely, solemnly, with enthusiasm and a large mixture of national pride, the Turkish newspapers publish the following remarkable piece of news (says the London Globe). A brigand chief, one Salin, who has been carrying on operations for some time in the mountains of Gambiek, in Bithynia, not a great distance from Constantinople, and for whom the Turkish gendarmerie have for long sought in vain, alive or dead, has placed his talents and services at the disposition of the Turkish authorities. The brigand's letter is a curious document. He says it is against the wishes of his heart to give up his calling, but "the audacity of these Italian brigands"—an expression which frequently occurs in the letter—in waging war upon the Ottoman empire and brutally seizing an Islamic province, impel him to offer his services, with those of his band, consisting of a hundred men, to avenge the national honor and to chastise these infidel brigands.

Altered the Case.

Mrs. de Mover—"Good gracious! This is the noisiest neighborhood I ever got into. Just hear those children screech!" Maid—"They're your own childers, mum." Mrs. de Mover—"Are they? How the little darling are enjoying themselves!"—Tit-Bits.

Called.

"I asked the audience to lend me their ears," said the verbose speaker. "But in three-quarters of an hour they were dozing." "I see," replied the financier. "They called the loan."

MINNESOTA HISTORICAL SOCIETY,

THE NORTHERN LIGHT

VOL. I. HOLT, MARSHALL COUNTY, MINNESOTA, FRIDAY, JANUARY 12, 1912. NO. 24.

"BOB" IS NO MORE

VETERAN SEA FIGHTER AND NAVAL AUTHORITY PASSES AWAY IN WASHINGTON.

ADMIRAL EVANS IS DEAD

Was Retired From Active Service After Taking the Fleet Around World.—Spent All His Life in Navy.

Washington, D. C. — Rear Admiral Robley D. Evans, known as "Fighting Bob" died suddenly at his home in this city. Acute indigestion ended the career of one of the most popular officers in the navy. He was ill only two hours. Admiral Evans was born 65 years ago in Floyd county, Virginia.

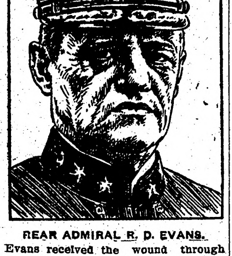
At his bedside at the time of his death were his wife, his daughter, Mrs. H. I. Sewall and his daughter-in-law, Mrs. Frank T. Evans, wife of the admiral's only son, a lieutenant-commander in the navy. The only other member of his immediate family who was not present was his daughter, Mrs. Marsh, wife of Captain Charles C. Marsh, commanding the armored cruiser North Carolina.

President Taft was one of the first to express his grief and condolence. He said:

"Admiral Evans was one of the most successful squadron commanders we have had in the navy for a long time. He was a rigid disciplinarian, of quick decision and admirably advised in the intricacy of the machinery of cruisers and battleships and skilled in drilling them. I am deeply affected to hear of his death."

Entered Navy When Boy.

Evans was a mere boy when he was sent to the naval academy at Annapolis. Before he had got far with his studies the Civil war broke out and he went to sea and was assigned to blockade duty. It was in one of the attacks made by the Northern navy upon the powerful defenses at Fort Fisher, North Carolina, that young Evans received the wound through the thigh that made him a cripple for life. He suffered three other wounds, but as soon as he was discharged from the hospital he again plunged into the fighting and served until the end of the Civil war with great credit.



REAR ADMIRAL R. D. EVANS.

As a full rear admiral, Evans was called upon to take the Atlantic fleet around the world. That brilliant achievement was the first world cruise of an armored fleet of that size and power. Sixteen battleships made the 25,000 miles cruise. By the time the fleet reached San Francisco the strain had become so severe that Admiral Evans was unable to leave his bed and it was necessary to relieve him from the command at that place.

Admiral Evans will be buried in the national cemetery at Arlington with full naval honors.

MANY ESCAPE FLAMES

One Bellboy Dies in Hotel Fire That Threatened Stock Yards.

Chicago, Ill. — The Transit house at the Union Stockyards, for 40 years one of the most widely known hotels in the west, was reduced to ruins by a fire which cost one life, for a time trapped many persons and for hours threatened the stockyards with a general conflagration.

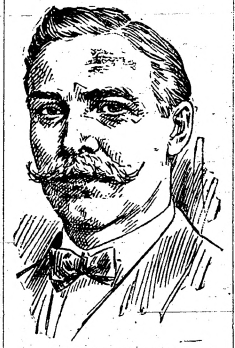
Peter Ritchie of Algonquin, Ill., a bellboy who worked nights and who was caught in his room asleep, was the sole victim.

The loss to the building and contents was estimated at $175,000 and neighboring buildings suffered damages of approximately $25,000. The fire started in the kitchen on the first floor adjoining the main dining room, which was crowded with guests.

Catholic Cathedral Burns.

Belleville, Illinois. — St. Peter's cathedral, one of the oldest Catholic edifices in southern Illinois, was destroyed by fire. The loss is $150,000.

TAGGERT IS "BURIED."



THOMAS TAGGART.

Indianapolis.—"Digging Tom Taggart's Political Grave," is a regular event at the biennial reorganization of the democratic state committee, but the popular, debonair, smiling, quiet Tom, who was national chairman in 1906, and the owner of the famous French Lick Springs and "Pluto" invariably comes out on top. At the reorganization here this week, Taggart's foes were completely routed and he placed Bernard C. Korbley, one of his old time lieutenants in the state chairmanship.

BY-PRODUCTS PROFITABLE

YIELD 97 PER CENT OF GAINS IN PACKING BUSINESS.

Bookkeeping System Shows That His Company Made But Little From Dressed Beef.

Chicago, Jan. 5.—By-products yield 97 per cent of the profits in the packing business, according to figures given by William D. Miles, formerly of the Armour Packing company of Kansas City, who concluded his testimony in the trial of the ten Chicago packers, charged with criminal violation of the Sherman law. He gave the company's net profits for 1899 as $202,875.18 in the dressed beef department, based on the slaughter of 204,820 animals.

An analysis of the figures given by the witness showed that the company made but three cents profit on dressed meat of each steer killed while the fat of each animal yielded a profit of 42 cents.

The profit on hides was 37 cents a head and 18 cents profit was obtained from the glue manufactured from the hoofs of each steer. The profit from the fat was 14 times that yielded by the dressed beef and the profit from the hides was nearly as much. The money made from glue in the hoofs was six times as much as that made from the sales of the fresh meat, according to Mr. Miles.

TRIBESMEN REPULSED

Fifty-five Killed in Engagement in Morocco.

Tangier, Mor.—A large force of revolting Moroccoan tribesmen attacked the town of Sefrou, a day's journey to the south of the capital. The garrison of the town which is under the command of French officers offered a gallant defense, beating off the fanatical tribesmen again and again, although they were far outnumbered.

The tribesmen continued to carry out wild rushes, but after eight hours fighting the little garrison finally succeeded in repulsing them and making them retreat to the desert, leaving fifty of their number dead on the field. The garrison lost five killed and fifteen wounded.

Major Bremend leaves Fez today with reinforcements from the sultan's army to assist the garrison of Sefrou army to go in pursuit of the rebel tribesmen.

CHINESE CELEBRATE

Frisco Chinks Hold Big Jollification in Honor of Republic.

San Francisco, Calif. — China's rejuvenation was observed in San Francisco by the residents of Chinatown. The main purpose was to do honor to the election of Dr. Sun Yat Sen to the presidency of the empire.

Three thousand queueless Chinamen took part in the parade that wound its way through the city's business district and the gaily hued silk robes of other days were replaced by the garb of the Occident.

The famous dragon had been relegated to seclusion and the tom toms and other music making instruments of old China were replaced by the strident brasses of American bands. The tunes were familiar to Occidental ears rag time and American national airs varying with each other.

PENSIONS BILL

BOTH HOUSES ARE DIVIDED AS TO GENERAL INCREASE MEASURES.

NELSON FAVORS CRIPPLES

No Agreement Seen on Election of Senators by Direct Vote.—Monetary Plan Is Ready.

Washington, D. C. — There are indications that the senate hopper will be full of pension bills of various kinds. The house and senate are divided as to the sweeping general increase bills that have been considered in both houses.

Senator Nelson has presented a bill intended to deal more liberally with soldiers who were maimed in war.

All hope of agreement between conferees of the two houses of congress on the resolution providing for election of United States senators by direct vote of the people has vanished.

The difference between the house and the senate conferees is based on a question of congressional supervision. As passed by the house the resolution placed the control of senatorial elections in the hands of the state legislatures. The senate amended the resolution, leaving the control in the hands of congress. This question has been debated by the conferees since the extra session and after many meetings representatives on each side have been unable to offer concessions which would be acceptable.

Senator Newlands of Nevada precipitated a lively debate when he attempted to force upon the senate his resolution providing for a legislative program. He sought ineffectually to have his resolution made the unfinished business with the result that the ensuing discussion took a wide range, entering the complicated field of the tariff. The report of the tariff board and the board itself also figured.

$50,000 Asked to Repulse Fly.

The sum of $50,000 to repulse the invasion of the Mediterranean fruit fly is asked in a bill introduced by Representative Hayes and Kahn of California. California, they say, already called an extra session of its legislature to prepare for war on it. The invasion is threatened from the Hawaiian islands, the fly's native habitat, and fruit brought from there carries the larvae which flourishes in the California climate.

No caucus on the tariff legislative program has been suggested yet and it is probable that there will be none until the wool schedule is ready.

Monetary Plan Is Ready.

The monetary commission's plan for a national reserve association when it goes to congress will provide for an organization so constituted that the financial institutions of New York—the seat of the money power in the United States—will control less than ten per cent of the total representation in the central association, although they possess fully 30 per cent of the banking capital.

The South, with about ten per cent of the banking resources of the country, would control 23 per cent of the representation in the reserve association. New England with 12 per cent of the banking capital would have eight per cent; the middle west with 25 per cent of the banking capital would have 30 per cent, and the far western and Pacific states with about 13 per cent of the banking capital would control approximately 25 per cent.

By preparing such a method of organization it is expected to remove the possibility of control of the reserve association from any single group or set of men.

Fifteen branch associations will be provided for—one in New England, two in the eastern states, four in the south, four in the middle west and four in the far west. To control the reserve association it would be necessary to control a majority of the branches. This is held to be impossible.

It has been proposed that ownership of bank stocks by other banks be prohibited, and that any bank a member of the reserve association be forbidden to own stocks in any other bank. It also has been proposed that when a bank acquires stock control in another bank it be prohibited from voting that stock in the main organization.

Reduces Duties on Steel and Iron.

Washington.—A bill making a general reduction of from 30 to 35 per cent on all steel and iron duties of the present Payne-Aldrich tariff law was agreed upon by a house ways and means sub-committee.

Washington, Jan. 4.—A busy season was in prospect for congress when it reconvened after the holiday recess.

The deliberations may run well into the summer, without a halt even for the presidential conventions.

With the Russian treaty abrogated, the pension bill and urgent deficiency appropriations out of the way in the house, tariff legislation is expected as soon as the ways and means committee can send out the revised schedules. The iron and steel schedule will come first and is expected within ten days. Tariff legislation, however, is by no means all that is in the legislative program.

Anti-trust, labor legislation and revision of the statutes relating to injunctions are to be pressed by the judiciary committee. Panama canal legislation is to be urged by the committee on interstate and foreign commerce, members of which have just returned from a three weeks' inspection of the canal zone. The rules committee has under consideration important matters, including proposed investigations of the "money trust," the shipping combine and the harvester trust. This committee contemplates recommending the appointment of a joint committee to conduct a broad inquiry into all three subjects.

Probes Will Be Resumed.

Investigation into the United States Steel corporation and the sugar situation will be resumed next week. The committee on foreign affairs will press legislation effecting treaties with foreign nations and the committees on expenditures in the various departments of the government which began investigations during the extra session, are planning to renew work with vigor for the purpose of recommending economies in administration.

Many other matters are to be considered, among the most important being the appropriations, which the democrats have in their control for the first time in 16 years. Legislation affecting the army and navy will also be considered.

Representative Underwood, chairman of the ways and means committee, has expressed the hope that congress can complete its work in June in time for the national convention, but there are many who seriously doubt it when they contemplate all that is scheduled to be done and the delays that will be encountered.

There is little before the senate just now, the upper body having to await initiative action of the house. The Sherwood pension bill, passed by the house, will come up for the senate's consideration first, in all probability. The bill pending for direct election of United States senators, passed in the house last summer, is still in conference. The conferees are to meet within a few days, but thus far no agreement has been reached.

Senate Has a Pension Bill.

Washington, D. C.—The senate pension committee will not attempt to amend the Sherwood pension bill which was passed in the house. An entirely new bill will be reported and Senator McCumber of North Dakota will offer it. The senate bill would carry an annual expenditure of not more than $30,000,000.

Washington, D. C. — One of the most important and significant international peace functions is to take place here early in February, when the committee on foreign affairs of the house will be the hosts at dinner to Secretary of State Knox and the members of the diplomatic corps. The date will be either the first or second Saturday in the month.

Secretary Knox has accepted the invitation extended to him by the house committee and invitations to the diplomats of all nations have had a generous response. The dinner will be given in the building of the Pan-American union.

The plan of the house foreign affairs committee is unprecedented. A secretary of state has not heretofore been the guest at dinner of the members of the house who constitute that committee nor have the diplomats of the world been invited to such an event.

Peace is to be the subject at the dinner.

ANOTHER ROYAL DUTCH BABY.

QUEEN WILHELMINA

Photograph Underwood & Underwood N.Y.

The Hague, Holland—It is stated in court circles that Queen Wilhelmina is expecting the birth of another child.

STATE BANKS MAKE A GAIN OF $10,000,000 IN A YEAR

The state banks of Minnesota have the great total of $136,626,558.55 in resources, according to the report of the superintendent of state banks, just issued, which summarizes the statements issued on call Dec. 5. There are 737 banks included. The fact that only 686 banks were included in the summary covering the statements on call of Nov. 10, 1910, which is the nearest comparison that can be made between this year and last, that many new banks were organized, and that total state banking capitalization rose from $13,288,500 to $14,084,000, accounts for a portion of the increase in resource figures, but the greater part is due to increased business of the state banks, greater deposits, and greater loans and discounts. The total resources are more than $10,000,000 in excess of the like total a year ago.

Time Deposits Increased.

Against this great sum the banks have $71,394,065.41 on time certificates, by far the most important single item in the report, and they have $34,624,069.84 on deposit subject to check. Conspicuous in the report of Kelsey S. Chase, the state superintendent, is an increase of $7,692,374.15 in the first item, a decrease of $4,215,144,70 in the second. The figures, in so far as their significance can be determined, reflect the putting into the banks by farmers of considerable sums of money received from the sale of crops, which money they do not expect to want for some time, and which they are therefore willing to leave on time certificates of deposit. The decrease in the sum total of deposits subject to check reflects the checking out by country merchants having such accounts, in payment of bills for merchandise purchased in advance of the harvest season or in some instances for holiday purchases.

More Cash Available.

The report is a good one in every way. It shows that in actual cash, small coin and bills of the various denominations, ready for immediate use, these banks have $5,302,178.16 in their tills. It is a satisfactory proportion of readily available cash, and compares with an amount of $4,958,151.44 last year.

The following table shows the condition of the state banks of Minnesota near the close of this year, and in 1910:

	686 Banks. Nov. 10, 1910.	737 Banks. Dec. 5, 1911.	Increase.	Decrease.
RESOURCES.
Loans and discounts	$94,901,027.24	$103,107,871.36	$8,206,844.12
Overdrafts	721,221.50	496,245.76		$224,975.74
Bonds and securities	3,232,496.61	3,993,347.44	760,850.83
Banking house, furniture and fixtures	3,707,133.48	4,171,813.97	464,680.49
Other real estate	1,143,950.73	1,156,663.85	12,713.12
Due from banks	16,654,598.23	17,511,173.69	856,575.46
Checks and cash items	765,122.11	748,057.96		17,064.15
Cash on hand	4,958,151.44	5,302,178.16	344,026.72
Other resources	160,770.82	139,206.36		21,564.46
Totals	$126,244,472.16	$136,626,558.55
LIABILITIES.
Capital stock	$13,228,500.00	$14,084,000.00	$855,500.00
Surplus	3,076,169.29	3,596,902.31	520,733.02
Undivided profits, net	1,466,194.64	1,930,654.04	464,459.40
Bills payable and notes rediscounted	603,314.00	775,328.17	172,014.17
rediscounted	15,427.02	7,280.61		8,146.41
Deposits subject to check	38,839,214.54	34,624,069.84		4,215,144.70
Demand certificates	900,182.45	672,307.58		227,874.87
Certified checks	49,929.49	30,850.30		19,079.19
Cashier's checks	1,650,012.01	1,731,978.39	81,966.38
Due to banks	2,554,661.61	2,956,303.16	401,641.55
Time certificates	63,701,691.26	71,394,065.41	7,692,374.15
Savings deposits		4,670,198.03	4,670,198.03
Other liabilities	159,175.85
		$136,626,558.55
Totals	126,244,472.16	152,620.71		6,555.14

AWAIT DITCH RULING

On Supreme Opinion Rests Progress in Northern Minnesota.

Thief River Falls.—The decision expected each week from the state Supreme Court on an appealed ditch case from Roseau county is being awaited here with interest. This case is to determine the constitutionality of the ditch law which makes the county wherein the ditch is located responsible for the ditch bonds, instead of making the benefited property alone the security.

A taxpayer in Roseau county claims that as a citizen of the county he cannot be held for ditch benefits which are only applicable locally and which do him no good. If the decision holds that the county cannot back the ditch bonds then the same will be hard to dispose of and will have to be sold at a discount. At the present time no trouble exists in disposing of ditch bonds, as the whole county is responsible for the debt.

A similar principle is involved in the Elwell road law, which seeks to tax only a certain property within a distance of three miles of the proposed highway to be constructed.

Greater drainage projects than any heretofore proposed or undertaken are being now considered in the northern part of the state. They will reclaim all the waste land in Northwestern Minnesota if carried to a successful issue and will assure the opening of at least 1,000,000 acres of rich wood and partly prairie land which at the present time is valueless for agricultural purposes. Any radical change in the present ditch law will prohibit this movement. It is admitted that the law as it now stands is somewhat expensive, but it digs the ditches and reclaims the land.

CROOKSTON LAYS PLANS.

Dedication of New Elk Building There Will Be Auspicious Event.

Crookston.—The elegant new Elks' building just completed by Crookston Lodge No. 342, B. P. O. E., will be formally thrown open on Wednesday evening, January 10.

A grand opening ball will be held then, at which Elks and their ladies and some invited guests will be present from all over the northwest, St. Paul, Minneapolis, Duluth, Fargo, Valley City, Grand Forks, Bemidji, Brainerd, Fergus Falls, St. Cloud, Devils Lake and other points.

The building is 70 by 120 and cost $60,000. The entire second floor is retained by the lodge and includes an elegant lodge room, reading room, ladies' reception parlors, dressing rooms, restaurant, property and wardrobe rooms, card rooms, billiard hall and an orchestra platform just in front of the balcony at the rear of the main hall.

NEW LAKE LINE INCORPORATED.

Flour City Steamship Company Backed by Minneapolis Capital.

Minneapolis. — The Flour City City Steamship company has been incorporated under the laws of Minnesota to carry Minneapolis flour from Duluth and Superior to Buffalo, N. Y. The organization, before it was incorporated, was known as the Flour City line. It is the result of a battle carried on for a long time by the Minneapolis Traffic association for cheaper lake rates for Minneapolis flour.

The company is incorporated with $300,000 capital. The officers are: President, F. E. Kenaston, president of the Minneapolis Threshing Machine company and president of the South Side State bank; first vice president, C. C. Webber, president of Deere & Webber company and president of the Minneapolis Traffic association; second vice president, James C. Andrews, manager of the Pillsbury Flour Mills company; secretary, Hugh E. White, second vice president of the Minneapolis Paper company and secretary of the Minneapolis Traffic association; treasurer, H. H. King, Sheffield-King Milling company. The officers also compose the board of directors.

The Flour City Steamship company is strictly a Minneapolis concern, owned and operated by Minneapolis men. The articles of incorporation announce that $153,000 of the stock shall be preferred and $147,000 common.

LOSS BY GRASSHOPPERS GIVEN.

State Entomologist Seys Insects Damaged Crops 10 to 20 Per Cent.

St. Paul.—In his annual report, made to Governor Eberhart, covering the year, F. L. Washburn, state entomologist, said grasshoppers were a serious pest and caused a loss of from 10 to 20 per cent in most parts of the state, especially in western section. Here there were a number of idle farms and these, Mr. Washburn said, were responsible.

Mr. Washburn had four men at work in the infected districts showing the farmers how to get rid of the pests. An arsenical dissolution was used with good results.

Other insect pests mentioned by Mr. Washburn were the saw fly, which attacked tamarack, the clover seed insect and the oak tree borer. The latter, Mr. Washburn said, did much damage throughout the state.

Washington County Pioneer Dies.

Hastings.—David Gallinger, 72 years old, died at his home in Denmark from heart trouble. He was a pioneer and respected resident of Washington county and a brother of J. H. Gallinger, United States Senator from New Hampshire. He is survived by a widow, two sons and a daughter.

The Left-Hand Wife

NARRATIVE OF CAPTAIN ADAMS

"Detective-Diplomat"

By H. M. EGBERT

(Copyright, by W. G. Chapman.)

IN my capacity as a courier of his majesty, King Edward VII., I was frequently summoned to the foreign office to meet Lord Lansdowne, or, after the accession of the liberal government, Sir Edward Grey, in order to receive instructions upon some delicate mission to be performed. Since my successful journey to Washington, which I have recorded previously, I had fallen into some favor with the king. I was not, therefore, taken wholly by surprise when one morning I received a telegram directing me to proceed to Buckingham palace without delay.

The sentry knew me and presented arms. The page at the door had evidently received instructions concerning me, for immediately that he saw me he led me into an ante-chamber half way down the Red Corridor; and I had not been there more than a couple of minutes before two gentlemen entered briskly—Sir Edward Grey and his majesty himself.

The English sovereign had always displayed an aversion for formalities of any kind when these interfere with the progress of business matters. I was aware of this, and assumed, therefore, those manners that a business man shows toward his superior, expecting to be relieved of my suspense by an immediate statement as to the cause of my summons. To my surprise, however, both the king and the foreign secretary appeared to hesitate for words.

It was the king who broke the awkward silence. "The mission upon which I desire you to go, Captain Adams," he said, "requires not only tact and secrecy—such as you have proved yourself to possess abundantly—but something more. In plain words, would you be willing to lie in order to avoid plunging a friendly nation into civil war? The nation is Belgium, and, if she became weakened, Germany would put into action certain designs of her own upon Antwerp which would embroil all Europe. It is therefore of the utmost consequence that our plan be carried into effect."

Well, I think a soldier should be readier to fight for his sovereign than to lie for him. I do not know quite what answer I stammered out upon the spur of the moment, but the look of distress upon his majesty's face was so genuinely sincere that I hastened to add that I offered my services unreservedly.

"Then let me tell you the facts in this case," said the king, seating himself and motioning to us to follow his example. "You have doubtless read in the newspapers some references to the condition of affairs at Brussels. Three days ago King Leopold died. Before his death the Baroness Vaughan managed to install herself in the palace. It was always supposed that she occupied no official relation in regard to him, being simply a woman upon whom the old monarch had been pleased to bestow his approval. It turns out that she is married to him and yet, legally indeed his wife.

"The morganatic marriage is credited with being the worst and yet the most tenacious royal custom in Europe. But this marriage is more than morganatic. It appears that, by virtue of certain well-defined provisions in the organic laws of Belgium, she is actually queen of Belgium—or at least can put forward a very substantial claim to so being. In consequence, as the king left no direct heirs, her eldest son is de facto claimant to the Belgian throne.

"No doubt in such a case the courts would declare against his candidacy, on grounds of public policy. But the situation is complicated by two facts. The first is that, owing to Leopold's unfortunate attitude toward Europe in the matter of the atrocities on the Belgian Congo, he has brought the monarchy into contempt among his subjects, so that his nephew, who would ordinarily succeed him, has little or no popular approval and prestige. The second is that the Socialist party has definitely pledged itself to support the claims of the baroness, in order to oppose the loyalists and to create a diversion for its own ends. A plot is afoot to proclaim the baroness regent in the name of her son the day after tomorrow. The army is half won over. And unless we can prevent her from accepting this nomination, Belgium will be rent with civil war."

"But, sir, how can I prevent this?" I stammered.

"There is only one way," replied his majesty. "Sir Edward Grey has suggested the project, and, fantastic though it appears, I am confident that it can succeed. You read how his majesty died?"

"Quite suddenly, just as his recovery seemed certain," I replied. "And the baroness was refused admittance to his bier."

"Precisely," replied the king. "Now, Captain Adams, picture the state of mind of a woman under such circumstances. Think of the suspicions that would arise in her mind. Had he really died? Were they sure he was dead? What if she were told that he was not dead, but, weary of ruling, wishing to retrieve his soul with his Maker and do penance for his atrocities before the end, he had secretly abdicated, secretly withdrawn to the monastery of St. Anselm, near the sand dunes of Ostend, where he frequently spent days at a time among the silent Trappist monks? What if she were shown a letter in his writing, bidding her follow him there? Would she leave at once, leave the palace, her son, his claims, at her husband's bidding?"

"She might," I answered.

"She would," the king answered. "It is the only way and, my dear Adams, since none can be trusted in the palace at Brussels, the task has fallen upon you. Here is the letter." He handed it to me. "This is an alleged communication from King Leopold to the Baroness Vaughan, written from the monastery of St. Anselm. It directs her to proceed there instantly, states that he was smuggled thither out of the palace, has abdicated, and wishes to spend his last years with her. Upon receipt of this she will leave the palace, relinquishing her claims, and before she can return the gates will have been locked against her and the Count of Flanders will sit upon the Belgian throne."

I rose. "I will do this, sir," I answered. "It is better that one woman should be deceived than that Europe should be plunged into a frightful war."

"I congratulate you upon your decision," said his majesty heartily. "Can you start immediately?"

"By the night boat from Harwich," I answered.

Nevertheless, I am free to confess that it was the least pleasant of all the missions which I had undertaken. To play one's part among monarchs and statesmen of Europe is one thing; it is quite another to lie to and deceive a woman, especially one who has just left the bedside of her dying husband. The cruel and heartless scheme which had been concocted oppressed me and filled me with disgust; yet I could not but recognize that, as on a more historic occasion, it was necessary that one should suffer for the sake of the people.

My sole papers were the letter which had been forged and a very brief card of identification, addressed to M. Vanderpoel, the secretary of the Count of Flanders, or, as he was now called, King Albert of Belgium. Upon arriving at Brussels I walked straight to the palace and presented my credentials. I found M. Vanderpoel to be at his wits' end. When we were installed in his handsome apartments on the ground floor he placed the situation before me.

"I know your plan," he said. "I hope it will succeed. You are the only person who can induce that woman to leave. King Albert has refused to set foot in the palace while she is here, and she is in possession of the two upper floors and all the right wing. It is in very truth a house divided against itself. Huysmans and Van Keek, the Socialist leaders, are in and out all day; the sentries refuse to obey my orders; if I called in troops to remove her I should only be precipitating the war that all anticipate."

"And the populace?" I asked.

"Devoted to her, of course. The natural romantic tendency of the mob." He smiled bitterly as he spoke. "Tomorrow at noon I have reason to know that half the garrison will march to the palace and acclaim her regent for her little son. I tell you, Captain Adams, unles we can get her away all will be lost."

Apartments had been assigned to me on the ground floor, and, having dined and changed my traveling attire, I went out to investigate. It was, indeed, one of the most singular situations that I had ever encountered. The new king's authority, centered entirely in that of M. Vanderpoel, was actually confined to the left wing and center of the ground floor. Here attendants in brown and silver livery kept watch on all who entered or went out. But on the right wing, and ascending and descending the magnificent staircase were men in the blue and gold uniforms of the Baroness Vaughan, wearing broad sashes of black in memory of the departed monarch. Clearly the first thing to be done was to obtain an interview with the baroness and present my letter.

While I was musing, wondering how I should pass the guards, an unexpected incident occurred. I saw a handsome woman in early middle life, robed in intense black, descend the staircase, sobbing spasmodically and pressing a black-edged handkerchief to her eyes. As she passed down, oblivious of the sentries and attendants, who stood at the salute, a younger woman ran down and attempted to induce her to return.

"Madame!" I heard her cry. "It is useless, useless. They have hearts of stone, of beasts, not men."

The woman in black shook herself free and passed onward. Suddenly I felt a hand pressed upon my chest.

"It is forbidden to pass the barrier of the hall," said a rough voice in my ear.

I had been so absorbed in the little spectacle that I had unconsciously trespassed into the territory of the blues and golds. An attendant in this uniform was speaking to me. I withdrew a step, still watching. This, then, must be the baroness. She descended the stairs and commenced to pass along the corridor toward me. A man in silver and brown emerged from a doorway and stood like a barrier before her.

"Madame cannot pass here," he said respectfully.

Immediately she burst into loud shrieks.

"Let me pass, animal!" she cried, and, raising her hand, she struck him a violent blow upon the cheek.

Instantly a dozen armed guards came running from a chamber on the opposite side of the corridor. They came on at the double, halted, grounded their arms, and lined up across the entrance. Through the half-open door of the room from which they had emerged I saw candles burning, and there was a heavy odor, as of spices, in the air. And suddenly I understood. The body of the late king still lay in the mortuary chamber; and it was to gain admittance to her husband's bier that this woman in black—none other than the Baroness Vaughan herself, wished to pass the attendants.

"Madame," said the man whose face she had struck, "it is by His Majesty King Albert's orders that you must not be admitted."

"King Albert!" she cried, mocking him. "The king is upstairs in my apartments. There is no Albert, but an impostor."

"Nevertheless, madam, it is not permissible to pass," said the attendant.

"Ah, but I must see him," she cried. "Let me in but for a single moment, that I may press my lips to his forehead and retire calmly. I will be calm. Let me in and I will give you gold—a gold piece for each of you!"

"It is not permissible," the man retorted.

The baroness became hysterical again.

"Let me pass!" she shrieked, flinging herself upon him. She scratched at his face with her nails, tearing furrows in the skin, and so violent was her impact that she had actually thrust her way well into the passage before the guards arrested her further progress. Then she stood like a tigress, panting and glaring, while behind her own attendants were on the verge of flinging themselves against the bayonets of the guards. It was a perilous moment. And the man whom she had attacked, wiping the blood from his face upon his sleeve, muttered monotonously:

"It is not permissible to pass! It is not permissible to pass!"

I stepped forward.

"If I might have but a few words with madam in the seclusion of her apartments, perhaps I could be of assistance," I said.

She swung round upon me, calmer now. "Who are you?" she cried.

"A well-wisher and sympathizer," I answered. "Madame, I am the bearer of a message——"

"I don't want to hear it!" she cried.

I approached her and whispered:

"It concerns His Majesty King Leopold—it is from him——"

"Why do you call him that?" she cried. "He is king no longer; he is dead. God rest his soul and pity me!"

"Will madame hear the message?" I replied indifferently.

She beckoned to an attendant in the blue and gold. "Conduct this gentleman to my apartment," she said haughtily. Then, turning upon her heels, she swung down the corridor again, and so up the staircase, but noiselessly. I think it must have touched the hearts of all, even of the opposing party.

Before going to the baroness's apartments, I went in to M. Vanderpoel and told him that I had secured an audience. I also engaged that, if all went well, the baroness would vacate the palace that same evening and leave Brussels. He was overjoyed at the success of my scheme.

"If you succeed, His Majesty King Albert will reward you liberally," he said. "Five hundred thousand crowns in gold——"

I stopped him. There are points of honor that some continentals do not easily understand; I do not barter in women's faith. Five minutes later I was in the baroness' apartment, and she was waiting for me with a tall, fiery-eyed man wearing a black, square beard and a red necktie.

"Stay, Monsieur Van Keek," she began, as he prepared to leave.

"What I have to say is for your ears alone, madame," I answered.

"M. Van Keek is my counsellor," she flashed out.

"Nevertheless I deal with madame alone," I retorted.

She wavered. "Go, then," she said. And, when he had left the apartment, she turned toward me. "Now, sir, be brief," she said. "If this is a trick——"

"It is no trick," I answered, and handed her the forged letter from her husband.

She took it from my hand, gazed superciliously at the address, and opened it. I turned away, unwilling to be a witness of her agitation. I was startled by a heavy sound. I swung round; the baroness lay unconscious upon the floor, and the letter fluttered from her right hand.

I sprang to a buffet, poured out a glass of water, and dashed it into her face. Presently I saw signs of animation returning. At last she sat up and burst into violent sobs.

She sprang to her feet and took me by the hand. "Follow me!" she cried. I suffered her to lead me into an inner chamber. Candles were burning before a small altar, set into the wall, beneath a rosewood crucifix. "Swear to me, here," she said, "that my husband is indeed alive!"

"I swear that he still lives," I answered. God help me afterward, I thought. I was not the one to turn back at such a moment. Yet I felt the pulses of my heart gather themselves as if for a mighty plunge, and then lurch forward, hammering and fluttering. I could hardly get my breath; the room swam round me. "I swear he is alive!" I repeated. Through the swimming mists I saw her eyes, like orbs of light, fastened upon mine. Then she released my hand.

"I believe you," she said more softly. A color had crept into her pale cheeks: a happy smile played about her lips. "Now I know why they would not let me into that room where I believed his body lay," she said. "They were not so heartless after all; they dared not, for their conspiracy would have been detected. And I shall see him," she went on, almost in a soliloquy. "When shall I see him? When will you take me there?"

"But, madame, you will not abandon Brussels and your followers?" I suggested. "They wait to proclaim your son the king of the Belgians. Will you desert them?"

"He tells me to," she answered, picking up the letter again and thrusting it into the bosom of her gown. "I must obey. What care I now? Why, he only thinks of abdication, because he is distressed in mind. I shall nurse him back to health and bring him in triumph to Brussels. When do we depart?—for this letter says that you must conduct me to meet my husband at St. Anselm Abbey."

I consulted my watch.

"A train leaves the Gare du Nord in two hours," I answered. "That will be just before midnight. At three in the morning we can reach Villebonne, on the coast. I will arrange to telegraph that a carriage and horses may be in waiting. In half an hour after we can be at the Abbey gates."

"And I shall see him," she murmured. "What is your name, monsieur?" I told her. She came nearer and took my hand in both of hers impulsively. "Captain Adams, when I give my confidence I give it implicitly," she said. "I have looked into your eyes and know that you have not lied. The king, my husband, lives. At eleven o'clock I will await you at the head of the back stairway. My attendants shall show you."

There came a tap at the door. "Monsieur Van Keek—" began a voice.

"Tell him to attend me tomorrow. I am tired and going to bed."

"But, madame—"

"Tell him to attend on me tomorrow," cried the baroness imperiously. The voice was silent. Madame had won. And I—at what a cost of honor!

I conferred at once with M. Vanderpoel. Dispatches were sent: in particular it was arranged that the train service back from St. Anselm and Villebonne should be discontinued for two days. Furthermore, on her arrival at the Abbey the monks were to contrive to hold her prisoner for that period, under some pretext which should appear convincing. That would enable Albert to be crowned king of Belgium. For my part, I planned to escape secretly as soon as I had delivered the baroness to the head of the monastery. I would not face the woman I had deceived.

At eleven o'clock we stole softly down the back stairway, emerging at the servants' entrance to the palace. Wrapped in a hood of some coarse material, the baroness no doubt passed muster for a maid. I carried two grips—our sole baggage. We went softly into the almost empty street and round to the front of the palace. There one ominous circumstance attended us. The great gates, which were closed upon the hour, shut softly in front of our eyes. We had come out, but there would be no going in without scrutiny. I felt the baroness clutch at my arm in agitation; a moment afterward and the incident was forgotten. We walked at a brisk pace through the streets until we reached the station. There we purchased tickets for our destination and, having obtained an empty carriage, fell to watching the scenery fly swiftly past us, each busy with the thoughts that came into the brain.

She was so trusting, so confiding, so changed from the imperious woman, from the virago who had attacked the guards in the corridor, that I was for flinging myself at her feet and confessing all. Nothing but an overwhelming sense of duty restrained me. And I was determined that, the task completed and the baroness deceived, I would hand in my resignation to the king and look for some other and more honest occupation than such as this.

The hours passed heavily. Now we had left cultivated lands far behind and entered upon the belt of bracken and pine trees that binds the shifting sands of the seashore and prevents their encroachment upon the land. Now even these had disappeared, and we were traveling among lonely sand dunes, the homes of thousands of hares, but bare of all other life. Only at rare intervals did some lonely hut appear, black among the silver sands. Then we heard the roaring of the ocean and knew that we were nearing our destination.

At last we stopped at Villebonne, a little seaside station now deserted until the summer influx should fill its streets and houses and draw new custom to its shuttered shops. At the platform a man with a carriage and horses awaited us, wearing the blue and gold livery of the baroness' household. She had a small country cottage hard by the monastery, whither the king had frequently withdrawn during the last years of his life, and, although this was a member of the police force who had been summoned thither by Vanderpoel, the baroness naturally suspected nothing but that he was one of her household. But the fellow, who apparently knew more than he had been told, was impudent.

"His majesty awaits you at the monastery, madame," he whispered, leering at her. Next moment I had struck him to the ground.

"Speak when you are spoken to, my man," I said angrily. I would be no party to this unnecessary torture. The fellow picked himself up doggedly and got upon the box. I placed the baroness inside and got upon the box beside the fellow, to insure that he played no tricks. He took the reins in his hands and the horses started off. When we had gone some distance he turned to me.

"Give me a hundred crowns or I betray the trick," he said surlily. "You cannot knock down a member of the police force of Brussels with impunity."

"I knocked you down for insulting the baroness with your lies," I said. I shook my fist under his nose. "If you dare to say a word to her, under any pretext, I will half murder you, you dog," I said. "Drive on."

He drove, very sullenly, the horses' feet making no sound as they plunged through the soft sand, the carriage lurching from side to side as it encountered the dunes, which, here and there, had half obliterated the road, which was seldom used by travelers. At last we saw the outlines of a large building in the distance, surrounded by a grove of poplars. It was the Abbey. In the east there was the faintest suggestion of the coming dawn. I looked at my watch. It was past five. Evidently I had miscalculated the time; our journey had taken longer than I expected.

At a further stage we halted. There was no possibility of progress across the drifts. The carriage was already up to its axles. The remaining half mile must be traversed afoot. I descended to acquaint the baroness with the facts. To my pleasure, she was not perturbed.

When she saw how near the monastery lay she uttered a little cry of delight and, taking my arm, started to pick her way along the narrow path between the encroaching sand dunes, the man in livery following doggedly behind. In this manner we came at last into the poplar grove. Anon we were hammering at the Abbey doors. After a while an old doorkeeper looked out on us through a wicket.

I would have spoken, but the baroness anticipated me.

"The king! Where is the king?" she cried. "Tell him I am here, the Baroness Vaughan—"

The trappist looked at her sourly and slammed the wicket in our faces. We heard his sandals clattering along the bare floors within. Then there was a long silence, and all at once I grew conscious that a voice was speaking. It was that of the man in livery.

When he began I advanced toward him, but the baroness waved me away.

"No, let him speak," she cried. "He speaks of my husband. Why do you wish to silence him? Why?"

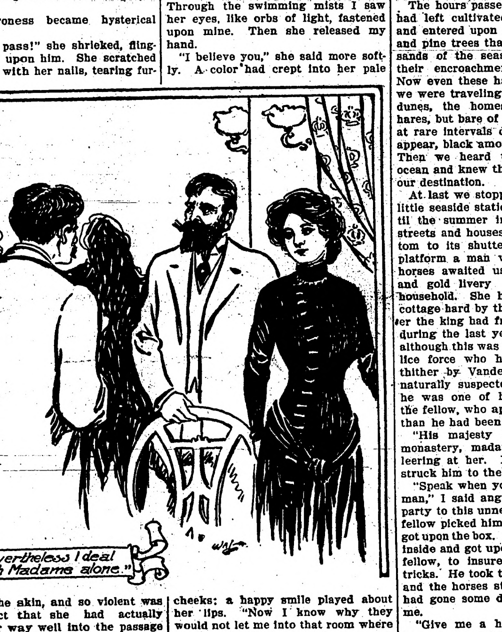
"He tells you lies," I cried. "Do not listen. At least wait—"

"And why should I wait, monsieur?" she cried haughtily. "No, speak, my man. He shall not injure you."

"It is a lie—all lies," I heard him cry. "The king is dead. They but lure you here with a forged letter to keep you prisoner until the impostor Albert is crowned in Brussels. You have fallen into a trap. Hasten back, throw yourself upon the mercy of the people, who love you. He lies—look into his face!"

I could not speak. My eyes sank before her accusing gaze; I covered them with my hands. Then I heard the monastery doors thrown back. And suddenly a cry came from the baroness's lips such as I had never heard before.

I looked up. There in the doorway stood the old king, Leopold himself, stretching out his arms toward her, a smile of affection on his hard old face. And we, who had thought him dead, and had lied him back to life again—why, our own lying plots had come true in every word, to our own confounding. For he had lived, and he had gone secretly to end his days at St. Anselm's Abbey, even as we had pretended.



"Nevertheless I deal with Madame alone."

BATTLE WITH AN ELEPHANT

American Tells of Thrilling Adventure in Africa With Maddened Beast.

Mr. Carl Akeley, an American naturalist and explorer, who is making a brief halt in London before returning to America after two years in Africa, "after elephants," on behalf of the American Museum of Natural History, New York, very nearly lost his life in his quest of specimens, says the New York Herald's correspondent.

It is indeed surprising that he is now alive to tell the tale of how a wild elephant attacked him and knocked him down, attempted to gore him and finally left him for dead.

"I was out with a few native boys to discover, if possible, the altitude to which elephants go," says Mr. Akeley. "We went to the top of Mount Kenya, about 17,000 feet, found a herd and followed it quietly for two days. They led us round the mountain till we lost sight of them in a bamboo forest. Suddenly, without warning, we heard something coming on us. Before I could seize a gun a great bull elephant dashed through the bamboos straight at me and struck me with its trunk.

"I was falling face downward, but luckily, as I fell, I had sufficient presence of mind to twist my body in the air and grab the lowering tusks in my hands. I went down flat on my back, but I managed to do the one thing needful to prevent the animal goring me—I forced my body between its tusks.

"I remember seeing the little angry eyes and hearing him making a noise between a hiss and a grunt as his tusks ground into the earth and his head came upon my chest, but that is all I do remember.

"Four and a half hours afterward, so I was told, I regained consciousness. The elephant had left me for dead; so had my boys, for it is against their religion to touch a dead body. But I heard them chattering a little distance away and shouted to them. Very astonished they came to me and sent off runners for help. I was almost done for, but not quite, and they rigged up a stretcher for me and carried me back to camp."

BRITISH PARADISE FOR TRAMP

Kind Old English Woman Who Never Refuses a Meal or Alms to the Poor.

An illuminating light is shed on the enormous influx of tramps into Cornwall in late years by the encouragement given to the tramping fraternity by a benevolent old lady of independent means who lives in a charming country residence near St. Austell, some mile and a half from the main road between St. Austell and Truro. Mrs. Stephens, the lady referred to, is eighty years of age, says a writer in the London Dispatch, and she calls her place abode "Hembal," but to "my dear men," as she affectionately refers to her vagrant visitors, her home is known as "The Retreat."

To those not familiar with the locality "Hembal" is difficult to find, for it stands back from a leafy country lane from which one has to walk 200 or 300 yards to gain the district road, and another mile and a half before reaching the main road, which the tramps traverse from union to union, so that "The Retreat" is not lighted upon by accident, but is found only by following elaborate directions.

Yet there are very few tramps "doing" the west country to whom the hospitality of "Lady" Stephens' retreat is not familiar.

It is several years ago since the fraternity "discovered" her. As the numbers of her visitors increased the old lady was at a loss to know how to accommodate them so that they should not be exposed to the weather while partaking of the food and drink which she readily gave to all who called upon her, in addition to the silver coin she gave them when they left to cheer them on the road. So she set apart an outhouse for them, furnished with a long table and forms, where they now take their meals.

SERIAL STORY

No Man's Land

A ROMANCE

By Louis Joseph Vance

Illustrations by Ray Walters

(Copyright, 1910, by Louis Joseph Vance.)

14

SYNOPSIS.

Garrett Coast, a young man of New York City, meets Douglas Blackstock, who invites him to a card party. He accepts, although he dislikes Blackstock, the reason being that both are in love with Katherine Thaxter. Coast fails to convince her that Blackstock is unworthy of her friendship. At the party Coast meets two named Dundas and Van Tuyl. There is a quarrel, and Blackstock shoots Van Tuyl dead. Coast struggles to wrest the weapon from him, thus the police discover them. Coast is arrested for murder. He is convicted, but as he begins his sentence, Dundas names Blackstock as the murderer and kills himself. Coast becomes free, but Blackstock has married Katherine Thaxter and fled. Coast purchases a yacht and while sailing sees a man thrown from a distant boat. He rescues the fellow who is named Appleyard. They arrive at a lonely island, known as No Man's Land. Coast starts out to explore the place and comes up some deserted buildings. He discovers a man dead. Upon going further and approaching a house he sees Katherine Thaxter, who explains that her husband, under the name of Black, has bought the island. He is blind, a wireless operator and has a station there. Coast informs her that her husband murdered Van Tuyl.

CHAPTER X.

Coast had not taken two-score paces along the path to the shore before the day was again darkened by a sudden and heavy thickening of the mists. That brightening glow, which a little time back he had hailed with hope as promise of early clearing, was in an instant wiped away. So deep became the gloom (to his fancy, as if the fog had been sprayed to saturation with a myriad infinitestimal atoms of ink) that though it was now high morning he found it hard to see the ground beneath his feet.

Then came the deluge. The heavens opened and drenched the earth with a flush of rain literally torrential. In a twinkling soaked to the skin, Coast gasped for breath and bent his head to a downpour which whipped him with a million cruel stinging lashes.

Perforce at pause for fear of losing his way, almost beaten thoughtless, lacking any shelter to fly to, he derived forlorn comfort of a sort from the very violence of the squall, which supplied its own assurance that it could not endure long. And briefly this proved itself: heralded by gradual lightening, the heavier clouds passed off; the initial fury exhausted itself.

For some distance the path led him a wandering way; but this he did not resent, any more than he really resented his soaking, which seemed but an inconsiderable annoyance to a mind preoccupied. His being was altogether obsessed and the process of his thoughts clouded by intense solicitude and pity for Katherine—coupled with doubts as to the wisdom of his course.

Was he justified in leaving her, though she begged and commanded him? He felt his understanding barried by the pro and con of the question like a ball in volley between two rackets. How could he leave her so? What else could he do? She rejected, discredited, dismissed him definitely, without appeal. She needed him—or somebody to whom she might turn for comfort and protection. Blackstock was not to be trusted: yet she loved him. If, as she protested, she were happy in some strange fashion passing Coast's comprehension, had he any right to step between her and her happiness, whatever the circumstances? If, as was the case, Blackstock had murdered a man in a moment of uncontrollable rage, had Coast any right to leave the woman at the mercy of a temper which might at any moment resume the complexion of homicidal mania? Yet would not his presence there, upon the island, work her more harm than good, were he to be discovered? . . .

He was, in the summing up, conscious of no choice of action: he could but go his ways. She desired it, and though his duty (he saw clearly) was to denounce Blackstock to the nearest authority, secure his arrest and imprisonment . . . he could not.

Thus in wretched communion with his heart, he came almost unawares a second time to the deserted fishing village, was abruptly conscious of shapes of buildings looming through the mists and driving rain on either hand. And with this recognition recurred the memory of the blind dog and the murdered man.

It was scant consolation that he no longer heard the howling of the dog. Perhaps it had abandoned its dead, perhaps he need no longer fear to meet the blank misery of those uncanny, sightless eyes, perhaps. . . .

Even as he warmed that hope, without warning something more cold and moist than his own flesh touched his hand. He jerked away with an uncontrollable shudder and a smothered exclamation of horror, only to realize that the animal had stolen up behind him and thrust its muzzle into his palm. He bent over and petted the dripping head, soothing the dog with muttered words for a moment or two. It snuggled close to him, whining, shivering.

"Poor boy!" he said gently. "So now, so, old fellow. . . ." Then, surprised: "Hello!" he exclaimed. "What's this?"

Beneath his hand the dog had stiffened suddenly, and now stood tense and bristling, a deep and angry growl rumbling in its throat.

Simultaneously, from some indeterminate point, he heard the sound of a man's voice, the words indistinguishable, accompanied by a grating noise like that made by metal encountering stone.

"Hello, hello!" he said softly, knitting his brows, as he stared down the roadway, in the direction that he must go, the direction from which the sounds seemed to come.

He could see nothing save vague shadows, formless, dim. . . .

A monotonous iteration of muffled sounds forced itself upon Coast's attention; a thud, a scraping noise, a soft plop; repeated endlessly. He strained his eyes against the veiling mists, seeming to discern a knot of shadows down the road. The sounds continued, to be interrupted, presently by high-pitched accents, apparently lifted in expostulation; but the intonation was foreign and the words unintelligible.

Then a voice said roughly: "Shut up and get on, will you? D'you want to keep me standing here all day?"

A grunt responded and the noises recommenced.

Coast gulped; his temples throbbed and there was a feeling of constriction in his throat. The voice had been Blackstock's. Coast now understood what was towards: they were digging a grave for the dead man.

Quite mechanically he turned aside and moved toward the row of houses on his right; they stood upon the edge of a shelving bank, he found, guessing the beach lay at the foot of this declivity. He descended ten feet or so, and, the dog at heel, skulked along in the rear of the buildings until he came to one which he judged to be about opposite the group of shadows. Then climbing again he entered the structure by its rear doorway—which owned no door.

Opening on the roadway were two windows, with broken and empty sashes, and a doorway with vacant hinges. Coast approached one of the windows. The dog, blundering helplessly about for a time, at length found the door and stopped astride the sill, sniffing the air, ears pricked forward, body vibrant with the behemence of its growls.

From a position near the window, Coast could see with passable distinctness the prone body and round it a gathering of four figures.

Blackstock stood some feet from the body, his feet well apart, his heavy shoulders inclined slightly forward, his hands clasped behind him. He was clothed in shining, shapeless black oilskins; the drooping brim of a sou'wester hid all his face save a red patch of cheek.

Near the dead man, two Chinamen toiled with spades, waist-deep in a trench. Their bodies, clothed in thin, saturated blue jackets, bent and recovered with nearly automatic precision as they delved and cast up the loam. Behind them a little mound of fresh-turned earth grew rapidly.

To one side a third Chinaman stood in attitude of imperturbable attention, apparently overseeing the job. He was a large man, largely builded: taller than Blackstock by at least three inches, with disproportionately long arms, large hands and feet. In that drearily illusive light he seemed a giant. His face, to Occidental eyes, was a yellow mask, brutally modeled but quite devoid of expression.

Presently he uttered a single word in Chinese, and the labor came to an end. He turned to Blackstock.

"All ready," he said brusquely, in clear English.

Blackstock inclined his head, as if doubtful. "How deep?" he asked.

"Four feet."

Blackstock appeared to reflect briefly. "Six would be better," he said. "However . . . kick him in and get him covered as quick as you can."

"All right," returned the Chinaman stolidly.

He issued instructions to his countrymen in a swift jumble of sharp syllables.

The pitiless brutality of the proceeding, together with the sickening thump of the body falling into the trench, affected Coast momentarily with a sort of vertigo, with something closely resembling nausea, and wrung from him an involuntary cry of horror. "Good God!" he said aloud—how loudly he soon realised.

Barely had the words been spoken when Blackstock, as if galvanized, whirled in Coast's direction. "Who's that?" he demanded sharply, his features darkly distorted with apprehension. "Who spoke?"

His fingers tore nervously at the fastening of his oilskin coat; he jerked it open and plunged one hand into a side pocket, as if seeking a weapon.

In surprise the tall Chinaman turned toward him. "Who spoke?" he iterated, as if he had failed to catch that cry which had unmistakably reached ears that seemed attuned to almost preternatural acuteness. "I heard nothing. . . ."

Quickly his gaze quested past Blackstock, raking their surroundings, and for an instant Coast could have sworn rested on his face, indefinite blur though it must have seemed viewed through the window at that remove. He fancied that the man's small black eyes narrowed, and he held his breath, fearing he was discovered and wondering whether or not to make a break for it by way of the back door. Then, to his unspeakable relief, the Chinaman's glance traveled on and again paused.

"It must have been the dog," he said, his precise English oddly asserting with his foreign intonation.

For the first time Coast became aware that the animal had left the doorway. A slight shift of position enabled him to discover it standing at pause halfway between the building and the group round the grave.

"The dog? No!" Blackstock ejaculated nervously. "Dogs don't speak—"

"It must have been the dog," the Chinaman repeated. "It is there—"

"Where?" Blackstock moved uneasily, seeming to sense a menace in the very proximity of the animal. "Keep it away from me, d'you hear? Don't let it come near me. Kick it off—kill the damn' brute if it comes this way!" His tones flatted strangely, as if he were in truth mortally afraid of the animal. "It hates me," he said in a mumble—"hates me!"

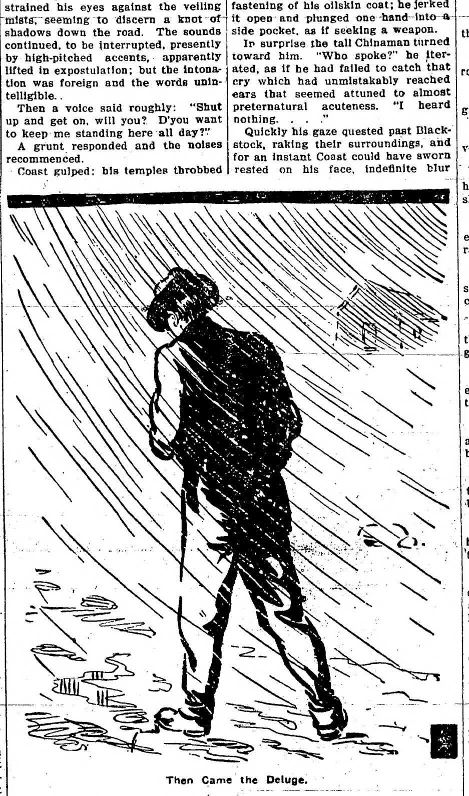
"Let me have your pistol," the Chinaman put in. "I think it means to attack us. Give me the pistol and I will drive it off."

As if to confirm the wisdom of this suggestion as well as Blackstock's fears, the dog at that instant interjected a sonorous and savage growl—which changed to a sharp yelp as a bit of rock, flung with surprising accuracy by one of the grave-diggers, landed on its sides. Confused and in pain—for the blow must have been a shrewd one—the blind animal swerved, scuttled off, disappeared.

At the same time Coast was aware that some object passed from Blackstock's hand to the Chinaman's. A second later a little tongue of reddish flame licked out from the mouth of a revolver held by the latter, and Coast heard its vicious bark coincident with a smart thud as the bullet lodged in a beam immediately behind him.

It might have been poor markmanship or fair; the Chinaman might have aimed at the dog.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)



Then Came the Deluge.

NOTES from MEADOWBROOK FARM

By William Pitt

Study your horse.

Salt is essential for cows.

Give young pigs comfortable quarters.

One breed is always better than a hodgepodge.

It is not always the largest hen that is the best layer.

If not moldy sorghum is an excellent root forage for all stock.

In order to have good-sized sheep grow them rapidly while young.

Poorly fed sheep will not produce very good wool, nor good mutton.

Equal parts of corn and oats are hard to excel as a grain feed for sheep.

During an extra cold spell of weather, add a little corn to the sow's grain ration.

Do not attempt to winter more sheep than can be done without crowding.

By the right kind of selection even the commonest dairy herd can be greatly improved.

Growing pigs should not be crowded into close, filthy quarters, exposed to vermin and disease.

The driver more than the horse is always more to blame for the animal's being vicious—if he ever is.

Leave a horse untied when hooked to a vehicle and he will be likely to be gone when you return for him.

You will appreciate the difference between low-headed and high-headed trees when you are picking the crop.

Decaying vegetables in storage under the living rooms in the cellar are apt to promote ill health in the household.

Keep both eyes open when near the gentle bull just the same as if he were ugly, or he may take you unawares.

The best dairy cow is the one that will convert the forage raised on the farm into the greatest amount of butter fat.

A dairy thermometer comes into good play any time of year, but is especially valuable to have around for winter churning.

The supply of vegetable matter is most easily maintained in the soil by the growing of green crops and by the application of manure.

Change in the conditions of dairying is driving many men out of the work because they would rather quit than improve their methods.

Horse breeding requires more capital, is more profitable if successful, and involves larger losses if not, than any other kind of stock breeding.

Moles in a garden prove an intolerable nuisance. While they may be trapped, the only sure way is to inject bisulphate of carbon into their runs.

Give the old sows, and those that have been pulled down by late litters, extra care and feed, so they will go through the winter in profitable condition.

A half teaspoonful of Paris green added to heavily sweetened water or molasses will kill the cut worms, but care should be taken that the fowls cannot get at it.

An old horseman says that the chief cause of colic in horses, or the cause of the largest per cent. of these cases, is brought through long abstinence from water.

Alfalfa meal is becoming a popular feed, but in Kansas, where they raise a lot of that kind of hay, farmers claim that the cow can do the grinding cheaper than it can be done at the mill.

When a man tells you that he has cows that he could milk all the year round if he would, see if you cannot gobble onto some of his stock. Cows that hold out are worth their weight in gold.

Farmers all know that cream is a perishable product, but some do not realize the importance of cooling from the separator, and failure to properly cool cream immediately after it comes from the separator is the principal cause for the poor quality.

Give salt regularly.

Cows should be kept out of the cold.

Rhubarb forcing may begin at any time.

Egg production isn't made with a one-grain diet.

A hen can't lay unless it has an abundance of feed.

The horse is the only animal which every farmer must have.

When you go into town, invest in a good thermometer for the dairy.

Keep the ensilage covered. Frozen ensilage is no advantage to stock.

A good horseman never trots a draft horse, even when he has no load.

Sometimes size in sheep is secured at the expense of activity and vitality.

It is a mistake to feed the pigs sour milk when they are learning to eat.

When at all indisposed, a turkey should be separated from the rest of the flock.

A lamb that is large and strong will stand weaning better, and also winter better.

Hogs are great lovers of warmth and must have it for their most economical growth.

Size, vigor and activity of both cockerels and pullets are essential to good breeding of fowls.

The most beautiful horse is not worth much unless he has good, sound limbs and feet.

Sunshine is life to all animals and all farm buildings should be so planned as to afford it.

Wheat middlings can nearly always be used to advantage in connection with corn in fattening hogs.

Rubbing the inside of the churn with dry salt after washing and wiping it helps in keeping it sweet.

When from any cause a horse is let stand idle in the stable his rations should be cut down to one-half.

We should let the heifers have what mixed hay they will consume and some of the cornstalks to pick over.

The individuality of each horse should be studied, and the feeds supplied to meet individual requirements.

The churn should be thoroughly scalded and cooled with clean, cold water before the cream is put into it.

While growing colts should be allowed to run out as long as the weather will permit them to be exposed to the storm.

If dusty hay is fed, sprinkle with water, and it will save the horse much annoyance, but better not feed it at all.

Do not feed the cows corn meal if you are feeding corn silage for there is as much corn in the silage as the cows should have.

Be sure there are no narrow doors for the ewes to crowd through. One jam may cause the lose of a lamb, or both ewe and lamb.

If the milker and cow are co-workers in the milking business the milker will have a larger pail full of good milk when he has finished.

An orchard that is poorly planted and carelessly managed the first year is often an irregular, unprofitable orchard for its entire existence.

The cow that has a liberal appetite and at the same time turns a large share of her feed into dairy products is the cow that brings the greatest profit.

Kindness is one of the cheapest and best rations you can feed to your stock. They relish it more than the most succulent thing you can put before them.

The old saying that "the eye of the shepherd fattens the flock" is as true now as ever. The good feeder loves to watch the animals eat after they get their feed.

The soil that is drained can be worked earlier not only because the farmer can get on the soil earlier, but because it is warmer than that which is soaked.

The ewe and lamb should be kept in a small pen by themselves until they both understand their relations without friction to themselves or the balance of the flock.

Where the bodies of fruit trees are covered with a whitewash composed of lime and soft soap with a little crude carbolic acid added, there is less danger of injury from rabbits, sunscald and insect pests that may attack the bark.

The dual purpose cow that gives about three gallons of milk a day, and produces a long-legged, slab-sided steer that takes three years to mature to make just passable beef, is not the animal suitable to run on the high-priced farm of the twentieth century.

$3.50 Recipe Free, For Weak Kidneys.

Relieves Urinary and Kidney Troubles, Backache, Straining Swelling, Etc.

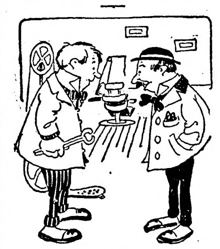
Stops Pain in the Bladder, Kidneys and Back.

Wouldn't it be nice within a week or so to begin to say good-bye forever to the scalding, dribbling, straining, or too frequent passage of urine; the forehead and the back-of-the-head aches; the stitches and pains in the back; the growing muscle weakness; spots before the eyes; yellow skin; sluggish bowels; swollen eyelids or ankles; leg cramps; unnatural short breath; sleeplessness and the despondency?

I have a recipe for these troubles that you can depend on, and if you want to make a quick recovery, you ought to write and get a copy of it. Many a doctor would charge you $3.50 just for writing this prescription, but I have it and will be glad to send it to you entirely free. Just drop me a line like this: Dr. A. E. Robinson, K-2075 Luck Building, Detroit, Mich., and I will send it by return mail in a plain envelope. As you will see when you get it, this recipe contains only pure, harmless remedies, but it has great healing and pain-conquering power.

It will quickly show its power once you use it, so I think you had better see what it is without delay. I will send you a copy free—you can use it and cure yourself at home.

WANTED HER TO SUFFER.



Mr. Henpeck—Do you pull teeth without pain?

Dentist—Oh! yes, sir.

Mr. Henpeck—Then you won't do. My mother-in-law wants to get seven extracted, so I'll have to take her elsewhere.

THE SAFE LAXATIVE FOR ELDERLY PEOPLE

Most elderly people are more or less troubled with a chronic, persistent constipation, due largely to lack of sufficient exercise. They experience difficulty in digesting even light food, with a consequent belching of stomach gases, drowsiness after eating, headache and a feeling of lassitude and general discomfort.

Doctors advise against cathartics and violent purgatives of every kind, recommending a mild, gentle laxative tonic, like Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, to effect relief without disturbing the entire system.

Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is the perfect laxative, easy in action, certain in effect and, withal, pleasant to the taste. It possesses tonic properties that strengthen the stomach, liver and bowels and is a remedy that has been for years the great standby in thousands of families, and should be in every family medicine chest. It is equally as valuable for children as for older people.

Druggists everywhere sell Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin in 50c and $1.00 bottles. If you have never tried it send your name and address to Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 201 Washington St., Monticello, Ill., and he will be very glad to send a sample bottle for trial.

Felt He Had Known the Worst.

Pat O'Shaunessy had been told by the doctor that he could live but a few hours, and his wife and assembled relatives and friends asked him whether there was one last wish he would like to have gratified? "There is," said Pat. "I'd like to hear the village band play once again." Accordingly the village band gathered. When at last it had played, "Say Au Revoir But Not Good-by," and had taken its own departure, Mrs. O'Shaunessy, kneeling at her husband's bedside, asked: "Can ye die aisy now, Pat?" "Yis," replied Pat. "I can die aisy now. Hell has nothing worse than that."

Important to Mothers

Examine carefully every bottle of CASTORIA, a safe and sure remedy for infants and children, and see that it

Bears the Signature of Chas H. Fletcher

In Use For Over 30 Years.

Children Cry for Fletcher's Castoria

Guarding the Money.

"Why was he guarded by the police?"

"They were afraid somebody else would get his money."

CREAM OF RYE

For health and energy eat it for breakfast. Reduces cost of living. Free Silver Spoon in every package. Ask your grocer for a package.

A silly man is easily convinced that he possesses more wisdom in one day than the late Mr. Solomon did in all his years.

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets first put up 40 years ago. They regulate and invigorate stomach, liver and bowels. Sugar-coated tiny granules.

"Lost—A golden hour, set to 60 diamond minutes. There is no reward, for it is gone forever."—Beecher.

ONLY ONE "BROMO QUININE." That is LAXATIVE BROMO QUININE. Look for the signature of E. W. GROVE. Used the World over to Cure a Cold in One Day. 25c.

Some women never take anything seriously, not even their husbands.

The Northern Light
CHAS. W. LATTA
Editor and Publisher.

Published every Friday at Holt, Marshall County, Minnesota.

Subscription Price: $1.00 per year, strictly in advance.

Entered as second-class matter Sept-22, 1911, at the post office at Holt, Minnesota, under the act of March 3, 1879.

Be a booster—not a knocker.

President Taft says that nothing but death can keep him from making the race for renomination. The trouble is he dont seem to know when he is dead.

Baltimore is to have the democratic national convention and William J. Bryan seems to favor the nomination of Woodrow Wilson for president. This year the geographical location of the convention may have more influence on the nomination than the oratory of the peerless leader will. Considering the said location and oratory as working harmoniously, it is probable that the mule will not be driven by a man from Missouri this year.

Near Middle River a few days ago there was a dance at which a jug of whiskey played a leading part. It led to several things and was used as a handy weapon in a scrap between a couple of its friends, and used one of them so badly that a doctor had to be called in to repair his countenance. It is hard to understand why the girls will tolerate drunkenness at dances. They should make some effort against such vile and unmanly practices. The girl who will tolerate a drunken partner at a dance is liable to have to tolerate one for life and cannot expect to find much happiness this side of the grave.

Notice of Contest.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
United States Land Office
Crookston, Minnesota. December 6, 1911

To Brodie Watson, of Grygla, Minnesota, Contestee:

You are hereby notified that Tidman L. [illegible], who gives Bemidji, Minnesota, as his post-office address, did on November 22, 1911 file in his office his duly corroborated application to contest and secure the cancellation of your homestead, Entry No. , Serial No. 05149 made March 22, 1910, for W½ SW¼, S½ NW¼, Section 8, Township 155 N., Range 39 W., 5th Principal Meridian, and as grounds for his contest he alleges that said Brodie Watson has wholly abandoned said land for more than six months next prior to this contest and that he has never improved said land in any respect and never cultivated the same as required by law.

You are, therefore, further notified that the said allegations will be taken by this office as having been confessed by you, and your said entry will be canceled thereunder without your further right to be heard therein, either before this office or on appeal, if you fail to file in this office within twenty days after the FOURTH publication of this notice, as shown below, your answer, under oath, specifically meeting and responding to these allegations of contest, or if you fail within that time to file in this office due proof that you have served a copy of your answer on the said contestant either in person or by registered mail. If this service is made by the delivery of a copy of your answer to the contestant in person, proof of such service must be either the said contestant's written acknowledgement of his receipt of the copy, showing the date of its receipt, or the affidavit of the person by whom the delivery was made stating when and where the copy was delivered; if made by registered mail, proof of such service must consist of the affidavit of the person by whom the copy was mailed stating when and the postoffice to which it was mailed, and this affidavit must be accompanied by the postmaster's receipt for the letter.

You should state in your answer the name of the post office to which you desire future notices to be sent to you.

JOHN PETTERSON, Receiver.

VAULE & MURPHY
Attorneys for Contestant.

Date of first publication, December 15, 1911.
Date of second publication, December 22, 1911
Date of third publication, December 29, 1911.
Date of fourth publication, January 5, 1912.

Show all this week. 10 and 20cts.

Enamelled kitchenware at Kolden's. Triple coated, white lined and the best bargains you ever knew, 10 and 69 cents only, while they last.

The Clifton Drug Co. are in the Woodman's Hall all of next week with a series of entertainments that have been giving universal satisfaction all over the country.

Subscribe for The Northern Light. Only $1.00 per year.

Greatest Closing Out Sale

Of Winter Goods ever held in Pennington County at the

E & E CLOTHING STORE
Thief River Falls, Minn.

The Greatest and Most Sensational Sale that the buying public has ever known.

The mammoth Stock of Clothing, Furnishing Goods, Hats, Shoes, etc., for Men and Boys will be closed out regardless of cost. Our reason for this Sale is, we never carry Merchandise over from one season to another. We have, therefore, turned our entire stock over to the Kelly Sales people, known all over the country as the Greatert Bargain Givers.

We can truthfully say it will pay you to come for miles and miles to attend this Great Closing Out Sale which will commence SATURDAY, JANUARY 13th, at 9 a. m. and will continue for 13 Days Only, ending

SATURDAY, JANUARY 27th, at 10 P. M.

The Kelly Sales System Co.
Minneapolis, Winnipeg, Chicago.
Representing
I. L. ERICKSON & SON
Thief River Falls, - - Minnesota.

Baffling Boston.

After ten days we were able to find our way around Boston, but not across it. If you start to walk out in Boston you always come back to the place from which you started unless you try to; then it is almost impossible.

The transportation is fine, after you have committed it to memory. The hospitality of Boston we shall always remember, but not its street car directions. A Boston street car acts like a broncho. You never know whether it is going through the air like a bird, under the ground like a mole or beneath the bay like a fish. The motorman seems to make up his mind as he goes along.

The Boston language is sibilant and stylish. The Boston people love the soft boiled "r." Out west folks pronounce "r" a good deal like a dog chewing a bone. In Boston they deal as gently with it as they can, as if it were not to blame for being in the language, although it doesn't belong there.—Horseshoers' Journal.

The Old Oaken Bucket's Gone.

One day's excursion out of Boston is southward through the birthplace and ancestral home of the brilliant essayist Quincy to the boyhood haunts of Woodworth and the scenes which inspired his sweetest lyric. In Scituate, by the village of Greenbush, we find the well of "The Old Oaken Bucket" remaining at the site of the dwelling where the poet was born and reared. Most of the "loved scenes" of his childhood—the wide spreading pond, the venerable orchard, the flower-decked meadow, the deep tangled wildwood—may still be seen, little changed since he knew them, but the rock of the cataract has been removed and the cascade itself somewhat altered by the widening of the highway; the "cot of his fathers" has given place to a modern farmhouse, and the "moss covered bucket that hung in the well" has been supplanted by a convenient but unpoetical pump.—Theodore E. Wells, "Literary Shrines."

A Poor Robin Almanac.

One of the scarcest and most amusing of the early English almanacs is entitled "Poor Robin, an Almanack of the Old and New Fashion * * * containing a twofold Kalendar—viz. the Julian, English or Old Account, and the Roundheads Fanatics paper-scull'd or Maggotheaded New Account," etc. It is a pamphlet of sixteen pages and is dated London, 1650.

The dedication is "to the world" and in it Poor Robin says: "With Pipers, Ballad-singers and Fiddlers it is a merry World; with Prisoners, Sick-people and Money-less persons it is a sad World; with a Soldier it is a hard World; with a Divine a wicked World; with a Lawyer a contentious World; with a Courtier a slippery World; with most men a mad World, and with all men a bad World." Some of the earlier of these "Poor Robin Almanacks" have been attributed to Robert Herrick.

She Learned the Lesson.

A Baltimore lawyer had an office boy who was given to telling in other offices what happened in that of his chief. The lawyer found it necessary to discharge him, but, thinking to keep him from a similar fault in the future, he counseled the boy wisely on his departure.

"Willie, you must never hear anything that is said in the office," he said. "Do what you are told to do, but turn a deaf ear to conversation that does not include you."

A happy inspiration! He would see that the stenographer learned the same lesson in passing, so, turning to her, he said:

"Miss Brown, did you hear what I said to Willie?"

"No, sir," she returned promptly.—Lippincott's.

Long Sessions In the Commons.

A recent nineteen hours' sitting of the house of commons created a sensation. But it is almost a trifle compared with what happened in the spacious days before the closure was introduced. There was the Irish "night" of July 31 and Aug. 1, 1877, when the chaplain, arriving to read prayers at noon for the Wednesday sitting, found the Tuesday sitting still in progress. "Ah," said Erskine May to him, "we are past praying for." But the record was achieved by the forty-one hours sitting of Jan. 31 to Feb. 2, 1881.

Uses of Time.

"I saved ten minutes a day at lunch for twenty years."

"What of it?"

"Oh, it was well that I saved all this time, for now I spend two hours daily in the anteroom of a dyspepsia specialist."—Seattle Post-Intelligencer.

Striving Vainly to Please.

"I suppose those garden seeds I sent saved you quite a little money," said the affable statesman.

"No," replied Mr. Growcher; "I hadn't the heart to waste 'em, and the result is that I'm in debt for garden implements."—Washington Star.

Afraid.

"Yes. I proposed, but she said I'd have to ask her mother first."

"And did you?"

"No: I was afraid the mother might accept me."—Judge.

He Kept Quiet.

Householder—Here, drop that coat and clear out! Burglar—You be quiet or I'll wake your wife and give her this letter I found in your pocket.—New York Mail.

He who brings ridicule to bear against truth finds in his hand a blade without a hilt.—Landor.

The Lotus Flower.

Poets and novelists alike have given mythical texture and color to the lotus. The elder Dumas spoke of a lotus flower "pure white and with petals as delicate as fine muslin." Nor did the ancients treat the matter with more truth. Herodotus spoke of the lotus as of a plant which habitually descended below the surface of the water at sunset to return to view only with the reappearance of the sun. The lotus known to modern man goes below the surface of the water, like all nymphaeas, when its beauty and its freshness have passed and when the time has come to ripen its seed pod. Then by the law of life it closes its corolla and goes away from the air and the sunshine down into the water to prepare for the future of its family. It goes at the time when the sun sets, but it does not reappear. When it goes down as an individual it is gone forever. The petals described by Dumas as being "as white as the snows of Himalaya" are not pure white, nor can anything be called with justice "as white as the lotus flower," because a lotus flower may be red or blue as well as white.—Harper's.

A Porterhouse Steak.

According to the Encyclopaedia Britannica, the word "steak" is apparently derived from Icelandic "steik," used in the same sense as the English word, "which meant properly roasted meat, from steikja, to roast—that is, placed on a stick or peg of wood before the fire (compare Swedish, stek; Danish, steg, roast meat)."

The same authority says: "A 'porterhouse' steak is a choice cut of steak from the loin, so named, apparently, first in New York from a well known 'porter house' and eating house where chops, steaks, etc., and porter or stout were served, at which these steaks were a specialty.

"A steak grilled between two other steaks, which are not served after the cooking is finished, is also sometimes called a 'porterhouse' steak."

Not in these days of high cost meat would such a practice as the latter be very generally followed, however.—National Provisioner.

Lord Brougham's Dream.

Lord Brougham was one of the most stubborn believers in the "common sense" explanation of ghostly appearances as dreams. At Edinburgh university he and an intimate friend drew up an agreement written with their blood that whichever of them died first should appear to the survivor. Years passed, the friend was in India, and Brougham had almost forgotten his existence. Arriving late one night at an inn in Sweden, Brougham had a hot bath, and was going to get out of it when he looked toward the chair on which he had left his clothes and saw his friend sitting on it. Brougham seems then to have fainted. On getting home he received a letter announcing that the other had died in India at the very time. Yet this incident, which most people would put down to telepathy, at least, was dismissed by Brougham as a mere dream and pure coincidence.

A Rogue Elephant.

In "Big Game Shooting In Upper Burma" Major Evans tells of a famous rogue elephant that had for some time terrorized the jungle and that had finally been laid low by a bullet from the major's rifle. The author says: "He measured nine feet seven inches at the shoulders and had but one tusk. That, however, was a beauty and weighed close to forty pounds. The other tusk had been broken off at the root, probably in a fight. I took a bunch of maggots as big as a football out of the broken tusk. The poor beast must have endured agonies similar to a toothache. No wonder that he had turned rogue! I believe that nearly every rogue elephant is suffering from some physical hurt or disease that causes him constant pain and turns him from an inoffensive beast into a savage man hunter."

Wasted Wit.

"Crude country, America," the visiting Englishman condescended to say.

"As how?" we ventured to ask.

"I see by this mawning's paper that a man was held up and robbed heah yestehday in broad daylight. Such things nevah could happen in London."

"No, of course not. You never have any broad daylight in London."

We thought we had made quite a hit with this bonmot, but the Briton said:

"Oh, hang it, you miss the point, y' know!"—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Heard In the Lobby.

"I am very much interested in the passing show," said Mr. Pinchpenny insinuatingly.

"Well," replied the man in the box office, "this isn't any passing show. This is a pay as you enter show."—Exchange.

A Perfect Likeness.

Mrs. S.—Oh, what a beautiful face! Who is it? Painter—That, madam, is your daughter. Mrs. S.—What a perfect likeness! I think you must paint me!

In Training.

Clinton—Can you get in at nights without waking your wife? Clubman—No, but I expect to be able to soon. I'm taking lessons of a burglar.

Saved.

She—So your wife didn't detect that you had been drinking? He—No. The story I told took my own breath away.—Variety Life.

Most men postpone happiness until the future, and the future never comes.—Epicurus.

V-I-V-O
The Best there is in Flour.

Our Elevator and Lumber Yard are always prepared to give the most satisfactory service.

Hanson & Barzen Milling Co.,
OSCAR HANSON, Agent, - - HOLT, MINN.

AXEL NELSON
General Blacksmith Work
HOLT, - - MINN.

All work done Right, at Reasonable Prices.

HOUSEWIVES

Do you want to know about a wonderful new time, health and money-saving kitchen convenience?

Then you should see the complete line of "1892" Pure Spun Aluminum Cooking Utensils now on exhibition at your dealers.

This ware is guaranteed by the makers for 25 years. It is absolutely pure, wholesome and thoroughly hygienic, will not crack, scale, peel, break, rust, tarnish, scorch or burn.

PURE
ILLINOIS 1892 ALUMINUM
THE ORIGINAL
TRADE MARK

It is light weight, easy to handle and easy to clean; makes kitchen work a delight instead of drudgery; saves your money, time, fuel; protects your health against metal poisoning and serious troubles resulting from chipping of small particles into the food, which is one of the dangers from the use of the old style enameled wares.

You buy patent carpet sweepers, egg-beaters, dishwashers, clothes-wringers and many other time and labor saving conveniences, but there is nothing that will prove a greater practical household blessing than the "1892" Pure Spun Aluminum Ware.

Lose no time in seeing for yourself what it will do. Your money back if this ware fails to do what is claimed for it.

S. S. KOLDEN & Co.

THE DULUTH HERALD
BEATS THE CENSUS THREE TO ONE

During the past ten years the population of Duluth increased 48 per cent., St. Paul 32 per cent., and Minneapolis 49 per cent. In the Same Period the Circulation of The Duluth Herald

INCREASED 150 PER CENT.

This marvelous expansion—so much greater than that of the surrounding territory—is due solely to the merits of The Herald. The Herald has never used any kind of premium, contest, or price reduction to gain subscribers but prints each day the very best NEWSPAPER in the Northwest. Its editorial page is thoroughly independent and its news columns cover every feature of the world's daily history.

Send for sample copy and get The Herald habit.

THREE MONTHS FOR $1.00—Mailed Daily.

ADDRESS HERALD CIRCULATION DEPT., DULUTH, MINN.

Local Items

The Local Market.

(Grain prices furnished by Hanson & Barzen Milling Co. at close of business every Thursday.)

Flax	$1.95
Wheat	.95
Barley d	.88
Oats	.39
Rye	.77

Bring us the news.

Be a booster—not a knocker.

When in town call at this office and let's get acquainted.

SHOW ALL WEEK.

Rev. M. B. Ordahl will conduct services in the Holt church Sunday morning, the 21st inst.

Read the big announcement of the E. & E. Clothing Co., of Thief River Falls, elsewhere in this issue.

Ernest Paulick returned Saturday last from Crosby, Minn., where he had been working in the mines for several weeks past.

The Ladies Aid will meet at the home of Mrs. A. C. Jahr in East Valley on Wednesday, the 17th inst. All are invited to attend.

Andrew Bjerk was one of the few who braved the rigors of the coldest day on record and came to town on Thursday to attend to some business mattees.

Nels Gudvangen drove in from his home in Agder yesterday and admits that the exercise he got keeping up with his thorobred steers was hardly sufficient to make him shed his overcoat.

Frank Freund, of Red Lake Falls, gave a motion picture show followed by a dance, at the Woodman hall on Wednesday evening. There was a very fair attendance and the proper sort of a good time.

C. G. Mugg, O. S., the Grand Forks Eye man, will refit any unsatisfactory glass that is not over six months old. He will do this to show his greater skill. He will be in Holt Wednesday afternoon, January 24th.

T. B. Folden spent the first days of the week at Warren attending the annual meeting of the Marshall County Farmers' Mutual Fire Insurance Co. This company is in a very prosperous condition and has insurance rates down to a very low mark at the present time.

With the thermometer registering 52 degrees below zero the editor of this great family necessity drove in ten miles yesterday morning to get out this issue of the paper. He got through without freezing, but gives his solemn promise that he will not repeat the trip under such circumstances.

To Begin Work This Spring

Advices from Duluth yesterday are to the effect that work is to be commenced this spring on the construction of the new line of railroad betwen International Falls and Thief River Falls.

It is stated that the project is to be carried out by the Backus-Brooks Lumber Co., who own and control extensive railroad, lumber and paper milling industries near International Falls, for the purpose of establishing a direct outlet for their products to the west. The report also states that the road will closely follow the line of the survey already made, and intimates that bonds to the amount of $3,000,000 are now being floated to finance the undertaking.

Show all this week. 10 and 20cts.

Notice of Annual Meeting

The annual meeting of the stockholders of the Farmers' Co-Operative Creamery Co., of Holt, Minn., will be held at the creamery in Holt on Saturday, January 27, 1912, at 1 o'clock P. M. for the purpose of electing officers for the ensuing year and to transact such other business as may come before the meeting.

J. A. SORUM, Secretary.

The Clifton Drug Co. are in the Woodman's Hall all of next week with a series of entertainments that have been giving universal satisfaction all over the country.

Word was received here recently that Mrs. Henry Peterson, of Winnipeg, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Martin T. Strom, of this place, has lost her power of speech as the result of a recent illness. With the exception of her loss of speech her health has been completely restored.

The practise of giving away copies of this paper free will be discontinued after February 1st. If anybody who is not a subscriber wants a copy any time after that date they will be charged 5 cents for it. We have to make a living, too, and cannot be expected to give away our products any more than any other business man or farmer can.

Charlie Martell came in from his home near Rollis the first of the week on one of his coal-hauling expeditions. A badly frozen nose necessitated the amputation of his luxuriant mustache. He ought to have his name changed to Murphy as the de-whiskering operation has left him with a mighty goodnatured cast of countenance that is more Irish than French.

M. A. NELSON, M. D.
PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON
Office over Holt Merc. Co's store
HOLT, MINNESOTA.

SPECIALS

For next week, ending Saturday, Jan. 20.

We want to close out our stock of Men's Winter Shirts, all wool and mixed, and our Men's, Youth's and Misses' Sweater Coats at 10 per cent off

Also all our Winter Caps, regular prices $1.25 to 1.50, at only 89c each.

HOLT MERCANTILE Co.,
"The Big New Store"

Thursday Made Cold Record

Thursday, January 11, 1912, has established a new cold weather record for the northwest. In this particular locality the best thermometers recorded 50 to 52 degrees below zero and the reports from other points indicate that these figures are very close to being correct, though perhaps a few degrees colder than a government thermometer would indicate.

Official records show the figures at various points, all figures below zero:

Minneapolis, 30; Duluth, 34; Devils Lake, 40; Grand Forks, 44; Moorhead, 36; Pierre. S. D., 22, Winnipeg, 42; Medicine Hat, 44.

The record for Alberta on Wednesday was 65 below.

Dont be STINGY come to the show

Died of Blood Poisoning

Mathilde Nordmark, aged nearly 61 years, died of blood poisoning on December 28th; after a brief illness, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Nels Gudvangen, in Agder township. The funeral was held on Tuesday, January 2nd. Deceased was born at Betna, Sodermaland, Sweden, on March 13, 1851, was married in 1886 and with her husband came to this country in 1893. For some years they lived near Grafton, N. D. and then moved to a homestead in Agder township. Her husband and daughter, Mrs. Gudvangen are the surviving members of her family and they have the sincere sympathy of all in their great loss.

Notice to Contractors.

Sealed bids will be received by the County Auditors of Marshall and Beltrami Counties up to 2 o'clock P. M. of February 2nd. 1912, at Warren, Minnesota, for installing culverts (by separate townships or the whole work) on Judicial Ditch No. 11. Bidders to state the price per foot. Specifications to be obtained of W. R. Hoag, Engineer, Rollis, Minn. Sealed bids will also be received for hauling eleven tons of sectional cast iron culverts Middle River to the center of section 19, town 157, range 40. Bidders to state tne price per ton for hauling.

All bidders will be required to give a satisfactory bond for the amount of the contract to be approved by the said Auditors.

All bids must be accompanied by a certified check on a State or National Bank of Minnesota for at least 10 percent of the amount of the bid.

The right is reserved to reject any and all bids,

Dated at Warren, Minnesota, this 8th day of January, A. D. 1912.

A. G. LUNDGREN,
(Auditor's Seal) County Auditor.

Notice for Bids

Sealed bids will be received by the undersigned up to January 15th, 1912, for the filling and packing the ice house at the Holt creamery with ice. All ice must be clean and free from sun eating.

The board reserves the right to reject any and all bids.

Farmers' Co-Operative Creamery Company.

J. A. SORUM, Secretary.

Notice for Bids

Sealed bids will be received by the undersigned up to January 15th, 1912, for furnishing 20 cords of green, and 15 cords of dry, poplar and tamarac wood to be delivered at the creamery in Holt.

The board reserves the right to reject any and all bids.

Farmers' Co-Operative Creamery Company.

J. A. SORUM, Secretary.

A Grim Superstition.

A curious superstition prevails in Morocco. If a man has a grudge against another he procures some human bones and grinds them into fine flour which he mixes with his enemy's bread or other food. It is universally believed that the man who eats this horrible compound will begin to fade away and eventually die.

Dental Note.

"What a big mouth Miss Gap has!"

"Yes; I should call it a good opening for a dentist."

When Hats Were Taxed.

Hat taxes were always more effective with regard to men's headgear than with women's. Queen Elizabeth taxed the blocked beaver out of existence, and Pitt's hat tax of 1784 brought a substantial revenue. Stamps were fixed inside the crown of the hat from threepence to 2 shillings, according to its price, while the penalties for selling unstamped hats ranged from £10 to £20, and the punishment for counterfeiting a hat stamp was death. But an attempt to tax women's French straw hats of the watteau style signally failed. They were smuggled over in large quantities, and before this could be coped with watteau hats went out of fashion, and the tax was a dead letter.—London Chronicle.

Women Street Cleaners.

Many women in Munich support themselves by street sweeping. Most of the recruits of this army come from the country, strapping daughters of small farmers or laborers, and the task is a coveted one to those stout and wholesome young women, so that there is always a waiting list. They dress in a kind of uniform—Tyrolese hat of green, with a feather at one side, blue petticoat, red jacket and a neckerchief.

As She Figures It.

"This is the first time I have seen your wife in ten years."

"Yes."

"Yes. She is considerably changed."

"Well, you must consider that she is a year older than she was ten years ago."—Houston Post.

His Delightful Bull.

An Irish editor in speaking of Ireland and her woes said:

"Her cup of misery has been for ages overflowing and is not yet full."

The Other Way.

"What on earth's the matter? Cut yourself while shaving?"

"No—I should say that I shaved myself while cutting."

WHY YOU NEED THIS NEWSPAPER

WHATEVER your business you NEED a newspaper. You cannot keep house without it.

IN ANY ISSUE YOU MAY SEE AN ITEM THAT WILL PAY YOUR SUBSCRIPTION FOR TEN YEARS.

It may be a bargain; it may be news of somebody who wants to buy an article that you have to sell; it may be a hint as to how you can improve your methods or make more money.

By following the markets you know when to buy or sell. By following the advertisements you know where to trade.

THE PAPERS TELL YOU OF MORTGAGE AND TAX SALES, OF AUCTIONS AND OF OTHER EVENTS WHEREBY GREAT BARGAINS MAY BE PICKED UP.

Taking a paper is commercially profitable, especially to the man who keeps his eyes open. WHY not SUBSCRIBE NOW?

THE FOUNDATION of future financial independence is a growing Bank Account. Place your earning and watch it grow. We pay a liberal rate of interest on time deposits.

Why you should bank with HOLT STATE BANK:—

We can with pleasure assure you of the entire safety of your funds under our care. Our Cash is protected against any possible loss thru burglary or hold-up robbery by ample insurance and any loss thereby would be promptly replaced. We are organized and incorporated under the laws of the State of Minnesota which now require two examinations yearly by the Examining Committee, four printed reports, two examinations yearly by a capable Bank Examiner. Also the bye-laws, require that the active officers be bonded and be personally responsible for all moneys or valuables left under their care which assures a straight and honest administration of its affairs. And further, our loans are so drawn that payment is assured at maturity either by the pledging of personal property or real estate, or by some responsible party of good financial standing acting as guarantor.

Our cash resources have increased $25,000.00 during the season 1911 and we want a like amount of increase during 1912. Affording our patrons absolute protection and safety and conducting our affairs in a business-like way are factors which lead to our success, and under these conditions we feel entitled to a generons share of your business during 1912.

Red Lake Falls Milling Co.
Makers of the Celebrated
Mascot Fl0ur
and bUYERS of all kinds of GRAIN.

Our Elevator will give you satisfaction.

OLE MATSON, Agent - - - Holt, Minn.

The Evergreen Hotel
P. A. RESBERG, PROP.

Rates, $1.00 per day.

Serves the best Meal in Eastern Marhall Co. for twenty-five cents.

Livery and Feed Barn in connection.

Bring us your Job Printing orders

We wish you a Happy and Prosperous New Year

We would also remind you that we are still offering some Exceptional Bargains in Hardware and Furniture. Come in and let us show you that our prices will really save money for you.

S. S. KOLDEN & Co.
HOLT, - - MINNESOTA

Defective Page

BLADDER TROUBLE CAUSES TERRIBLE PAINS.

After taking a trial bottle of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root which you forwarded to me, I purchased some from a local drug store and after using three dollar bottles I can truthfully say that I was cured of all the terrible pains I had in my back, side and head, caused by bladder trouble. I had the worst kind of kidney trouble and suffered so that I could not even stay in bed with the pain. Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root made me feel just like a new person and I am glad to recommend it to anyone suffering as I did.

Very truly yours,
MISS MARY ARDNER,
807 Washington St. Defiance, Ohio

Sworn to before me and in my presence subscribed by the said Miss Mary Ardner, this 16th day of July, 1909.

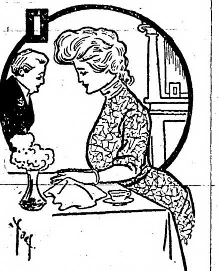
F. L. RAY, Notary Public.

Letter to
Dr. Kilmer & Co.
Binghamton, N. Y.

Prove What Swamp-Root Will Do For You

Send to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., for a sample bottle. It will convince anyone. You will also receive a booklet of valuable information, telling all about the kidneys and bladder. When writing, be sure and mention this paper. Regular fifty-cent and one-dollar size bottles for sale at all drug stores.

A COLD DINNER.



Mrs. Benham—I see that they have found the North Pole.

Benham—That's no reason why you should do your cooking there.

Hopeless Case.

"De trouble wid me and muh wife," admitted old Brother Gaumpers, "am dat whilst we 'gree most o' de time, we don't 'gree at de same time. I kin 'gree 'bout anything, and she kin 'gree 'bout anything, but we kain't 'gree wid each udder 'bout it. When I'm willing' to 'gree wid her she won't 'gree wid me, and when she is ready to 'gree wid me I've changed muh mind and kain't 'gree wid her. We kin bofe 'gree separate, but we kain't 'gree togedder on de same thing at de same time, and de mo' we tries de wuss we git."—Puck.

Was Testing the Baby.

Little Phil Warriner, of Addison road, was detected in the act of pulling out the baby's hair despite her frantic protest.

"I just wanted to see," he said in explanation, "whether she was cold storage baby. Teacher told us that's the way you can tell a chicken. If the feathers come out easily the chicken has been in cold storage."

Needless to say, Phil is doing penance.—New York Times.

Reconnoitered.

Mamma was dressing when seven-year-old Freddy burst into the room with a loud "Boo!"

"Why, Freddy, dear," expostulated she, "you mustn't open my door without knocking. I mightn't have been dressed at all."

"Oh, this was all right," said Freddy, "I looked through the keyhole first."—Judge.

IN MATCHTOWN.

Fortunately no Faith Was Required, For She Had None.

"I had no faith whatever, but on the advice of a hale, hearty old gentleman who spoke from experience, I began to use Grape-Nuts about 2 years ago," writes an Ohio woman, who says she is 40, is known to be fair, and admits that she is growing plump on the new diet.

"I shall not try to tell you how I suffered for years from a deranged stomach that rejected almost all sorts of food, and digested what little was forced upon it only at the cost of great distress and pain.

"I was treated by many different doctors and they gave me many different medicines, and I even spent several years in exile from my home, thinking change of scene might do me good. You may judge of the gravity of my condition when I tell you I was sometimes compelled to use morphine for weeks at a time.

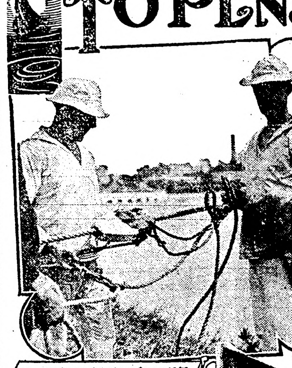
"For two years I have eaten Grape-Nuts food at least twice a day and I can now say that I have perfect health. I have taken no medicine in that time—Grape-Nuts has done it all. I can eat absolutely anything I wish, without stomach distress.

"I am a business woman and can walk my 2 or 3 miles a day and feel better for doing so. I have to use brains in my work, and it is remarkable how quick, alert and tireless my mental powers have become." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

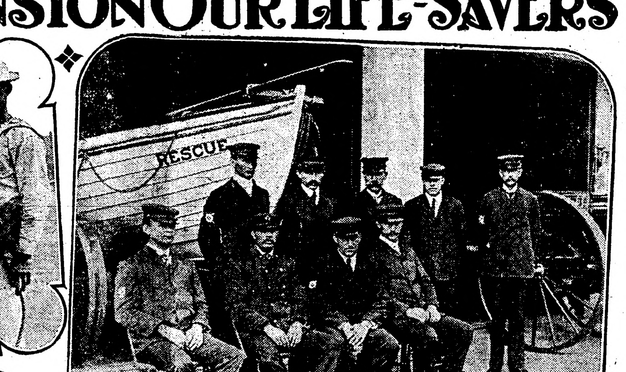
"There's a reason," and it is explained in the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

TO PENSION OUR LIFE-SAVERS



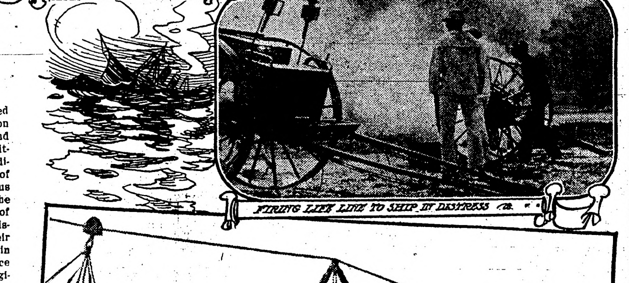
USING HAWSER CUTTER FOR LIFE LINE



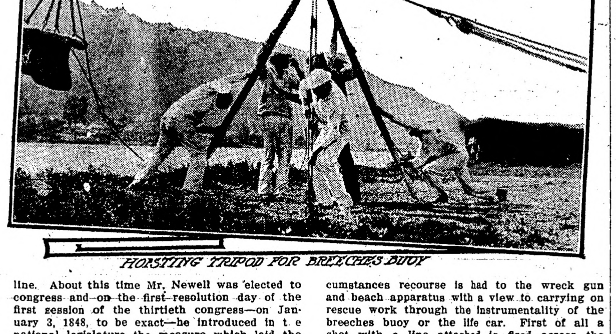
TYPICAL U.S. LIFE SAVING CREW

SIGNALING TO SHIP WRECKED MARINERS

RESPONDING TO A CALL



FIRING LIFE LINE TO SHIP IN DISTRESS



HOISTING TRIPOD FOR BREECHES BUOY

THE proposition which will be urged upon congress at its present session to provide for the retirement and pensioning of employes of the United States Life-Saving Service is directing public attention to one of the bravest and most conscientious corps of men in the world. The plan to pension the members of our coast patrol who have been disabled in the performance of their duties or who have grown gray in rendering such humanitarian service to their fellow-men has been agitated for some years past. Congress at its last session was on the point of passing the necessary law thus to give recognition to the life-savers and it is believed that these faithful servants of the people will not have to wait much longer now to be accorded their rights—for, be it known, the life-savers only seek such relief from the conditions of physical disability and old age as is freely accorded men in our military and naval service.

Nor is it merely that such a plan of retirement and pensions will do justice to the surfmen who, it is claimed, run greater risks and endure more hardships for the wages paid them than do the men in any other branch of the government service. Quite aside from this is the influence that will be exerted upon prospective recruits for the service. Indeed, the officials of the Life-Saving Service assert that with a satisfactory retirement and pension plan in operation a superior class of men will be attracted to this vocation where so much must needs depend upon the individual. And, by the way, probably very few of our readers know that the United States Life-Saving Service is the largest as well as the most efficient in the world. Like the firemen in our cities, they are on duty all the time and they risk their lives every time they go to a wreck. But, for that matetr, if the surfmen did no more than discharge the duties of their "night patrol" on the lonely storm-swept beaches they would have to their credit more hazardous and more arduous work than almost any other class in the community.

The scope of the relief work of the American Life-Saving Service is expanding all the while. During the past year the life-savers rendered aid in the case of nearly 1,500 wrecks and thanks largely to the aid of these brave and experienced men only seventy-four out of this large number proved to be a total loss. Measured in dollars and cents, the service rendered by these fearless men was even greater. In the wrecks of the past year there was involved property, including vessels and cargoes, to the total value of $11,880,000, and of this amount the surprising proportion of $10,057,000 was saved. This in itself makes the two million dollars a year which Uncle Sam spends on his Life-Saving Service seem like a pretty good investment and that is without taking into consideration the lives imperiled on the shipwrecked vessels. There were 6,661 persons on board the craft that met disaster last year and the total loss of life, which was fifty-five, would have been many times that number but for the succor afforded by Uncle Sam's heroes of the beaches.

Former Governor William A. Newell of New Jersey is generally recognized as the founder of the Life-Saving Service and he took the initiative as the result of a marine disaster which he happened to witness during the summer of 1839 when the Australian bark "Count Perasto" was wrecked on Long Beach, New Jersey. The thirteen members of the crew, all of whom were drowned, might readily have been saved had there been at hand apparatus such as now constitutes the regulation equipment of the United States life-saving crews.

The need thus pointed out made so forceful an impression upon the mind of Mr. Newell that he soon after entered upon experiments with bows and arrows, rockets and a shortened blunderbuss as a means of throwing lines to ships stranded in positions inaccessible by small boats. Eventually his experiments culminated in complete success by the use of a mortar or carronade with ball and line. About this time Mr. Newell was elected to congress and on the first resolution day of the first session of the thirtieth congress—on January 3, 1848, to be exact—he introduced in the national legislature the measure which laid the foundation of our Life-Saving Service.

The national government now maintains upward of three hundred life-saving stations distributed on the coasts of the Atlantic, the Pacific, the Gulf of Mexico and the Great Lakes. Each of these stations is maned by a crew of from six to eight surfmen—hardy and fearless fellows who are splendid specimens of physical manhood and who are skilled in handling boats in angry seas and in manipulating the various mechanical appliances which Uncle Sam provides as aids to the brawn and the quick wits of our coast patrolmen in the dangerous task of cheating the deep of its prey. For devotion to a duty that necessitates eternal vigilance and the most fatiguing service the life-savers receive the modest wage of $60 per month. Moreover they receive that pay for only nine months a year, the crews being laid off during June, July and August, at which season severe storms and wrecks are almost unknown. Should a life-saver be injured during his summer "lay-off" he not only cannot get back into the service but he cannot under existing conditions draw any pension or retirement pay, no matter how many years he has faithfully served the nation.

The vast majority of rescues effected by the life-saving crews are accomplished by means of lifeboats or surfboats. These stanch craft, which, as now manufactured, are almost unsinkable, are the ideal vehicles for taking considerable numbers of persons from imperiled vessels in a limited space of time. If the patrolman, who in his vigils on the beach discovers a vessel ashore and hastens to the life-saving station for assistance, reports that the use of a boat is practicable either the large lifeboat is launched from its ways in the station and proceeds to the wreck by water, or the lighter surfboat is hauled overland to a point opposite the wreck and launched as circumstances may dictate. Formerly all of these boats were propelled by oars and many of them yet are, but latterly there have been introduced big motor lifeboats, which are a vast improvement in every way over their predecessors.

Ofttimes a ship meets disaster in so dangerous a position or with such a high sea running that it is manifestly hopeless to attempt to reach the imperiled craft with a small boat. Under such circumstances recourse is had to the wreck gun and beach apparatus with a view to carrying on rescue work through the instrumentality of the breeches buoy or the life car. First of all a shot with a line attached is fired across the stranded vessel by means of a powerful little mortar or snub-nosed cannon, which will hurl a line over a wreck 400 yards distant, even in the teeth of a gale. With this preliminary line in their possession the crew of a shipwrecked craft can quickly haul out a larger line and finally a three-inch hawser. Attached to the hawser is a board which bears in English on one side and in French on the other instructions as to how to make the hawser fast to a mast or the best place that can be found.

When the shipwrecked mariners signal that they have obeyed instructions as to fastening the hawser the life-savers on shore haul the hawser taut and perhaps elevate the shore end by means of a tripod in order to lift it well clear of the water, after which there is sent off to the ship a breeches buoy, suspended from a traveler block, or a life car depending from rings running on the hawser. Only one person at a time can be landed by the breeches buoy, but from four to six people can be carried ashore at each trip of the life car. Whichever be the vehicle employed the trips continue until all the imperiled persons are safely ashore, after which an ingenious mechanical device known as the hawser cutter is drawn out to the wreck along the cableway and upon arriving at the terminus of the hawser automatically cuts the rope, allowing the life-savers to haul it ashore and thus preserve intact a valuable part of their apparatus.

Ambitious inventors are constantly devising new forms of apparatus for the use of the United States life-saving crews. Indeed, these inventions are so numerous that the federal government has felt obliged to create a board of experts whose special duty it is to test novelties and who hold such trials several times a year. However, not many of the new ideas that are advanced prove practicable, for the exacting conditions of the rough and ready service involved and the above mentioned classes of apparatus continue to be the standbys on which our life-savers place the greatest dependence. However, there has latterly been an advance in facilities for signaling and there is now in use a form of beach light so powerful as an illuminant that it enables one to read the face of a watch at a distance of more than nine hundred feet.

Quickest, Surest Cough Remedy Ever Used

Stops Even Whooping Cough Quickly. A Family Supply for 50c. Money Refunded If It Fails.

If someone in your family has an obstinate, deep-seated cough—even whooping cough—which has yielded slowly to treatment, buy a 50-cent bottle of Pinex and watch that cough vanish. If it fails, money back promptly, and without argument.

A 50-cent bottle of Pinex, when mixed with home-made sugar syrup, makes a full pint—a family supply—of the most effective cough remedy that money can buy, at a saving of $2. Gives instant relief and will usually wipe out a bad cough in 24 hours or less. Easily prepared in five minutes—directions in package.

Pinex Cough Syrup has a pleasant taste—children take it willingly. It stimulates the appetite and is slightly laxative—both good features. Splendid for croup, hoarseness, throat tickle, incipient lung troubles, and a prompt, successful remedy for whooping cough.

Pinex is a special and highly concentrated compound of Norway White Pine extract, and is rich in guaiacol and other elements which are so healing to the membranes. Simply mix it with sugar syrup or strained honey, in a pint bottle, and it is ready for use. Used in more homes in the U. S. and Canada than any other cough remedy.

Pinex has often been imitated, but never successfully, for nothing else will produce the same results. The genuine is guaranteed to give absolute satisfaction or money refunded. Certificate of guarantee is wrapped in each package. Your druggist has Pinex or will get it for you. If not, send to The Pinex Co., 238 Main St., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

Uncle Sam's Representative.

Senator John Sharp Williams tells of a negro lad in a southern town who was not the least zealous of Uncle Sam's servants. One day when the mail bag for that town was thrown from the train the pouch was caught up by this diminutive courier, who started off, as was his wont, on a brisk trot to the postoffice.

As he was rounding a corner of the station he encountered a larger boy, with the result that the little courier was upset. When the latter got up and readjused himself he turned upon the other exclaiming:

"Look heah! Yo' wants to be keerful 'bout dis chile! When yo' jars me yo' jars de gov'ment of de United States. I carries de mail!"

A LEAKAGE THAT CAN BE EASILY STOPPED.

How many people who read this article, realize the weighty influence of one little necessity of life—baking powder—on the cost of living.

Yet it is a leakage that can easily be stopped if the housewife will only pay a little more attention to the choice of her baking powder. Some think there is economy in buying the cheap "Big Can" Baking Powders. These Baking Powders are not always uniform, and sometimes produce failures in the baking, and the result is that more is lost in one or two spoiled bakings than you spend on baking powder in the whole year. The cheap "Big Can" Baking Powders should be avoided.

On the other hand, many housewives feel that a baking powder is of no value unless they pay 50 cents a pound for it—the price charged for the high priced "Trust" brands. This is a mistake, as the best baking powder that can be made can be sold for 25c. per pound if the manufacturer is satisfied with a reasonable profit. There is one brand on the market that meets these requirements. It is CALUMET BAKING POWDER, recommended by leading physicians and chemists; used in millions of homes; and given the Highest Award at the World's Pure Food Exposition.

Uncertainties.

"A number of men who get to the front are mere accidents."

"Yes," responded Senator Sorghum; "I sometimes think that what our government most needs is some reliable form of accident insurance."

If you would be a leader you must set the pace.

SYSTEMIC CATARRH RELIEVED BY PERUNA.

My Husband Also Uses Peruna.

Mrs. Della May Samuels, whose picture accompanies this testimonial and who resides at 358 N. Conde St., Tipton, Ind., writes The Peruna Co., as follows:

"Eight bottles of Peruna completely cured me of systemic catarrh of several years' standing, and if my husband feels badly or either of us catch cold we at once take Peruna."

Stomach Trouble

Mrs. Wilson Robinson, 704 Nessle St., Toledo, Ohio, writes:

"I feel like a new person. I have no more heavy feelings, no more pain, don't belch up gas, can eat most anything without it hurting me. I want to be working all the time. I have gained twenty-four pounds.

"People that see me now and saw me two months ago seem astonished. I tell them Peruna did it. I will say it is the only remedy for spring and all other ailments."

Ask Your Druggist for a Free Peruna Almanac for 1912.

25 CTS. PISO'S REMEDY 25 CTS.
Best Cough Syrup. Tastes Good. Use in time. Sold by Druggists.
FOR COUGHS AND COLDS

FREE

MUNYON'S PAW-PAW PILLS

I want every person who is bilious, constipated or has any stomach or liver ailment to send for a free package of my Paw-Paw Pills. I want to prove that they positively cure Indigestion, Sour Stomach, Belching, Wind, Headache, Nervousness, Sleeplessness and are an infallible cure for Constipation. To do this I am willing to give millions of free packages. I take all the risk. Sold by druggists for 25 cents a vial. For free package address, Prof. Munyon, 53rd & Jefferson Sts., Philadelphia, Pa.

The Farmer's Son's Great Opportunity

160 ACRE FARMS IN WESTERN CANADA FREE

Why wait for the old farm to become your inheritance? Begin now to prepare for your future prosperity and independence. A great opportunity awaits you in Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta, where you can secure a Free Homestead or buy land at reasonable prices.

Now's the Time —not a year from now, when land will be higher. The profits secured from the abundant crops of Wheat, Oats and Barley, as well as cattle raising, are causing a steady advance in price. Government returns show that the number of settlers in Western Canada from the U. S. was 60 per cent larger in 1910 than the previous year.

Many farmers have paid for their land out of the proceeds of one crop.

Free Homesteads of 160 acres and pre-emptions of 160 acres at $3.00 an acre. Fine climate, good schools, excellent railway facilities, low freight rates; wood, water and lumber easily obtained.

For pamphlet "Last Best West," particulars as to suitable location and low settlers' rate, apply to Sup't of Immigration, Ottawa, Can., or to Canadian Gov't Agent.

CHAS. PILLING
Clifford Block Grand Forks, N. Dak.
Please write to the agent nearest you

THOMPSON'S EYE WATER Quickly relieves eye irritation caused by dust, sun or wind. Booklet free
JOHN L. THOMPSON SONS & CO., Troy, N. Y.

Cornered.

Lord Guilford tells a story of a young lady's resources at a bazaar. Business was in full swing when a young man strolled around the various stalls, with no intention of purchasing anything. As he passed a large, beautifully decorated stall the young lady sellers detained him. "Won't you buy a cigarette holder, sir?" she asked. "No, thank you, I don't smoke," was the curt reply. "Or a pen wiper worked with my own hands?" "I don't write." "Then do have this nice box of chocolates." "I don't eat sweets." The young lady's patience was exhausted. "Sir," she said grimly, "will you buy this box of soap?"

The young man paid up.

He Knew the Worm.

A country girl was home from college for the Christmas holidays and the old folks were having a reception in her honor. During the event she brought out some of her new gowns to show to the guests. Picking up a beautiful silk creation, she held it up before the admiring crowd.

"Isn't it perfectly gorgeous!" she exclaimed. "Just think, it came from a poor little insignificant worm!"

Her hard-working father looked a moment, then turned and said: "Yes, darn it, an' I'm that worm!"—Ladies' Home Journal.

Misleading Sneezes.

"How did you come on with your study of the Russian language?"

"Not well. While I was trying to pronounce a few words our family physician came along and forced me to take all kinds of medicine to break up a cold."

A Pioneer.

"Why was Jonah thrown overboard?"

"I'm not sure, but I've always thought he was the first man to rock a boat."

The theory that misery loves company accounts for some marriages.

The Promise Of a Good Breakfast is fulfilled if you start the meal with

Post Toasties

Sweet, crisp, fluffy bits of toasted corn—ready to serve direct from the package with cream and sugar

Please Particular People

"The Memory Lingers"

Postum Cereal Company, Limited, Battle Creek, Mich.

THE KITCHEN CABINET

THOUGH Greek and Latin be a lady's boast,
They're little valued by her loving mate:
The kind of tongue that husbands relish most,
Is modern, boiled, and served upon a plate.
—Saxe.

DRESSINGS AND GARNISHES.

For those who do not like oil salad dressings, the following will prove a satisfactory one:

Cook together two tablespoonfuls of butter and three of flour; when smooth add a cup of sweet cream. Let it boil, stirring all the time. After cooking five minutes remove and add a half cup of sour cream, the juice of half a lemon and a little salt, and sugar to taste. Allow it to become perfectly cold; pour the mixture over sliced apples or bananas and set on ice for an hour before serving.

Mayonnaise Tartare.—This is simply the addition of chopped olives, pickles, parsley, capers and onions to the mayonnaise. Use a fourth of a cup in all with one cup of dressing

Never mix mayonnaise with meat or fish until ready to serve.

Mayonnaise may be colored with lobster coral, or with pounded spinach or parsley.

Mayonnaise Dressing.—Mix together a half teaspoon of salt and a teaspoon of powedered sugar, a dash of cayenne and add to the beaten yolk of an egg. Drop in a little olive oil, keeping the bowl standing in ice; add a tablespoonful each of lemon juice and vinegar, alternating with the oil a few drops of each until a half cup of oil is used, then add a little more, a teaspoonful at a time, until a cupful of oil has been used. A half cup of whipped cream added to the mayonnaise improves it and makes it go further. This is the dressing par excellence.

Garnishes.—Edible garnishes are the only ones that should be allowed, the custom of tying up food with ribbon is entirely undesirable. Millinery is not in place on the dining table.

The skins of fruits may be used as receptacles for salads and cooked beets, and boats of cucumbers are not opposed to good taste.

A medly of lettuce, parsley, celery and capers or a variety of colors and shades cannot be considered artistic.

The red of beets and the red of tomatoes do not harmonize, and the garnish of a dish should not detract from the main substance. Brains and ingenuity are the best recipes for the use of garnishes.

THE sociable woman is one who, having nothing to do, comes around and bothers one who has.

You may have brains, but can you prove it?

CHAFING DISH DAINTIES.

The chafing dish will ever be a welcome adjunct to any equipment, for one may in a few moments prepare hot soup or a drink with little trouble.

There seems to be in the minds of many that the chafing dish is a modern invention. In fact, it is one of the most ancient, for chafing dishes have been found in the ruins of Pompeii and the Egyptians used similar dishes at the time of the captivity of the Israelites.

The chafing dish of today has kept alive the fires of hospitality in many a "third floor back" apartment, and bachelors and maids alike have become adepts in using the handy little home dish.

Shell fish, lobster, eggs and cream dishes are most adaptable to the chafing dish, and much of housewifely art has been revived by the workaday woman, who otherwise has little opportunity to exercise the art of cookery.

For breakfast dishes there is French toast, poached eggs and any number of creamed dishes.

French Fritters.—Mix and sift together a cup of flour, a half teaspoon of salt and two teaspoonfuls of baking powder. Add three-fourths of a cup of milk, one egg well beaten and one tablespoonful of melted butter. Fry same as griddle cakes. When cooked, spread with currant jelly, roll and sprinkle with powdered sugar. Heat the jelly or beat it with a fork before spreading.

Anchovy Toast.—Toast four slices of bread from which the crusts are removed, and spread with anchovy paste. Scald a cup of milk, add two egg yolks and stir constantly until it thickens. Beat the whites of two eggs until stiff, add the milk, beat thoroughly and pour over the toast.

Buttered Eggs.—Melt three-fourths tablespoonful of butter in a hot blazer. Slip in carefully one egg, sprinkle with salt and pepper and cook until the white is firm, turning once during the cooking. Do not attempt to cook more than one egg at a time.

Grilled Oysters.—Clean a pint of oysters and drain off the liquor. Put the oysters in a blazer, and as fast as the liquor flows remove it with a spoon. Continue until the oysters are plump. Season with butter, pepper and salt, and serve on crackers.

"YOU may have been born inquisitive, but for heaven's sake keep it dark."

The beauty about a thirst for knowledge is that there is no "morning after."

MEATS FOR THE CHAFING DISH.

There are so many delightful and appetizing dishes of different kinds of meats that are so nicely served from the chafing dish.

Rechauffe of Beef.—Brown two tablespoonfuls of butter, add three tablespoonfuls of flour, and when well browned pour on gradually one cup of stock. Season with one-fourth of a teaspoon of paprika and a few drops of onion juice and a half teaspoon of salt. Add a cup of rare cooked beef, finely chopped. Cook one minute and serve.

Hash Balls.—Chop cold corned beef, cooked, and which has had the gristle and most of the fat removed. Add an equal quantity of cold boiled potatoes, chopped and seasoned with salt, pepper and onion juice. Moisten with milk or cream, make in flat cakes and cook in a hot buttered blazer. Brown on both sides.

Vienna Steaks.—Chop one-fourth of a pound each of raw lean beef and veal, removing all the fat and membrane. Season with three-fourths of a teaspoon of salt, one-fourth of a teaspoon of paprika, a little celery salt, a few gratings of nutmeg, a teaspoonful each of lemon and onion juice. Add one egg, well beaten; let stand several hours, then shape into small steaks. Put into the hot buttered blazer and sear on both sides. Cook six to eight minutes, turning frequently.

Cream one and a half tablespoonfuls of butter, mix with pepper and salt and spread on the steaks.

Bean Rarebit.—Melt two tablespoonfuls of butter, add one teaspoon of salt, paprika and a cup of cold baked beans, mashed; add one-half cup of milk or cream. When thoroughly hot add a half cup of grated cheese.

Deviled Almonds.—Blanch and shred a half cup of almonds. Cook until brown, using enough butter to prevent burning. Mix two tablespoonfuls of chopped pickles, a tablespoonful of Worcestershire sauce, a fourth of a teaspoon of salt, and a little cayenne.

OH, WHAT will you do with the Minute to Spare?
The gay little, stray little Minute to Spare,
That comes from a clime
Of old Plenty of Time,
With never a worry and never a care.
We'd better beware of the Minute to Spare—
The wee little, free little Minute to Spare;
And never refuse
The Minute to use
That's always so ready some burden to bear.
—Frank W. Hutt.

CLEANING HINTS.

Chloroform will remove grease spots from the most delicate fabric; rub until completely dry and there will be no ring to mark the spot.

Coffee stains on colored goods can be removed if at once sopped up with a clean sponge, wet in cold water. Place the damaged spot over a thickly folded cloth and keep changing the water in the sponge until the coffee disappears.

Oatmeal is a good cleaner for white paint. Rub the paint with a damp cloth dipped in oatmeal, then rub dry with a dry cloth.

To remove grease spots from wall paper, cover with a blotting paper and press with a hot iron.

Brass bedsteads can be cleaned by rubbing with a cloth dipped in sweet oil. Afterward polish with a piece of leather.

This is the season of the year when pepper nuts are in the market. These spicy little cakes are easily made at home and will keep until spring, as there is no shortening in them to grow rancid.

Pepper Nuts.—Mix one pound and a quarter of brown sugar, two tablespoonfuls of cinnamon, one tablespoonful of cloves and one teaspoonful of baking powder. Stir into this three eggs and add as much flour as it is possible to work in. Roll in a thin sheet and cut with a small cutter. Bake in a slow oven. These cakes are more attractive if a little frosting is spread on one side.

Buttermilk Biscuit.—Sift together a quart of flour and an even teaspoonful of soda, add two teaspoonfuls of salt. Rub in two tablespoonfuls of shortening and wet to a soft dough with buttermilk. Work until the dough is smooth, roll an inch thick and cut in cakes with a large-sized biscuit cutter. When all are ready, prick with a fork and bake in a hot oven.

Nellie Maxwell

HAVE YOU SUSPECTED YOUR KIDNEYS?

There are two ways to tell whether you have weak kidneys.

The first is through the pains in the back and other outward signs. The second is by examination of the kidney secretions.

That is why physicians make such a careful examination when you apply for insurance, and if there is any sign of kidney trouble you are surely rejected.

Kidney disease is so dangerous that it is a bad mistake to overlook or neglect it, and if pain in the back, recurring headaches, or a fretful, nervous, tired condition makes you suspect some kidney trouble, take the trouble to watch the kidney secretions. Look for any of the following signs:

More or less than three and one half pints passed daily.
Too dark or too pale a color.
Passages too frequent, profuse, or much reduced, or scalding and painful.
Sandy, gritty or cloudy settlings.
Fat or oily-looking layer which gathers on the surface when allowed to stand, or a jelly-like thickening.
Staining of the linen or bad odor.

Temporary changes may occur for a time from things eaten, but if the changed appearance continues, your kidneys are out of order and need help. Neglect may prove serious.

Doan's Kidney Pills correct and regulate the kidney secretions, stimulate and heal sick kidneys, and thereby drive away backache, rheumatic pain, nervousness, dizziness, bloating and other results of kidney disease.

The following case is typical of the cures effected by Doan's Kidney Pills. Grateful testimony is the best evidence.

There are Two Ways to Find Out Whether the Kidneys are Sick or Weak

"Every Picture Tells A Story"

"Oh, what a pain!"

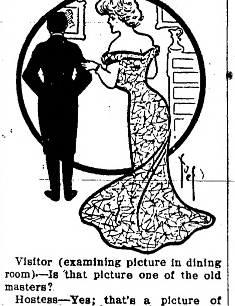
SAVED AT THE CRISIS.

Cured After Doctors Gave Up Hope.

H. R. Hatch, 2576 Cedar Street, Everett, Washington, says: "I doubt if anyone ever suffered more than I did from kidney trouble. I endured the greatest agony anyone can imagine. My back so bad I could hardly walk. The least jar was or sudden misstep caused sharp twinges through my loins that fairly made me groan. I dreaded to stoop for I knew what I had to suffer when I straightened. At times the kidney secretions passed much too freely, while again there was a marked retention. The secretions were almost like blood, offensive in odor and terribly painful in passage. I treated with several physicians and consulted two specialists in Seattle and one in Tacoma. They all told me I had Bright's disease and could expect to live only a short time. Finally I began using Doan's Kidney Pills on a friend's advice, and to my surprise, I received prompt relief. I continued and was completely cured. Though 75 years of age, I am as supple and active as any man in the country."

"When Your Back is Lame—Remember the Name"
DOAN'S KIDNEY PILLS
Sold by all Dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, N. Y., Proprietors

SHE KNEW.



Visitor (examining picture in dining room)—Is that picture one of the old masters?

Hostess—Yes; that's a picture of our cook.

PITIFUL SIGHT WITH ECZEMA

"A few days after birth we noticed an inflamed spot on our baby's hip which soon began spreading until baby was completely covered even in his eyes, ears and scalp. For eight weeks he was bandaged from head to foot. He could not have a stitch of clothing on. Our regular physician pronounced it chronic eczema. He is a very able physician and ranks with the best in this locality, nevertheless, the disease began spreading until baby was completely covered. He was losing flesh so rapidly that we became alarmed and decided to try Cuticura Soap and Ointment.

"Not until I commenced using Cuticura Soap and Ointment could we tell what he looked like, as we dared not wash him, and I had been putting one application after another on him. On removing the scale from his head the hair came off, and left him entirely bald, but since we have been using Cuticura Soap and Ointment he has as much hair as ever. Four weeks after we began to use the Cuticura Soap and Ointment he was entirely cured. I don't believe anyone could have eczema worse than our baby.

"Before we used the Cuticura Remedies we could hardly look at him, he was such a pitiful sight. He would fuss until I would treat him, they semed to relieve him so much. Cuticura Soap and Ointment stand by themselves and the result they quickly and surely bring is their own recommendation." (Signed) Mrs. T. B. Rosser, Mill Hall, Pa., Feb. 20, 1911.

Although Cuticura Soap and Ointment are sold by druggists and dealers everywhere, a sample of each, with 32-page book, will be mailed free on application to "Cuticura," Dept. 29 K, Boston.

The Better Part.

A certain woman went down from Jerusalem to Jericho, and it chanced that her gown was not fully buttoned up in the back. Now, a priest and a Levite, meeting the woman and perceiving her plight, passed by on the other side, without saying a word. But a certain Samaritan, journeyed that way, was touched with compassion.

"Madam," quoth he, "your ha—nub—"

"Sir?" the woman thereupon exclaimed and gave him a look which froze him on the spot.

When it appears that discretion is the better part of valor.—Puck.

Stop the Pain.

The hurt of a burn or a cut stops when Cole's Carbolisalve is applied. It heals quickly and prevents scars. 25c and 50c by druggists. For free sample write to J. W. Cole & Co., Black River Falls, Wis.

If a woman still has faith in her husband after reading what the opposition says of him when running for office, her loyalty is the real thing.

You will sneeze; perhaps feel chilly. You think you are catching cold. Don't wait until you know it. Take a dose of Hamlins Wizard Oil and you just can't catch cold.

A man knows more at twenty-one than he may be able to forget at fifty.

Force a man to eat his own words and he will soon lose his appetite.

W. L. DOUGLAS

$2.25, $2.50, $3, $3.50, $4 & $5 SHOES

All Styles, All Leathers, All Sizes and Widths, for Men, Women and Boys.

THE STANDARD OF QUALITY FOR OVER 30 YEARS

THE NEXT TIME YOU NEED SHOES give W. L. Douglas shoes a trial. W. L. Douglas name stamped on a shoe guarantees superior quality and more value for the money than other makes. His name and price stamped on the bottom protects the wearer against high prices and inferior shoes. Insist upon having the genuine W. L. Douglas shoes. Take no substitute. Fast Color Eyelets used exclusively.

HOW TO ORDER BY MAIL. Shoes Sent Everywhere—All Charges Prepaid. If W.L.Douglas shoes are not sold in your town, send direct to factory. Take measurements of foot as shown in model; state style desired; size and width usually worn; plain or cap toe; heavy, medium or light sole. I do the largest shoe mail order business in the world. Illus. Catalog Free. W.L.DOUGLAS, 145 Spark St., Brockton, Mass.

PERFECTION SMOKELESS OIL HEATER

In every cold weather emergency you need a Perfection Smokeless Oil Heater. Is your bedroom cold when you dress or undress? Do your water pipes freeze in the cellar? Is it chilly when the wind whistles around the exposed corners of your house?

A Perfection Smokeless Oil Heater brings complete comfort. Can be carried anywhere. Always ready for use—glowing heat from the minute it is lighted.

Ask your dealer to show you a Perfection Smokeless Oil Heater; or write for descriptive circular to any agency of

Standard Oil Company
(Incorporated)

Suspicious.

When the four-and-twenty blackbirds which had been baked in the pie began, immediately the latter was opened, to sing, the king grew suspicious.

"How," demanded his majesty, "were you so remarkably preserved?"

The blackbirds, visibly disconcerted offered no reply.

"Was it by the use of benzoate of soda?" thundered the king, thoroughly aroused.—Puck.

When Your Eyes Need Care

Try Murine Eye Remedy. No Smarting—Feels Fine—Acts Quickly. Try it for Red, Weak, Watery Eyes and Granulated Eyelids. Illustrated Book in each Package. Murine is compounded by our Oculists—not a "Patent Medicine"—but used in successful Physicians' Practice for many years. Now dedicated to the Public and sold by Druggists at 25c and 50c per Bottle. Murine Eye Salve in Aseptic Tubes, 25c and 50c.
Murine Eye Remedy Co., Chicago

Speaking Airily.

First Aviator—How far is it to the next gasoline reservoir?

Second Aviator—Two graveyards and a spiral glide to your left, old man.—Life.

DR. J. H. RINDLAUB (Specialist),
Eye, Ear, Nose and Throat
Fargo, N. D.

Contrary Human Nature.

People seem to find it easier to be kind than to be genuinely appreciative of a kindness done them.

Mrs Winslow's Soothing Syrup for Children teething, softens the gums, reduces inflammation, allays pain, cures wind colic, 25c a bottle.

In School.

"Spell 'prohibition.'"

"I don't like dry spells."

PILES CURED IN 6 TO 14 DAYS
Your druggist will refund money if PAZO OINTMENT fails to cure any case of Itching, Blind, Bleeding or Protruding Piles in 6 to 14 days. 50c.

A few weeks of matrimonial training will enable a man to predict brainstorms in advance.

Your Liver Is Clogged Up

That's Why You're Tired—Out of Sorts—Have No Appetite.

CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS will put you right in a few days.

They do their duty.

Cure Constipation, Biliousness, Indigestion and Sick Headache

SMALL PILL, SMALL DOSE, SMALL PRICE.

Genuine must bear Signature

Brent Good

CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS.

Virginia Farms and Homes
FREE CATALOGUE OF SPLENDID BARGAINS.
R. B. CHAFFIN & CO., Inc., Richmond, Va.

W. N. U., FARGO, NO. 2-1912.

Fargo Directory

Ship Your Hides, Furs and Pelts
To BOLLES & ROGERS FARGO, N. D.

FARGO TANNERY
Receives hides and skins for tanning to harness leather, robes and coats. Robes lined, hides bought, leather and robes for sale. SEND FOR PRICE LIST.
Andrew Monson, Proprietor, Fargo Tannery
Fargo, North Dakota

BUILDERS MATERIAL CO.
FARGO, NORTH DAKOTA
Face Brick, Hollow Block, Hollow Face Tile. Fire Places and Fixtures. Wall Ties, Mortor Color, Metal Lath, Fire Brick, Water Proofings, Prepared Roofings, Ideal Ventilators, Cement Coatings, Asphalt.

What Ails You?

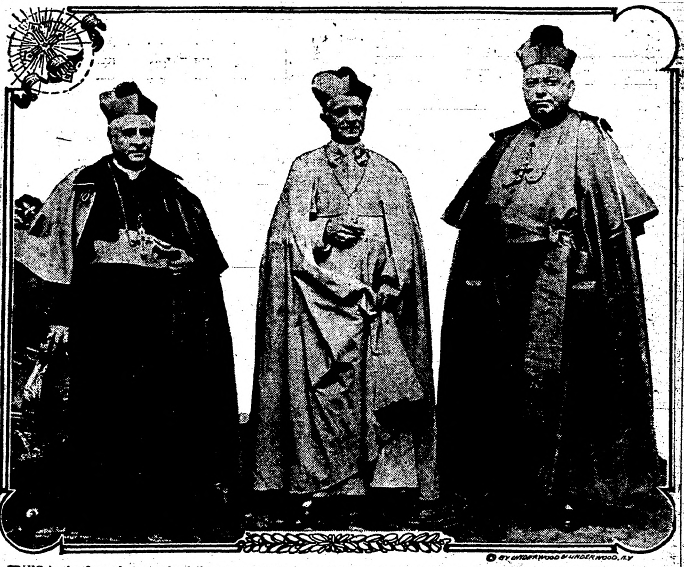
Do you feel weak, tired, despondent, have frequent headaches, coated tongue, bitter or bad taste in morning, "heart-burn," belching of gas, acid risings in throat after eating, stomach gnaw or burn, foul breath, dizzy spells, poor or variable appetite, nausea at times and kindred symptoms?

If you have any considerable number of the above symptoms you are suffering from biliousness, torpid liver with indigestion, or dyspepsia. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is made up of the most valuable medicinal principles known to medical science for the permanent cure of such abnormal conditions. It is a most efficient liver invigorator, stomach tonic, bowel regulator and nerve strengthener.

The "Golden Medical Discovery" is not a patent medicine or secret nostrum, a full list of its ingredients being printed on its bottle-wrapper and attested under oath. A glance at these will show that it contains no alcohol, or harmful habit-forming drugs. It is a fluid extract made with pure, triple-refined glycerine, of proper strength, from the roots of native American medical forest plants. World's Dispensary Medical Association, Props., Buffalo, N. Y.

Defective Page

THE THREE NEW AMERICAN CARDINALS



© BY UNDERWOOD & UNDERWOOD, N.Y.

THIS is the first photograph of the new American cardinals and was taken in the garden of the American college in Rome immediately after the consistory at which they were made princes of the church. From left to right they are Mgrs. Farley, Falconio and O'Connell.

APPEALS TO JUDGE

Resident of Georgetown, Conn., Rebels Against Wife.

Spouse Who Tipped the Scales at 250 Used Club and Other Weapons to Compel Husband to Work—Enjoined by Court.

New York.—Gustave Frederickson of Georgetown, Conn., is an emancipated man. No more will the persons on the more or less infrequent trains of the Danbury division of the New Haven road look out the windows of the car to see if he is occupying a place in the hen coop or doing the family washing.

Mrs. Frederickson is under $500 bail to keep the peace, and the valley from South Norwalk to Topstone is congratulating Frederickson. Mrs. Frederickson is a woman who believes not only in woman's rights, but in the proper use of a club when she thinks her husband needs it.

When in condition she tips the beam at 250 pounds, and has a fine, fair, fat face that breaks into smiles at times, except when angered by Frederickson. She is a female Samson. She carries a white-hope punch in either hand, according to the husband, and frequently adds to its vigor by using a rolling pin or a flatiron.

Frederickson legally is the other half of Mrs. Frederickson. In size he compares as a peck to a bushel, and a hen peck at that. So gradually that Frederickson did not seem to realize it, Mrs. Frederickson usurped the powers of the head of the house.

Let him remain out late at the Georgetown lodge, and when he came home, if his answers did not satisfy her, and he did not have a certificate that he was sitting up with a sick brother at Cannon Station, a few miles away, she laid him across her knee. Then with the back of a hairbrush or half of a cedar shingle, she made him yell for mercy.

Recently Mrs. Frederickson, in a playful mood, bounced a bottle of milk off his head. Then she hit him with a poker and swung him around her head and threw him out of doors. Frederickson sat outside and consulted his friends. They fortified him with a certain amount of apple juice and then suggested that he have her arrested.

Urged by the local orator of Georgetown Frederickson decided to strike back—legally.

She was brought into court. He was there. She stood with arms folded over her mighty chest, reminding one of the "Village Blacksmith," scowling at the man she had promised to love, honor and obey.

Justice Hubbell heard the story and looked at bumps uncharted by phrenologists that appear upon the head of Frederickson and held her in $500 bail to keep the peace. He then stayed the execution upon her promise not to again harm Frederickson.

"Come," she said as she left court to Frederickson.

"I'll be home after awhile," said Frederickson, defiantly, and some one whispered in his ear that that was the way to treat her.

Brothers Are Waging a Meat War.

Pittsburg, Pa.—Shoppers in the Pittsburgh market profited greatly by a price war between two butchers, brothers, whose stalls are adjoining.

The price of pork loins was cut as low as four cents a pound and lamb went down to seven cents. Marketers in the early morning hours cut capers, dodging from one stand to the other, in an endeavor to get the best and cheapest "cuts." The brothers have been business rivals, and when one brother had advertised pork loins at twelve cents, the other marked his down to eleven. Then the price cutting began and before noon it had dropped to four cents.

DELICACY PEST IN GEORGIA

Ricebirds in Flocks So Overspread County Farm as to Obscure the Sun.

Savannah, Ga.—Tremendous flocks of ricebirds, overspreading the heavens until the sun is obscured and descending upon the fields of rice in huge numbers, have caused great damage to the rice crop at the county farm, according to T. Newell West, superintendent of Chatham county public works and roads. The crop has already been considerably damaged by the ravages of the winged marauders, and their increasing numbers threaten still greater damage.

Until recently things looked pretty bad, but just about that time Mr. West had a bright idea. Taking six of the juvenile prisoners at the farm and arming them with tin pans and sticks, he sent them through the rice fields beating upon their improvised tomtoms. Astonished by the unusual noise, the ricebirds left their meal unfinished and flew in great masses in the air.

Whenever they come back the boys are sent out to beat on the tin pans and the birds are frightened away from the rice.

Mr. West found that this little scheme works very well considering the huge number of birds. He states that there are more ricebirds this season than he has seen in years. The heavens are filled with them, and the sun is oftentimes hidden by the huge flocks of ricebirds flying between it and the fields. Many other rice planters are employing men to shoot the birds, but Mr. West has found that his plan works better than the other.

ROUTS MEMBERS FROM BEDS

Chicago Church Organizes Flying Squadron to Fill Pews by Emptying Beds.

Chicago.—No longer will the man who fails to attend church Sunday morning have for an excuse that he slept late. That is, he won't if he lives anywhere within three miles of the Third Presbyterian church, South Ashland and Ogden avenues.

For a "flying squadron" of human alarm clocks was organized, and thirty men every Sunday morning will make a quick dash about the West side, routing sleepy men from their beds and trying to persuade them to attend church.

The new method of trying to fill empty pews is to be adopted by the members of Bible class D of the church. In addition to getting men to church the sleep dispellers plan to arouse interest in the Bible class.

The "follow up" system, used by practically every large business house selling goods, will be used by the men composing the flying squadron. Any recalcitrant sleepy head who grunts, turns over in bed and drifts back to slumberland, heedless of the invitation to attend church, will be listed. The following Sunday a second call will be made and he again will be aroused and urged to come to church. If after four attempts it is shown that a warm, soft bed has more attractions than a hard and perhaps cold pew to the man, he will be considered a hopeless case and abandoned to his fate—and sleep.

The story was told by Refus Terry, leader of the movement, how a young business man was routed out of bed on Sunday morning several years ago by a member of a church "flying squadron," how he became intensely interested in Bible study, quit his business, entered McCormick Theological seminary and is now preaching in Kansas.

ROB BOY OF FALSE TEETH

Some One in Chicago Is Deprived of Masticating Equipment Before He or She Gets It.

Chicago.—Somewhere in the district of the Hinman street police station there was some one—a toothless some one—who wondered why his (or her) teeth never came. Maybe "some one" had an invitation to dinner and couldn't go or maybe "some one" went and ate soup only. At any rate the expected set of false teeth, value $50, was stolen at West Twenty-second street and South Ashland avenue by two sixteen-year-old boys from James Maloney, a messenger for a dental company at 177 South State street.

Maloney rushed into the Hinman street police station and shouted:

"I've lost my teeth!"

The desk sergeant peered over his desk and into the open mouth of the boy. There were two fine, shiny white rows of incisors, canines and bicuspids.

"Aw, quit your kiddin'," replied the officer as he settled back in his seat.

"On de square, somebody swiped my teeth and I want yer to pinch 'em. They belonged to de company."

Then the messenger said that he had chased the youthful thieves two blocks, shouting that the parcel contained only teeth, but they paid no attention to him. He was unable to remember the name of the person to whom he was to deliver the teeth or the address, but knew that it was somewhere in the neighborhood of the Hinman street station. The "boss" had told him to be careful, for the teeth were worth $50, but the "boss" had gone home and there was no use trying to get a new set of teeth in time for "some one's" supper.

Maybe the thieves will become penitent when they discover the nature of their booty and return the "dinner set" to their rightful owner, or maybe they will be caught, or maybe "some one" will have to continue a diet of soup.

GET $23,600 LONG MISSING

St. Louis Postoffice Inspectors Recover Package from Clerk Lost Since Sept. 24, 1910.

St. Louis, Mo.—A package containing $25,000, which disappeared from the annex postoffice station September 24, 1910, was recovered here recently. George V. Steck, a postoffice clerk, who was employed in the annex station, has had the package since its disappearance. He confessed to postoffice inspectors.

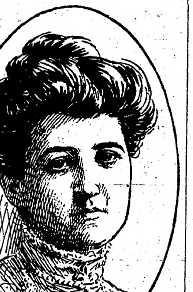
Of the full amount $1,400 is missing. Steck declares he spent this, but the postoffice authorities will not allow him to divulge in what manner. Steck has been watched more than six months by the inspectors. Chief Inspector Daniel telephoned him to come to the office. During the entire afternoon Inspectors Reuter and Bunsen worked with Steck, and late in the afternoon he returned to his home and brought the package back to the office of Chief Inspector Daniel.

The $25,000 was sent by the Third National bank to the Hutchison-Seeley company of Galveston, Tex. Steck will be arraigned before the United States commissioner.

PLATT'S WIDOW A BRIDE

Mrs. Lillian Janeway-Platt Once Popular in Washington, Marries W. B. Atwater.

Washington.—The marriage, recently, of William B. Atwater to Mrs. Thomas C. Platt united a somewhat noted aviator and the widow of a United States senator whose fame may be said to have been almost world-wide. As the bride of Mr. Platt Mrs. Platt's youth contrasted most noticeably with the decrepitude of the aged senator. Now, in the culmination of her latest and, by the way, third romance, she having been Mrs. Lillian Janeway, a charming widow, active in the society life of Washington when Mr. Platt made her his bride, it is her husband's youth which may be looked upon as the incongruous feature of the alliance. Mr. Atwater impresses those who know him as a light-hearted, life-loving boy, while the lady of his heart—well, she's still charming in appearance and manner but not by the greatest stretch of the imagination could one call her girlish.



Mrs. Atwater.

As the wife of the senior senator from the Empire state Mrs. Platt was prominent socially. As his widow she has lived a somewhat retired life in Central Valley, N. Y., and there, while deputy town superintendent of roads, Mr. Atwater made her acquaintance. His mother's bungalow is not far from that which has been occupied by Mrs. Platt.

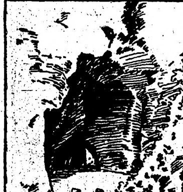
For seven years Mr. Atwater was in the United States navy and served on board a dispatch vessel plying between Hong Kong and Manila at the time of the Spanish-American war. For a time he was third assistant engineer on board the steamship St. Paul. He is considered an expert with automobile and other motors. Mr. and Mrs. Atwater will spend the winter on the Pacific coast, where the young aviator will pursue his study of aviation.

SOME OF WAR'S HORRORS

Cruel Death of the Prisoners in the Stone Quarries of Ancient Syracuse.

London.—All the horrors of war have not been eliminated in these modern days by any means, although fighting between nations is becoming less frequent and less ferocious than of old. Today no nation would be permitted to deliberately starve to death its prisoners, for instance, as was done in ancient Syracuse. We have passed the rude, barbaric age, it seems, but there is room for further improvement, for all that.

The picture shown herewith has the appearance of quiet, peaceful days, yet it is a wonder that the rocks are not covered with red streaks, for it was in these old quarries near Syracuse that some 9,000 Athenian prisoners were confined and left to die of hunger and thirst. This happened in 413 B. C., when the Athenians under Nicias and Demosthenes were defeated by the Syracusans, who were aided by the Spartans. History records that the ships of the Athenians were destroyed and about 30,000 men killed, while 9,000 were made prisoners. The quarries where the prisoners were placed to perish so miserably cover many acres in extent, having been hewn from the solid rock by a multitude of slaves. Tradition does not say whether they are haunted, but it would be no matter for surprise if the spirits of those old Athenian soldiers yet hung around the scene of their greatest misery watching for a chance to get even with some one.



Where Prisoners Perished.

PROTEIN IS MOST IMPORTANT SUBSTANCE IN ANY FOODSTUFF

Composed of Nitrogen, Carbon, Hydrogen, Oxygen, Sulphur, and Phosphorus—It Makes Up Muscles, Tendons, Ligaments, Connecting Tissues, and Almost Everything but Fat.

(By H. B. M'CLURE.)

The nutritive substances in hay or feed may be divided into two classes—flesh forming and fuel or energy producing substances. When the proper amount of these two classes of substances is fed the ration is said to be balanced. If an unbalanced ration is fed, as one containing more fuel or energy producing substances than are needed and less flesh-forming material, the ration is partially wasted, and such unwise feeding will not bring as good results as the feeding of the same amount of a balanced ration. Each class of substances has different offices to perform in the body. If not enough flesh forming substance is fed, the body suffers, because it is absolutely necessary to keep the body in good condition. Thousands of horses are fed all they can eat, yet are poorly nourished because the food contains little except fuel substances.

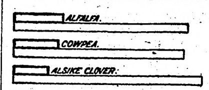


Diagram showing the relative amounts of digestible protein and carbohydrates in different kinds of hay. The section inclosed in light lines represent the carbohydrates; those inclosed in heavy lines, the protein.

The flesh forming substances are used to replace the waste that goes on in all living tissues. Energy producing substances are used to furnish the energy required for the nervous and muscular activities of the body, and when fed in excess they may to a certain extent be stored up in the form of fat for use later, when needed for either energy or heat.

One of the most important substances in any foodstuff is protein. All nutritive substances which contain nitrogen are classed under the general term of protein. Protein is composed of nitrogen, carbon, hydrogen, oxygen, sulphurs, and phosphorus.

Protein is the substance which builds up the body. The muscles, tendons, ligaments, connective tissues, skin, hair, hoofs, part of the bone, and in fact every part of the body but fat are made up of protein, together with mineral matter and water.

The next important class of substances is the carbohydrates, which contain carbon, hydrogen, and oxygen, but no nitrogen, sulphurs, or phosphorus; they include starch, sugars, etc. These are used for practically the same purpose for which coal or wood is used in the steam engine, namely, to furnish energy and heat.

The third important constituent of hay is its oils. Small quantities of oil are present in all kinds of hay. These oils serve the same purpose as the carbohydrates. A pound of these, however, will furnish two and one-fourth times as much energy or heat as the same quantity of carbohydrates. It can readily be seen, when the chemical analysis of hay is considered, why the price of the different grades or kinds of hay should depend, first, upon the amount of digestible nutrients contained, and, second, upon the purpose for which the hay is fed. If the concentrated feed—i. e., the grain in the ration—lacks protein, then the hay that is high in this substance is more valuable than one which contains little but carbohydrates, and vice versa. There is quite a range in the amount of the different classes of nutrients in the various kinds of hay.

On an average, in 100 pounds of alfalfa hay the digestible protein amounts to 10.58 pounds; in cowpea hay, 10.79 pounds; in alsike clover hay, 8.15 pounds; in red clover hay, 7.38 pounds; in redtop hay, 4.80 pounds; and in timothy hay, 2.89 pounds.

In 100 pounds of redtop hay the digestible carbohydrates amount to 47 pounds; in timothy hay, 43.72 pounds; in alsike clover hay, 41.70 pounds; in alfalfa hay, 37.33 pounds; in cowpea hay, 38.40 pounds; in red clover hay, 36.15 pounds.

When fed for protein, timothy hay ranks last, but when fed for carbohydrates it stands next to redtop, which heads the list. If the total nutrients are considered there are a number of different kinds of hay which are equal, if not superior, to timothy hay for feeding purposes.

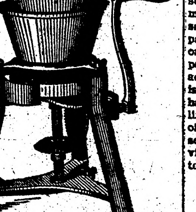
EVERY FARMER CAN USE PAINT

Adds to Appearance of Place and to the Durability of Any Kind of Farm Building.

Any man can do an average job of painting, and can thereby not only improve the appearance of his place, but can add greatly to the durability of the buildings.

The average farmer, if there is such a thing, seems to think that paint is used solely for ornament, and he is of all men most keenly practical, he eschews what he regards as an unprofitable luxury. It is, perhaps, the rule rather than the exception in some sections to see houses and agricultural implements sadly in need of repaint.

Of course paint does improve the appearance of property, but it is far more useful as a protector rather than an ornament. The expenditure of a small amount of money and time in painting a valuable piece of farm machinery or a building will add greatly to the length of its life. Another useful object accomplished by painting is the improved sanitary conditions of buildings and outhouses. The cost of such work is small, the necessary equipment not expensive, and with proper care will last a long time.



A Hand-power Paint Mill.

In order to supply information which will enable the farmer to purchase the paint economically and apply it intelligently and to the best advantage, Secretary Wilson caused experts in the bureau of chemistry to investigate the subject and prepare Farmers Bulletin No. 474 calling attention to the economic importance of painting farm buildings and equipment and giving details as to the cost, purchase, and care of brushes, cost of the ingredients needed, how to mix and apply them.

Paint conveys to the casual reader the idea of a mixture of pigment with linseed oil, but the general conception of the word includes both whitewash and calcimine, but not varnish, and the bulletin gives several very valuable recipes for making both of those excellent coatings for both out and inside of buildings.

The secretary in addition to urging the proper use of paints for both useful and ornamental purposes, for he does not think anything too good or attractive for the farm homes, emphasized several precautions: "Do not use any paint containing compounds of lead about stables or outbuildings where the fumes from decaying organic matter occur, since these gases are likely to darken the lead paints. Do not use with lead compounds any pigment which may liberate compounds of sulphur. For example, ultramarine blue which contains sulphur in a form in which it may be set free is a beautiful blue and may be used with zinc white, but should not be used with white lead or any other lead pigments. Prussian blue, on the contrary, does not contain sulphur and may be used with lead pigments.

"Remember that turpentine and benzine are very inflammable and especial precautions should be taken not to bring paint containing these substances near any light or open fire.

"Many pigments are poisonous, and the workman should be particularly careful to remove all paint stains from the skin, and not under any circumstances allow any of it to get into his mouth. A man should not eat in the same clothes in which he has been painting, and before eating should not only change his clothes but wash all paint stains from his skin. It is not advisable to use turpentine or benzine in removing paint stains from the hands, but by oiling thoroughly with linseed oil, or, in fact, with any fatty oil, and then thoroughly washing with soap, the paint may be removed, provided it has not been allowed to dry too thoroughly on the hands."

Good Liberal Education.

One of the best investments that any farmer can make, with a view to helping his boys and girls in the future, is in giving those boys and girls a good liberal education, that will enable them to compete with others and hold their own in the future. One thousand dollars and a good education equip a young man much better for his struggles in life than will two thousand dollars and no education.

Care of Farrowing Sow.

During the farrowing hour, the sow should be kept quiet and should seldom be approached by any person. She will not need the attention of man and as she is extremely nervous and irritable at this time, all causes of excitement should be removed as far as possible.

Shoats for Killing.

Pick out the very smoothest and most likely shoats for the winter killing, keep them in clean quarters and feed so as to make well balanced meat—not too much fat.

MINNESOTA
HISTORICAL SOCIETY,

THE NORTHERN LIGHT

VOL. I. HOLT, MARSHALL COUNTY, MINNESOTA, FRIDAY, JANUARY 19, 1912. NO. 25.

LORIMER WITNESS

CLAIMS "LIFE LONG FRIENDSHIPS" AND "ACTS OF KINDNESS" ELECTED HIM.

DIDN'T WANT HOPKINS

Says Fear of Deadlock by Those Anxious to Get Home Aided Him.—Other Congressional News.

Washington, D. C.—Senator Lorimer of Illinois, continuing his testimony before the senate investigating committee, undertook to explain the individual motives which caused 108 members of the Illinois legislature to cast their ballots for him. His recital was a long story of boyhood to man, grown to political alliances.

In explaining the votes often he would say, "He lived in my neighborhood and some times I may have done an important favor for him," or "we worked together in politics for 30 years and our personal friendship was stronger than any party tie."

The votes of other men Senator Lorimer explained by saying they were unalterably opposed to Hopkins, were anxious to break the deadlock and get home, had received favorable recommendation of Lorimer from constituents, or they were anxious to give to him some substantial reward for his work in behalf of the proposed "lakes to the gulf" waterway.

Earlier in the day the senator had made a dramatic denial of any knowledge of corruption in connection with his election, and in an equally dramatic way charged that Governor Deneen and a Chicago paper were forwarding a conspiracy to drive him from the senate.

Representative Smith of Texas, a Democrat, attacked President Taft in the house for alleged failure to protect Americans on the border during the Mexican revolution last year. Mr. Smith arraigned the Republican administration for pursuing a policy of "spineless diplomacy" and for alleged refusal of all practical aid to Americans in the prosecution of their claims against the Mexican government, though Germany, China and other nations were pressing their citizens' claims.

Mr. Smith declared President Taft should have protected Americans during the battles of Juarez and Agua Prieta by taking such steps as were necessary even if the president of the Mexican republic wanted to consider any such step an offense to his nation.

Representative James T. Lloyd of Missouri, chairman of the Democratic congressional campaign committee, announced that the treasurer and the committees of the organization would be named within a few days. The plans of the campaign have been partially laid and campaign material now is being sent out broadcast.

The Republican congressional campaign committee will meet in February when Representative W. B. McKinley of Illinois will ask to be relieved as chairman.

New Pension Bills Completed.

When the senate commission on pensions meets Monday to consider the Sherwood general service pension bill, Chairman McCumber will ask the committee to substitute a bill which he has prepared and introduced, which undertakes to grant increased pensions by amending the present law so as to make additions both on account of age and service.

Estimates place the increased cost under the McCumber bill at $22,000,000 annually or an average of $52 per man. Senator Curtis of Kansas, a member of the committee, will also offer a substitute to the Sherwood bill, materially reducing its figures.

Samuel Gompers urged the house committee on labor to report a bill creating a department of labor with cabinet rank.

Washington, D. C.—Republican insurgents met defeat in the house in an attempt to upset Republican Leader Mann's power to name all Republican candidates for places on the house committees.

Led by Representative Norris of Nebraska, who managed the great rules fight of the previous congress, the insurgents tried to set aside Mr. Mann's nomination of Philip B. Campbell of Kansas, regular, to succeed the late E. H. Madison, insurgent, on the committee on rules; and to nominate in his place Victor Murdock of Kansas, insurgent.

Opposed by both Democratic and Republican leaders, the insurgent attempt was beaten by a vote of 167 to 107. Of the 107 votes cast in favor of Murdock, 26 were Republican and 81 Democratic, while 107 Republican votes were cast against the proposed substitution.

That Lodge Amendment.

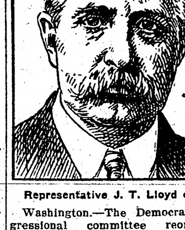
The Lodge amendment to the resolution for ratification of the arbitration treaties with Great Britain and France has stirred unexpected opposition from Democratic senators. It is favored, however, by three-fourths of the Republican senators, who accept it as a happy compromise of all differences.

The Republican senators are not strong enough to put through the treaties without considerable trouble and some concern was expressed as to the attitude of Democratic senators who heretofore have been classed as friendly to the treaties. Senators Raynor and Williams are favorable to them without any modification. Senator Raynor announced his intention of again addressing the senate on the treaties some day next week.

The text of the Lodge amendment to the ratification resolution is as follows:

"The senate advised and consents to the ratification of the treaty with the understanding to be made a part of such ratification that any joint high commission of inquiry to which shall be referred the question as to whether or not a difference is subject to arbitration under Article 1 of the treaty as provided by Article III thereof, the American members of such commission shall be appointed by the president subject to the advice and consent of the senate and with the further understanding that the reservation in Article 1 of the treaty that the special agreement in each case shall be made by the president by and with the advice and consent of the senate means the concurrence of the senate in the full exercise of its constitutional powers in respect to every special agreement, whether submitted to the senate as the result of the report of a joint high commission of inquiry under Article III or otherwise."

LLOYD IS RE-ELECTED.



Representative J. T. Lloyd of Mo.

Washington.—The Democratic congressional committee reorganized unanimously electing Representative Lloyd of Missouri as chairman. Other officers elected were: Vice chairman, Representative Finley of South Carolina, Palmer of Pennsylvania and Rainey of Illinois; secretary, Representative Have of North Carolina, who succeeds Representative Dixon of Indiana; assistant secretary, Representative Bell of Georgia.

Gompers on Sherman Law.

Backing up his demand that the Sherman anti-trust law should be so amended as to exempt labor organizations from its provisions, Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, who appeared before the senate interstate commerce committee, quoted an interview he had with former President Roosevelt in 1908.

Canterbury Tales Bring $5,000.

New York, N. Y.—A Caxton edition of Chaucer's Canterbury Tales, dated 1477, which was the fourth or fifth book printed in England, brought $5,000, the highest bid for any book at the Hoe library auction. George D. Smith of this city bought the book. W. M. Hill of Chicago paid $1,800 for a Caesar, printed in Rome in 1469, and Julius Sondheim, a German dealer, paid $1,000 for a copy of Cicero's "Epistles to Brutus," printed in 1470. The bids amounted in all to $34,202.

Socialist Mayors to Confer.

Schenectady, New York. — Mayor George R. Lunn, socialist, has called into consultation Mayor Seidel of Milwaukee, and others in an endeavor to bring about an up to date revision of business methods in municipal departments. Among them is Morris G. Hillquist, an official of the socialist party of New York. The reforms under consideration include the standardization of specifications for all purchases, the opening of a purchasing agency allowing the city to insure its property.

Lodge Clerk Kills Self.

Beloit, Wisconsin.—Just before a committee started to audit his books as clerk of Beloit camp No. 2, Woodmen of the World, Solon R. Hayes shot and killed himself.

8 SHIPS ARE SUNK

ITALIAN CRUISERS DESTROY SEVEN GUNBOATS AND ARMED YACHT OF ENEMY.

ENGAGEMENT IN RED SEA

Ottoman Forces Wipe Out Guard of 150 Italians on Land in Engagement Near Homs.

Rome, Italy.—A severe naval action occurred Jan. 7 in the Red sea, when seven Turkish gunboats and an armed yacht were destroyed by Italian warships.

The division of Italian cruisers which has been scouring the coasts of the Red sea in search of Turkish war vessels and ships conveying contraband destined for the Turkish garrisons in the Yemen province in Arabia encountered the flotilla of Turkish gunboats and at once opened fire. The Turks replied, but their feeble armament succumbed to the superior weapons of the Italian war vessels.

The action occurred Jan. 7 outside the bay of Kunfida, a small walled town with a garrison and two forts about 500 miles north of Aden on the east coast of the Red sea.

Land Battle Reported.

Washington.—Earlier reports of the victory of the Turkish forces over the Italians in an engagement at Homs, Tripolitana, Jan. 6, were confirmed in a dispatch received at the Turkish embassy from the minister of foreign affairs in Constantinople.

MILLION FIRE DAMAGE.

Disastrous Cold Weather Blazes in Several Cities.

Chicago, Ill. — Seven fires in as many cities in the United States and Canada caused a loss of nearly a million dollars. Damage of about a quarter million dollars was done in Halifax, N. S., flames destroyed a five story building in St. Louis at a loss of $100,000, the plant of the Knabe Piano company at Norwood, Ohio, was destroyed at a loss of $100,000, and a minor blaze in New York doing damage amounting to but $20,000, drove 2,000 tenement dwellers out into the intense cold. The Masonic Temple building at Keokuk, Ia., was destroyed, and Grafton, W. Va., suffered a $155,000 fire.

Halifax, N. S.—Damage amounting to nearly a quarter of a million dollars was caused by a fire which destroyed the Halifax Herald building, several stores and offices and threatened to wipe out a considerable portion of the business section of the city.

$100,000 Fire at St. Louis.

St. Louis.—Fire in the five story building occupied by the Weyl bakery and cafe company at 419 Sixth street, caused damage estimated by the fire department at $100,000.

Knabe Piano Factory Burns.

Cincinnati.—The large piano manufacturing plant of the Knabe Bros. Piano company in Norwood, Ohio, was destroyed by fire. The Cincinnati fire department was called on for assistance. The piano factory was valued at $100,000.

2,000 People Flee Blaze.

New York.—The overturning of a pan of grease in a Bowery restaurant caused a fire which drove 2,000 tenement dwellers into the street, tied up elevated railroad traffic for several hours and threatened for a time to wipe out an entire block of tenements and lodging houses in the most densely populated section of New York city. The total damage was declared to be less than $20,000. Two ramshackle buildings, four stories in height, were destroyed.

$150,000 Blaze in South.

Grafton, W. Va.—The plant of the Grafton Wood Working company and five dwellings here were destroyed by fire with a loss of $155,000.

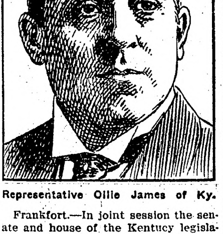
Keokuk Has $40,000 Fire.

Keokuk. — The Masonic Temple building here was destroyed by fire of unknown origin. It contained the Dodge theater and offices of the Standard Oil company. The loss is estimated at $40,000, most of which is covered by insurance.

Lost $75,000 at Milbank, S. D.

Milbank, So Dakota. — Fire practically destroyed an entire block, with a loss estimated at $75,000. The greatest individual loss, $30,000, was sustained by the South Dakota Furniture Co. All the city hydrants were frozen and the fire company was compelled to rely upon the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul railway company for their water supply. The firemen were handicapped in their efforts to subdue the conflagration by the fact that the thermometer registered 20 below zero and the temperature was aggravated by a bitter cold wind which blew from the northwest.

SENATOR OLLIE JAMES.



Representative Ollie James of Ky.

Frankfort.—In joint session the senate and house of the Kentucy legislature formally declared Ollie M. James, democrat, elected to the United States senate to succeed Thomas H. Paynter in March, 1913.

MILLIONS FOUND IN RUINS

OVER $300,000,000 IN CASH AND SECURITIES REMOVED.

As Much More Yet to Be Dug Up—The Fire Is Said to Carelessness.

New York, N. Y. — Between $300,000,000 and $400,000,000 in cash and securities were removed intact from the vaults of two of the financial institutions whose quarters were destroyed in the fire that gutted the Equitable Life Assurance society building Tuesday. The vaults of the Equitable Trust company alone yielded $300,000,000, which were transferred to the company's temporary offices.

Many millions more were taken from the vaults of the Mercantile Trust company of which $6,000,000 was represented in a single box of gold certificates which an officer of the institution carried through the streets tucked under his arm with only a lone policeman to protect him.

There remains yet to be opened the great vault of the Equitable Assurance society itself, with its treasure of $300,000,000, which is still buried so deep under tons of ice-cemented debris that the doors can not be reached.

The body of Battalion Chief Walsh is still in the ruins, and its recovery seems likely to be a task of days.

One of the peculiar features of the fire came to light when the discovery that the clock in the offices of the Mercantile Trust company was still telling the time. The mahogany case had been nearly burned away, but the pendulum was still swinging and the hands pointed to the correct time.

A contribution of $20,000 to a fund for the benefit of the workers at the fire was announced by a committee of directors of the Equitable Life Assurance society.

DR. WEBSTER CONFESSES.

Oregon, Ill., Jan. 13.—Dr. Harry E. Webster pleaded guilty to murder in the Ogle county circuit court here on the first anniversary of his marriage to Bessie Kent Webster, whom, by his own confession, he killed near here last September. Webster withdrew a plea of not guilty previously made by him.

Reids Lunch With Tafts.

Washington, D. C. — Whitelaw Reid, ambassador to Great Britain, and Mrs. Reid, were the guests at luncheon of the president and Mrs. Taft.

Bryan to Tour South.

New York, N. Y. — William J. Bryan prepared today to start south for a series of lectures and will stop off in Philadelphia and Washington.

News of Minnesota

Interesting Items Gathered Throughout the Gopher State.

FOR FARMERS' MUTUALS

Commissioner Preus Strongly In Favor of Them.

St. Paul.—An extraordinary growth of farmers' mutual insurance concerns operating in Minnesota was outlined by State Insurance Commissioner Preus at the annual convention of mutual insurance companies. He said the insurance in force in mutual township companies had increased from less than $1,000,000 to more than $274,000,000. He said the first farmers' mutual company in Minnesota was organized in 1878; now there were few counties without companies.

Mr. Preus said there were 149 township mutuals in Minnesota with assets of more than $383,000,000. In their favor he cited the cheapness of their rates. He said while stock companies charged an average rate of $1.31 per hundred, that of the farmers' township mutuals was approximately 18 cents. This, he said, was because of the fact that they had no high-salaried officers and that risks were lower. He said their expenses averaged 5 per cent of the cost of insurance, whereas in the case of stock companies the expense ratio was nearly 44 per cent.

Mr. Preus praised the management of the companies that had come under his notice.

A resolution protesting against the appointment of Judge Hook to the supreme court was adopted.

The following officers were elected: J. G. Mitchell, president; Ole Peterson, vice president; Earl Bullis, secretary.

SALARIES ARE FIXED

Commissioners Appropriate $6,000 for State Road Work.

Faribault. — Salaries of county officers have been fixed as follows: Attorney, $1,380; superintendent of schools, $1,666 with $252 allowed for a deputy; clerk of probate court, $70 a month. The Faribault Journal was chosen as the official paper. The commissioners appropriated $6,000 to be used in the improvement of state roads. The state will appropriate a similar amount.

COAL AND GAS FOUND

Mansfield Township Farm in Freeborn County Now in Public Eye.

Austin.—That coal has been discovered on the Henry Menerich farm in Mansfield township, is the report. Natural gas is flowing in sufficient quantities to warrant belief that there are large coal deposits in that locality. Dr. Emmons of the state geological survey says if favorable reports of preliminary operations are received the discovery will be investigated by the state.

DYNAMITE SUICIDE

Stick Is Lighted and Ely Man Is Blown to Pieces.

Ely.—Dan Szikora, a laborer, ended his life when he deliberately laid down on a lighted stick of dynamite. A man named Siren, who was chopping wood, heard the explosion and found Szikora had been literally blown into fragments. Szikora had recently injured his hand and it is thought that brooding over this may have led him to kill himself.

WILL ANSWER PARKER

Le Sueur Attorney Draws Fire of University President.

Le Sueur.—President George E. Vincent of the State University is going to carry the war into the "enemy's country," so to speak, for he is going to give a free lecture here on "Efficiency in Education," in which it is expected that he will answer Ora J. Parker's recent bitter arraignment of the university in an address given in the university chapel.

ARREST BOXER'S SECOND

Baudette Jury Finds Participant in Bout Died of Fractured Skull.

Duluth. — A coroner's jury at Baudette found that the death of Andrew L. Anderson of West Duluth, who took part in a boxing contest at Spooner New Year's night, was caused by a fracture of the skull. A blood clot had formed as a result of the fracture. Bert Caldwell, who seconded Anderson, has been arrested and will be taken to Bemidji.

EASTMAN ANNOUNCES.

ALVAH EASTMAN

St. Cloud.—Alvah Eastman editor of the Journal-Press gave out his first statement regarding his candidacy for the republican nomination for congressman-at-large. It was addressed to the editors of the Brainerd Dispatch and stated definitely that he would make the race.

SUMMER FARM COURSE

Agricultural Expert to Superintend Work at Winona Normal.

Winona.—Special work in elementary agriculture to be offered at the summer term at the Winona normal school. Superintendent Schulz of the state department of public instruction has consented to assist along this line, and an agricultural specialist will be provided to superintend the work. A conference will be held in Winona between Superintendent Schulz and the county superintendents from this part of the state to work out this plan.

The candidates for graduation from the normal school with the close of the winter and spring terms have been listed and announced. Counting persons already graduated, the total for the year will approximate 130, ninety-five of whom will earn the advanced diploma.

When the elementary diploma was reduced in value by the Legislature of 1909 only 38 per cent of the local school were completing their full course. The number has increased to nearly 75 per cent in four years.

TEACHERS' GRADES HIGH

State High School Board Likely to Act at Winona Meeting.

Winona.—An important meeting of the State High School board will be held January 16, when a higher standard for certification of teachers for the graded and high schools of the state will be established.

It is understood that the board will rule out of the school under its supervision all teachers who do not hold at least a complete first grade certificate. The board will also decline to permit the graduates of the training or normal departments of the high schools of the state to teach in the elementary grades of the graded and high schools.

It is also probable that the board will determine upon a date in the near future to mark the beginning of the period when no one will be accepted for positions in the grades who has not had at least a year of professional training for the work of teaching.

SOCIALISTS IN POWER

Crookston Council Confirms Appointments of New Mayor.

Crookston.—The regime of Mayor H. L. Larson, Socialist, began when the city council elected P. Snyder president and confirmed the appointments of W. E. Rowe, city attorney; David Sanders, street commissioner; Aaron Eck, chief of police, and Nelson Yonke, Godbut and Hanson, patrolmen. The confirmation of E. J. Boyer, as city engineer, now with the state drainage department at St. Paul, was laid over one week for investigation.

The unanimous confirmation of the other appointments was a surprise as a fight had been predicted.

The mayor recommended a municipal loan bureau instead of a poor department and the lowering of telephone rates. He opposed the $10,000 armory bonds voted at the last election, and favored park improvements.

The Amir's Move

NARRATIVE OF CAPTAIN ADAMS
"Detective-Diplomat"

By H. M. EGBERT

(Copyright, by W. G. Chapman.)

I SHALL always remember the 10th day of March, 1905, because of two remarkable incidents that happened to me on that date.

I had returned from a mission to a foreign court, which I had accomplished to the great satisfaction of his majesty, King Edward VII., and was awaiting a new summons in my chambers in Half Moon street, Piccadilly. For this reason I did not venture to go far from home, but contented myself with a short walk every afternoon. On the date I have mentioned I was walking homeward about three o'clock in the afternoon when I noticed a crowd collected around a shop window. Pushing my way to the front, from curiosity, I perceived that they were watching a mechanical figure, decked out in Indian costume and turban, around whose neck hung a card on which was printed an invitation to all and sundry to play chess with the automaton.

Having always prided myself on my chess playing, and having acquired something of a reputation at the game when stationed with my regiment in India, its home and where it best flourishes, I stepped within and sat down at the board opposite the figure, which was, of course, as I well knew, merely an automaton manipulated with wires by a player somewhere in the basement of the building. Hardly had three moves been exchanged before I perceived that I was matched against a player of no mean ability. The game was a hard one, but, just as I was confident that I had my adversary at my mercy, by a totally unexpected move he corralled my queen and took her with his bishop, placing me in a position of hopeless inferiority.

Piqued at this unexpected ending, I resigned the game and set up the pieces afresh. The same thing happened. Again the game went my way; again my queen was hemmed in and taken by the bishop of the automaton. And a third time the same thing occurred, nor could I discern in what way I placed my piece in jeopardy.

I had been so intent upon the game that, when I arose to go, I found a couple of hours had elapsed. Evening was approaching and Piccadilly lay under a dense white fog. As I passed out of the door a colored attendant, with a salaam, handed me a piece of cardboard on which was written the unsigned message:

"I will play you again!"

That suited me, but for the present I must get home to see whether any message had arrived for me from the foreign office. I had groped my way through the fog as far as what I thought was the Green park, when a momentary lifting disclosed to me the name of a street totally unfamiliar set into the wall of an old garden. I had evidently taken some wrong turn and wandered into what I conjectured was the neighborhood of the Tottenham Court road district, or some purlieu of Bloomsbury. While I was debating my next move I was startled to hear a woman's voice whisper into my ear, in a manner betokening extreme agitation:

"Do you understand French, monsieur?"

At my affirmative answer she appeared out of the fog and clasped me by the arm. She was of an Oriental cast of features—Greek or Syrian, I should have guessed—but her French was precise and idiomatic. Her first words revealed her status.

"My mistress is sorely in need," she whispered. "Will you help her?"

"What am I to do?" I rejoined, scrutinizing her carefully.

"She has been kidnaped. She is kept in this house; she has been there for days. Tonight she may escape before the prince returns from St. James' palace if some one will help her, show her where to go. Ah, monsieur will assist; he is a gentleman! Our need is desperate."

My curiosity had almost overcome my prudence when the woman fairly dragged me through the gate of the garden, across a tiled pavement, and into the fog-bound recesses of an ancient house, apparently unfurnished, up several flights of stairs, until we stood before a door on the top story. She knocked twice and waited; suddenly the door was flung open from within, disclosing a light so dazzling that my eyes, accustomed to the obscurity of the dim street, were for a moment half blinded.

A woman stood before me, of the same cast of features as the maid, but of an hauteur as of one born to command, which quickly demonstrated to me their relative positions. As she stood in the entrance of the brilliantly lighted room, which was richly carpeted and furnished with wonderful hangings of the silkiest texture, and furniture inlaid with mother-of-pearl, she appeared to have been struggling with that bane of civilized life—packing a portmanteau. Odd garments and toilet articles lay scattered over the floor.

She cast a searching glance at me over her light gauze veil, which only enhanced the beauty of her features.

"This gentleman speaks French. God sent him—by a miracle. He will assist!" exclaimed the maid.

"Mademoiselle can rely upon my service to any extent," I answered.

The woman's attitude, which had been of measured hostility, suddenly altered.

"I believe you," she cried. "I do not care who you are. There is five minutes yet before we need start. Sit down; I will be brief. If at the end of my narrative you decide that I am not worthy of aid—"

"It is not necessary to tell me," I protested.

She flushed. "But I do not choose to be a beggar under false pretenses," she cried. "I am the Princess Khadijah Kassim. I see the name conveys no meaning to you—"

"On the contrary," I answered, "the name of Khadijah Kassim's father was famous in the Punjaub."

"You have been in India?" she cried.

"I was an officer in the Indian army."

"Nothing could be better. Listen, then, and I will be as speedy as possible. When my father was old he foresaw that upon his death, since he had no son, Prince Rakkim Khan would seize upon the throne of Beluchistan. The prince demanded my hand in marriage in order to obtain the throne with me. To avoid him, my father sent me to Paris to be educated, together with my maid here, in a convent. There we spent five years together. Meanwhile he begged the British government to declare a protectorate over his kingdom and to acknowledge me as his heir. The negotiations dragged. My father died suddenly last November. Rakkim Khan sent troops into Beluchistan and seized the throne. Then, having secured his position, he came boldly to London to justify himself with the British government. You have heard he was here?"

The papers had been full of the visit of this eastern prince; had vied with one another in publishing stories of his magnificence, his cruelty, his chivalry, his eccentricities—above all, his passion for chess. Only that day, I knew, he had had an interview with the king.

"On the way he sent envoys to Paris. They presented forged credentials from my father, of whose death I was unaware. I went with them; they delivered me into the prince's hands in this house, to which I came expecting to meet my father. He holds me here in captivity and every day he plagues me to marry him, to place his right to the throne beyond dispute. And his old abbot disputes with me upon the duties of our religion, showing how a woman may have no say against such a suitor."

I had heard of the abbot too, the fanatical Mullah of Seistan, who had much the same rank among the Mohammedan hierarchy as a bishop holds with us.

"This afternoon, in the fog, I learned that a way of escape lay open. The slave who guards me accompanied his master. The prince was oversure of me. Help me to fly to my own country and I will reward you richly."

"When will the prince return?" I asked.

"At any moment," she replied, wringing her hands.

Yet she remained there helplessly and seemed to make no effort to escape. It would have been inexplicable in a European; but I understood how far divorced is the life of an oriental lady from all action. Accustomed to have their every move anticipated by a host of slaves, in moments of peril, when they have to shift for themselves, they seem to be affected by a sort of paralysis.

"Come, then," I exclaimed impatiently. I snatched up a fur traveling cloak which I perceived lying upon a chair, and wrapped it around her. She turned to her grip, in which she had been trying to pack some foolish and unnecessary articles; a big doll, sweetmeats, a dog collar studded with pearls. I took the portmanteau from her by force. "There is no time for it!" I said. "This way!" And I fairly hustled the two women into the corridor and, taking each by one arm, descended the stairs with them. At the bottom the maid seemed to take courage; she released herself and, running ahead, opened the door which communicated with the garden. It was night, and the fog was clearing; stars shone faintly through the moving wrack. A carriage rolled up to the entrance and stopped. We ran down the garden and pulled at the gate which led into the street. It swung back and, blocking the entrance, I saw Rakkim Khan himself and the Mullah, in his green turban.

An evil smile swept across the prince's features. He understood the situation perfectly. "Twice in one day!" I heard him mutter in Punjaubi, though I did not understand the significance of the phrase. For one moment he stood as though paralyzed with rage; then he whipped a short sword from under his cloak. That moment of delay saved my life. I leaped upon him, caught his sword belt as he tugged at the scabbard, and closed my hand upon the hilt. We wrestled for the weapon together, the prince's face livid with rage and fear. "Fly!" I cried in French to the women; but neither stirred. Rooted to the spot, apparently, with terror, they had not even strength to scream. I felt that I was the prince's master. Gradually I overcame his resistance. In another instant I should have had him at my mercy when a shower of sparks flew up before my eyes. Then a dark curtain seemed to close over my brain and blot out the impressions of the senses.

When I opened my eyes a policeman was shaking me. He helped me to my feet, not unkindly, believing that I had imbibed too freely, and solicitous for my welfare, his solicitude not unmingled with anticipations of pecuniary recompense for helping me to my residence. All at once his aspect changed.

"Blackjacked!" he muttered, holding up my head, which drooped unsteadily. "What 'appened, sir?"

"Happened?"

"Your 'ead's all covered with blood, sir. Did they get your watch and cash?"

No, my watch, money and jewelry were undisturbed.

"Must have been scared away, sir. Shall a call a keb, sir?"

"Yes. What is the time?"

"'Arf past eleven at night, sir."

"And where am I?" I asked. "Is that the Persian embassy?"

His eyes followed the direction of my finger. Then he burst into laughter.

"Persian H'embassy? Lord love you, sir, that's Greek street, Soho, the worst street in London."

My cab came up, I tipped the man, and was driven home to Half Moon street. All the way I puzzled over what had occurred. Presently it became clear. I had been struck on the head by the Moslem bishop, who, persuading the prince that it would be unsafe to dispatch me, had had me conveyed in a cab and flung into the alley in which the policeman found me. But what of the women? My brain was reeling. I reached home, found my way to my apartment and, my servant Talbot being away on furlough, undressed myself somehow and was soon fast asleep.

I awoke with a clear brain but an aching head. At first I was inclined to set down the whole affair to nightmare; then a quantity of clotted blood

At this crisis I was totally unarmed upon my pillow convinced me that I had actually been the victim of an assault. I dressed leisurely. When I entered the next room, however, I found a dispatch requiring my presence at St. James' palace instantly. It had been there since the preceding evening.

Gulping down a measure of hot coffee, I sprang into a cab and was soon at the palace gates. I found that I had been expected on the preceding evening. Sir Francis (now baron) Knowles, his majesty's secretary, was inclined to lecture me in his usual fussy manner, but a sudden summons from his majesty sent him hurrying out. When he returned he brought the king with him. He greeted me cordially.

"Captain Adams," he said, "we have another mission for you, one peculiarly suited to your romantic temperament. We want you to go to Paris and take charge of a Persian princess."

"The devil!" I cried, forgetting to whom I spoke. "Rakkim Khan's got her!"

Thereupon I had to explain the events of the preceding evening. The king was very grave when I had concluded my story.

"If Rakkim Khan gets back to Beluchistan," he said, "he will lease a seaport to Germany in return for her protection, and so give her a foothold upon the Persian gulf littoral in revenge for our refusal to countenance his usurpation. You must follow them up at once and find means to set the princess free. Once freed, take her to Peshawur, upon the Beluchi border, where a regiment of British troops will be placed at your disposal to restore her to the throne. We cannot let Beluchistan fall into the prince's hands. But so long as the princess is in his power he holds her as a hostage, and all our efforts will be fruitless. The prince left England at midnight yesterday for Calais. If only we had known he had her with him—"

That was all the instructions that I received. How was I to rescue this helpless lady when her very whereabouts were unknown? I soon reflected, however, that it would be impossible for the prince, traveling with his retinue, to keep his progress secret from the police of the countries which he passed through. Accordingly I got into telegraphic communication with several continental capitals, and soon ascertained that he had landed at Calais that morning and taken train for the German border.

There was only one thing to do; to stick doggedly upon their trail and follow them. So long as they were in Europe I should be powerless; when they reached the no man's lands of Asia it would be different. For it was clear that, in order to avoid the British ships of war cruising in the Persian gulf, they would be compelled to make the overland journey across the Arabian deserts and through Mesopotamia.

My first admonition that they knew I was in pursuit came to me when I occupied their suite in the hotel at Belgrade, which they had evacuated 12 hours before. The room I slept in was the princess'. Pinned to the cover of the dressing table was a hasty scribble in French:

"Help me, monsieur. When once we have reached the desert I shall be in his power and forced to marry him. Mon Dieu! I hate him more each moment. I shall stab myself to the heart rather than wed him."

It was not my intention to attack the prince and his retinue single-handed. I had been busy sending out telegraphic dispatches; a detachment of jackies from the British squadron was to be placed at my disposal as soon as they crossed the Dardanelles and moved upon Damascus. This was the starting point of the caravan journey, and we were to come upon them in a pass of the Taurus range, between Damascus and the sea.

In the hotel at Constantinople I found another note, left in the hands of the dragoman, for "the gentleman who should arrive from England on the morrow."

"I have abandoned hope," it read. "I have secured a loaded pistol. I swear that, unless you rescue me soon, I shall blow out my brains."

A British cruiser was in Constantinople. While the prince was embarking to cross to the Asiatic shore upon a leaking Turkish gunboat, I was selecting my company from among the seamen for the enterprise of staying his progress. I selected 15 veterans of little eastern wars. On the following morning we landed at Aleppo and proceeded inland toward our destination, disguised as tourists, since, under international law, our act was invasion of friendly territory.

Upon the second morning, encamped in the pass of the Taurus, we had word from our scouts that a caravan was approaching. The pass was the only entrance to Damascus through the mountains; once they gained this, nothing could bar their progress.

I placed my men in advantageous positions behind rocks; then, as the long line of mules and camels came into sight, rode down with a white flag to greet them. An elderly Turk came out to me.

"You have with you," I said, in French, "a prince and a princess whom we are seeking. Give them to us and go your way in peace, brother."

"We are but merchants," he quavered, his white beard rising and falling in agitation. "We carry goods to Damascus. Moreover, there is no woman in this caravan. Come and see for yourself."

"It is well," I answered. "But remember, at the least treachery, I have men hidden behind those rocks who will shoot you down mercilessly."

We rode down the line, past the halted camels and the mules, which, released from their harness, were rolling ecstatically in the dust of the road. Upon the ground near by were well-packed bales of cottons, silks, carpets and other eastern ware. There were some sleek horses at a picket line; there were Armenian merchants, Turkish guards, and negro or Abyssinian slaves; but there was no sign of a woman in the caravan, or of Prince Rakkim Khan.

"Will your highness not rest in the shade and partake of coffee?" the old Turk asked.

I refused. Weary and dispirited, I turned away. Had they passed us or evaded us? And then, just when all was blackest, my foot struck against something half hidden beneath a bale of goods. It was the dog collar that I had seen in the apartment in London; there was no mistaking it. I sprang upon the old Turk and grasped him by the throat.

"You lying scoundrel, which way have they gone?" I cried, shaking him back and forth till his false teeth rattled in their setting.

He gurgled feebly. I released him, and he pointed feebly with shaking finger down the road by which they had come.

"They had ridden on horseback—all three," he stammered. "The prince and she and the priest. They will cross the mountains by the footroad five miles away. Curses on him for disturbing the progress of us merchants; we have been in mortal fear of him and his heretic priest, the Persian."

I cast my eye along the line of picketed beasts, evidently the stable which Rakkim had abandoned when he discovered us awaiting him. I must select the best and ride swiftly. Once over the Faurus, he could enlist unlimited aid among the Damascenes. I picked out two supple splendid beasts. Two minutes later they were bridled and saddled and I was following the sharp hoof-tracks into the mountains, as fast as I could pick them up.

Ten minutes afterward I saw them ascending a slope two miles away from me. They looked back, I think, for all halted, and the horses appeared to be turned in irresolution. Then they were off again, over the crest and away.

I rode each horse alternately, which gave my mounts an advantage of speed. Half an hour afterward and only the width of the valley divided us. Now I could see them plainly; I saw the green turban of the priest dark against the snows of the summit that rose in front of them. And then my heart leaped with joy. They could not cross that peak before I should be upon them. They had miscalculated the viability of the pass in early April, when every stream was a torrent and every path a morass. I hurried onward.

As my horses picked their way up the slope I saw the prince confer with his bishop. Then they deliberately turned back and rode toward me. Less than three hundred yards separated us now. I saw him spur his steed; he came toward me at a furious gallop; as he did so he pulled something from his breast and, an instant later, I heard the sound of the discharge and felt my horse give a mighty leap into the air as the bullet struck her. She bent at the knees, her head hung; I could scarcely spring clear of her before she toppled and fell, pierced through the heart. At the same instant the other steed broke from my hand and went, plunging and rearing, down the snowy slope. As I rose I felt in my pistol pocket for my weapon. It was not there. Whether the old Turk had robbed me or whether I had lost it I do not know, but at this crisis I was totally unarmed.

Meanwhile the prince had reined in his horse a hundred feet away in anticipation of an exchange of bullets. Then he perceived my dilemma and, with a furious cry, rode me down and encircled me in the abandonment of his triumph, pointing a pistol at my brain.

I had risen to my feet; I watched him silently, because there was nothing to say. At last he spoke.

"In London," he said, his voice trembling with rage, "the laws do not permit an injured husband, whatever his rank, to take the life of the violator of his home. But in Syria—eh, monsieur, why should you not die?"

I hardly understood the meaning of his harangue; I was thinking of my unfulfilled mission and the failure of my country's ends.

He raised the pistol, took deliberate aim—then lowered it as a scream rang through the hills. A moment later I saw the princess come galloping down toward us, the priest at her side, in vain attempting to restrain her.

"You shall not kill him," she exclaimed in French. "I lied to you. He was no lover of mine."

"What?" cried the prince. "Did I not find him at your side in the garden?"

She burst into tantalizing laughter.

"It was but a scheme of my maid's," she cried. "I wanted to make you jealous, to see whether you wished to wed me for my kingdom or for myself. To that end I timed my appearance in the garden to be coincident with your return. To that end, also, I left those notes for the Englishman in each hotel we stayed at, of which you found all but two. And also I wished to put to the proof of experience the saying of the poet Hafiz, 'Outside of Persia there is neither loyalty nor love.'"

The prince appeared utterly discomfited.

"Will you swear upon the book of the prophet Jesus that you have not pursued us to win her love from me?" he cried.

"I have seen her but once," I answered. "That was in London, where her maid, approaching me in the street, invoked my aid in helping her to escape from you, who had stolen her from her convent in Paris."

"Paris?" he cried. "Why, she came to London of her own accord, to discuss marriage with me, seeing that she had none to negotiate for her. Truly the ways and schemes of women are past finding out." He turned and looked into my eyes with a piercing gaze.

"Why did you pursue us hither?" he asked.

"Why did you fly?" I answered.

"Why?" he repeated. "Because I feared the English government wished to steal my bride and give her to you. Perdition! She told me that. Malediction on women's pranks!"

"You had married her?" I cried in astonishment. "I pursued you in order to release her from her captivity and secure the throne of Beluchistan to her. Had you made known to my government that you had married her with her consent, we would have made a treaty with you."

The prince let his revolver fall.

"Allah give us domination over women!" he said softly. "Verily, their tricks are stronger than our right arms. Here this woman has set me at war with you and your nation, and all to gratify her pride and to test some saying of a dead and gone poet." He paused. A smile illumined his face. "Is not this reminiscent of our first encounter—the one before that in the garden?" he said.

"Our first encounter?" I exclaimed.

"Yes. For my bishop married us and, incidentally, destroyed the motive for your pursuit."

"Well?"

"Parbleu, friend, did I not take your queen with my bishop three times in succession on that same afternoon when we played chess together in the shop window?"

MOST LOYAL FRIEND OF MAN

Eloquent and Deserved Tribute Paid to This Inseparable and Faithful Companion.

Where can man find in the animal kingdom a truer friend, a closer companion, a more faithful guardian or a more efficient and braver ally than the dog?

Friendship in life may spring from many causes, and, under test, vanish like mist before the sun and wind, but the friendship of a dog can always be relied upon unless you yourself destroy it.

A dog will not bite the hand that gives it food and drink.

Can one imagine a closer friendship between animal and man than that existing between the lonely trapper and his faithful companion? What company they are to each other! Years of association have made communication an open book to them, the dog to the man, the man to the dog. A look, a nod, a gesture, a single word, and with a wag of the tail the dog understands and obeys.

And mindful of his good friend, the lone hunter sees to it that he goes not hungry if there's enough for one, yet not enough for two.

At the blazing campfire in the early hours of the night the trees have listened to many a one sided conversation between man and dog, and not one sided either, for with eyes and wagging tail the dog replied. And when the master rolled himself in his blanket and went off to sleep, with his faithful dog curled up beside him, a sense of security, absolute, was his.

Let a prowler come within scenting distance of the camp and a low growl told the master to be alert and doing.

With what glee the dog trotted by its master's side when the rounds to traps were made! A rabbit, a squirrel, a hedgehog or a porcupine might entice him off the beaten path, but only for a moment. He had grown old in the service and understood that such game was not for such a staid dog as he.

Then the day comes when the decree of war has come upon our four footed friend, for in the tussle with old bruin it has been maimed to the death. With what care does the master lave and bind the wounds and how lovingly he beds and shelters his old companion. Nothing is neglected to make him comfortable and bring him back to strength and health. But it is no use. The old dog, refusing to eat, grows lank and wan, until, when too weak to raise its head, it can only look and feebly tap the ground with its grateful tail. And then comes the saddest duty of his life, to open the ground and hide away the last of a dog that was to him everything that man or woman might have been, but was not. A dog that never lied to him, that was always kind and willing, ever mindful of his master and faithful and loyal even unto death.

Put No Limit on Trust.

The late Meredith Townsend had an affection for Scotsmen as contributors to the Spectator, of which he was for so many years proprietor and co-editor. Mr. Townsend's liking for the Scots was based on an experience he had in Leith when a boy. He was on holiday, and had run short of money for his return to London. He boldly boarded a London passenger boat, intimated his desire to the captain to go south, explained who he was, and stated that he was without funds. Seemingly favorably impressed by the lad's tale and appearance, the captain, a Scot, said that would be all right, and showed him to a cabin. "But," said young Townsend, "this is a saloon. As things are, steerage would do all right." "Na, na, my mannie," said the captain; "if I trust ye at all, I'll trust ye first class!"

Pure Cinch.

"My wife can't decide on a car." "This model is the last word in touring cars." "The last word, eh? Then she'll have it."

True Happiness.

Happiness consists in activity; such is the constitution of our nature; it is a running stream, and not a stagnant pool.—Good.

SERIAL STORY

No Man's Land

A ROMANCE

By Louis Joseph Vance

Illustrations by Ray Walters

(Copyright, 1910, by Louis Joseph Vance.)

15

SYNOPSIS.

Garrett Coast, a young man of New York City, meets Douglas Blackstock, who invites him to a card party. He accepts, although he dislikes Blackstock, the reason being that both are in love with Katherine Thaxter. Coast fails to convince her that Blackstock is unworthy of her friendship. At the party Coast meets two named Dundas and Van Tuyl. There is a quarrel, and Blackstock shoots Van Tuyl dead. Coast struggles to wrest the weapon from him, thus the police discover them. Coast is arrested for murder. He is convicted, but as he begins his sentence, Dundas names Blackstock as the murderer and kills himself. Coast becomes free, but Blackstock has married Katherine Thaxter and fled. Coast purchases a yacht and while sailing sees a man thrown from a distant boat. He rescues the fellow who is named Appleyard. They arrive at a lonely island, known as No Man's Land. Coast starts out to explore the place and comes upon some deserted buildings. He discovers a man dead. Upon going further and approaching a house he sees Katherine Thaxter, who explains that her husband, under the name of Black, has bought the island. He is blind, a wireless operator and has a station there. Coast informs her that her husband murdered Van Tuyl. Coast sees Blackstock and some Chinamen burying a man. They fire at him.

CHAPTER X.—(Continued.)

Coast decided to make himself a present of whatever benefit might be held to inhere in the doubt. He gained the rear entrance in a bound, with another found himself charging down the embankment, in whose treacherous composition of loose sand and gravel he struggled momentarily and vainly for a footing. Then he fell and rolled ingloriously, accompanied by a cloud of dirt, rubbish and small stones. At the bottom of a descent of some thirty feet he picked himself up, unhurt but shaken, just as a second bullet ploughed up the sand two paces to one side.

There was no longer any question as to the identity of the target. Coast permitted himself a single, fleeting, upward glance, caught a cinematographic glimpse of the Chinaman—like some huge, ungainly bird in his loose, flapping garments, descending the bank—and turned and ran headlong.

Presently, some distance ahead, the shadowy proportions of the beached catboat took shape through the mist. For some reason Coast hailed it with a sob of hope: Heaven alone knows what manner of hope the sight of it held out to his dazed preceptions. He had merely a bewildered notion that if only he could hold out until he reached the boat it would afford him some sort of shelter—or else that he might stumble across some nondescript weapon of defence—a broken oar—anything. . . .

Somehow he did manage to gain the little vessel, and, with his pursuer pounding on not fifteen feet in the rear, doubled like a rabbit round its stern. He had a fugitive impression, as he passed, of a curious something crouching there; but with no time for recognition, or indeed for thought, he shot on, of a sudden painfully alive to the fact that he had been mistaken, that there was no refuge for him there. . . .

Then he pulled up on the sound of a heavy fall behind him—a dull crash followed by a short, stifled cry and a sharp crack as of two stones coming together.

He looked back in time to see the short, starved figure of Appleyard straightening up from the body of the Chinaman, to see the little man's half-friendly, half-apologetic smile, and to hear him say in a tone of quiet reassurance: "All right, old top. He's down and three times out."

Incredulous and half exhausted, Coast staggered back to the boat.

The Chinaman lay like some monstrous effigy of man, inert, sprawling, with a sagging jaw, shut eyes and a ragged, bleeding wound in the middle of his forehead. A bit of driftwood—part of the water-bleached branch of a small tree—was twisted between his feet; a formidably jagged stone in Appleyard's hand eked out the story of his downfall.

"It wasn't anything," the little man explained with his timid, makeshift smile, noting Coast's expression. "I saw you coming—heard the shots to begin with—and made preparation accordin'. Lucky you chanced this way. Otherwise . . ."

He shrugged and cast away the stone that had served so famously. "We'd better be making tracks before the others came down on us," he suggested calmly.

"You—you've killed him?" Coast panted.

"Um-m—no; sorry to say." Appleyard moved to one side and picked up the revolver which had fallen from the Chinaman's hand. "Unfortunately just stunned. . . . Mebbe," he added, brightening momentarily, "it'll turn out concussion of the brain, but"—he made a dubious mouth—"I'm afraid not. Those brutes are tough as pig-iron. Still, I think I'm some promisin' entry in the David and Goliath class—what? . . . Come along now: no time to waste."

He dropped the weapon into a pocket, and seizing Coast's arm, began to trot him along the beach in the direction of the Echo's dory.

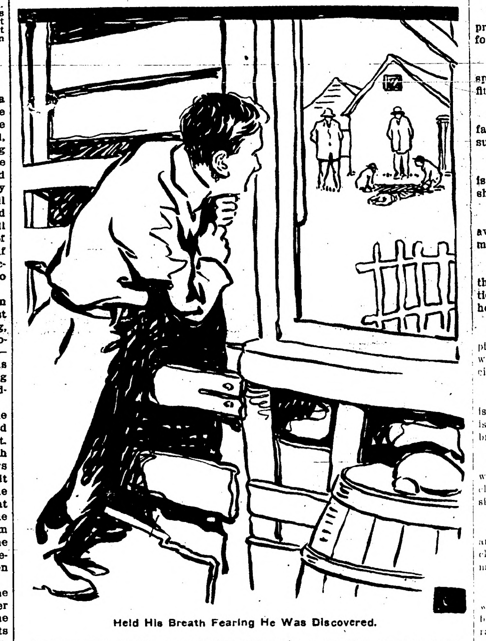
"You see," he commented severely, "what comes of going out alone. Next time I go calling, I want you to stay at home and keep out of mischief. Now you hear me!"

CHAPTER XI.

While his crew was whipping the dory's headwarp round a deck-cleat, Coast stood in the cock-pit of the Echo, frowning thoughtfully at the blurred loom of land to starboard, whose shadow seemed to fall cold upon his soul with a sinister presage of suffering and disaster. For there was Katherine, there Blackstock, there mystery, terror, death; . . . and there he himself must be, for her sake.

Out of the horror and turmoil of the last half-hour he emerged with conviction and understanding. She must not be left alone in that place of nameless perils. Such doubts as he had previously entertained no longer found footing in his thoughts: it was settled now; he would stay.

In the emotional stress of his unforeseen encounter with the woman temporarily he had forgotten the victim of the bowstring. But now, basing his conclusions on what she had told him of the personnel of the island, he saw without doubt that the man could have been no other than that Mr. Power she had named as Blackstock's assistant. Power was an Irish name: Coast had catalogued the man as of Irish extraction, at sight. . . .



Held His Breath Fearing He Was Discovered.

If the motive for the assassination remained dark, that Blackstock was privy to it, if not the prime instigator of the crime, was as patent as daylight.

Coast knew in his heart that he was fated never to leave No Man's Land while the woman he loved remained there with the man he feared, despised and hated.

Mr. Appleyard, having made fast the dory, sat himself down, filled and lighted his pipe, and for several moments regarded Coast with a look at once contemplative, penetrating and sympathetic. Then he chose to divert his employer with an enigmatic observation.

"Silly of you," he remarked coolly.

Coast came out of his abstraction with a start. "What's that?" he demanded sharply.

"I said: 'Silly of you.'"

"What d'you mean by that?"

"I mean," drawled the little man, "that you're wasting valuable time standing there with your hands idle and trying to make up your mind what's best to be done about it. If we were only a bit better acquainted, or if you had a grain of perspicuity in your make-up, you'd have realised long ago that you'd better leave it all to me."

"What—!" stammered Coast. "What in thunder are you talking about?"

Appleyard removed the pipe from his mouth and waved it comprehensively toward the island. "That," he said, sententious, smiling sweetly up into the amazed face of his companion. "Your predicament," he added. "If you'd only stayed put, I'd have had everything fixed, but of course you had to butt in and complicate matters. Not that I'm at all dismayed; I can still arrange everything satisfactorily, I think. But you oughtn't to interfere. If I didn't like you so much I'd be awful' vexed, honest I would!"

Coast sat down and gasped with astonishment and irrational resentment. "Either you're mad!" he said—"raving—or—"

"You lose your first guess," the little man interrupted calmly. "I'm talking sense, and I'll prove it. Listen: you're cudgelling your—hmm!—brains for an excuse to go back and establish yourself on No Man's Land—persona grata to the inhabitants, temporarily at least. Aren't you?"

Coast's jaw dropped. "How do you know that?" he breathed, thunderstruck.

"I'm the best little guesser you ever met," replied Appleyard complacently. "Take it from me, I'm wise to a lot more than you ever dreamed. Furthermore, I'm for you. Now, with that entente clearly established, are you willing to put yourself in my hands and rest easy in my assurance that you'll win out, or do you prefer to blunder on in your infatuated, bullheaded way and take your chances?"

"But—but—who are you? What do you know?"

"I'm the man in the know in this case, all right. But that's not the point. I'll explain, and to your satisfaction, later. For the present, the questions is: Will you or won't you trust me?"

Coast made a helpless gesture. "Go on," he said.

"Good enough. Now," continued Appleyard, rising, "the first thing to do is to clear out of this. You get the anchor up and I'll start the machinery."

"But—"

"Tut, tut! Leave it to me; I'm the doctor, and I'm handing you the only possible prescription, based on an exhaustive diagnosis of the symptoms, et cetera. And you'd better hump yourself. As things stand," the little man paused to explain with a trace of impatience, seeing that Coast made no move and was on the point of interposing further objections, "we have the advantage of our friends ashore. We know who they are, but they don't know us. But if we stick round here it's only a question of time before we're discovered. Whereas, if we fold our tent and silently beat it, we can return anon (get that 'anon?') and they'll have less excuse for identifying us with the first rash intruders. Moreover, we shall have had time to study the situation in detail and plan our campaign accordingly. . . . Now will you get that mud-hook up?"

He turned his back to Coast and prepared to uncover the motor, while his putative employer, mystified and talked into a condition of semi-hypnosis, silently rose and clambered forward.

By the time he had weighed in the light anchor and returned to the cockpit, the little engine was trobbing busily and the Echo had begun to move, Appleyard at the wheel, imperturbable, steering by the compass on the seat at his side. He nodded satisfaction as Coast began to coil the cable, still dazed and almost inclined to credit the preposterous situation to a waking dream.

"Good!" said the little man. "Now get below and change—you can't afford to catch your death, standing round in those dripping rags—and relieve me, that I may do the same. Furthermore, I'd be glad of a drop of grog. We'll talk later."

"Do you mind telling me where we're bound?" Coast inquired with mild sarcasm.

"Not at all. This course ought to take us clear of Devil's Bridge," returned the little man helpfully.

Coast was in a more cheerful mood, too, when he returned, the confidence and courage of his manner bearing witness to the restorative power of plenty of hot coffee and bacon and eggs.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

A Good Business Man.

Doctor—"Now, Mr. Macdonald, I must take your temperature."

Macdonald (nee Israels)—"Ach, but you cannot. Everything is in der name of my wife!"—Everybody's Weekly

---

NOTES from MEADOWBROOK FARM

By William Pitt

Cows like pumpkins.

Separate all indisposed turkeys.

Have a regular day for greasing the wagon.

The cow is a vital part of the dairy machine.

The olive trees date back to very early times.

Few horses can digest perfectly clear timothy hay.

There is no animal more unprofitable than a poor sheep.

Horses that have a light hay diet are seldom affected with heaves.

It does not make very much, if any, difference when a cow is fed grain.

Good horse blankets are savers of valuable horse flesh and high-priced feed.

You can hardly push pigs too fast, providing you use the right kind of food.

Dirty collars are probably as responsible for sore shoulders as ill-fitting ones.

You cannot fatten a brood sow and fatten a hog alike and make the best success of both.

From eight to ten hens to one tom is good mating with turkeys, and should produce 150 poults.

A good cow ought to produce on an average 25 pounds of four per cent. milk daily for 300 days in the year.

Close housing and bad ventilation in the cow stable are favorable conditions for starting tuberculosis in a herd.

Besides dry nesting quarters, the pigs should have a good-sized lot in which they may get plenty of exercise.

As long as the breeding of a sow is profitable she should be bred. It is not advisable to sell off a good brood animal.

Groom the horses well after hard work. The skin is thus not only cleaned, but safeguarded against parasite diseases.

Brush the mud off the cow's udder and flank, then wipe off with damp cloth. You can't strain mud out of milk. Keep it out.

The cow your neighbor does not want to sell is the one you want to buy. Get around this dilemma by raising that kind yourself.

Three years of spraying, pruning and cultivation will bring an orchard that you are ashamed of into a condition that you will be proud of.

Scrape off loose, peeling bark from the trunks of trees before spraying them, because this serves as an excellent breeding place for insects.

To get the best eggs for hatching, the rations should be of good grains balanced by milk or meat food and must include green food in some form.

High prices should not tempt the wise dairyman to part with his good cows and heifers. Remember they are just as valuable to you as to anybody else.

In yarding sheep don't forget a constant supply of good fresh water and rock-salt are a necessity; also, plenty of good fresh bedding, and always a dry lair.

After farrowing when the digestive system of the sow has reached a normal condition her ration should be gradually increased until she is getting all she can eat.

Ewes will suffer less and have fewer spoiled udders if they are confined to small lots or inclosures, with dry feed, for a few days after they have been robbed of their lambs.

Never buy a horse, if you can avoid it, with a narrow or shallow chest, or whose forelegs are close together. Such an animal lacks room adequate for the lung capacity to be long-winded.

A piece of tarred paper or wire netting should be fastened around the stem of all spring and fall planted trees. Tie the tarred paper closely at the bottom and at the top. This will prevent field mice and rabbits gnawing the tender bark of the trees when deep snows cover the ground.

Set the eggs while fresh.

Keep dirt out of the dairy.

It always pays to treat the cow with gentleness.

It is an error to feed a horse once only in 24 hours.

Both horses and mules should be given daily exercise.

One of the most common mistakes is underfeeding the dairy cow.

The age for working colts varies, with size, strength and maturity.

The life of a standard separator depends upon its care to a great extent.

Rye hay, properly cured, makes an excellent hay for horses, mules and cows.

Going to the shop over icy roads with smooth shoes may ruin your best horse.

Shorthorns bred with good judgment today are the great all-purpose cattle.

The best time to cut the tails as well as castrate is when the lamb is a week old.

Perhaps a banking of the cow barn around the foundation would help keep out the cold.

Any man who strikes a horse in the head should never be allowed to touch one again.

The dairyman who puts a low value on his skim-milk admits his inability in his profession.

A regular time for salting the cows summer and winter will keep you from forgetting this chore.

The farmer who makes an effort to fill the corn crib and smokehouse each year generally succeeds.

A properly trained horse will stop as soon as anything goes wrong with the harness or his shoes.

Wild strawberries have the most delicious flavor. They are easily transplanted to the garden.

There is no better place for growing pigs intended either for breeding or fattening, than the pasture.

Clean up the yard and farmstead generally. Plan to set out a few more ornamentals next spring.

The development of the young horse requires the exercise of the best judgment in handling him.

The cheapest ration for the dairy cow is a combination of corn silage, alfalfa hay and cotton seed meal.

Oil-meal, properly fed, is considered by our best stockmen to be one of the most nourishing foods that can be fed.

A plump young turkey, dressing from eight to fifteen pounds, finds a market at almost any season of the year.

Good sheep require good care to maintain their excellence. Poor sheep are always a burden upon the rest of the flock.

Burnt or caustic lime is made by burning limestone, oyster shells and other such materials as are high in liming elements.

If you have never tried rape, raise a small field next spring. It is very popular with the hogs and does them a world of good.

Ewes that are broad and long will make good mothers and produce vigorous offsprings. In this way lambs of a better type will be produced.

Butter is often of inferior quality because churning is not done until a sufficient amount of cream accumulates to make churning worth while.

Do you feed pumpkins to your cows? They have never been known to increase the flow of milk, but what a color it gives to the cream and the butter!

Keep your calves in clean separate pens for about four weeks, and then if the weather permits, turn them out with the herd, and they will not suck the cows.

It is advisable to place a box of grit or coarse sand where the turkeys can find it, as not all farms have sufficient quantity for the purpose of good digestion.

The profit in a cow comes from the extra amount of milk she will yield over what she ordinarily gives on common pasture or the coarse feeds usually given her.

Always keep the earliest and best bred pullets for the home flock. There is also a good demand generally for nice pullets in the fall by those wanting them to keep. Get rid of all undesirable stock and miss no opportunity for improving the flock.

The disposition of a horse is bred in him. He may have behind him long generations of heredity, that had bad manners in it, and they will crop out, but a good deal of the disposition of a horse is a matter of development by the people who handle him.

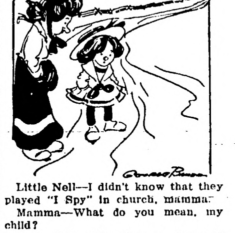
IN LESS STRENUOUS TIMES

Explanation of the Difference Between Domestic Standards Now and Those of Long Ago.

In the Woman's Home Companion there is an interesting presentation of the difference that exists between the domestic standard of young married women of today and those of the past generation. How did the women of the middle class of a generation or two ago manage when they could not keep help? Following is the answer quoted from a Companion editorial:

"They lived according to their means; they did not set up impossible standards, and they knew much less about the science of bringing up children. They had no special style to keep up; gave the children a weekly bath; kept the table set between meals; did not serve their meals in courses, but put all the food on the table at once; confined their social affairs to evening calls and parties, and church suppers, at which they wore the same black silk dress for at least two seasons; in short, every woman did only what she could, and her friends made it easier for her by doing likewise."

RECOGNIZED THE ACTION.



Little Nell—I didn't know that they played "I Spy" in church, mamma.

Mamma—What do you mean, my child?

Little Nell—Why, the preacher said "Let's Play," and everybody held their hands up to their faces.

A Fright.

"Lady," said Meandering Mike, "would you lend me a cake of soap?"

"Do you mean to tell me you want soap?"

"Yes'm. Me partner's got de hiccups an' I want to scare him."

CREAM OF RYE

For health and energy eat it for breakfast. Reduces cost of living. Free Silver Spoon in every package. Ask your grocer for a package.

No Doubt About It.

And every good husband, no doubt, is sure that he is married to one of the world's twenty greatest women.

Stop the Pain.

The hurt of a burn or a cut stops when Cole's Carbolisalve is applied. It heals quickly and prevents scars. 25c and 50c by druggists. For free sample write to J. W. Cole & Co., Black River Falls, Wis.

The total fire loss for the year 1911 is expected to total at $200,000,000 in the United States and Canada.

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets regulate and invigorate stomach, liver and bowels. Sugar-coated, tiny granules. Easy to take as candy.

Some people get so accustomed to looking on the bright side that they can't see the other side at all

DR. J. H. RINDLAUB (Specialist),
Eye, Ear, Nose and Throat
Fargo, N. D.

The man who hides his light under a bushel is sometimes surprised to find that the sun still shines

PILES CURED IN 6 TO 14 DAYS
Your druggist will refund money if PAZO OINTMENT fails to cure any case of Itching, Blind, Bleeding or Protruding Piles in 6 to 14 days. 50c.

The fellow who shoots off his mouth doesn't always hit the mark

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup for Children teething, softens the gums, reduces inflammation, allays pain, cures wind colic, 25c a bottle.

There is a difference between being useful and being used

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Acts directly and peculiarly on the blood; purifies, enriches and revitalizes it, and in this way builds up the whole system. Take it. Get it today.

In usual liquid form or chocolate coated tablets called Sarsatabs.

Fargo Directory

HIGHEST CASH PRICES
PAID FOR SWEET AND SOUR CREAM
Prompt payment, honest test, guaranteed return of cans. FARGO ICE CREAM & CIDER COMPANY. Largest creamery in the northwest.

Shotwell Floral Co.
Growers and shippers of cut flowers, plants, etc. Write for catalog. Funeral designs on short notice. Phone day or night. Fargo, N. D.

MONUMENTS
500 in stock. Write for free catalog.
FARGO MARBLE & GRANITE WORKS, N. P. Ave., Fargo, N. D.

Defective Page

The Northern Light

CHAS. W. LATTA

Editor and Publisher.

Published every Friday at Holt, Marshall County, Minnesota.

Subscription Price: $1.00 per year, strictly in advance.

Entered as second-class matter Sept. 22, 1911, at the post office at Holt, Minnesota, under the act of March 3, 1879.

Be a booster—not a knocker.

In telling of an entertainment at Middle River a few evenings ago the Pioneer says; "A free dance with John Olson on his accordeon as the music was given after the show." We'll bet the crowd enjoyed it.

Sam Gordon has declared himself to be a candidate for governor, and so has W. E. Lee, of Long Prairie. It really begins to look as if the man of destiny is destined to have some fight on his hands this year, and possibly be defeated.

President Taft has made several reasonable looking recommendations to congress in behalf of a more economical system of running the government. None of the politicians expect, or want to see such recommendations adopted—and the president may be classed in that bunch.

A new Citizens League has been launched and its apparent object is to help secure some improvements in banking laws. Incidentally, it may tend to muddle up the work of the old Citizens League, a political organization that has worried the old ring a whole lot during the past few years.

Four men were arrested for a murder committed at East Grand Forks some time ago and all four pleaded guilty to manslaughter in the first degree. It was stated that the murderers secured less than $200 from their victim, which tends to show how lightly human life is held in a town where booze is king.

The saloonkeepers of East Grand Forks are making a protest against boys frequenting the saloons. It was the evidence given by a boy 17 years old that forced pleas of guilty from four men for a recent murder in that city. By educating the boys at a tender age the supply of booze consuming men is maintained, to the pleasure and profit of the saloon men, the brewess and distillers. If the boys were only wise enough to keep their mouths shut we question if the saloonkeepers would object to their presence.

Notice to Contractors.

Sealed bids will be received by the County Auditors of Marshall and Beltrami Counties up to 2 o'clock P. M. of February 2nd. 1912, at Warren, Minnesota, for installing culverts (by separate townships or the whole work) on Judicial Ditch No. 11. Bidders to state the price per foot. Specifications to be obtained of W. R. Hoag, Engineer, Rollis, Minn. Sealed bids will also be received for hauling eleven tons of sectional cast iron culverts Middle River to the center of section 19, town 157, range 40. Bidders to state the price per ton for hauling.

All bidders will be required to give a satisfactory bond for the amount of the contract to be approved by the said Auditors.

All bids must be accompanied by a certified check on a Stafe or National Bank of Minnesota for at least 10 per cent of the amount of the bid.

The right is reserved to reject any and all bids,

Dated at Warren, Minnesota, this 8th day of January, A. D. 1912.

A. G. LUNDGREN,

(Auditor's Seal) County Auditor.

Farms Wanted.

I have prospective buyers for a few good improved farms; also for 960 acres of wild land. All must be in eastern Marshall county.

CHAS. W. LATTA, Holt, Minn.

St. Andrews' Bottle Dungeon.

St. Andrews is perhaps the most distinctive of the old castle towns of Scotland. It was built early in the thirteenth century, and it was here that Bishop Kennedy showed James II. how to break the power of his nobles by taking a bundle of arrows, separating them and snapping them one by one. In Stewart Dick's "The Pageant of the Forth" the author says: "Under the sea tower, in the heart of the rock where it juts into the sea, is a grewsome dungeon known as the 'Bottle dungeon,' so called from its shape. In the floor of the lower room in the tower is a hole five feet in diameter. Down it goes for nearly twelve feet. The neck of the bottle then widens out to form a chamber nearly twenty-four feet in breadth. There is no light, no ventilation, no exit of any kind but the neck of the bottle. A prisoner there had no more chance of escape than a crab has in a creel."

A Hindu Dinner Party.

A Hindu ladies' dinner begins at 12 o'clock and lasts two hours. But the guests begin to assemble some time before the dinner, for the simple reason that they have to go into the garden and choose their own fruit and vegetables. Meat, by the way, is forbidden. The chief dish at a dinner party is composed of rice and maize. The guests sit on the floor in two rows, facing one another, and eat with their fingers. The most esteemed widow lady present hands round the dishes, and this service is considered a great honor. Cocoanut milk and various kinds of sherbet are drunk. When the meal is over the ladies take a small portion of betel nut wrapped in "pan" leaves. Pan is a green leaf something like laurel and is prepared in no fewer than eighty different ways. Each of those ways is supposed to give a different emotion to the eater.

The Decline of Winchester.

Winchester for five centuries was the active rival of London, and for 400 years English parliaments occasionally sat in the castle, which contains the round table of King Arthur. It was a city with great temples and the site of the first Christian church in Britain. Its buildings were of the most magnificent character, and pilgrims flocked from far and near to the magnificent cathedral which contained the body of St. Swithin and where many miracles were worked.

William the Conqueror and Charles II. had palaces here, and within the monastery were buried King Alfred, his queen and two sons. Winchester has indeed fallen upon evil days, for at the present time its population is only the same as it was in the days of Henry II.—Sheffield (England) Telegraph.

Arctic Marine Plants.

The inhabitants of the ocean, like those of the land, are affected by the climate. Arctic land plants cannot flourish at the equator, and in the arctic and the antarctic oceans marine plants are found that are unable to survive in warm water. Among the most remarkable of these cold water plants are the laminariaceae, a kind of seaweed, which sometimes attains a gigantic size, exceeding in length the longest climbing plants of the tropical forests and developing huge stems like the trunks of trees. Investigation has shown that these plants flourish in the coldest waters of the polar seas and that they never advance farther from their frigid homes than to the limits of "summer temperature" in the ocean. The genial warmth destroys them just as a polar blast shrivels tropical flowers.

The End of the World.

Although our earth cannot in any vital sense last longer than the sun, it may last less long for intrinsic cause. Life is dependent not only on the sun, but on the presence of air. When this air departs life will depart too. Now the earth's air is going slowly, but surely, evaporating into space. If it all goes before the sun becomes extinct the earth's surface life will lapse while the sun still shines. Both processes—the evaporation of the air and the cooling of the sun—will require long eras of time, but the second process will be much the slower of the two. So we may expect the last inhabitants of the earth to die of lack of breath rather than from want of warmth.—Percival Lowell in Youth's Companion.

Slips of the Tongue.

In a case tried before a magistrate in Glasgow the defending agent made reference to a verbal agreement between the parties. "Let's see yer verbal agreement," the magistrate said. "Hand it up here."

At a parish council meeting, when a petition for some increase of wages was under consideration, the chairman said peevishly: "A canna mak' heid nor tail o' this dockyment. It's jist like Alphy and Omegy,—it's got neither beginning nor end."—Glasgow Herald.

The Steeplechase.

The first steeplechases were literally "chases to a steeple." The earliest we can discover was a match in 1752 between Edmund Blake and Mr. O'Callaghan over four and a half miles of stiff country between the church of Buttevant and St. Leger church spire—London Tatler.

Next Thing to It.

She—Kind words can never die. He—Maybe not, but a whole lot of them seem laid up and not working.—Boston Transcript.

A smile is an asset, a frown a liability.—New York Press.

When Gladstone Spoke.

Gladstone was one in whom nervousness had become mannerism. When he rose to speak he began with a few gracious words on the speech which he was about to follow or some pointed remark as to the character and importance of the subject. In his earlier days this was no doubt to "get his breath." His next act was to raise his right hand over his head, the thumb bent down, and gently scratch his skull. That is rather common among public speakers. The third action of Mr. Gladstone was his peculiar and individual sign. Throwing his arms downward by his side, he would with his fingers seize the cuffs of his coat and draw these down over his shirt cuffs so as to conceal them completely. The ordinary practice is just the reverse, the desire being to expose and not conceal the white linen of the shirt cuffs. These were the invariable preludes to the great commoner's speeches. —Pall Mall Magazine.

Fingers Before Forks.

There are some rare occasions in these days of refined table manners when fingers are really permissible instead of forks, and one grows rather rebellious under too much restraint and wishes it were oftener so. Among the things one may eat with the fingers with propriety are radishes, olives, salted nuts, pickles, celery and asparagus where the little tongs are not provided; lettuce, endive or Romaine when cut to dip in French dressing or in salt; strawberries when served with hulls on them, biscuits and all small cakes, pears, peaches, plums, apricots, apples and grapes. Usually the large seeded fruits are pared and quartered. Legs and wings of fowls and birds may be taken in the hand, but it is not considered favorably. The firm cheeses, dry cakes, bonbons and sandwiches are all permitted to be taken in the fingers.—London Express.

Irregular Pulses.

A pulsus paradoxus is a pulse that stops for a moment when you are taking a deep breath. It is nothing very dreadful, though it occasionally worries people to find their pulse has stopped.

A doctor who has been studying the pulse of various people has something interesting to say on the subject. "People get alarmed if their pulse is not regular," he says, "and yet plenty of healthy people have really extraordinary pulses. A dot and carry one pulse is possessed by many people."

The pulses of athletes and others who take violent exercise for a short time go up at a tremendous rate. A runner the doctor experimented upon had a normal pulse beat of 70 to the minute. At the end of a hundred yards race his pulse was going along at 180. At the end of a hurdle race it rose to 204.—London Answers.

Two Views of the Same Question.

A noted bishop in order to point a lesson in humility sometimes tells a story of a young clergyman whose first appointment was to be in out of the way and poor parish.

On his first Sunday in this new station the young man as he looked over his wretchedly clad and ignorant congregation could not help saying to himself, with a groan:

"Dear me, what a dreadful thing it would be if I should have to stay here any great length of time!"

At the end of the sermon a deacon made a prayer. To the young man's horror one part of the prayer was a benevolent hope that "this ignorant, inexperienced, barren pastor that had lately come to the parish might improve and grow learned and fruitful in good works, so that he would come to merit being kept on there for awhile."

Where Books Were Pawned.

In primitive days books had a recognized and settled value. We know now they were exchanged for a horse or half a dozen sheep, but few people know the extent to which books were pawned in the middle ages. Oxford at one time had twenty giant chests full of these valuable pledges, and the process when stock was taken had to be conducted with care. The book fairs served to alter things, and presently as Smithfield market grew it set up a subservient industry on its outskirts, where the butchers sold skins and the parchment dealers bought. And this bookish street on the edge of Smithfield under the shadow of St. Paul's bore the pious name of Paternoster row.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Why She Left Them at Home.

"Have you any references?" asked the lady of the house.

"Yes, ma'am. A lot of 'em."

"Then why didn't you bring them with you?"

"Ther're just like my photographs, ma'am. None of 'em does me justice." —Detroit Free Press.

Surprised.

Lady—I am surprised, little boy, to see you smoking that cigar. Boy—I'm s'prised myself, lady; I thought the man would never drop it.—Philadelphia Telegram.

An Expensive Luxury.

"Yes," said the literary man with a sigh: "style is a fine thing for a writer to have, but when his wife's got it too it takes all the profit away."—Harper's Weekly.

Runaway Match.

"People wonder how I got my wife It was a runaway match. I ran away and she ran after me."—Cassell's Journal.

Contentment gives a crown where fortune hath denied it.—Ford.

Whistler's Tart Comment.

Whistler one afternoon called on a young painter of his acquaintance who did the pretty little sort of things that are popular. In the course of the conversation that followed the young artist turned to a little head he was painting and, daintily balancing a square palette by one corner between two finger tips, took a fine sable brush and as daintily began to tickle a piece of bad drawing into a "sweet expression," saying:

"A pleasant art, ours, isn't it, Jimmy?"

"Yes," was Whistler's response, "but what are you doing, Frank?"

"Oh," said the young artist, "I am painting a replica of a little thing some one liked because you know, I can always sell two or three of the same subject, if it's a taking one."

"Ah!" commented Whistler, "you must be a genius, Frank, and I, alas, am like the simple minded hen who, when asked to do so, protested that she could not lay the same egg twice!"

A Grave Discussion.

The late Joseph Jefferson and his sister, Mrs. Cornelia Jackson, famous as Tilly Slowboy in "The Cricket on the Hearth," were standing at a studio window on Beacon street, Boston, overlooking the Old Granary burying ground. They had been discussing the famous persons whose graves were spread below them, when, breaking a short interval of silence, Jefferson said in the most mournful of tones. "Connie, my dear, that is the best place for me, after all."

With a horrified expression on her face, as her brother always avoided grewsome subjects, she asked, "What do you mean, Joe?"

With the twinkle in his eye that three generations of the world have known, the actor remarked blandly, "I said 'after all,' Connie."

In a flash his sister retorted, "No, Joe, dear, that's no place for you. There are too many deadheads there." —Boston Post.

What Hichens Heard.

While still a student of music Robert Hichens wrote many short stories, verses and songs. In one year, he says, he earned over $500 by writing scores and lyrics for music. One song, "A Kiss and Goodby," was sung by Mme. Patti in Albert hall, London.

"In the natural pride of my heart," Mr. Hichens said with reference to this occasion, "I took a seat in the stalls and waited in a fever of excitement to hear how it would go off. It was received with so much enthusiastic applause that I was lifted into a delicious heaven of delight, but was suddenly tumbled headlong by hearing two voices from the seats immediately behind me.

"'What a lovely song that was,' one exclaimed rapturously.

"'Yes,' the other grudgingly agreed, 'but what awful rot the words of these songs always are.'"—Exchange.

Cleaning an Ocean Liner.

Probably few people are aware that during the few hours a great ocean liner remains in dock she is cleaned thoroughly inside and out. The hull is repainted, the funnels scraped and cleaned and every piece of exposed metal polished. Meanwhile all carpets are taken up and beaten, the floors scrubbed and repainted and tables repolished, chairs regilded and stained, in every part of the ship. On the great boats there are more than 30,000 pieces of linen to be counted, sorted, prepared and laundered. Then there are 15,000 pieces of silverware, 25,000 pieces of glassware, some 60,000 dishes, plates, cups, saucers, etc. As soon as a piece shows signs of wear it is discarded and replaced, and all this work has to be done in a few hours.—Pearson's Weekly.

Vegetables and Character.

A Paris contemporary states that a well known doctor read a paper before a meeting of medical men on the influence of vegetables upon the character, the brain and the senses. According to the doctor, the potato develops an evenness of temper and calmness of thought. The carrot acts as a stimulant to the character and is recommended for biliousness and to peevish or jealous persons. Spinach develops ambitious dreams and energy. Sorrel, despite its acidity, induces sadness and provokes nightmare. All workers should eat white haricots. —London Globe.

A Thrifty Spouse.

A man whose illness threatened to develop into typhoid was taken to the hospital. Instead of growing worse he improved, and at the end of the fourth day, when his wife visited him, he asked to be taken home.

"But you have paid for a week," replied his thrifty spouse. "They won't refund the money. You had better stay your week out."—New York Herald.

Proving His Own Medicine.

"That man Biffers was neatly punished the other day."

"How was that?"

"Why, when he gets mad he always kicks something, and when he got mad the other day he kicked the revolving door and nearly knocked his head off."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Hard Lines.

"In financial trouble? What is it?"

"Oh, I promised to pay Brown $10 today, and I've got it, and he knows I've got it, and he knows I know he knows I've got it!"—Puck.

Health.

Health is so necessary to all the duties as well as pleasures of life that the crime of squandering it is equal to the folly.—Johnson.

V-I-V-O

The Best there is in Flour.

Our Elevator and Lumber Yard are always prepared to give the most satisfactory service.

Hanson & Barzen Milling Co.,

OSCAR HANSON, Agent, - - HOLT, MINN.

AXEL NELSON

General Blacksmith Work

HOLT, - - MINN.

All work done Right, at Reasonable Prices.

HOUSEWIVES

Do you want to know about a wonderful new time, health and money-saving kitchen convenience?

Then you should see the complete line of "1892" Pure Spun Aluminum Cooking Utensils now on exhibition at your dealers.

This ware is guaranteed by the makers for 25 years. It is absolutely pure, wholesome and thoroughly hygienic, will not crack, scale, peel, break, rust, tarnish, scorch or burn.

PURE
ILLINOIS 1892 ALUMINUM
THE ORIGINAL
TRADE MARK

It is light weight, easy to handle and easy to clean; makes kitchen work a delight instead of drudgery; saves your money, time, fuel; protects your health against metal poisoning and serious troubles resulting from chipping of small particles into the food, which is one of the dangers from the use of the old style enameled wares.

You buy patent carpet sweepers, egg-beaters, dish-washers, clothes-wringers and many other time and labor saving conveniences, but there is nothing that will prove a greater practical household blessing than the "1892" Pure Spun Aluminum Ware.

Lose no time in seeing for yourself what it will do. Your money back if this ware fails to do what is claimed for it.

S. S. KOLDEN & Co.

THE DULUTH HERALD

BEATS THE CENSUS THREE TO ONE

During the past ten years the population of Duluth increased 48 per cent., St. Paul 32 per cent., and Minneapolis 49 per cent. In the Same Period the Circulation of The Duluth Herald

INCREASED 150 PER CENT.

This marvelous expansion—so much greater than that of the surrounding territory—is due solely to the merits of The Herald. The Herald has never used any kind of premium, contest, or price reduction to gain subscribers but prints each day the very best NEWSPAPER in the Northwest. Its editorial page is thoroughly independent and its news columns cover every feature of the world's daily history.

Send for sample copy and get The Herald habit.

THREE MONTHS FOR $1.00—Mailed Daily

ADDRESS HERALD CIRCULATION [illegible]

Local Items

The Local Market.

(Grain prices furnished by Hanson & Barzen Milling Co. at close of business every Thursday.)

Flax	$1.93
Wheat	.94
Barley d.	.87
Oats	.39
Rye	.77

Bring us the news.

Be a booster—not a knocker.

When in town call at this office and let's get acquainted.

R. Reierson transacted business at Thief River Falls Wednesday.

W. R. Fuller was a business visitor here yesterday from Thief River Falls.

Ed Ellingson was here from Randen most of this week attending to business matters.

Miss Esther Mickelson went to Thief River Falls on Monday to resume her studies.

Rev. M. B. Ordahl will conduct services in the Holt church Sunday morning, the 21st inst.

Engebret Moe was in from his home south of Mud Lake on Monday to do some necessary shopping.

Martin Sorum, of Alix, Alberta, arrived here yesterday to spend a few days visiting with his cousin, John A. Sorum.

Ed Horian was in from his home northeast of town yesterday to close up the contract for putting up the ice supply for the creamery.

C. G. Mugg, O. S., the Grand Forks Eye man, will refit any unsatisfactory glass that is not over six months old. He will do this to show his greater skill. He will be in Holt Wednesday afternoon, January 24th.

Mrs. D. Payne and children returned yesterday from their visit with her parents at Nielsville. She was accompanied by her father, L. S. Kolden, who remained until today to visit and attend to some business matters.

The shows given by the Clifton Drug Co. at the Woodman hall this week are quite favorably commented on by those who have attended. All are preparing for a big time tomorrow, Saturdey, evening when prizes will be awarded in their series of voting contests.

Amanda Jacobson was awarded a pair of Gotzian shoes as premium in the Holt Mercantile Co's painting contest which closed a few weeks ago. The decision was delayed by the inability of the judges to meet and examine the large number of entries until after the holidays. As the winner among such a great number of contestants Miss Jacobson is to be congratulated.

Munson Beat Warren Champion

It took Ludvig Munson 25 minutes only to defeat J. E. Bren, the Warren wrestler, at Thief River Falls last Friday night. The men appeared to be pretty evenly matched at the start but Munson secured the first and only fall in the time stated. Bren then announced that he was "all in" and could not come back.

Subscribe for The Northern Light. Only $1.00 per year.

Halvor Moe was in Wednesday with a load of wheat from his home southeast of town.

H. P. Sponheim was here from Thief River Falls yesterday calling on old friends and looking after business matters.

The board of directors of the local creamery met last Monday to consider bids for furnishing the creamery with wood and ice for the ensuing year. The wood contracts were awarded to Ole Reierson and Christ Norbeck but the ice contract was not closed.

If you are one of thos who make a business of kicking because local items are scarce in the local paper you should ask yourself what you are doing to keep the editor posted on the local happenings. The printer has no way of knowing the news unless somebody tells it to him.

The practise of giving away copies of this paper free will be discontinued after February 1st. If anybody who is not a subscriber wants a copy any time after that date they will be charged 5 cents for it. We have to make a living, too, and cannot be expected to give away our products any more than any other business man or farmer can.

Crookston College has placed all its graduates in positions. The demand for office help has been greater than we could supply. School is in session all year. You can begin at any time of year. Good board and furnished room, taken care of in private family, for $3 per week. Send for catalog. Address J. C. Sathre, Crookston, Minn.

Thief River Falls has a lawsuit in which the owner of a dog is being sued for damages because of the dog chasing a team and causing a runaway accident. The state law classifies such dogs as public nuisances and provides that they may be killed by anyone whose safety is endangered by their actions, and that the owner of the dog shall be held liable for any damages caused by such dog. There are some team chasing dogs within less than 100 miles of Holt and the owners should take care that they do not cause too much expense.

M. A. NELSON, M. D.

PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON

Office over Holt Merc. Co's store

HOLT, MINNESOTA.

O'Donnell Shoes . . .

For Men who Care

They're New, and a trifle Better. Wont you come in and let us show you? We have your size and you never wore a better Shoe.

HOLT MERCANTILE Co.,

"The Big New Store"

Wedded in Dakota

At Maddock, N. D., on Monday the 8th inst, John Black hnd Miss Sarah Bingen were united in marriage. The bride is the daughter of Abraham Bingen, a prominent resident of Maddock, and the groom is engaged in the livery business there. The groom will be remembered by the people here as a former employe on the telephone lines, and a host of friends will wish him and his bride an abundance of happiness and prosperity.

Notice of Annual Meeting

The annual meeting of the stockholders of the Farmers' Co-Operative Creamery Co., of Holt, Minn., will be held at the creamery in Holt on Saturday, January 27, 1912, at 1 o'clock P. M. for the purpose of electing officers for the ensuing year and to transact such other business as may come before the meeting.

J. A. SORUM, Secretary.

Making Her Trunk Safe.

"No safety deposit vault red tape for me!" declared the woman who cannot help being the wife of a very rich man. "I keep my jewels in a shabby old trunk in my own room. There isn't even a lock on it. I had to force it off one time when I'd mislaid the key."

"Evidently you don't encourage enterprise in burglars," observed one of her hearers. "All a man would have to do would be to raise the lid. You might at least make him a little trouble."

"He'd have trouble enough," said the woman, mysteriously. "Our coachman's brother is an old sailor—a perfect artist in knots—and he showed me how to bind up the trunk in the most complicated way, and no burglar could possibly untie it. He wouldn't know the combination."

The only man in the group grinned.

"Of course," he murmured reflectively, "no mere second story man would ever dream of cutting those knots."—Youth's Companion.

Saved.

A lazy negro who let his wife take in washing without demur had a dream one night and a policy dream at that. He borrowed money from her to play the combination, and before he left home he stated his conviction.

"Mandy," he said, "Ah's goin' uptown to play dis combine, what am sho' to come out. When you see me comin' home in a hack you break up yo' wash tubs."

The "combine" didn't come out, and Sam, in great dejection, acquired a lot of gin. Then he was messed up a bit by a dray, and some other negroes hired a hack to take him home. Sam was nearly out and was breathing heavily when the hack turned a familiar corner, and his wife was standing in the door. With his last ounce of energy he stuck his head out of the window and yelled:

"Mandy, spare dem tubs!"—Chicago Post.

Looming Mirages.

In what are called "looming mirages" distant objects show an apparent, extravagant increase in height without alteration of breadth. Distant pinnacles of ice are thus magnified into immense towers or tall, jagged mountains, and a ship thus reflected from far out at sea may appear to be twelve or fifteen times as tall as it is long. Rocks and trees are also shown in abnormal shapes and positions, while houses, animal and human beings appear in like exaggerated shapes. Before the sandy plains of our southwestern states and territories were converted into verdant fields by the ingenuity and tireless energy of man mirages were very common in those regions, the Indians regarding the phenomenon as being the work of evil spirits.

The Horse's Pedometers.

The whorls of hair on the coats of horses and other animals are natural pedometers, inasmuch as they register the locomotive activities of the animals on whose bodies they are found. The best examples and the greatest number of these hairy whorls and crests are found on the domestic horse. A notable instance is the graceful feathering that extends along the hollow of the flank, dividing the trunk of the animal from the hind quarters. There are also crests and whorls on the horse's chest and other parts of its body. A study of the action of the underlying muscles explains the origin of these peculiarities in the lay of the hair and furnishes the justification for calling them pedometers, although the analogy is, of course, merely superficial.—St. Louis Republic.

A Cruel Question.

Skeezick's car had turned turtle, and as he sat gloomily contemplating the situation Uncle Silas reined in his nag and stopped outside.

"Turned over, hain't she?" he observed.

"Yep," said Skeezick shortly.

"Want to sell?" asked Uncle Silas.

"Yes," said Skeezick. "I'll sell out cheap."

"What's your upset price?" asked Uncle Silas, with a grin.—Harper's Weekly.

THIS IS THE NEWSPAPER AGE

THE invention of movable types occurred a trifle less than 500 years ago. These 500 years have witnessed infinitely greater progress than the world had made in all the thousands of years previous. Printing has been the most considerable factor in this progress.

THE NEWSPAPER OF TODAY REACHES MORE PEOPLE AND INFLUENCES MORE PEOPLE THAN ANY OTHER FORM OF THE PRINTED PAGE.

It covers the fields devoted to all other kinds of printing. They are special. IT IS UNIVERSAL.

This is the newspaper age. The press is the most potent factor in modern civilization. All the other factors have existed before in some form. Only the press is new. At its advent began the modern era.

THE MAN WITHOUT A NEWSPAPER IS A CITIZEN OF THE MIDDLE AGES SET DOWN IN THE TWENTIETH CENTURY.

He is as much out of date as the dodo, as much out of place as a bat in the sunlight, as much outclassed as a Roman galley by a modern ocean liner, as sure to be outdistanced as the locomotive is to outdistance the ox cart.

SUBSCRIBE FOR THIS NEWSPAPER.

For Charity.

A millionaire who was looking over his wife's cash account the other day said:

"I notice here, my dear, an item of $500 for charity. That's rather steep. What is it for?"

The lady flushed as she replied:

"It's for my new gown embroidered with autumn leaves and fruit that I'm going to wear at the charity ball next week, and I think it's very mean of you to mention it, so I do!"

The Voting System.

"And how do you vote at your club meetings, Jane?"

"Oh, I always vote as Mrs. De Pas says votes!"

"And how does she vote?"

"Why, she's troubled with a lisp, and so she always votes no."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

His Busy Time.

"How high did de ole mule kick him?"

"So long, man! You think he had time ter measure de distance?"—Atlanta Constitution.

Good Care Assured.

"Are you sure he is a good doctor?"

"Well, he is recommended by the president of the insurance company that has a $50,000 policy on my life."—Smart Set.

The best preparation for the future is the present well seen to, the last duty done.—George Macdonald.

THE FOUNDATION of future financial independence is a growing Bank Account. Place your earning and watch it grow. We pay a liberal rate of interest on time deposits.

Why you should bank with HOLT STATE BANK:—

We can with pleasure assure you of the entire safety of your funds under our care. Our Cash is protected against any possible loss thru burglary or hold-up robbery by ample insurance and any loss thereby would be promptly replaced. We are organized and incorporated under the laws of the State of Minnesota which now require two examinations yearly by the Examining Committee, four printed reports, two examinations yearly by a capable Bank Examiner. Also the bye-laws, require that the active officers be bonded and be personally responsible for all moneys or valuables left under their care which assures a straight and honest administration of its affairs. And further, our loans are so drawn that payment is assured at maturity either by the pledging of personal property or real estate, or by some responsible party of good financial standing acting as guarantor.

Our cash resources have increased $25,000.00 during the season 1911 and we want a like amount of increase during 1912. Affording our patrons absolute protection and safety and conducting our affairs in a business-like way are factors which lead to our success, and under these conditions we feel entitled to a generons share of your business during 1912.

Red Lake Falls Milling Co.

Makers of the Celebrated

Mascot Flour

and bUYERS of all kinds of GRAIN.

Our Elevator will give you satisfaction.

OLE MATSON, Agent - - - Holt, Minn.

The Evergreen Hotel

P. A. RESBERG, PROP.

Rates, $1.00 per day.

Serves the best Meal in Eastern Marhall Co. for twenty-five cents.

Livery and Feed Barn in connection.

Bring us your Job Printing orders

WATCH

For our next Announcement in this Space. It will be well worth your while.

S. S. KOLDEN & Co.

HOLT, - - MINNESOTA

Defective Page

ONE OF RUSSIA'S BASES IN THE PERSIAN AFFAIR

VIEW OF JULFA

JULFA is one of the bases used by Russia in its operations against Persia and is the place whence were dispatched the reinforcements for the troops which have captured Tabriz. Julfa is a small town in Transcaucasia on the Aras river, less than a hundred miles from Tabriz.

RARE SILVER DOLLAR

Pattern of 1776 Made in Birmingham, England.

Only Two of These Coins Are Known to Exist—One Shown at the Numismatic Convention in Chicago Valued at $5,000.

New York.—A United States silver pattern dollar dated 1776 and valued at $5,000, which was exhibited at Chicago at the convention of the American Numismatic association, brought to the immediate attention of both the general public and collectors a silver piece which for rarity, value and historical worth completely eclipse the celebrated 1804 dollar, or indeed any other coin in the United States series. Even in some respects, it is more interesting than the excessively rare and valuable silver pattern dollar or "mark" of 1783, proposed by Robert Morris, the "Financier of the Revolution."

This coin, which is known as the continental currency dollar, is owned by H. O. Granberg of Oshkosh, Wis., and represents unquestionably the very first metallic issue to bear the stamp of the United States, or United Colonies, as the confederation was originally known. The continental dollar preceded by nine years the issue of the first regularly authorized cent of 1787—the Fugio or Franklin cent—and the issue of the latter coin no doubt was largely influenced by this first dollar, for it bore its principal features of design.

The continental currency dollar is about the size of an ordinary silver dollar and contains 378 grains of silver. On the obverse the principal design is a sun shining on a sun dial, with the word "Fugio" to the left. Below the dial is the motto "Mind Your Business," a saying attributed to Franklin. This central design is inclosed by two large circles, while around the border in large letters is the inscription "Continental Currency, 1776." On the reverse is a circle of thirteen links, each of which bears the name of one of the thirteen colonies. In the center is a radiation, which incloses a double circle, in which are words "American Congress. We are One."

No definite information as to where the continental currency dollar was made can now be obtained. But it is thought to have been produced in Birmingham, England, in which city were made many of the coins that were circulated in this country during colonial days and—the most of which are now highly valued by collectors.

The design of the dollar was evidently suggested by the devices of the first continental currency paper issues. On the obverse side of one of these notes was a representation of a sun as a human face shining upon a dial, with the word "Fugio." Just above was a representation of the moon, also a face. (The latter, however, found no place in the design of the silver dollar.) Underneath the dial was the motto "Mind Your Business." The reverse design of the note showed almost the identical design borne by the continental dollar and seems to have been embodied in tact.

Several varities of these continental dollars are now known, and not only were there various designs showing trifling differences, but they occur in different metals—silver, brass and white metal. The rarest of the series, the one owned by Mr. Granberg, shows marked differences from some of the others. Underneath the dial and above the motto is inscribed in small letters "E G Fecit." "E G" are supposed to have been the initials of the engraver of the dies.

From what can be learned there are only two specimens of the above dollar known in silver—the one owned by Mr. Granberg and another said to be in the collection of an eastern historical society. The variety is also known in brass and white metal. The specimens in the latter two metals are also rare and held at a premium. The one in brass is much rarer than that in white metal.

The next rarest variety of the continental currency dollar is of similar design to that mentioned above, but the engraver in cutting the dies made an error in spelling "currency" with one "r." A similar specimen, showing this error, and the only one known in the metal, was formerly in the collection of John G. Mills of Albany, whose collecion was sold in 1904. The coin at that time brought $500. Since that time the values of colonial coins particularly have risen enormously and that dollar would now bring a very much higher figure if offered for sale.

The design showing the error was also struck in brass and white metal. It has been stated by experts that only five are known in brass. One of these, also offered at the Mills sale, brought $27, which would be largely advanced if sold today. The same variety in white metal brought $18 at the Mills sale.

There must have been a considerable issue of coins of this design in white metal, judging by the number of dies that were made, as evidenced by the known specimens. One design, with the error in the spelling of "currency," shows a comma under the letter "n." It was struck in brass from recut dies. But two such specimens are known, and the last record of sale of one, the Parmelee sale of 1890, held in this city, was $26. Even the commonest of the white metal specimens are held at a premium of several dollars

ALLIGATORS ON THE BRAIN

Attack of Saurian Freight on Southern Pacific Train Crew in Charge of 'Gators.

Los Angeles.—The entire crew of a Southern Pacific train stampeded into the office of the trainmaster and tried to resign.

"I tell you I have got 'em," said a burly brakeman, "and I haven't taken a drop in six months."

"I saw them myself," said the conductor, "and here's where I quit."

"Never again for mine," said the engineer. "Once is enough for any man. I am not superstitious, but when a thing like that sticks its head out of a cabbage crate and leers at you, it is time to quit."

Alligators, alligator eggs and happy singing, jumping bullfrogs were the animated sources of the train crew's perturbations. They came in crates, like cabbages, 500 wriggling 'gators, 1,500 alligator eggs and 200 healthy bullfrogs in good working order.

The uncanny shipment was delivered in good condition to E. V. Earnest, proprietor of the Los Angeles alligator farm at Eastlake Park.

IN FIVE LUCKLESS MISHAPS

Farmer's Day of Butchering Full of Surprising Slips—Is Scalded, Cuts Self, Nearly Chokes to Death.

Wilkes-Barre, Pa.—The limit in a tale of hard luck came today from Forksville, Sullivan county, north of here, where Albert Hughes, a farmer living near that town, suffered five separate and distinct accidents during the day.

The accidents were sa follows: Having lighted a fire under a boiler preparatory to killing three hogs, he forgot he had laid his new gloves on the fireplace, and they were burned up. In adjusting a plank over a barrel filled with hot water in which the hogs were to be scalded, Hughes slipped, his legs splashed in the water and he was severely scalded below the knees.

An hour later the butcherknife he was using slipped and cut a deep gash four inches long in his arm. Four hours later, in adjusting a rendering kettle filled with boiling lard, he accidentally tilted it, spilled the lard on the fire and was scorched when it blazed up.

At supper, while eating with his uninjured arm, a bone stuck in his throat and a physician had to be called to remove it. Then Hughes went to bed.

Cow Killed by a Nail.

New London, Conn.—A cow, one of a herd of prize winners owned by E. J. Hempstead, died from illness that refused to respond to treatment.

An autopsy showed that an eight penny nail had pierced the wall of the stomach and lodged in the heart.

Prayer Book 181 Years Old

Heirloom of Jacobson Family of Kansas City Only One of Its Kind in Existence.

Kansas City, Mo.—Highly treasured as a priceless heirloom in the Jacobson family is a copy of the "Yom Kippur Koton," or ancient Hebrew prayer book. This particular copy is the only one of its kind in existence and is in the temporary possession of Albert Jacobson, 1231 Walnut street.

The volume is the work of a craftsman named Aaron Wolff, a "Torah" writer of the city of Presburg, probably a town of Germany, and bears the date 1730 on the frontispiece, making it 181 years old. A Hebrew book like a scroll—the usual way of compiling their religious records, reads "backwards." The frontispiece is at the last of the book and the pages are taken in the same order, reading from right to left instead of left to right. In other words, the beginning of a Hebrew Bible is always at the end.

The interesting feature of the Jacobson copy is the fact that text, illuminations and illustrations are handwork. Even the covers are handtooled in gold. The delicate intricate characters of the Hebrew script are marvels of penmanship and the same ink is used in the execution of both script and illustrations as is used on the ancient Torah or scroll writing and the pages are of the same genuine parchment and are indestructible. The book contains excerpts from the five books of Moses upon which the prayer service of the Hebrew religion is based and is in use to this day in the orthodox Hebrew families in special worship the first day of each month. The production of this particular copy probably took years of the craftsman's time.

"Just how our family came into the possession of this treasure is not exactly known," said Mr. Jacobson. "It has been handed down from father to son for generations, but only the records of two generations have been written in the book. The ancient custom of the precedence of the eldest son in the possession of heirlooms still prevails in most Hebrew families and is so here. The book belongs to my older brother, Bernhard Jacobson, formerly of Leipzig, now a resident of Berlin, Germany. He sent it to me more as a matter of sentiment than anything, and when I was notified here to appear before the customs to claim the package there was much argument as to the value. Finally because it was adjudged as books no duty could be exacted and I was given possession."

The family has been offered large sums for this "keepsake," but for traditional reasons it is likely to remain in the family permanently.

Tongue Removed, Patient Speaks.

Pittsburgh, Mass.—Drs. Charles H. Richardson and William L. Tracy at Hill Crest hospital removed the tongue of Charles W. Quoos, which had a cancerous growth on it. After he came out of the ether he was able to tell the doctors how he felt. Mr. Quoos is sixty-four years old

REACHED LIMIT OF TORTURE

Real Reason Why Burglar Gave Evening Papers Chance to Use Effective Headline.

A burglar broke into a New York mansion early the other morning and found himself after wandering about the place in the music room. Hearing footsteps approaching, he took refuge behind a screen. From eight to nine the eldest daughter had a singing lesson. From nine to ten the second daughter took a piano lesson. From ten to eleven the eldest son got his instruction on the violin. From eleven to twelve the younger boy got a lesson on the flute and piccolo. Then, at 12:15, the family got together and practiced music on all their instruments. They were fixing up for a concert. At 12:45 the porch-climber staggered from behind the screen. "For heaven's sake, send for the police!" he shrieked. "Torture me no longer!" And in the evening paper there was the headline: "Nervy Children Capture Desperate Burglar."

Too Much Reclining.

"How was it that Gamps failed in his bed-manufacturing business?" "He got too much in sympathy with the business." "How could he do that?" "He lay down on the job."

Why He Couldn't Sit Down.

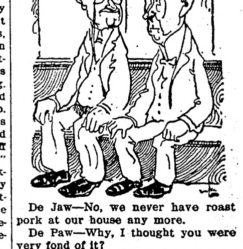
Harry, aged six, is an orphan; but an indulgent grandmother and kind maiden aunt have taken care of him. The first pair of knickerbockers were secured recently, and it was a proud moment for the boy when his aunt put them on him on Sunday morning and he was permitted to go to church with his grandmother. Naturally maiden aunts know very little about the arrangement of knickerbockers, and there was a suspicious fullness in front and an equally mystifying tightness in the back to be observed, as the little chap trudged happily along. In church Harry sat down, but did not appear comfortable and stood up. "Harry, sit down," whispered his grandmother. He obediently climbed back on the seat, but soon slipped off again. "Harry, you must sit down." "Grandma, I can't. My pants is choking me." She looked more closely than her dim sight had before permitted, and discovered the new little knickerbockers were on hind side before. Harry stood up during the remainder of the service.

Dissatisfaction.

"So you were given an interest in your employer's business?"

"Yes," replied the industrious youth; "but I made a mistake in accepting it. I had less work as a regular employe than as a minority stockholder."

THE ONE TO BE PLEASED.



De Jaw—No, we never have roast pork at our house any more.

De Paw—Why, I thought you were very fond of it?

De Jaw—So I am, but my wife's pet dog won't eat any of it at all.

Before the Scrap.

"Why are you rushing around so today?" "I'm trying to get something for my wife?" "Had any offers?"—Louisville Courier-Journal.

A Hold-Up

An Oppressive Trust.

Before the Coffee Roasters' Association, in session at Chicago on Thursday, Thomas J. Webb, of Chicago, charged that there is in existence a coffee combine which is "the most monstrous imposition in the history of human commerce."

There is very slight exaggeration about this statement. It comes very close to being literally true. There is a coffee combine in Brazil, from which country comes the bulk of the coffee used in the United States, which is backed by the government of Brazil and financed by it, which compels American consumers, as Mr. Webb said, "to pay famine prices for coffee when no famine exists."

The worst thing about this is that the consumers of the United States have been compelled to put up the money through which this combine, to further cinch them, has been made effective. There were formerly revenue duties imposed upon all coffee entering the United States. Those taxes were denounced as an imposition upon the people; as taxing the poor man's breakfast table, and the like. The taxes were removed. Immediately thereafter Brazil imposed an export duty upon coffee up to the full amount of the former customs taxes in this country. The revenue which formerly went into the treasury of the United States was diverted to the treasury of Brazil. The poor man's breakfast coffee continued to cost him the same old price.

But this was only the commencement. The "valorization" plan was evolved in Brazil. Through this plan the government, using the revenues derived from the export duties for the purposes, takes all of the surplus crop in a season of large yields and holds it off the market, thus keeping the supply down to the demands of the market and permitting the planters to receive a much higher price than they would otherwise have done.

The United States consumes more Brazilian coffee than does the rest of the world. We are the best customers of Brazil, and Brazil buys little from us. Now Brazil is promoting, financing and maintaining a trust designed, and working effectively for the purpose, to compel American consumers to pay an exorbitant price for the coffee they use. What is the remedy?—Seattle Post-Intelligencer—Nov. 19, 1911.

He did

"Compels"

tax Americans

get this clear

Then this

Standard statistics of the coffee trade show a falling off in sales during the last two years of over two hundred million pounds. Authenticated reports from the Postum factories in this city show a tremendous increase in the sale of Postum in a like period of time.

While the sales of Postum invariably show marked increase year over year, the extraordinary demand for that well-known breakfast beverage during 1911 is very likely due to a public awakening to the oppression of the coffee trust.

Such an awakening naturally disposes the multitude who suffer from the ill effects of coffee drinking to be more receptive to knowledge of harm which so often comes as a result of the use of the drug-beverage, coffee.—Battle Creek Evening News—Dec. 19, 1911.

POSTUM

is a pure food-drink made of the field grains, with a pleasing flavour not unlike high grade Java.

A Big Package About 1¼ lbs. Costs 25 cts. At Grocers

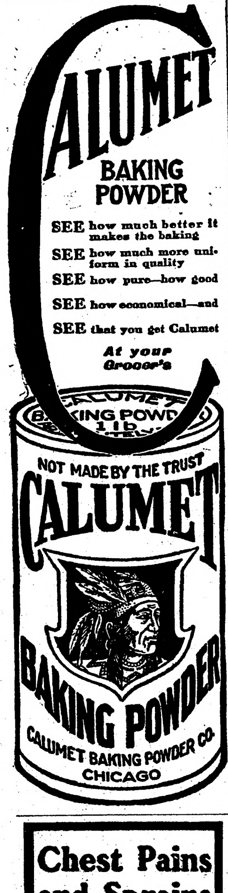
Economy to one's purse is not the main reason for using Postum.

It is absolutely free from any harmful substance, such as "caffeine" (the drug in coffee), to which so much of the nervousness, biliousness and indigestion of today are due. Thousands of former coffee drinkers now use Postum because they know from experience the harm that coffee drinking causes.

Boil it according to directions (that's easy) and it will become clear to you why—

"There's a Reason"

Postum Cereal Company, Limited, Battle Creek, Michigan.



CALUMET BAKING POWDER

SEE how much better it makes the baking

SEE how much more uniform in quality

SEE how pure—how good

SEE how economical—and

SEE that you get Calumet

At your Grocer's

NOT MADE BY THE TRUST

CALUMET BAKING POWDER

CALUMET BAKING POWDER CO. CHICAGO

Chest Pains and Sprains

Sloan's Liniment is an excellent remedy for chest and throat affections. It quickly relieves congestion and inflammation. A few drops in water used as a gargle is antiseptic and healing.

Here's Proof

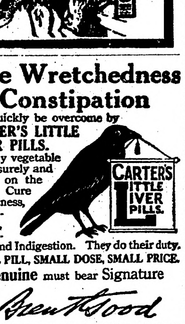
"I have used Sloan's Liniment for years and can testify to its wonderful efficiency. I have used it for sore throat, croup, lame back and rheumatism and in every case it gave instant relief."
REBECCA JANE ISAACS, Lucy, Kentucky.

SLOAN'S LINIMENT

is excellent for sprains and bruises. It stops the pain at once and reduces swelling very quickly.

Sold by all dealers.

Price, 25c., 50c., $1.00



Sloan's Treatise on the Horse sent free. Address Dr. Earl S. Sloan Boston, Mass.

The Wretchedness of Constipation

Can quickly be overcome by CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS.

Purely vegetable—act surely and gently on the liver. Cure Biliousness, Headache, Dizziness, and Indigestion. They do their duty.

SMALL PILL, SMALL DOSE, SMALL PRICE.

Genuine must bear Signature

Brent Good

CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS.

KIDNEY TROUBLE Is a deceptive disease—thousands have it and don't know it. If you want good results you can make no mistake by using Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney remedy. At druggists in fifty cent and dollar sizes. Sample bottle by mail free, also pamphlet telling you how to find out if you have kidney trouble.
Address, Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y.

REMEMBER PISO'S for COUGHS & COLDS

The KITCHEN CABINET

A N EASY thing O Power divine,
To thank thee for these gifts of thine;
But when shall I attain to this,
To thank thee for the things I miss.
—F. W. Higginson.

HOUSEHOLD SANITATION.

We hear much of the dust enemy and we should hear and heed the repeated warnings given us in regard to the evils of dust. The children in our schools today will know much better how to keep clean, sanitary houses than did our grandmothers, providing they follow the teaching. A grain of dust too small to be noticed by the unaided eye may be the abode of hundreds of microbes which can cause us trouble. The vacuum cleaner is doing good work to wipe out dust and keep us free from such exposure to disease, but where one may have the advantage of a cleaner hundreds of thousands are obliged to wield the broom and dustcloth.

When sweeping, it is best to have a damp broom and something like dampened paper or tea leaves to keep the dust from flying. One can by a little planning keep and dry the tea leaves, moistening them as needed.

In sweeping a carpet, a good plan is to sweep and take up the dust from each breadth or two, instead of spreading it all over the room.

It is much more sanitary, besides much easier, to have rugs and bare floors. The rugs can be taken outside and cleaned and the floors wiped, so that the room is free from dust.

The dust cloth is another useful article to consider; those patented affairs that have some kind of oil in the weave are good because they hold the dust and keep it from scattering back to the floor. When using an ordinary cloth, it may be dampened slightly with furniture polish and it will hold the dust much better.

Ventilation of the home is another important matter. Cold air is not necessarily pure, and our lungs need fresh, pure oxygen in order to make and keep pure, good blood. Those who sleep in unaired, unventilated bedrooms to save the fuel bill are piling up a good fat bank account for the family doctor as well as making future suffering for themselves. Nobody unfed by fresh air can withstand disease, and the little busy microbes get in good work on such a host.

A S PRECIOUS perfume comes from close-crushed flowers
And fruits give out their wine within the press,
So human souls shine out, in darkest hours
And blossom in distress.
Above the tide of suffering and pain,
Their spirit's song leaps upward, sweet and clear,
Telling of summer sunshine after rain,
Of trust and hope and cheer.

A FISH DINNER.

The favors for a fish dinner may be especially attractive, and one who is at all ingenious can originate many new things. Pretty bon-bon boxes may be had of paper in the form of fish, and candies of fish forms may be purchased for those small boxes. The little Japanese water flowers in the form of fish may be dropped into the finger bowls to unfold and delight young and old.

Favors of fans decorated with fish and a place for the name may be made on them; ideas will come as one plans for the event.

The center piece may be a low dish of ferns or small flowers with rushes.

Fish Timbales.—For these choose a firm white-fleshed fish, free it from bones and chop fine, then pound to a pulp. Pres the pulp through a fine sieve, and to each cupful add a half teaspoonful of salt, a dash of cayenne and the white of an egg. Stir in enough thick sweet cream, about a tablespoonful, to make of the right consistency; test by dropping a small bit into boiling water and cook gently for three minutes; break open, and if too dry add a little more cream. Have ready some buttered fish molds, fill and stand them in a pan of hot water to cook in the oven. Cover with buttered paper and cook from fifteen to twenty minutes. Turn out and garnish with parsley.

Grape Ice.—A delicious grape ice is made by boiling together a pint of water and a pound of sugar for five minutes. Cool and add a pint of grape juice and the juice of a lemon. If the juice is sweet less sugar should be used.

W HY comes temptation but for man to meet
And master and make crouch beneath his feet
And so be pedestaled in triumph?
—Browning.

LEFT-OVERS OF ALL KINDS.

There are many people who have a strong objection to having anything served to them that has appeared on the table before. Anything hashed or reheated seems especially objectionable. All housekeepers who have to count the pennies in their household expenses have to use up the remnants, and the manner of so doing marks them as artists or otherwise. Often a dish may be made over and be more tasty and attractive than it was on its first appearance.

A few tablespoonfuls of canned or preserved fruit, too little to be used on the table, may be combined with orange or lemon, molded by adding gelatine and served as a dessert or a salad. Such a dish may be made especially dainty with a little care, and the expense is scarcely nothing.

A pint of boiled custard left over from yesterday's dinner, a saucerful of canned pears, an equal quantity of other fruit and a half cup of cream, sweetened and flavored, more if necessary, may be frozen into a delicious dessert.

Many such combination will suggest themselves to the thinking, saving woman. Scraps left from frying out fat, if put through the meat grinder, may be added to cornmeal mush, and when cold cut in slices and fried. This is scrapple, and makes a highly nutritious dish.

Mince meat is a splendid receptacle for saving little bits of preserves, orange marmalade and such fruits, added to the mince meat, they make a vast improvement.

Oatmeal, rice and farina when added to griddle cakes and gems or muffins are always an improvement on the plain dish.

Pieces of beef steak cut in small pieces and onion added, with water, make an acceptable stew, which may be pieced out with dumplings and be sufficient for the main dish of a meal.

It is the wise housewife who watches for the little wastes, and is able to make good things out of food that others throw away.

B ETTER be small and shine than to be great and cast a shadow.

Everyone ought to be an enthusiast in his calling. —W. Gladden.

CAKE MAKING.

The making of cakes as well as the making of bread has passed through a period of evolution. For the busy housewife who finds it necessary to do the bulk of the work and in most cases all of the household work, besides sewing, it seems expedient that she use the utmost economy of effort in accomplishing her duties. The process of cake making has always been one of much time. During recent years of experiment in our cooking school laboratories, we find that good cake, as good as the old method, may be made with much less expense of time, and materials. When butter is 40 cents a pound it is some comfort to know by actual test that we may have cake on our tables without mortgaging the farm. Except when used warm, cakes that are shortened with lard, snowdrift or other pure and odorless fats cannot be told from those made with butter. It is always necessary to remember that the required amount of salt should be used, otherwise the taste of the cake will be flat, stale and unprofitable.

The amount of shortening to be used depends upon the cake, a half to three-quarters of a cup is sufficient. When using butter the old method was first to give the butter a good creaming until soft and waxy then add the sugar gradually, a process exceedingly slow. Now the up-to-date cook when she is extravagant enough to use butter warms it by gentle heat until it is melted, then adds powdered sugar which costs just a cent more for a cake, and she has a cake which can be compared favorably with any creamed butter cake. The fact that the butter can be melted and the sugar added saves much time in the making.

A portion of cake in a serving is equal to a glass and a half of milk or three eggs in food value, so that cake is not entirely a food accessory, but a real food in the menu.

In melting butter for cake care should be taken that it does not get too hot as butter fat decomposes when heated and is thus less digestible.

Nellie Maxwell.

Devotion.

When the doctor called to see the baby, its mother, says the Baltimore Telegram, informed him that the medicine left for the infant the day before was all gone.

"Impossible!" declared the surprised physician. "I told you to give him a teaspoonful once an hour."

"Yes, but John and mother and I and the nurse have each had to take a teaspoonful, too, in order to get baby to take it."

When He Quit.

"Somebody really ought to get out the society vote." "I once tried to campaign among the Four Hundred, but I heard one woman tell her maid not to let any strange politicians kiss Fido, and then I quit."

LAW'S INJUSTICE MADE PLAIN

Farmer's Grievance Was That Story Once Accepted Should Not Remain Good.

